The All-Party Oireachtas Committee was established on 16 October 1997. Its terms of reference are:

In order to provide focus to the place and relevance of the Constitution and to establish those areas where Constitutional change may be desirable or necessary, the All-Party Committee will undertake a full review of the Constitution. In undertaking this review, the All-Party Committee will have regard to the following:

- a the Report of the Constitution Review Group*
- b participation in the All-Party Committee would involve no obligation to support any recommendations which might be made, even if made unanimously*
- c members of the All-Party Committee, either as individuals or as Party representatives, would not be regarded as committed in any way to support such recommendations*
- d members of the All-Party Committee shall keep their respective Party Leaders informed from time to time of the progress of the Committee's work*
- e none of the parties, in Government or Opposition, would be precluded from dealing with matters within the All-Party Committee's terms of reference while it is sitting, and*
- f whether there might be a single draft of non-controversial amendments to the Constitution to deal with technical matters.*

The committee comprises eight TDs and four senators:

Brian Lenihan, TD (FF), chairman
Jim O'Keeffe, TD (FG), vice-chairman
Brendan Daly, TD (FF)
Senator John Dardis (PD)
Thomas Enright, TD (FG)
Séamus Kirk, TD (FF)
Derek McDowell, TD (LAB)
Marian McGennis, TD (FF)
Liz McManus, TD (LAB)
Senator Denis O'Donovan (FF)
Senator Fergus O'Dowd (FG)
Senator Kathleen O'Meara (LAB)

The secretariat is provided by the Institute of Public Administration:

Jim O'Donnell, secretary
James McDermott, assistant secretary.

While no constitutional issue is excluded from consideration by the committee, it is not a body with exclusive concern for constitutional amendments: the Government, as the executive, is free to make constitutional proposals at any time.

BROLLACH

Tá cúram théacs an Bhunreachta ar an Taoiseach. Tugtar cumhacht don Taoiseach le hAirteagal 25 téacs den Bhunrecht a ullmhú mar a bheidh i bhfeidhm san am. Nuair atá cóip den téacs sin deimhnithe ag an Taoiseach agus ag an bPríomh-Bhreitheamh, agus lámh an Uachtaráin curtha léi, deintear í a chur isteach ina hiris in oifig Chláraitheoir na Cúirte Uachtaraí. An cló Gaelach a bhí sa chéad leagan den téacs Gaeilge a rollaíodh. Is é sin a úsáideadh ó shin i leith – tugtar cóip den téacs Gaeilge mar a rollaíodh é níos luaithe i mbliana i bhFoscraibhinn 5.

Is é an téacs barántúil ná téacs an Bhunreachta sa dá theanga oifigiúla. Tá an forlámhas ag an téacs Gaeilge i gcás easaontachta idir na téacsanna rollaithe. Tuigeadh don choiste agus iad i mbun a gcuid oibre go raibh gá le staidéar bunúsach ar an téacs Gaeilge agus d'iarr ar Mhicheál Ó Cearúil dul i mbun an staidéir seo. Níl an coiste freagrach, áfach, as na tuairimí a nochtar ann.

- 1 Léiríonn téacs an Bhunreachta saibhreas agus seandacht na teanga. Is féidir roinnt de na téarmaí atá ann a rianú siar go dtí an t-ochtú haois. Baineann abairtí eile leis an dul chun cinn atá déanta ag an teanga agus leis an tslí ar cuireadh in oiriúint í don saol atá ann ó bunaíodh an Stát. Nochtar sa staidéar saibhreas na bhfoinsí scríofa sa Ghaeilge atá ar fáil dúinne inniu. Léirítear ann an oidhreacht scríofa agus seanchais atá cuimsithe sa teanga nua-aimseartha. Agus sinn ar thairseach ré nua chimid nach le gluaiseacht na hathbheochana ó 1893 i leith a thosaigh an teanga Ghaeilge a labhraítear inniu. Is acmhainn uasal a shíneann siar thar dhá mhíle bliain í an teanga a labhraítear sa Ghaeltacht ach go háirithe agus a mhúintear inár scoileanna.
- 2 Tabharfaidh an staidéar seo an-chabhair do dhaoine agus brí á baint acu as an mBunrecht. Ó 1937 i leith tá lear mór tráchtairachta sa Bhéarla ar an mBunrecht. Tá cáil an léinn ar chuid mhaith den ábhar sin. Ach is é seo an chéad staidéar cuimsitheach a deineadh ar théacs Gaeilge an Bhunreachta. Tabharfaidh an staidéar seo léargas eile dúinn ar ár mBunrecht. Beidh sé ina chabhair ach go háirithe do na breithiúna, dlíodóirí, polaiteoirí agus scoláirí dlí i gcoitinne.
- 3 Tugtar roinnt neamhréireachtaí i dtéacsanna an Bhunreachta chun solais sa staidéar seo. Léiríonn an t-údar go bhfuil deacrachtaí ann a bhaineann le cló, litriú, gramadach agus foclóir an téacs Gaeilge. Is iontach an staidéar é seo agus tá súil agam go spreagfaidh sé athbhreithniú ar an dá théacs den Bhunrecht agus gur fearrde iad dá bharr.

FOREWORD

Article 25 of the Constitution empowers the Taoiseach to cause to be prepared under his supervision a text in both the official languages of the Constitution then in force. A copy of the text so prepared, when authenticated by the signatures of the Taoiseach and the Chief Justice and signed by the President, is enrolled for record in the office of the Registrar of the Supreme Court. The first Irish text was enrolled in the Gaelic script and the practice has been maintained ever since – a copy of the Irish text as enrolled earlier this year is reproduced as Appendix 5.

It should be noted that the constitutional text in both official languages is authentic. Article 25 provides that in case of conflict between the enrolled texts, the Irish language text prevails.

In the course of the work of the committee it became obvious that a detailed study of the Irish text was required. The committee engaged Micheál Ó Cearúil to undertake the study. However, the committee does not accept responsibility for the views expressed in the study.

In my opinion there are three clear lessons to be drawn from this excellent study:

- 1 The present Irish text of the Constitution illustrates the richness and antiquity of the language. Some of the terms employed in the Constitution have a lineage that can be traced back to the eighth century. Other expressions used in the Constitution relate to the modern development and adaptation of the language since the foundation of the State. The study discloses the wealth of written sources in the Irish language available to us today. The study illustrates the continuous literary tradition embodied in the modern language. On the eve of a new millennium we see that the Irish language spoken today did not begin with the revival movement initiated in 1893. The language spoken in the Gaeltacht in particular and taught in schools is the proud inheritance of a spoken tradition which has evolved over more than two millennia.
- 2 This study will be of immense assistance to those who wish to interpret the provisions of the Constitution. Since 1937 there has been a rich commentary in the English language on the provisions of the Constitution. Much of this material has acquired a high scholarly reputation. While passing reference and consideration has been given to the Irish text, this is the first detailed, comprehensive study of the official text of the Constitution in the Irish language. This study will shed further light on our Constitution and be a valuable help to those who interpret, profess and study the law.
- 3 The study illustrates certain anomalies in the texts of the Constitution. The author has identified difficulties relating to the script, spelling, grammar and vocabulary of the Irish text. It is my hope that this study will occasion a proper reconsideration of both texts with a view to their improvement.

INTRODUCTION
BUNREACT NA hÉIREANN
TEXT AND CONTEXT

Article 25.5.4° of the Constitution provides that, in the event of conflict with the English version, the Irish version of the Constitution will prevail:

In case of conflict between the texts of any copy of this Constitution enrolled under this section, the text in the national language shall prevail. Igcás gan na téacsanna d'aon chóip áirithe den Bhunreacht seo a bheidh curtha isteach ina hiris faoin alt seo a bheidh de réir a chéile, is ag an téacs Gaeilge a bheidh an forlámhas.

Deputy W.T. Cosgrave, former President of the Executive Council, commented on this as follows during the Dáil debate on the draft Constitution on 14 June 1937:

The Irish text is being made operative in cases of dispute in a court of law. As a matter of fact the Irish text is a mere translation of the English. The Constitution was thought out and framed in English by the President [of the Executive Council, Mr. de Valera]. ... It is unheard of and contrary to common sense that an imperfect translation, such as the Irish text of the Constitution, should be made the authoritative version for the courts.<sup>1</sup>

This study seeks to establish that the Irish text is in fact no 'mere translation' of the English and reveals that almost every section of the Constitution contains divergences of some degree between the two texts. The following study illustrates that, were an official direct translation into Irish to be made today of the original English text of the Constitution, very few sections of such a translation would correspond to the existing Irish text of the Constitution, this by no means being due solely, nor even principally, to developments in the language which have taken place since 1937. In the commentary on the Constitution which follows, we shall see that while many of the provisions of the 1937 Constitution are identical to provisions of the 1922 Constitution, the Irish text of which is an acknowledged direct translation of the English, the corresponding Irish text in the 1937 Constitution differs greatly, and one must assume deliberately, from that of the 1922 Constitution, again this being in very few instances due to developments in the Irish language between 1922 and 1937.

The Irish text of the 1937 Constitution was prepared as the Constitution was being drafted, as against the usual translation process which commences with a definitive text. Speaking in the above-mentioned Dáil debate of 14 June 1937, the President of the Executive Council, Éamon de Valera, said that providing an Irish version was no mere afterthought on his part; neither was it a direct translation of the English. The drafting in Irish was progressing along with the English step by step, almost from the beginning when the main ideas which were accepted were being put down in draft-form:

I want to tell those who suggest that the Irish was only an afterthought, a mere translation of the English, that the Irish drafting has gone on pari passu almost from the beginning, when the fundamental ideas that were accepted for the Constitution were being put in draft form. It is true that, as far as the literal drafting of the Constitution was concerned, it has been largely left to one person. ... But this does not mean that the Draft was not criticised. It does not mean that that draft was not changed from its original form to the form in which you have it now, finally. It was changed a number of times, but the principle was to get those changes always expressed and put in their final shape ... as far as possible by the one hand. The Irish has gone side by side with that. We got the most competent people we could for the Irish. This Constitution has been criticised and examined closely by language experts, and ... we have not had, as far as the Irish language is concerned, any criticism that was worth while.<sup>2</sup>

In fact, as against Deputy Cosgrave's assertion above, it is claimed in the authorised Irish biography of Éamon de Valera by Pádraig Ó Fiannachta and Tomás Ó Néill that to a certain extent the final English draft derived from the Irish:

Na dréachta tosaigh den Bhunreacht a chuir Seán Ó hEatháin ar fáil ba iad ba bhonn do leagan Gaeilge a rinne Mícheál Ó Gríofa gan mhoill: bhí meas ag de Valera ar Ghaeilge shoiléir bheacht Mhíchíl. Ba é an leagan Gaeilge seo a bhí ag de Valera as sin amach mar bhonn saothair. Ba air a bunaíodh an leagan Béarla ina dhiaidh sin, i dtreo gur tiontú ón nGaeilge é an Béarla céanna.<sup>3</sup> (The initial drafts of the Constitution which John Hearne provided were the basis for an Irish version which Mícheál Ó Gríobhtha made without delay: de Valera valued Mícheál's clear precise Irish. It was this Irish version which de Valera had from then on as a basis for work. It was on this that the English version was afterwards based, with the result that the English is a translation from the Irish.)

This is in contrast to the Preamble, the Irish version of which, according to the authorised biography, is a direct translation done by T.F. O'Rahilly:

Fuair de Valera dréacht de bhrollach ar dtús ón Athair Éamann Ó Cathail, S.J., ach mheas sé go raibh sé róscaoilte. Ansin chuaigh sé i gcomhairle leis an Athair Seán Mac Uaid, C.S.Sp., i gColáiste na Carraige Duibhe ina chónagar, agus fuair dréacht sásúil uaidh. Rinne de Valera ábhar leasaithe ar an dréacht agus ansin chuir Tomás Ó Rathile, an scoláire cáiliúil, Gaeilge air.<sup>4</sup> (De Valera initially got a draft of a preamble from Fr. Éamann Ó Cathail, S.J., but considered that it was too loose. Then he consulted Fr. Seán Mac Uaid, C.S.Sp., in Blackrock College near him, and got a satisfactory draft from him. De Valera made some amendment to the draft and then Tomás Ó Rathile, the famous scholar, put it into Irish.)

Speaking in Seanad Éireann on the Second Stage of the Irish Legal Terms Bill, 1945, to which Bill we will later return, Senator Hayes referred as follows to the 'translation' of the Constitution:

The Constitution was framed in English and translated into Irish. The only competent body was not, in fact, the body that did it. It was handed over to another body. I do not exactly know who they were. The document on the face of it shows that they were not always in agreement. They produced what is a very unsatisfactory document. Then the extraordinary step was taken of making the Irish, which is really a translation, and not a very good translation, the document which was valid in law. When it was seen that the thing was not satisfactory, an effort was made to bring the translation staff to the rescue. That did not prove completely satisfactory either. Recently a new copy of the Constitution has been issued in Roman script with a new standard spelling.<sup>5</sup>

It is noteworthy that the Irish text of the Constitution was not prepared by the Translation Section of the Houses of the Oireachtas, Rannóg an Aistriúcháin, which section was responsible for translating the Acts of the Oireachtas from 1922 onwards. The original draft of the Irish text was made by Mícheál Ó Gríobhtha, a native of Co. Clare chosen personally by Éamon de Valera for this task. According to biographers Diarmuid Breathnach and Máire Ní Mhurchú, Mícheál was a native bilingual; his parents spoke English to the children, but Irish was generally spoken in the home and neighbourhood. He acquired a sound general education. He spent five or six years teaching before becoming a Customs and Excise Officer, having achieved the second place in Britain and Ireland in a competition for such officers. He served in Belfast, Glasgow and Dublin. From 1922 on Mícheál Ó Gríobhtha worked in the Department of Education, mostly in An Gúm, the section responsible for the publication of Irish books. He published stories and essays in various Irish magazines and journals and wrote a dozen books, including novels, short stories, plays and translations – among the books translated by him was The First Man in the Moon by H.G. Wells.<sup>6</sup>

The background to the Irish version of the Constitution, and particularly Mícheál Ó Gríobhtha's contribution, is the subject of a comprehensive article, published in the Irish magazine Feasta (October 1988), by the Advisory Archivist of Éamon de Valera's Papers, Breandán Mac Giolla Choille. John Hearne, a Legal Adviser in the Department of Foreign Affairs, provided 'A Plan for a basic constitutional law and an Initial Version of a Draft' on 20 August 1936. By the twelfth or the fourteenth of October he had a draft of headings ready containing four Basic Declarations and 78 Articles. It was exactly at that time, according to Mac Giolla Choille, that it was decided to arrange to get an Irish version of the draft Constitution done, Micheál Ó Griobhtha (then 67 years of age) being chosen for that work. On 19 October 1936, Micheál was seconded from the Department of Education, having been working at that time as an assistant to the chairman of the Terminology Committee. He began work on the first Irish draft of the Constitution in a room in Government Buildings, close to Éamon de Valera. He had made good progress by 11 November, the day Risteárd Ó Foghludha (Fiachra Éilgeach) joined him as editor (non-established), also on secondment from the same Department, where he was an editor of publications. Both worked together on the Irish version from then until the Dáil accepted the draft Constitution as a document to be put before the people in a referendum.<sup>7</sup>

Faoin am seo bhí cúl tugtha aige don obair sa tseirbhís chustaim agus mál, obair breis agus 30 bliain, agus gabháil le scríobh agus le heagarthóireacht Ghaeilge.

Is mar seo a d'oibrídis: Micheál ag céadscríobh an téacs Ghaeilge mar aistriú cruinnbheacht ar an fhocláocht dlíthiúil sa leagan Bhéarla; Risteard ag déanamh eagarthóireacht, alt ar alt agus focal ar fhocal, ar shaothar Mhíchil chun é a dhéanamh níos soiléite mar phrós Gaeilge nó chun é a thabhairt i gcóngar na gnáthchainte sa méid ab fhéidir é, gan baint de bhri an bhunleagain ó thaobh an dlí de. Bhí lámh an-trom ag Risteard mar eagarthóir agus ní foláir nó bhí foighne an naoimh ag Micheál. Tar éis na heagarthóireachta ar an chéad leagan, mar shampla, bhí na hathruithe chomh hiomadúil sin gurbh éigean do Mhícheál cur chuige agus cóip ghlan a scríobh amach a mbeadh ceartú Risteaird istigh inti, sula bhféadfaí tosaí ar an dara dréachtadh. As sin amach lean dréacht ar dhréacht i dtreo agus gur fhág an bheirt seo le huacht againn bailiúchán mór dréachtaí, cuid iomlán agus cuid ag baint le hairteagail ar leith. Bhíodh orthu nuadhreachtá a dhéanamh freisin de réir mar athruití na leaganacha Béarla a bhí á ndrúchtú agus á bhfeabhsú sa chomhaimsir.<sup>8</sup> (This is how they worked: Micheál first writing the Irish text as a precise and exact translation of the legal wording of the English version; Risteard editing Micheál's work, section by section and word by word, to make it more legible as Irish prose, or to bring it closer to ordinary speech as far as possible, without diminishing the meaning of the original version as regards law. Risteard had a very heavy hand as editor and Micheál must have had the patience of a saint. After the editing on the first version, for example, the alterations were so numerous that Micheál had to sit down and write out a clear copy with Risteard's corrections inserted in it, before they could start on the second drafting. From then on draft followed on draft so that the two of them bequeathed us a large collection of drafts, some complete and some relating to specific articles. They had to make new drafts also according as the English versions, which were being drafted and improved simultaneously, were being changed.)

This process of editing the Irish text, of interpreting the English text, in particular, both by Fiachra Éilgeach and others, as we shall see below, contributes to making the Irish version of the Constitution more than a 'mere translation'. We see in the drafts contained in the Archives how, for example, 'cróchda' was altered to 'órdha',<sup>9</sup> finally appearing as 'flannbhuí', expressing 'orange', in Article 7 of the Constitution, where 'The national flag is the tricolour of green, white and orange' is expressed in the Irish text as 'An bhratach trí dhath .i. uaine, bán, agus flannbhuí, an suaitheantas náisiúnta'. It is estimated that six drafts can be identified on which Micheál Ó Griobhtha and Risteárd Ó Foghludha co-operated between November 1936 and 30 April 1937, according to Breandán Mac Giolla Choille.

Faoi 1936 bhí naoi gcinn de shaothair leis, idir bhunscríobh agus aistriúcháin foilsithe. Ina theannta sin bhí sé ag obair an uair úd mar chúntóir do Chathaoirleach an Choiste Téarmaíochta. Ar an 19 Deireadh Fómhair 1936 tugadh ar iasacht ón Roinn Oideachais é agus is i seomra i bhFoirgnimh an Rialtais, gar d'Éamon de Valera, a thosaigh sé ar an chéad leagan Gaeilge den bhunreacht a chur ar fáil.

(He was a Clare man who was born in Cathair Aeidh, near Lissycasey, in 1869 - which makes him 67 years old when he undertook work which would be done under great pressure. By this time he had finished his work in the customs and excise service, work of over 30 years, and was engaged in Irish writing and editing.)

By 1936 nine works by him, between original writings and translations, had been published. He was also working at that time as an assistant to the Chairman of the Terminology Committee. On the 19th of October 1936, he was seconded from the Department of Education and began providing the first Irish version of the constitution in a room in Government Buildings, close to Éamon de Valera.)

7 Breandán Mac Giolla Choille, op. cit., p. 64.

8 Ibid, p. 64. The author is obliged to his colleague Seán Ó Briain who read a draft of the translation of the article quoted here.

9 Ibid, p. 67. As the original word is crossed out, it is not very clear but at least one letter follows 'cróch' ('saffron').

There followed in succession: the Final Draft; Draft F or the Complete Irish Text; and finally 'A Complete Irish Copy' which the printers provided on 25 March 1937.

Liam Ó Rinn and Tomás Page, both of the Translation Section of the Houses of the Oireachtas, were appointed at the beginning of April 1937 to help them in the work 'and in particular to bring the text into conformity with the practice of that Section'.<sup>10</sup> In May a committee was set up, under the chairmanship of Professor Eoin Mac Néill, to make recommendations regarding changes that should be made to the Irish spelling in the draft Constitution in order to simplify it, which subject and committee we shall return to later below. Éamon de Valera had the Irish version of the draft Constitution sent to certain people, asking them to 'do anything possible to improve' that version ('éinní a dhéanamh gur féidir é d'fhonn feabhas do chur ar an leagan Gaeilge den Dréacht-Bhunreacht'). Among them were Fr Pádraig de Brún, Tomás Ó Máille, Tadhg Ó Donnchadha (Tórna), Éamonn Ó Donnchadha, Liam Ó Rinn, Cormac Ó Cadhlaigh and Gearóid Ó Murchadha. As Breandán Mac Giolla Choille outlines, some of the replies were full of praise, others were severely critical. Fr Pádraig de Brún wrote that 'the Irish of the Constitution saddens me and causes me despair', that 'nobody could understand the words "do-shannta, dochumhscuighthe, uachtarcheannais" without the English beside it'. De Brún continued:

Without putting a tooth in it the Irish of this script is misshapen and it reminds me of a verse of Yeats ('Gan fiacal a chur ann obair mhíchumtha is ea Gaeilge na scríbhinne seo agus cuireann sé bhéarsa as Yeats i gcuimhne dom') – 'The wrong of unshapely things is a wrong too great to be told / I hunger to build them anew and sit on a green knoll apart / With the earth and the sky and the water remade etc. etc. Ach ní hionann fonn agus aithdhéanamh'.<sup>11</sup> (But will and remaking are not the same.)

The Irish scholar Tadhg Ó Donnchadha (Tórna), on the other hand, wrote that the Irish version was 'excellent', that the speech was 'correct' and 'exact' and 'the meaning easily comprehensible for a person who has experience of the Irish of our times'. A remark made by Tomás Ó Máille is of relevance today, as regards amendments to the Constitution: he recommended on 28 May 1937 leaving the translation into Irish of any changes which would be made in the Dáil up to those who translated the rest of the text into Irish, commenting that 'without that, the two styles will not suit each other and it will be a mess' ('Gan sin, ní fheilfidh an dá nós dá chéile agus beidh an scéal ina phraiseach'.<sup>12</sup>)

Translating into Irish

'Irish and English being such utterly dissimilar languages, a literal translation from one to the other is impossible'.<sup>13</sup> So commences the 'General Notes on Grammar and Translation' in Irish Composition by the Christian Brothers (1907). The piece for translation should be read through first, 'so as fully to grasp the meaning'; the translation may then be attempted, 'care being taken to render the meaning rather than the individual words'. This does not mean, of course, that individual words may be neglected, but that their force rather than their literal equivalent should be expressed in writing, 'He knew his own mind, bhí fhios aige féin go maith cad do bhí uaidh' being cited as an example. The translator is instructed to break up any long and complicated English sentence into simple sentences before 'attempting' to translate it into Irish, 'The man having replied that he was a blacksmith, the farmer asked him ... , dubhairt an fear gur ghabha é, d'fhiafruigh an feirmeoir de ...' being cited for example. Some of the above features are noted in the comparisons which follow between the Irish and English texts of the Constitution, as is the next point made by the Christian Brothers, that is, that repetition of important words is useful in Irish, and no effort need be made to avoid such repetition, as is done by certain stereotyped phrases in English ('do so', 'for the purpose', 'former', 'latter', etc.) – the example cited in illustration of this point is 'Some of them must emigrate. If they do not do so ... , Ní foláir do chuid aca gluaiseacht. Dá mbadh rud é nár ghluaiseadar ...'. The translator is instructed to 'note well' that the definite article, possessive adjectives, prepositions, and conjunctions must be repeated in Irish with each word or phrase to which they belong, as in 'John, James and Peter, Seaghán agus Séamus agus Peadar'.<sup>14</sup>

According to Irish Composition, 'abstract modes of expression' are not known in Irish, 'except in their proper place, i.e., in abstract and philosophical discussion'. Hence, 'Irish is much more simple and direct in style' than contemporary English. Among the examples cited here are 'He saw the condition in which it was, chonnaic sé gach nídh mar a bhí' and 'favouritism and bribery, fabhar agus breab'. The general is sometimes used for the particular, according to the Christian Brothers, citing the following: 'skating is a healthful exercise, is deas an rud bheith ag sleamhnughadh ar an lic oidhir', 'a great number of visitors resort there, tagann mór-chuid daoine ann' and 'the native language, an Ghaoluinn'. Two nouns sometimes represent an English noun plus adjective, etc. 'No trace of work of any kind' is translated as 'gan rian oibre ná gnótha', 'I am exceedingly ashamed' is translated as 'tá ceist agus ceann-fé orm' and 'a terrible loathing' as 'déistin agus seirbhthean' to illustrate that point. Attention is drawn to the opposition in usage between Irish and English in the following: 'up and down, síos (is) suas', 'backwards and forwards, anonn is anall', 'north-east wind, gaoth anoir adtuaidh', 'upside down, bun os cionn', 'from head to foot, ó bhun bátha', 'high or low, thíos ná thuas', 'good, bad, or indifferent, olc, maith, ná donaidhe' and, finally, 'for your life, ar do bhás'.<sup>15</sup>

The Rev. Gerald O'Nolan's Studies in Modern Irish (1920) also gives a particular view of the process of translation. 'At the very outset one must have a clear conception of what intelligent translation really means', states O'Nolan, who continues:

And here we must steer clear of the bogey of literal translation. A passage of English prose conveys certain ideas, thoughts, images, set forth by the writer to produce the desired impression of the personages, scenes or facts that are being described, or the philosophical or ethical principles that are being proved or illustrated. The rendering of such a passage into Irish must be consistent with the laws of Irish thought and expression. In deference to the laws of Irish thought insertions, omissions and other changes will take place, according to circumstances. In deference to the laws of Irish expression we must emancipate ourselves from the English words, as such, grasp the kernel of thought or emotion to be conveyed, and endeavour to clothe that kernel with the Irish words best suited to express the essential inner meaning. Language is an index to the national character. The fundamentals of the Irish character are, when all is said and done, very different to those of the English character, in spite of strong Celtic elements transfused through the Saxon ground-work of the latter. Hence a word-for-word translation is nearly always fatal.<sup>16</sup>

Finally, we turn to one of the most influential people in the early decades of this century, not only as regards Irish writing but on the form of the language itself, An tAthair Peadar Ua Laoghaire. In an article headed 'Some hints as to how English literary matter should be translated into Irish', edited by Thomas F. O'Rahilly in Papers on Irish Idiom by the late Canon Peter O'Leary, PP (1929)<sup>17</sup>, the following general rule is laid down for all learners of Irish:

It may be laid down as a general rule, such is the innate antagonism between the two languages in every phase, that so surely as a word is used figuratively in one it is certain to be taken literally in the other, and to express outrageous nonsense.<sup>18</sup>

The translator must focus on the sense of the English rather than the English words, advises Peadar Ua Laoghaire:

The translator must first find out the sense of what he wishes to translate. Then he must turn his back completely upon the English words, think the thoughts out as they might be thought out in Irish, and then express the thoughts in Irish exactly as he would express them if they were his own thoughts and he knew no language but Irish.<sup>19</sup>

The author concludes by advising the translator to 'reproduce' the English rather than 'translate' it:

Read over the English matter carefully. Take all the ideas into your mind. Squeeze the ideas clean from all English froth. Be sure that you allow none of that oozy stuff to remain. English is full of it. You must also get rid of everything in the shape of metaphor. Take instead of it the true idea which the metaphor is intended to convey. When you have the ideas cleared completely of foreign matter, put them into the Irish side of your mind, and shape them in the Irish language, just as you would if they had been your own ideas from the start.<sup>20</sup>

As David Greene reminds us, the advice above is in the spirit of the Irish tradition in that 'that tradition always preferred adaptation to translation'.<sup>21</sup> It may be noted here that we have in Irish the earliest vernacular translations of classical texts in existence.<sup>22</sup> Scéla Alaxandair is a tenth-century translation of an account of the life of Alexander the Great and Togail Troí is a free and much-expanded translation of the Latin prose narrative of the Trojan War, made in the late tenth century.<sup>23</sup> In the twelfth century the Aeneid was translated into prose as Imtheachta Aeniosa, Lucan's De Bello Civili as In Cath Catharda, and Statius's Thebaid as Togail na Tebe.<sup>24</sup>

In Translating Ireland (1996), Michael Cronin writes that, in the article referred to above, Peadar Ua Laoghaire 'is, in fact, restating a position that has had a long history in translation theory and practice, namely, that the translator must produce the text as if s/he were writing an original, contemporary text in the language'.<sup>25</sup> Nonetheless, as Michael Cronin observes, in Ua Laoghaire's observations – as in those of the Christian Brothers and of Ó Nualláin – 'inductive generalisations and moral/political values are merged', there being 'a distinctive value judgement' in the disparaging reference to English 'froth' above, for example.<sup>26</sup> Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments as follows on the above excerpts from the Christian Brothers, Ó Nualláin and Ua Laoghaire:

There are, of course, various types of translation, according to various purposes. If, for example, the object is to assist students in comprehending foreign-language texts, a word-for-word translation may be very useful. If, on the other hand, the object is, with comparable effect, to express in one language what has been written in another, then a word-for-word translation will not do and, as correctly argued by Peadar Ua Laoghaire, 'the translator must first find out the sense of what he wishes to translate'. But this reasonable advice is mingled, by him and others, with a confusion of other assertions about the essential characteristics of Irish style. There are questionable notions of 'linguistic relativity', e.g. 'the national character', etc., and there is the determined promotion of one subjective view of the optimal Irish prose style. The actual fact is that Irish and English can equally, in their distinctive ways, have elaborate or succinct styles, literary or colloquial, conservative or modish; in the case of the Irish version of the Constitution, there was no reason intrinsic to Irish why the Irish version could not have been as legalistic as the English, as the Irish 1922 text essentially was [as we shall see]. But this confusion of reasonable and questionable views about translation, and about the optimal Irish prose style, which Peadar Ua Laoghaire had a central role in developing, was an inescapable part of the 1937 drafters' literary formation and undoubtedly influenced the grammatical and lexical choices which they made, and must in large part explain the considerable stylistic divergence between the Irish 1937 text and its 1922 predecessor.

'Caint na ndaoine', 'the speech of the people', was for Peadar Ua Laoghaire of paramount importance:

For a living language, the books and the speech of the people should go hand in hand. What is printed in the books should be the exact representation of what comes out of the people's mouths.<sup>27</sup>

This emphasis on the contemporary spoken vernacular had two obvious consequences for the subsequent development of translation in Irish, according to Michael Cronin:

Firstly, the language of translation was to be the language of the people. The text would be 'naturalised' in translation, rendered in the idiom of the Gaeltacht speakers. Secondly, those who were most familiar with caint na ndaoine were obviously native speakers themselves. Therefore, the question of who was translating into Irish became more important.<sup>28</sup>

The new State recognised the need for translations into Irish. Five hundred pounds was allocated by the first Dáil for the provision of reading material in Irish, the money to be spent 'in publications urgently required such as text books on all subjects and Irish translations of standard works'.<sup>29</sup> A translation scheme inspired by existing Welsh and Flemish models, and run by the branch of the Department of Education set up in 1926 with responsibility for the publication of books in Irish, An Gúm, had by 1937 commissioned the translation of 214 books (out of a total of 389 books published under An Gúm), 170 of which were translations of English books. Of the one hundred novels published by An Gúm by 1937, eighty-two were translations.<sup>30</sup> The Minister mainly responsible for that scheme, Earnán de Blaghd, wrote as follows on the need for translations into Irish:

In the Galltacht ... there must be made available great masses of reading matter in Irish and reading matter to suit all tastes. The quantity that is required can only be obtained in time by translation. Therefore, we must translate English novels and detective stories in much greater numbers than had been thought of heretofore.<sup>31</sup>

Translation was recommended by Cearbhall Ó Dálaigh as a way of 'removing the rust' from Irish:

Molaim an t-aistriúchán. Sciomram, sciomram agus sciomram gan sos. Nuair a bheidh an mheing caithte den Ghaedhlig againn, dar fiadh go ndéanfar éacht. (I recommend translation. Let us scrub, scrub and scrub unceasingly. When we have removed the rust from Irish, by Jove, great things will be done).

Speaking of the literary language, Cearbhall Ó Dálaigh said that Irish had become rusty having been 'in the open under the bad weather' (Tá meing tréis teacht ar an nGaedhlig ó bheith amuigh fé spéir le fada agus an droch-shíon ann); ordinary affairs of learning had not been commented on in Irish for a long time and Irish was now 'clumsy and crude' (Is fada ó tráchtadh ar ghnáth-chúrsaí léighinn sa nGaedhlig, agus sin a bheir di bheith go ciotach agus go tuatach indiu).<sup>32</sup> Translation could help forge a new literary language in Irish as against 'caint na ndaoine'. In an article published in 1933, Liam Ó Rinn of the Translation Section of the Houses of the Oireachtas wrote that there was no country in Europe which did not have two types of expression, the type practised by the people when talking and doing business and the language in literature, which differed from each other as much as, for example, Cicero's Latin differed from the jargon of the Roman soldiers. So it was also in Ireland, until three or four hundred years ago, wrote Ó Rinn:

Nil aon tír san Eoraip iniu gan dhá shaghas cainte inti, an saghas a chleachtann na daoine nuair a bhí ag comhrádh nó ag déanamh gnótha agus an chaint a bhíonn sa litríocht, agus an oiread deifríochta eatorra is bhí in anallód idir Laidin Chicero, cuir i gcás, agus béarlagar na saighdiúirí Rómhánacha. Is mar sin a bhí an scéal in Éirinn, leis, go dtí trí nó ceathair de chéadta blian ó shoin.<sup>34</sup>

Irish text elucidates meaning of the English text

It will be seen in particular from a comparison of the literal translation of the Irish text with the official English text of the Constitution in the study which follows, that practically every section of the Constitution contains divergences between the Irish and the English texts. Many of these divergences are related to the linguistic resources of the languages themselves and could not be described as significant. Other divergences are quite intentional. Take Article 28.8, for example:

Every member of the Government shall have the right to attend and be heard in each House of the Oireachtas. Tá sé de cheart ag gach comhalta den Rialtas bheith i láthair agus labhairt i ngach Teach den Oireachtas.

'To be heard' could easily be translated more literally as 'éisteacht a fháil' (literally 'to get a hearing') rather than be expressed as 'labhairt' ('to speak'). 'From the date' is expressed as 'ón lá', literally 'from the day', in Articles 12.3.1° and 27.5.1°i, for example, with 'after the date' being expressed as 'tar éis an lae' in Articles 25.2.1° and 26.3.3°. Again, this involved a deliberate decision not to use 'dáta' in the above contexts in the Irish text.

There is no doubt but that in some cases the Irish text expresses the sense of the English much more naturally, as in Article 28.9.4°, for example, where 'his appointment shall be terminated by the President' is expressed in the Irish text as 'ní foláir don Uachtarán an comhalta sin a chur as oifig', literally, 'the President must put that member out of office'. In his commentary on Article 25.5, J.M. Kelly, The Irish Constitution (1994), refers to a total of twenty-two Articles the Irish text of which the courts have looked at in order to elucidate the meaning of the corresponding English expressions. The Articles in question are Articles 11, 15.4.2°, 15.10, 15.12, 15.13, 16.2.3°, 28.4, 29.3, 29.5, 30.3, 34.3.1°, 36.iii, 38.5, 40.1, 40.3.1°, 42.4, 43, 44.2.3°, 45, 45.2.i, 46.1 and 50.1<sup>35</sup> – J.M. Kelly's report on the comments made by the courts are included in the commentaries on those Articles which follow in this study and only a couple of examples are highlighted here. With regard to Article 29.3, for example, in The State (Sumers Jennings) v Furlong ([1966] IR 183), Justice Henchy said that the Irish version "makes clear" that Ireland accepts the generally recognized principles of international law "as a guide (ina dtreoir) in its relations with other states" – i.e. merely as a guide, not as a rule operating to restrict the powers of the Oireachtas.<sup>36</sup> Article 29.3 reads as follows:

Ireland accepts the generally recognised principles of international law as its rule of conduct in its relations with other States. Glacann Éire le bunrialacha gnáth-admhaithe an dlí idirnáisiúnta le bheith ina dtreoir d'Éirinn ina caidreamh le Stáit eile.

Literally translated the Irish text reads:

Ireland accepts the generally acknowledged fundamental rules of international law to be a guide for Ireland in her relations with other States.

In the case of Article 40.3.1°, in McGee v Attorney General ([1974] IR 284) Justice Griffin pointed out that the Irish version, 'Ráthaíonn an Stát gan cur isteach lena dhlithibh ar cheartaibh pearsanta aon tsaoránaigh', was a guarantee not to interfere with citizens' personal rights, thus adding depth to the guarantee to 'respect' them in the English version.<sup>37</sup> Article 40.3.1° reads:

The State guarantees in its laws to respect, and, as far as practicable, by its laws to defend and vindicate the personal rights of the citizen. Ráthaíonn an Stát gan cur isteach lena dhlíthe ar chearta pearsanta aon saoránaigh, agus ráthaíonn fós na cearta sin a chosaint is a shuíomh lena dhlíthe sa mhéid gur féidir é.

A literal translation of the Irish text reads as follows:

The State guarantees not to interfere by its laws with the personal rights of any citizen, and it further guarantees to defend and assert those rights with its laws in so far as it is possible.

Finally, as regards Article 42.4, in Crowley v Ireland ([1980] IR 102) Justice Kenny pointed out that the Irish version 'ní foláir don Stát socrú do dhéanamh chun bunoidreachas do bheith ar fáil in aisce' brought out more clearly than the English the distinction between the duty to 'provide for free primary education, and a duty actually to 'provide' it.<sup>38</sup> Article 42.4 reads as follows:

The State shall provide for free primary education and shall endeavour to supplement and give reasonable aid to private and corporate educational initiative, and, when the public good requires it, provide other educational facilities or institutions ... . Ní foláir don Stát socrú a dhéanamh chun bunoidreachas a bheith ar fáil in aisce, agus iarracht a dhéanamh chun cabhrú go réasúnta agus chun cur le tionscnamh oideachais idir phríobháideach agus chumannnta agus, nuair is riachtanas chun leasa an phobail é, áiseanna nó fundúireachtaí eile oideachais a chur ar fáil.

The State must make provision for primary education to be available free, and endeavour to help reasonably and to augment educational undertaking both private and common and, when it is necessary for the welfare of the people, to provide other educational facilities or foundations.

Before concluding on references to the Irish text in the courts, it may be noted that some of the comments in the courts have taken individual Irish terms and phrases in isolation and not in the context of the Constitution as a whole and particularly without regard to the 1922 Constitution, where the terms involved are direct translations of English terms. In the work which follows, a literal English translation has been provided of each Article of the Constitution, pointing out where it appears that discrepancies exist between the English and the Irish texts. As, in accordance with Article 25.5.4°, the Irish text prevails in the case of conflict between the texts, in the context of a comprehensive review of the Constitution, consideration must first be given to emending the English text to bring it into conformity with the Irish. Taking two of the three Articles looked at above, for example, it would seem desirable to substitute 'guide' for 'rule' in the English text of Article 29.3 and 'not to interfere with' for 'to respect' in Article 40.3.1°.

Looking at a few further examples which have not yet been subject to comment by the courts in this regard, 'designate' in Article 6 ('to designate the rulers of the State') has the sense both of 'appoint' and 'nominate'. The Irish text in expressing 'designate' by 'ceap' chooses 'appoint', which term might perhaps be inserted in place of 'designate'. In Article 28.6.3°, 'The Tánaiste shall act for ... the Taoiseach' is expressed in the Irish text as 'Ní foláir don Tánaiste ... gníomhú thar ceann ... an Taoisigh', literally 'on behalf of the Taoiseach', which English phrase appears more precise than 'for' in the official English text. The term 'cóirigh' expresses 'constitute' in Article 18.4.1°iii, where we find 'from panels of candidates constituted as hereinafter provided' and, in the same context, expresses 'form' in Article 18.7.1°, where we find 'five panels of candidates shall be formed in the manner provided by law'. The English text might, for the sake of consistency, be emended to read either as 'constituted' or 'formed' in both cases above. 'The voters' might be emended to 'the number of voters', following the Irish text, in the final clause of Article 47.2.1°, which reads:

... and if the votes so cast against its enactment into law shall have amounted to not less than thirty-three and one-third per cent. of the voters on the register. ... agus nach lú an méid vótaí a thugtar amhlaidh in aghaidh é a achtú ina dhlí ná cion trí tríochad is trian faoin gcéad de líon na dtoghthóirí atá ar an rolla.

Finally, Article 44.2.6° reads as follows:

The property of any religious denomination or any educational institution shall not be diverted save for necessary works of public utility and on payment of compensation. Ní cead maoin aon aicme creidimh ná aon fhundúireachtaí oideachais a bhaint díobh ach amháin le haghaidh oibreacha riachtanacha chun áise poiblí, agus sin tar éis cúiteamh a íoc leo.

The Attorney General's Committee on the Constitution (1968) commented as follows on this Article:

The word 'diverted' is a euphemism, and is neither a suitable word nor a good translation of the Irish 'a bhaint díobh', which is accurate and straightforward. 'Diversion' appears wider than 'taking from'. The two texts are not seriously inconsistent, however, and conflict could arise only if the property was clearly 'diverted for a necessary work of public utility', but not 'taken from' the institutions concerned. It is difficult to visualise any practical example of this conflict arising.<sup>39</sup>

The Review Group on the Constitution (1996) agreed with that view expressed above to the effect that the word 'diverted' in the English language version did not correspond with the words 'a bhaint díobh' in the Irish language version, adding that 'in any event, the use of the word "diverted" in this context is euphemistic and unsuitable'. The Review Group accordingly recommended that 'diverted' be replaced by 'compulsorily acquired', stating that there was 'no need for a change in the Irish language version'.<sup>40</sup>

The Constitution of the Irish Free State, 1922

Reference was made above to Liam Ó Rinn and Tomás Page of the Translation Section of the Houses of the Oireachtas being appointed in April 1937 'to bring the text into conformity with the practice of that Section' in particular. In translating the Acts of the Oireachtas precedence is of central importance. The very first Act enacted by the Dáil was the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922, the First Schedule thereto containing the Constitution of the Irish Free State – it is noteworthy that the text of the 1937 Constitution does not form the Schedule to an Act, although a draft of the Constitution was passed by the Dáil. The Irish text of the 1922 Constitution provides the first occurrence of many of the terms and phrases found in the Acts to this day. That text, which is a direct translation of the English text, was prepared by a Committee which included the Minister for Education, Irish scholar and historian, Eoin Mac Néill; the Leas-Cheann Comhairle, Pádraig Ó Máille; the Clerk of the Dáil, Colm Ó Murchadha; Piaras Béaslaí; Liam Ó Rinn and Professors Osborn Bergin and T.F. O'Rahilly.<sup>41</sup>

That the Irish of this text for the most part does not appear in any way artificial or laboured today both belies the emphasis sometimes placed on the 'break' in Irish tradition and testifies to the achievement of the translators. Commenting on attempts made in the early decades of this century to impose the West Munster dialect (owing to the influence of An tAthair Peadar Ua Laoghaire in particular) as the official standard, David Greene states that 'the Irish version of the constitution of the Irish Free State is, indeed, an example of the use of this dialect for official purposes which showed clearly how adaptable it was, and would have rejoiced the heart of O'Leary himself'.<sup>42</sup> The following memorandum by Professor Eoin Mac Néill, on 23 January 1923, relating to a request for the supply of English-Irish dictionaries for various Departments, gives us an insight into the difficulty of the task that was undertaken by that translation committee:

The persons commissioned to draft the Irish version of the Treaty and Constitution had all available Dictionaries, both English-Irish and Irish-English. These persons were selected as experts (Colm Ó Muchadha, Liam Ó Rinn, Pádraic Ó Máille, Professors Bergin & MacNeill). I think they will all testify that for the purpose of introducing new technical terms they found the Dictionaries of small assistance and that most of the new terms that appear in the draft documents have no dictionary authority for their use in the technical senses for which the terms were adopted. It follows that less experienced persons would find the Dictionaries of still less assistance and might easily be misled by them into adopting very unsuitable terms.<sup>43</sup>

As stated earlier, many of the provisions of the 1922 Constitution are again found in the 1937 Constitution, but with significant emendation of the Irish text. Single terms are changed in some cases, 'seachtar' ('seven people') in Article 51 of the 1922 Constitution is expressed by the earlier and more regional term 'mórsheisear' (literally 'great six') in Articles 28.1 and 31.3 of the 1937 Constitution, for example, this being the normal expression of the personal number 'seven' in the earlier language. 'Ar seirbhís chogúil', translating 'on active service' in Article 71 of the 1922 Constitution, is expressed in Article 38.4.2° of the 1937 Constitution as 'ar fianas', a term which carries echoes of early Irish history and society. 'Béarla' ('the English language') becomes 'Sacs-Bhéarla' in the 1937 Constitution, again a term which is much more than a 'mere' literal translation of the term 'English'. Viewed as a translation, with 'glactar leis' having the literal sense of 'is accepted', Article 8.2 is a classic example of translation as transformation<sup>44</sup>:

The influence of politics on the language, the 1937 Constitution being very much Éamon de Valera's and Fianna Fáil's Constitution as against the pro-Treaty 1922 Constitution, must be borne in mind. We shall see below how, as regards both script and orthography, there was a deliberate return to the pre-1922 period and this appears in some cases to be paralleled in the language itself.

41 See Séamas Daltún, 'Scéal Rannóg an Aistriúcháin', in Teangeolas xvii, Winter 1983, p. 15. Note incidentally that the five Articles which comprise the Constitution of Dáil Éireann, 1919, are given in Irish alone in the Minutes of Proceedings of the First Session, 21 January 1919.

42 David Greene, op. cit., p. 27.

43 From the files of Rannóg an Aistriúcháin.

44 Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks on the above that one could possibly refer to this as an example of translation not simply as transformation but as propaganda.

Much more than individual terms of the 1922 Constitution were emended, the wording of complete sections in the Irish text being emended in some cases. The English text of Article 15.12 of the 1937 Constitution, for example, closely follows Article 19 of the 1922 Constitution but the corresponding Irish text has been significantly altered. Article 19 reads:

All official reports and publications of the Oireachtas or of either House thereof shall be privileged, and utterances made in either House wherever published shall be privileged. Beidh gach tuairisc agus foillsiúchán oifigiúil den Oireachtas no d'aon Tigh de fé phríbhléid agus beidh gach ní adéarfár in aon Tigh de fé phríbhléid is cuma cá bhfoillseófar é.

The enrolled text of Article 15.12 of the 1937 Constitution reads as follows:

All official reports and publications of the Oireachtas or of either House thereof and utterances made in either House wherever published shall be privileged. Gach tuarascbháil agus foillseachán oifigeamhail ón Oireachtas agus ó gach Tigh de, maille le caint ar bith dá ndéantar i n-aon Tigh díobh, táid saor ar chúrsaibh dlíghidh cibé áit a bhfoillsighthear.

Note above how 'táid saor ar chúrsaibh dlíghidh' replaces the more literal translation 'beidh (siad) fé phríbhléid' of the 1922 Constitution. We shall see in the commentary on that Article how on the one hand this phrase 'saor ar' is found in commentaries on early Irish law-tracts and on the other hand how 'faoi phríbhléid' replaces 'saor ar' in the Acts of the Oireachtas. Note also the more conservative synthetic third person plural, present tense, form of the substantive verb, 'táid', as against 'beidh' of the 1922 Constitution – the more conservative spelling of the later text will be dealt with below.

We shall see in the commentary on various Articles in the study which follows that sometimes in the Acts which follow directly on and give effect to provisions of the 1937 Constitution the language of the Constitution was not followed in the direct Irish translation of those Acts. 'Polling' is expressed as 'vótáil', literally 'voting', in Article 16.4.1<sup>o</sup> (which reads 'Polling at every general election for Dáil Éireann shall as far as practicable take place on the same day throughout the country', 'An vótáil do gach olltoghchán ar leith do Dháil Éireann ní foláir í a dhéanamh, sa mhéid gur féidir é, an t-aon lá amháin ar fud na dúiche uile'), for example, yet we find the direct translation 'vótaíocht' in section 10(1) of the Referendum Act, 1942, where 'appoint by order the day (in this Act also referred to as the polling day) upon which the polling at such referendum shall take place' is translated as 'an lá (dá ngairmtear an lá vótaíochta freisin san Acht so) a déanfar an vótaíocht sa reifreann do cheapadh le hordú'. It is significant in this regard that some of the emendations made by the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941, involved emending the Irish text alone. The substitution of 'cíos' for 'fagháltas', expressing 'revenue' in Article 11, was the very first emendation in the 1941 Amendment of the Constitution, for example, no corresponding emendation being made to the English text.<sup>45</sup> As we shall also see below, divergences between the Constitution and the Acts have been compounded by the Irish Legal Terms Orders published between 1947 and 1956, under the Irish Legal Terms Act, 1945.

Divergences

In his 1988 'Thomas Davis Lecture', John Kelly expressed the opinion that the Supreme Court had in some cases gone much too far 'in its over-literal interpretation of a document not originally intended to be so minutely parsed and scrutinised'.<sup>46</sup> He continued as follows:

Indeed, in one case the court put itself in the really unsustainable position of deciding a point on the ground that the Irish verb used to render an English phrase was in the future rather than in the present tense, while the English phrase was open to either a present or a future construction, and that the future sense of the Irish must therefore prevail, although plenty of other examples showed that the present construction was the one that accorded with actual known practice.<sup>47</sup>

45 The amendment of Article 34.5.2<sup>o</sup>, to give another example, involved the deletion of the words 'is neasa sinsearachta dÓ a bheas ar fagháil de bhreitheamhnaibh na Cúirte Uachtaraige a dhéanfaidh' and the insertion in their place of the words 'den Chúirt Uachtaraigh is sinsearaige dá mbeidh ar fagháil a dhéanfaidh gach breitheamh eile den Chúirt Uachtaraigh', the original Irish text not including all other judges of the Supreme Court making the declaration before the Chief Justice, as in the 1937 English text.

Article 30.3 was the Article in question, which reads as follows:

All crimes and offences prosecuted in any court constituted under Article 34 of this Constitution other than a court of summary jurisdiction shall be prosecuted in the name of the People and at the suit of the Attorney General or some other person authorised in accordance with law to act for that purpose. I gcás gach coir agus cion dá dtugtar in aon chúirt a bhunaítear faoi Airteagal 34 den Bhunreacht seo, ach amháin cúirt dlínse achomaire, is in ainm an Phobail agus ar agra an Ard-Aighne, nó ar agra dhuine éigin eile a údaraítear ina chomhair sin de réir dlí, a dhéanfar an cúiseamh.

In his work, The Irish Constitution, John Kelly reports as follows on the reference made to this section in the courts:

In The State (Ennis) v Farrell ([1966] IR 107), where what was in issue was the question whether the right of a common informer had survived the constitutional provision restricting the bringing of prosecutions to the Attorney General 'or some other person authorised in accordance with law to act for that purpose', Ó Dálaigh CJ (with whom the rest of the Supreme Court agreed) pointed out that the Irish counterpart of 'authorised', namely 'a údaraítear' was:

"quite express as a present autonomous form in negating the idea of the authorisation required being such only as might be made in the future."

He contrasted Article 34.4.3 (on the right of appeal to the Supreme Court from High Court decisions), where the clear future form of the Irish verb 'ordófar' put the future sense of the phrase 'as may be prescribed' beyond doubt. On the word 'prosecuted' in the same section, he said this was to be understood in its widest sense; this was confirmed by the Irish text, where the equivalent used was 'tugtar' = 'brought'.<sup>48</sup>

In the context of the significance placed by the courts on the divergence of tenses of the verb above, the various ways in which 'shall' and 'may' are expressed in the Constitution are noteworthy. 'May' is expressed as 'is dleathach do' (literally, 'it is lawful for') in the Irish text of Article 14.3, for example, which reads as follows:

The Commission may act by any two of their number and may act notwithstanding a vacancy in their membership. Is dleathach don Choimisiún gníomhú trí bheirt ar bith dá líon agus gníomhú d'ainneoin folúntais ina gcomhaltas.

In Article 28.3.1<sup>o</sup>, 'War shall not be declared and the State shall not participate in any war save with the assent of Dáil Éireann' is expressed as 'Ní dleathach cogadh a fhógairt ná páirt a bheith ag an Stát in aon chogadh ach amháin le haontú Dháil Éireann', literally 'It is not legal to declare a war or for the State to have a part in any war except with the assent of Dáil Éireann'. Indeed, the multiplicity of ways in which 'shall' and 'may' is expressed in the Constitution is one of the features which illustrate that the Irish text is not simply a 'mere' literal translation of the English text. The simple future tense of the verb, or the future tense of 'déan' followed by the verbal noun, is generally found in the Acts translating 'shall', with 'may' generally translated by the verb 'féad', with the Northern expression, 'tig le', also being found, as it is in some Articles of the Constitution. Note that we find the future tense in Article 49 of the 1922 Constitution, which provision is substantially reproduced in Article 28.3.1<sup>o</sup> above, Article 49 of the earlier Constitution reading as follows:

... the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) shall not be committed to active participation in any war without the assent of the Oireachtas. Ní cuirfear Saorstát Éireann fé oibleagáid páirt ghníomhach do thógaint in aon choga gan aontú an Oireachtais.

Note also that the general practice of the Acts as regards the translation of 'shall' and 'may' is followed in the amendments to the Constitution, rather than employing phrases with 'dleathach', 'cead' or 'ní foláir' as in the original text of the Constitution. The phrase 'ní cead', literally 'it is not permitted', expresses 'shall not' in a number of Articles – Article 40.5, for example, reads:

The dwelling of every citizen is inviolable and shall not be forcibly entered save in accordance with law. Is slán do gach saoránach a ionad cónaithe, agus ní cead dul isteach ann go foréigneach ach de réir dlí.

Note that 'shall' in the same English text (with 'each' and 'except' respectively in place of 'every' and 'save' above) is translated by the simple future tense of the verb in Article 7 of the 1922 Constitution:

Is slán do gach saoránach a árus comhnuithe agus ní raghfarr isteach ann le fóirneart ach do réir dlí.

The phrase 'ní foláir', generally rendering 'must' in Irish, as it does in Article 28.7.1<sup>o</sup>, expresses 'shall' in many Articles. Article 16.4.2<sup>o</sup>, for example, reads as follows:

Dáil Éireann shall meet within thirty days from that polling day. Ní foláir do Dháil Éireann teacht le chéile taobh istigh de thríocha lá ón lá vótála sin.

Note again that the simple future tense translates 'shall' in the corresponding Article 28 of the 1922 Constitution, where 'Dáil Éireann shall meet within one month of such day' is translated as 'Tiocfaidh Dáil Éireann le chéile fé cheann mí ón lá sin'. We find 'ní dleathach' and 'ní cead' expressing 'may not' in some Articles: in Article 28.7.2<sup>o</sup>, for example, 'but not more than two may be members of Seanad Éireann' is expressed as 'ach ní dleathach thar beirt acu a bheith ina gcomhaltá de Sheanad Éireann' and 'No person may be excluded from Irish nationality and citizenship ...', in Article 9.1.3<sup>o</sup>, is expressed as 'Ní cead náisiúntacht agus saoránacht Éireann a cheilt ar dhuine ar bith' in the Irish text. As against the many Articles where 'shall' is expressed either by phrases involving 'dleathach', 'cead' or 'ní foláir', 'it shall not be obligatory on the President' is expressed simply as 'ní bheidh ar an Uachtarán' (literally 'the President will not have to') in the Irish text of Article 27.4.2<sup>o</sup>. Finally, 'The Government shall be responsible to Dáil Éireann' is expressed as 'Tá an Rialtas freagrach do Dháil Éireann' (literally 'The Government is responsible to Dáil Éireann') in Article 28.4.1<sup>o</sup> and 'The head of the Government ... shall be called ... the Taoiseach' is expressed as 'An Taoiseach is teideal do cheann an Rialtais' (literally, 'The Taoiseach is the title of the head of Government') in Article 28.5.1<sup>o</sup>.

In a monograph entitled Dúchas na Gaeilge (1996), Maolmhaodhóg Ó Ruairc, a translator with the European Union in Brussels, in drawing attention in particular to the many ways 'may' and 'shall' are 'translated' in the Irish version of the Constitution, expresses the opinion that the translators 'were not the last to leave their mark on the Irish text' ('nár bh iad na haistritheoirí ba dheireanaí a leag a rian ar an téacs Gaeilge<sup>49</sup>). As against Maolmhaodhóg Ó Ruairc's view, the author of this study would interpret many of the divergences between the two texts as being due more to a deliberate effort on the part of the drafters of the Irish text to make that text read independently of the English text and to provide a text in natural Irish, complying with the general usage of the language rather than sacrificing the language to achieve exact correspondence with the English text. The following note in The King's English, by H.W. Fowler and F.G. Fowler, is instructive as regards the expressions we have seen above of 'shall' in the Irish text of the Constitution:

In our usage of the shall and will forms, as seen in principal sentences, there are elements belonging to three systems. The first of these, in which each form retains its full original meaning, and the two are not used to give different persons of the same tense, we shall call the pure system: the other two, both hybrids, will be called, one the coloured-future, the other the plain-future system. In Old English there was no separate future; present and future were one. Shall and will were the presents of two verbs, to which belong also the pasts should and would, the conditionals should and would, and the past conditionals should have and would have. Shall had the meaning of command or obligation, and will of wish. But as commands and wishes are concerned mainly with the future, it was natural that a future tense auxiliary should be developed out of these two verbs. The coloured future results from the application to future time of those forms that were practically useful in the pure system; they consequently retain in the coloured future, with some modifications, the ideas of command and wish proper to the original verbs. The plain future results from the taking of those forms that were practically out of work in the pure system to make what had not before existed, a simple future tense; these have accordingly not retained the ideas of command and wish.<sup>50a</sup>

Which were the practically useful and which the superfluous forms in the pure system is explained as follows:

Thou shalt not steal is the type of shall in the pure system. We do not ordinarily issue commands to ourselves; consequently I shall is hardly required; but we often ask for orders, and therefore shall I? is required. The form of the shall present in the pure system is accordingly:

Shall I? You shall. He shall. Shall we? They shall.

As to the past tense, orders cannot be given, but may be asked about, so that, for instance, What should I do? (i.e., What was I to do?) can be done all through interrogatively.

In the conditionals, both statement and question can be done all through. I can give orders to my imaginary, though not to my actual self. I cannot say (as a command) I shall do it; but I can say, as a conditional command, I should do it.

I shall and we shall are accordingly the superfluous forms of the present shall in the pure system.

Again, with will, I will meaning it is my will, it is obvious that we can generally state this only of ourselves; we do not know the inside of other people's minds, but we can ask about it. The present runs, then,

I will. Will you? Will he? We will. Will they?

The past tense can here be done all through, both positively and interrogatively. For though we cannot tell other people's present will, we can often infer their past will from their actions. So (I was asked, but) I would not, and Why would I do it? all through. And similarly in the conditionals, I would not (if I could), &c.

The spare forms supplied by the present will, then are you will, he will, they will; and these, with I shall, we shall, are ready, when the simple future is required, to construct it out of.<sup>50b</sup>

In the study which follows, we shall note, for example, much less emphasis on consistency in the expression of the terms of the English text than one would find in a translated work in general. 'Affirm' in the opening clause of Article 1, for example, is expressed by 'deimhnigh' (that Article reading 'The Irish nation hereby affirms its ... right to ...', 'Deimhníonn náisiún na hÉireann leis seo a gceart ... chun ...'), which verb is the Irish legal term for both 'certify' and 'vouch'. 'Affirm' in the opening section of the Article dealing with International Relations, Article 29.1, echoes Article 1: 'Ireland affirms its devotion to the ideal of peace ... amongst nations'; 'affirm' is expressed in this instance by 'dearbhaigh', the Irish legal term for 'declare' ('Dearbhaíonn Éire gur mian léi síocháin ... a bheith ar bun idir náisiúin an domhain'). We shall also see how the very same English phrase is expressed in different ways in the Irish text. Article 12.2.2°, for example, reads:

Every citizen who has the right to vote at an election for members of Dáil Éireann shall have the right to vote at an election for President. Gach saoránach ag a bhfuil ceart vótála i dtoghchán do chomhaltá de Dháil Éireann, beidh ceart vótála aige i dtoghchán don Uachtarán.

Compare this Irish text with that of Article 47.3:

Every citizen who has the right to vote at an election for members of Dáil Éireann shall have the right to vote at a Referendum. Gach saoránach ag a bhfuil sé de cheart vótáil i dtoghchán do chomhaltá de Dháil Éireann tá sé de cheart aige vótáil i Reifreann.

Emending the Irish text

Notwithstanding the merits of having an Irish text which reads as natural as possible and independent of any other text, there are cases where it would appear advisable to emend the Irish text to bring it into greater conformity with the English text, before the conflicts perhaps surface in litigation. Only three such examples will be highlighted here, the author acknowledging that legal experts may attach greater significance to other divergences outlined in the study. Article 43 concerns 'Private Property', Article 43.1.2° containing a guarantee by the State 'to pass no law attempting to abolish the right to private ownership or the general right to transfer, bequeath, and inherit property'. This is qualified as follows by Article 43.2.2°:

<sup>50b</sup> H.W. Fowler and F.G. Fowler, op. cit., pp. 143-4. The author is obliged to Jim O'Donnell for drawing this source to his attention. This subject is discussed further in the study which follows.

The State, accordingly, may as occasion requires delimit by law the exercise of the said rights with a view to reconciling their exercise with the exigencies of the common good.

'By law', however, is not specifically expressed in the Irish text, which reads as follows:

Uime sin, tig leis an Stát, de réir mar a bheas riachtanach, teorainn a chur le hoibriú na gceart réamhráite d'fhonn an t-oibriú sin agus leas an phobail a thabhairt dá chéile.

This literally translates as follows:

For that reason, the State may, as will be necessary, put a limit to the operation of the afore-mentioned rights in order to bring that operation and the welfare of the people into alignment.

The significance of this divergence is compounded by the relationship between Article 43 and Article 40.3.2<sup>o</sup>, which reads as follows:

The State shall, in particular, by its laws protect as best it may from unjust attack and, in the case of injustice done, vindicate the ... property rights of every citizen. Déanfaidh an Stát, go sonrach, lena dhlíthe ... maoinchearta an uile shaoránaigh a chosaint ar ionsaí éagórach chomh fada lena chumas, agus iad a shuíomh i gcás éagóra.

Specific reference is made to the State 'in its laws' in both texts of Article 40.3.1<sup>o</sup>, 'in its laws' being expressed as 'lena dhlíthe':

The State guarantees in its laws to respect, and, as far as practicable, by its laws to defend and vindicate the personal rights of the citizen. Ráthaíonn an Stát gan cur isteach lena dhlíthe ar chearta pearsanta aon saoránaigh, agus ráthaíonn fós na cearta sin a chosaint is a shuíomh lena dhlíthe sa mhéid gur feidir é.

The second divergence to be highlighted here concerns Article 24.3. Article 24.1 provides that the time for the consideration by Seanad Éireann of Bills certified by the Taoiseach to be 'urgent and immediately necessary for the preservation of the public peace and security' be abridged to such period as specified in a resolution of Dáil Éireann. Article 24.3 provides that a Bill the time for the consideration of which by Seanad Éireann is abridged shall only remain in force for ninety days from the date of its enactment 'unless, before the expiration of that period, both Houses shall have agreed that such law shall remain in force for a longer period and the longer period so agreed upon shall have been specified in resolutions passed by both Houses'. In the Irish text, however, 'passed' is not specifically expressed, 'resolutions passed by both Houses' being expressed simply as 'rúin ón dá Theach', i.e. 'resolutions from both Houses', the Irish text corresponding to the English text quoted above reading as follows:

mura n-aontaíd dhá Theach an Oireachtais roimh dheireadh na tréimhse sin an dlí sin a fhanacht i bhfeidhm ar feadh tréimhse is sia ná sin, agus go luaitear i rúin ón dá Theach an tréimhse a aontaítear amhlaidh.

Finally, the English text of Article 12.4.4<sup>o</sup> provides that former or retiring Presidents may become candidates for re-election on their own nomination – 'Former or retiring Presidents may become candidates on their own nomination'. The term 'candidate' is not specifically expressed in the Irish text of that Article: 'Tig le haon duine atá nó a bhí ina Uachtarán é féin a ainmniú d'oifig an Uachtaráin'. This translates literally as 'Any person who is or who was a President may nominate himself for the office of (the) President' or 'It is open to any person who is or who was a President to nominate himself for the office of (the) President'. According to this Irish text, Presidents may nominate themselves for the office of President rather than as candidates for the office of President or for election to the office of President. Accordingly, if a President nominates himself or herself, it implies that there would be no election.<sup>51</sup>

Post-1937 developments in Irish

Some of the changes made to the Irish text of the 1922 Constitution in the 1937 Constitution are due to the remarkable development of the language in the decade and a half following the establishment of the Irish Free State. As Daniel Corkery states in the concluding paragraphs to his monograph The Fortunes of the Irish Language:

In the light of the fact that the Gaelic League, or shall we say its idea, has provided the nation with a sovereign state, its other achievements are not worth mention – its founding of a modern literature in Irish, its forcing of the language into schools, colleges, and the National University, its vast publication scheme carried out without assistance from any government. These and kindred achievements are trifles if weighed against the setting-up of a sovereign state, for surely it has been noticed that languages die only when their fostering state is broken. ... For the first time since 1169, the Irish language has a state behind it. To say this is equivalent to saying that everything has changed for it, just as everything has changed for the languages of India, Pakistan, Palestine – and indeed for the whole world.<sup>52</sup>

The Acts of the Oireachtas passed between 1922 and 1937 were translated into Irish and accessible to the drafters of the Irish version of the 1937 Constitution. It would appear that the Constitution itself introduced new terms to the language – in the commentary we shall see, for example, that ‘referendum’ was simply rendered as ‘referendum’ in Irish translations of Acts up until 1937, the term ‘Reifreann’ being introduced to the Acts following the Constitution. The Attorney-General was styled ‘an tArd-Aighne’ in the 1937 Constitution as against the earlier ‘an tArd-Atúrnae’ and ‘an Príomh-Atúrnae’, ‘Ard-Aighne’ now being the Irish legal term for ‘Attorney-General’. ‘Tréas’ replaces the earlier ‘tréasan’ in the 1937 Constitution and is followed in subsequent Acts.

By the end of the thirties, according to David Greene, ‘Irish prose was a medium in which any theme of modern life could be handled’.<sup>53</sup> The development of the written language continued apace after 1937, the early 1940s being recognised as a period of great development of modern Irish writing, with the re-establishment of the Oireachtas literary competitions in 1939, the founding by an association of Irish-speaking university graduates of the Irish monthly journal Comhar in 1942, the founding of the publishing house of Sáirséal agus Dill in 1945 and, in particular, the appearance of works by the three giants of twentieth-century Irish literature, Máirtín Ó Direáin, Seán Ó Ríordáin and Máirtín Ó Cadhain. The Second World War was, according to Gearóid S. Mac Eoin, ‘a watershed’ in Irish literary history.<sup>54</sup>

In the concluding paragraphs of Gaelic Literature Surveyed (1929), Aodh de Blácam wrote that ‘There are signs of the coming of a school of writers who will possess the full vision of the Gaelic past, and will be armed with the new learning: to them we look to fulfil the poetic hope – Beidh an t-ath-aoibhneas againn’.<sup>55</sup> Eoghan Ó Hanluain takes this up in the opening paragraph of the chapter added to the 1973 edition of that work:

While it would be misleading to suggest that the renaissance – an t-athaoibhneas – looked forward to by de Blácam has come about, nevertheless, the development of writing in Irish must surely be beyond even his enthusiastic hopes: he could scarcely have conceived for instance of the authoritative tone of Máirtín Ó Direáin, of the modern note of anguish and the vivid imagery of Seán Ó Ríordáin or the vigour and range of Máirtín Ó Cadhain’s prose.<sup>56</sup>

Eoghan Ó Hanluain attributes the ‘quickening of literary activity’ in the early forties to some extent to the teaching of Irish and Irish literature in the schools and ‘the consequent emergence of a generation who took literature in Irish for granted’. It was, however, ‘the fact that Máirtín Ó Direáin, Seán Ó Ríordáin and Máire Mhac an tSaoi, began, opportunely, to write almost simultaneously which marked those years as a new beginning in poetry’, according to Eoghan Ó Hanluain.<sup>57</sup>

Each of these writers mined the language itself for different ore and highlighted various aspects and qualities of the language. A striking feature of the poetry of Ó Direáin, according to Ó Hanluain, is ‘his manipulation of a basic vocabulary in which words such as cloch, cré, carraig, trá, teallach, fód develop from being merely descriptive to the evocation of those human values which Ó Direáin sees being eroded by urban society’.<sup>58</sup> Máirtín Ó Direáin (b. 1910) has recorded that he did not come into contact with poetry, in the modern sense of the word, until he came to work in Dublin in 1937 – though, as David Greene remarks, he must have heard many folksongs in his home in Aran.<sup>59</sup> Ó Direáin states that the work of Irish poets from c. 1900 onwards ‘did not indicate that they were exploiting the language to its full extent’:

We had two choices when we began, to go on using the traditional style which had been squeezed dry long before we were born, or to use the natural power of the language as we knew it. We took the second choice. As Eliot says: ‘since our concern was speech, and speech impelled us to purify the dialect of the tribe’. So it was with us.<sup>60</sup>

With Seán Ó Ríordáin, whose first collection of poems was not published until 1952, ‘one is aware of being at a frontier both of language and sensibility’, according to Eoghan Ó Hanluain, who further states that Ó Ríordáin’s ‘extension of both language and sensibility marks one of the finer achievements in Irish writing over the past thirty years’.<sup>61</sup> In his introduction to a selection of modern Irish short stories written in the decade 1939-49, Seán Ó Tuama wrote as follows:

Ní áiteoidh aoinne nach féidir liricí fóna a cheapadh sa Ghaeilge gan an teanga a lúbadh mar bhí sí. Ach chun filíocht mhór a cheapadh, filíocht a fhreagróidh folmhas agus anbhá anma na haoise seo, caithfidh an file cur chun na teanga a athchruthú, le treoir thraidisiúna, chun caoi a thabhairt dó ar a mheon féin a nochtadh gan bhacail ar an nós nua-aoiseach. Is é sin atá á dhéanamh ag Seán Ó Ríordáin.<sup>62</sup> (Nobody would argue that good lyrics cannot be composed in Irish without bending the language other than as it was. But in order to compose great poetry, the poet must proceed to recreate the language, with the guidance of tradition, in order to give him a means of revealing his own mind without hindrance in the modern manner. That is what Seán Ó Ríordáin is doing.)

Apart from its intrinsic value, Máirtín Ó Cadhain’s work is, again according to Eoghan Ó Hanluain, ‘a guide to the imaginative resources of the language’. Liam O’Flaherty advised Ó Cadhain to ‘prune’ his language but his purpose ‘to mould the language’, along with ‘the natural tendency of his imagination’, determined otherwise.<sup>63</sup> Commenting on the difficulty inherent in realistic description in Irish of life outside the Gaeltacht, Ó Hanluain writes that the power of Ó Cadhain’s language ‘creates its own convincing reality’. David Greene wrote as follows on Ó Cadhain’s first book of short stories, Idir Shúgradh is Dáiríre (published in 1939):

These, though immature, brought a new style to Irish: the speech of the people, certainly, but used with a richness, not to say obscurity, hitherto unknown. This wealth of language is not deployed in the traditional manner, but is used to furnish a highly organised system of metaphor and simile which would have shocked O’Leary; nor does Ó Cadhain make any effort to avoid the neologisms thrown up by journalism and official documents – indeed, he often uses Irish which would be condemned as ‘untraditional’ by the purists were it not for the obvious fact that nobody who has yet written the language is so thoroughly part of the folk tradition, so that even Tomás Crithin’s style sometimes seems consciously literary by comparison.<sup>64</sup>

Tomás Ó Criomhthain’s An tOileánach was published only ten years earlier, in 1929, and Peig was in fact published the very same year as Ó Cadhain’s first collection. It was ten years later, in 1949, before Ó Cadhain’s first novel, Cré na Cille, was published. According to David Greene, writing in 1972, Cré na Cille is the only book by an Irishman which is worthy of comparison with Ulysses. ‘The concern of a writer is not only to purify the speech of the tribe, but to enrich it, and it was the great merit of Ó Cadhain that it was the enrichment of the language, if sometimes at the expense of clarity, which was his constant concern’.<sup>65</sup> That Ó Cadhain’s first two books, as issued by An Gúm for use in schools, each contain up to ninety pages of glossary and linguistic notes is an indication of the words and phrases brought into writing by Ó Cadhain.<sup>66</sup>

The 1937 Constitution was over twenty years in existence by the time Tomás de Bhaldraithe's English-Irish Dictionary (1959) was published. This was, according to Eoghan Ó Hanluain (writing in 1973), 'perhaps the most practical contribution of scholarship to writing in Irish', having a pervasive 'and for the most part beneficial influence on Irish usage over the past ten years'.<sup>67</sup> That dictionary had to a great extent, wrote Ó Hanluain, 'standardised terminology and fulfilled its purpose of providing "Irish equivalents for English words and phrases in common use"'.<sup>68</sup>

The rate of development of new terms in Irish in the first half of this century is evidenced by the following. About 1950 Tomás de Bhaldraithe examined a check list of eighty modern terms prepared by Ralph E. Turner of Yale as a test for assessing the modernization of certain Asiatic languages. Only three of the eighty terms lacked corresponding words in Irish – these were 'demography', 'neurosis' and 'regimentation'. De Bhaldraithe remarked that most of the new words were not got from the source which has provided 90 per cent of the vocabulary of the language as it is used today, namely the people living in Irish-speaking districts, but from the professional classes (some native speakers of the language, some not). Terms were obtained in the following ways:

- by giving a new meaning to an old native word (e.g. 'rachmas' for 'capital'),
- by the revival of an old word (e.g. 'mortlaíocht' for 'mortality'),
- by the revival of an old word which has been given a new meaning (e.g., 'turgnamh' which once meant 'preparation', used for 'experiment'),
- by making a new word from native elements (e.g. 'bunreacht', i.e. basic law, for 'constitution'),
- by making a new Irish word from a foreign root (e.g. 'leictreachas' for 'electricity'), and, finally
- by giving an Irish form to a foreign word (e.g. 'leictreon' for 'electron').<sup>68</sup>

Many specialised dictionaries of terms have been published since 1937. Among the technical dictionaries published since 1937 are: Téarmaí Dochtúireachta (1942), Lámhleabhar Siopadóireachta (1948), Téarmaí Mileata (1953), Foclóir Fealsaimh (1958), Téarmaí Cuntasáíochta (1964), Foclóir Eolaíochta (1966), Foclóir Bitheolaíochta (1968), Foclóir Tíreolaíochta (1972), Nua gach Bia (1973), Téarmaí Matamaitice (1973), Liosta d'Abairtí as Conarthaí Tionscanta na gComhphobal Eorpach (1976), Téarmaí Oifige (1977), Téarmaí Oideachais (1977), Ainmneacha Plandaí agus Ainmhithe (1978), Téarmaí Craolacháin (1979), Foclóir Tíreolaíochta agus Pleanála (1981), Téarmaí Staire (1982), Eacnamaíocht Bhaile (1982), Foclóir Déiríochta (1985), Foclóir Talmhaíochta (1987), Foclóir Staidéir Ghnó (1989), Téarmaí Ríomhaireachta (1990), Foclóir Ceirdeanna agus Teicneolaíochta (1992) and Foclóir Astralaíochta (1998) which contain terms dealing respectively with medicine, shopping, military matters, philosophy, accountancy, science, biology, geography, food, maths, Treaties of the European Community, the office, education, plants and animals, broadcasting, geography and planning, history, home economics, dairying, agriculture, business studies, computers, trades and technology and astrology.<sup>69</sup> Most of the above dictionaries which were published since 1968 have been published by the 'Buainchoiste Téarmaíochta' (Permanent Terminological Committee) established by the Government in 1968 under the auspices of the Department of Education – a 'Coiste Téarmaíochta' was in existence from 1927 to 1939, and published nine booklets of terms.<sup>70</sup> Some of the terms in the above standard technical dictionaries differ from those of the Irish text of the Constitution. Just to give one example here, 'gairm' expresses 'commission' in Article 13.5.2<sup>o</sup>, which reads as follows:

'Commission' is translated as 'coimisiún, údarú, barántas', with 'commissioned officer' translated as 'oifigeach coimisiúnta', in the English-Irish Dictionary of Military and Related Terms, Foclóir Béarla-Gaeilge de Théarmaí Mileata agus de Théarmaí Gaolmhara, prepared by the Training Section of the Staff of the Army Headquarters, in consultation with the Translation Section of the Houses of the Oireachtas and the Dictionary Staff of the Department of Education, and issued under the direction of the Minister for Defence in 1969.

Téarmaí Dlí

The year of the publication of De Bhaldraithe's English-Irish Dictionary, 1959, also saw the publication of Téarmaí Dlí, a glossary of the terms contained in ten Irish Legal Terms Orders made between 1947 and 1956 under the Irish Legal Terms Act, 1945. The Long Title of that Act, which was signed by the President on 22 May 1945, reads as follows:

An Act to authorise the provision, for the purpose of law, of standard equivalents in the Irish language for certain terms and to provide for the publication of legal forms and precedents in the Irish language.

Addressing the Dáil on 11 April 1945, on the Second Stage of the debate on the Irish Legal Terms Bill, 1945 (which subsequently became the Irish Legal Terms Act, 1945), the Minister for Justice, Mr Boland, said that the Bill was intended to provide for the publication of Irish translations of legal terms and 'to guarantee that such translations will be accepted as having the same meaning, force and effect as the corresponding English terms'. The Minister continued:

At present there is a difficulty in the way of any extensive use of the Irish language for legal purposes. The whole of the law, with the exception of the Constitution, is contained in the English language only, and numerous words and phrases used in the law have been given technical meanings, as distinct from the ordinary meanings, by statutes and judicial decisions. It is necessary to have corresponding technical terms in Irish, in order that Irish may be used for legal purposes. There is no difficulty about finding Irish translations for technical terms, but, on account of the very nature of technical terms, a dispute may arise as to whether any particular translation conveys the technical meaning assigned to the original English term. No doubt, if people used Irish extensively for legal purposes, a standard vocabulary of Irish technical legal terms would be established in course of time as a result of judicial decisions. That process would take a very long time, however, and people are unlikely to use Irish extensively for legal purposes until an authoritative vocabulary of technical terms is available.<sup>71</sup>

Under section 2 of the Act, provision is made for the constitution of a committee to be styled the Irish Legal Terms Advisory Committee ('an Coiste Comhairlitheach um Théarmaí Dlithiúla Gaeilge') consisting of a judge of the Supreme Court or the High Court, a judge of the Circuit Court, a justice of the District Court, a practising barrister, a practising solicitor, a member of the Oireachtas Translation Staff (to act as joint secretary) 'and such other person or persons as the Government may from time to time nominate' (that person or one of those persons acting as joint-secretary). Section 3 provides that 'the Minister for Justice may, whenever he so thinks proper, by order declare that the equivalent in the Irish language of any specified term shall be such word or words as he thinks fit and specifies in the order'. Before making the order a draft thereof, prepared with the assistance of the joint secretaries of the committee, must be considered by the committee and reported on.

As stated above, ten Irish Legal Terms Orders were published between 1947 and 1956, and the terms were subsequently published in 1959 in the English-Irish / Irish-English glossary entitled Téarmaí Dlí. On the basis of the terms published in Téarmaí Dlí, the Irish Legal Terms Advisory Committee never specifically directed its attention to Constitutional Law. Apart from the final Irish Legal Terms Order, which deals with 'Miscellaneous Terms' ('Téarmaí Ilghnéitheacha'), each Irish Legal Terms Order deals with terms related to a specific branch of law, the nine orders dealing respectively with the following:

- Terms relating to Landlord and Tenant Law, Conveyancing and Property Law
- Terms relating to Criminal Law
- Terms relating to Compensation for Workers
- Terms relating to Practice, Evidence and Procedure
- Terms relating to Contract Law
- Terms relating to Probate and Administration
- Terms relating to Torts
- Terms relating to Bankruptcy Law
- Terms relating to Company Law.

Speaking in the Dáil on the 'Irish Legal Terms Bill, 1945 – Money Resolution', Deputy Dillon referred as follows to the Constitution:

I understand that a close perusal of the Constitution in Irish reveals the interesting fact that the Constitution says what nobody intended it to say, and that there is considerable confusion because certain persons are claiming to interpret the Constitution literally in Irish: that they are claiming rights under it that it was never meant to give, and are even claiming to deny rights which the Constitution was intended to provide. That is largely because there is an eager battle going on between the expert Irish lexicographers as to the meaning of the words employed in the Irish text of the Constitution. If you are now going to have a set of legal terms, and if we all can produce expert evidence in the courts that the terms contained in the dictionary do not mean what they are meant to be, we will be in a very serious difficulty. Will the Minister tell us what precautions are going to be taken to secure that, in this new dictionary of legal terms, ambiguities similar to those which sprinkle the pages of the Constitution will not arise?<sup>72</sup>

The Deputy later returned to this topic:

We are dealing here with the fundamental and legal rights of individuals, with words which may be the foundation of protracted and expensive litigation. Is it intended that once this foclóir of legal terms is published that it will be illegal to employ any term not appearing in this foclóir to describe the things? In addition to the words prescribed in the publication here envisaged, will it be permissible to continue to use the words that people have been in the habit of using for those things? We are treading on dangerous ground in embarking on a new legal terminology in the Irish language.<sup>73</sup>

In fact, the publication of the Irish Legal Terms Orders has compounded the situation in that, while many of the terms contained in the Irish text of the Constitution correspond to those in Téarmaí Dlí, in quite a number of cases the meaning attributed to the Irish legal terms of those orders does not correspond to the senses of those terms in the Irish text of the Constitution as expressed in the corresponding English text – or, looking at it from the other side, terms in the English text of the Constitution are in many cases expressed in the Irish text by terms which differ from those in the Irish Legal Terms Orders. Each such divergence will be noted in the commentary and are presented in tabular form in Appendix 2 accompanying the study. We will highlight just a couple of examples here.

Emending individual Irish terms

In the High Court, in Ryan v. Attorney General ([1965] IR 294), Justice Kenny defined 'imprescriptible' as 'that which cannot be lost by the passage of time or abandoned by non-exercise'<sup>74</sup>. This term is expressed as 'dochloíte' in Article 41.1.1°, where the Family is referred to as 'a moral institution possessing inalienable and imprescriptible rights', 'foras morálta ... ag a bhfuil cearta doshannta dochloíte'. 'Dochloíte' expresses 'indefeasible' in Article 1 and 'conclusive' in Articles 25.4.5°, 25.5.3°, and 63. According to John Kelly, 'dochloíte' does not have Justice Kenny's meaning above of 'imprescriptible', conveying 'only something like "irrepressible", "indomitable"'. Following Statutory Instrument No. 51 of 1956, the last of the ten orders dealing with Irish Legal Terms, the Irish legal term for 'imprescriptible' is 'dochealaithe', 'imprescriptible rights' being translated in that Statutory Instrument, and subsequently in Téarmaí Dlí, as 'cearta dochealaithe'. Following the fourth such order (and Téarmaí Dlí), 'fianaise dochloíte' and 'toimhde dochloíte' are translated respectively as 'conclusive evidence' and 'conclusive presumption'.

'Imprescriptible' is but one of many terms in the Constitution for which an official legal translation has now been fixed by the ten Irish Legal Terms Orders and which differ from the terms in the Irish text of the Constitution. 'I affirm (decree, etc.)' is translated as 'daingním' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'I affirm (as an unsworn witness)' translated as 'dearbhascain'; as we have seen above, however, in Article 1 of the Constitution 'affirm' is expressed by 'deimhnigh', while in Articles 29.1 and 29.2 'affirm' is expressed by 'dearbhaigh'. 'For the exclusive use of either of the said languages' is expressed as 'd'fhonn ceachtar den dá theanga sin a bheith ina haon-teanga' in Article 8.3, 'amháin' expressing

'exclusive(ly)' in Articles 15.2.1<sup>o</sup>, 15.6.1<sup>o</sup> and 45. 'Exclusive right', on the other hand, is translated as 'ceart eisiatach' in Téarmaí Dlí. Finally, 'leas an phobail' expresses 'the common good' in Articles 6.1, 40.6.1<sup>i</sup>, 41.2.1<sup>o</sup>, 42.3.2<sup>o</sup>, 42.5, 43.2.2<sup>o</sup> and 45.2.ii, this phrase being translated as 'an mhaitheas phoiblí' in Téarmaí Dlí – which Irish phrase is found in the Preamble.

The above is but a small sample of the divergences between the Irish terms in the Constitution and the official Irish legal terms. The nature of the Irish text, not being a 'mere' translation of the English, lends itself to such divergences, the terms in Téarmaí Dlí being – as the Long Title of the Irish Legal Terms Act, 1945, states – 'standard equivalents' for the English terms. The potential significance of the Irish expression of a single term may be illustrated by the following incident. Articles 18.4.iii and 18.7.1<sup>o</sup> of the Constitution provide that forty-three of the elected members of Seanad Éireann are to be elected from five panels of candidates containing the names of persons having 'knowledge and practical experience' of certain 'interests and services'. Article 18.7.1<sup>iv</sup> provides that one of those panels contain the names of persons having knowledge and practical experience of 'Industry and Commerce, including banking, finance, accountancy, engineering and architecture'. The Irish text of Article 18.7.1<sup>iv</sup> reads as follows:

In an application for registration in the Register of Nominating Bodies under the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Acts, 1947 and 1954, in the 1986 annual revision, the interpretation of the word 'foirgníocht' in Article 18.7.1<sup>iv</sup> was called into question. As we see above, this term expresses 'architecture' in that Article. However, the applicant body contended that the correct translation of 'foirgníocht' was 'construction' and not 'architecture', the former interpretation enhancing the registration of the applicant. Replying on 20/2/86 to the request made by the Clerk-Assistant of the Seanad for his observations on the matter, in particular whether the applicant's interpretation could be sustained, the Chief Translator of Rannóg an Aistriúcháin, the Translation Section of the Houses of the Oireachtas, stated:

'Foirgníocht' in our own documents, and in the standard official dictionaries [Foclóir Gaeilge-Béarla (Niall Ó Dónaill, 1977) and English-Irish Dictionary (Tomás de Bhaldraithe, 1959)], translates as '(act of) building; construction'. 'Architecture' in translation is 'aitireacht'. 'Foirgníocht', in modern usage (official or otherwise), would never be equated with 'architecture' .... The only reference available which would seem to back up the Bunreacht's version of equating 'foirgníocht' with 'architecture' is to be found in Foley's Dictionary (1855).

In a handwritten note on this reply in the files of Rannóg an Aistriúcháin we find the following account of the oral advice given, along with the written reply, to the Clerk-Assistant:

It is a principle of linguistics that all living languages undergo change – a type of metamorphosis – where the form of words or the precise meaning of words can change. This change can take place in two directions: (1) downwards in a perpendicular movement where the form of the word undergoes change, (2) horizontally or in a lateral movement where the precise meaning of a word can change. The perpendicular or first movement would be a linguistic variation. The lateral/horizontal movement would be a morphological change. Obviously, a morphological change has taken place in the precise meaning of 'architecture' in the Constitution as 'foirgníocht' in the 1930's period to the modern usage of 'construction'/'building' for 'foirgníocht'. 'Architecture' could have been a precise translation of 'foirgníocht' when the Constitution was drafted. Modern usage no longer accepts that 'architecture' is a precise translation of 'foirgníocht'. However this does not invalidate the interpreting of 'foirgníocht' as 'architecture' in the Constitution.

As will be highlighted in the study which follows, some terms and phrases found in the Irish text of the Constitution are no longer in current usage or no longer have the sense expressed by them in the Constitution. A few examples will suffice here: the term 'comhallacht'/'comhallach', expressing 'executive'; the term 'comhdhaonna' expressing 'social'; the phrase 'ar míthreoir' expressing 'incapacity'; 'conradh' expressing 'agreement' and 'cuir isteach ina iris' expressing 'enrol'.

'Gach cumhacht riala, idir reachtaíocht is comhallacht is breithiúnas' expresses 'All powers of government, legislative, executive and judicial' in Article 6.1; 'executive power' is expressed as 'cumhacht chomhallach' in Articles 28.2, 29.4.1<sup>o</sup> and 49.1, with 'aon fheidhm chomhallach' expressing 'any executive function' in Article 29.4.2<sup>o</sup>. In Article 29.7.3<sup>o</sup>, however, following the 1998 Amendment relating to the Belfast Agreement, 'executive powers and functions' is rendered as 'cumhachtaí agus feidhmeanna feidhmiúcháin’, this being the current general translation of ‘executive’. Note that ‘The Executive Authority of the Irish Free State’ is translated as ‘Údarás Feidhmiúcháin Shaorstáit Éireann’ in Article 51 of the 1922 Constitution. ‘Comhallacht’ does not appear as a headword in Téarmaí Dlí, Ó Dónaill (1977) or in Dinneen (1927). While the adjective ‘comhallach’ is given as a headword in Ó Dónaill, it is translated there as ‘observant (ar riail, of a rule)’.

‘Míthreoir’ consistently expresses ‘incapacity’ in the Constitution. ‘Nó go ngabhfaidh míthreoir bhuan é’ expresses ‘or becomes permanently incapacitated’ in Article 12.3.1<sup>o</sup>. ‘Incapacity’, again in relation to the President, is referred to in Articles 12.3.3<sup>o</sup> (‘permanent incapacity’, ‘míthreoir bhuan ... dá ghabháil’), 12.7 (‘permanent incapacity’, ‘go ngabhfaidh míthreoir bhuan é’) and 14.1 (‘his temporary incapacity, or his permanent incapacity’, ‘ar míthreoir go sealadach ... ar míthreoir go buan’). ‘Míthreoir’ is employed in relation to the Taoiseach in Article 28.6.2<sup>o</sup> (‘become permanently incapacitated’, ‘má ghabhann míthreoir bhuan é’), in relation to members of the Government in Article 28.12 (‘incapacity’, ‘ar míthreoir’), in relation to members of the Council of State in Article 31.5 (‘becomes permanently incapacitated’, ‘go ngeobhaidh míthreoir bhuan é’), in relation to the Comptroller and Auditor General in Article 33.5.1<sup>o</sup> (‘for stated misbehaviour or incapacity’, ‘de dheasca mí-iompair nó míthreora a luafar’) and, finally, in relation to judges of the Supreme Court or the High Court in Article 35.4.1<sup>o</sup> (‘for stated misbehaviour or incapacity’, ‘de dheasca mí-iompair nó míthreorach a luafar’) – the Constitution providing that all of the above office-holders shall lose office if they become incapacitated. ‘Incapacity’ is given as the first sense of ‘míthreoir’ in Dinneen, whose entry s.v. ‘mí-threoir’ is as follows:

Mí-threoir, incapacity, of body or mind, legal disability, etc., state of going wrong, want, weakness, faintness; mí-threoir ort! faintness seize you! ar mí-threoir, disabled from any cause, as lameness, drink, etc.; (adjective) mí-threorach, feeble, vigourless, gone wrong or astray.

Míthreoir, misguidance; upset, confusion, shiftlessness, feebleness. Bheith ar míthreoir, to be confused; to be helpless, enfeebled. Míthreorach. 1. Bewildered, confused. 2. Helpless, feeble, puny. 3. Misleading.

In section 87 of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, for example, ‘a statement which is likely to mislead voters’ is translated as ‘ráiteas ar dóigh dó vótálaithe a chur ar míthreoir’. ‘Míthreoraím’ is translated as ‘I misdirect’, and ‘míthreorú’ as ‘misdirection’, in Téarmaí Dlí,

'incapacity' being translated there as 'éagumas', 'permanent incapacity' as 'éagumas buan' and 'I incapacitate' as 'éagumasáim'. In section 4 of the Finance Act, 1990, for example, 'he was totally incapacitated by physical or mental infirmity' is translated as 'go raibh sé ... faoi éagumas iomlán le héigliocht choirp nó mheabhrach'.

'International agreement' is expressed as 'conradh idirnáisiúnta' in Articles 19.5 and 19.6, 'conradh' being translated as 'contract' in Téarmaí Dlí – and so generally understood today – 'agreement' being translated as 'comhaontú' in Téarmaí Dlí, which term expresses 'convention' in Article 29.5.3°. Finally, 'enrol' is expressed by the phrase 'cuir isteach ina iris' in Article 25.5, with 'shall be enrolled for record in the office of the Registrar of the Supreme Court' being expressed as 'ní foláir (an chóip sin) a chur isteach ina hiris in oifig Iriseoir na Cúirte Uachtaraí' in Article 25.5.2°. 'I enrol' is translated as 'rollaím' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'registrar' being translated as 'cláraitheoir', the term 'iriseoir' generally today being understood as 'journalist'.

Téarmaí Dlí, the Constitution and the Acts

As stated above, Constitution Law is not dealt with by any Irish Legal Terms Order and is therefore not included in Téarmaí Dlí. The publication Téarmaí Dlí is but a collection of the terms of those ten orders above and is by no means a comprehensive Irish-English / English-Irish legal dictionary. No Irish Legal Terms Order has been published since 1956 and the Irish Legal Terms Advisory Committee has not been convened for some years now. According to the minutes of the first meeting of that committee, Saturday, 12 April 1946, before the members began their work they were 'brought together' in Government Buildings in consultation with An Taoiseach Éamon de Valera and the Minister for Justice. Page two of the minutes reads:

Rinne an Taoiseach tagairt faoi leith don Bhunreacht chomh maith agus dúirt sé go mbeadh ar an gcoiste a mholadh conas a réiteofaí an scéal i gcás aon téarmaí a nglacfaidh an coiste leo a bheith bun os cionn le téarmaí atá sa Bhunreacht. (The Taoiseach made special reference also to the Constitution and said that the committee would have to recommend how the affair would be settled in the case of any terms which the committee would accept being at variance with the terms in the Constitution.)

The Constitution featured at the top of a list of documents which the joint secretaries were asked by the committee at their second meeting, 3 May 1946, to go through to put together a list of legal terms in Irish and English for early publication. On the evidence of Téarmaí Dlí, this would appear never to have been done and Éamon de Valera's instruction never carried out.

Section 3(3) of the Irish Legal Terms Act, 1945, provides:

Whenever the Minister makes a legal terms order declaring that the equivalent in the Irish language of a specified term shall be the word or words specified in the order, then, the said word or words whenever occurring in ... the official translation of any Act of the Oireachtas enacted in the English language on or after the operative day ... shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as having the same meaning as, and have the same force and effect as, the said specified term.

The translator of the Acts therefore must follow the terminology in Téarmaí Dlí rather than the terms in the Constitution,<sup>75</sup> which situation leads to a divergence between the language of the Acts and that of the Constitution and creates a real difficulty in the case of Acts of the Oireachtas which relate to provisions of the Constitution.

The disparity between the Irish of the modern Acts and that of the Constitution can be illustrated by comparing Article 42.5 with the Long Title of the Adoption Act, 1988. Article 42.5 reads:

In exceptional cases, where the parents for physical or moral reasons fail in their duty towards their children, the State as guardian of the common good, by appropriate means shall endeavour to supply the place of the parents, but always with due regard for the natural and imprescriptible rights of the child. I gcásanna neamhchoiteanna nuair a tharlaíonn, ar chúiseanna corpartha nó ar chúiseanna

<sup>75</sup> We shall see in the commentaries which follow that, notwithstanding the provision of section 3 of the Irish Legal Terms Act, 1945, the terms found in Téarmaí Dlí are not always adhered to in translating the Acts. The phrase 'leas an phobail' seems to be favoured over Téarmaí Dlí's 'an mhaitheas phoiblí', for example, with 'ceadaigh', 'allow' according to Téarmaí Dlí, sometimes translating 'approve' in the Acts, as against Téarmaí Dlí's 'formheas'. As stated earlier, account must also be taken of precedent in translating the Acts.

morálta, nach ndéanaid na tuistí a ndualgais dá gclainn, ní foláir don Stát, ós é an Stát caomhnóir leasa an phobail, iarracht a dhéanamh le beart oiriúnach chun ionad na dtuistí a ghlacadh, ag féachaint go cúí i gcónaí, áfach, do chearta nádúrtha dochloíte an linbh.

In the Irish version of the Long Title of the Adoption Act, 1988, ‘i ndálaí eisceachtúla’ replaces ‘i gcásanna eisceachtúla’; ‘ar chúiseanna fisiciúla nó morálta’ replaces ‘ar chúiseanna corpartha nó ar chúiseanna morálta’; ‘i gcás na tuismitheoirí a bheith tar éis mainneachtain ina ndualgas i leith a leanaí’ replaces ‘nuair a tharlaíonn ... nach ndéanaid na tuistí a ndualgais dá gclainn’; and ‘a líonadh’ replaces ‘a ghlacadh’, the Long Title reading as follows:

An Act to provide, in exceptional cases where the parents for physical or moral reasons have failed in their duty towards their children, for the supplying, by the adoption of the children, of the place of the parents ... . Acht do dhéanamh socrú, i ndálaí eisceachtúla, i gcás na tuismitheoirí a bheith, ar chúiseanna fisiciúla nó morálta, tar éis mainneachtain ina ndualgais i leith a leanaí, chun ionad na dtuismitheoirí a líonadh trí na leanaí a uchtáil.

In section 32 of that Act, ‘The Court may ..., having due regard for the rights ... of the persons concerned (including the natural and imprescriptible rights of the child)’ is translated as ‘féadfaidh an Chúirt ... , ag féachaint go cúí do chearta na ndaoine lena mbaineann ... (lena n-áirítear cearta nádúrtha dochloíte an linbh)’ and in s3(1)(I)(D), ‘the State, as guardian of the common good, should supply the place of the parents’ is translated as ‘gur cóir don Stát, ós é caomhnóir leas an phobail é, ionad na dtuismitheoirí a ghlacadh’. We note how ‘cearta dochloíte’ of the Constitution is retained rather than the translation of ‘imprescriptible rights’ in Téarmaí Dlí, ‘cearta dochealaithe’, and ‘leas an phobail’ is retained rather than Téarmaí Dlí’s ‘an mhaitheas phoiblí’. This illustrates the problem in translating the Acts where reference is made to the Constitution: the natural tendency is to have the text of the Act conforming as closely as possible to that of the Constitution, sometimes resulting in divergences from the official Irish legal terms. Deputy Dillon’s remarks on 18 April 1945 during the Committee Stage of the debate on the Irish Legal Terms Bill, 1945, bear repeating by way of concluding this section:

But the fact is – and everybody closes his eyes to it – that in connection with the Constitution the best Irish lawyers were retained as well as the best Irish scholars, and the Taoiseach himself presided over their deliberations, taking a personal interest in every line, in every comma, in every word. Months were devoted to the preparation of the Irish text of the Constitution, and, nevertheless, after the period of amendment by legislation has passed, it is now discovered that the text of the Constitution contains several ambiguities, and the meaning attributed by the Taoiseach to many parts of the Constitution is seriously challenged by competent scholars who are not inclined to disagree with him and who would like to accept his interpretation, but who say that interpretation could not legally be attached to the phrases and sentences used. Now the Constitutional dovecots are fluttering, and everyone is wondering what he will do. Some are praying to God that the ambiguities in the Irish phrases of the Constitution will not be invoked by some wily individual who will go into the court on foot of the Irish text and reject the English. And probably out of the fertile brain of the Taoiseach some expedient will emerge to get out of this linguistic difficulty without going to the country on a referendum. He thought that every possibility of obscurity had disappeared, that he had provided for everything; but he discovered to his cost that he could not and did not.<sup>76</sup>

Amendments

The question of the standardization of the terms of the Irish text of the Constitution, bringing them to conformity with the terms in Téarmaí Dlí, is particularly relevant in the context of future amendments of the Constitution. Many such amendments have been proposed in the reports of the All-Party Oireachtas Committee on the Constitution which deal with the Seanad and the office of the President, further amendments being recommended in the report on the courts to be published shortly. As the committee continues to report on the various institutions provided for in the Constitution it is envisaged that many more amendments will be proposed.

In a memo to the Attorney General on 2 June 1976, the Secretary of the Department of the Taoiseach stated that amendments to the original Irish version involved the introduction of new Irish text in practically one-third of the Articles of the Constitution – in Articles 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 20, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 34 and 40. The additions varied from two sections (ten subsections) plus six words (Article 25), a section and three subsections plus 18 words (Art. 34), a section, a subsection and twenty-nine words (Art. 27), a section (Art. 24), four subsections (Art. 40), a subsection and sixty-eight words (Art. 26), a subsection (Art. 29) and, in the other nine Articles, additional words ranging from one hundred and thirty-seven (Art. 28) to one (Art. 11). Since then many more amendments have been made to the Constitution, a total of nine having been added in the nineties – three in 1992, one in 1995, 1996 and 1997, two in 1998 and one in 1999. The Nineteenth Amendment of the Constitution, 1998, contains five new subsections which include two whole new Articles and a new section. Quite apart from the fact that these amendments have been passed by the people in roman script, and were subsequently enrolled in Gaelic script, and quite apart from the question of these amendments being in the modern standard spelling, appearing alongside the older spelling in the enrolled text, which questions will be discussed below, there is in the author's opinion the much more serious question of the divergences of terminology between these amendments and the original text and the fact that these amendments are to a great extent direct translations of an English text as against the main body of the text into which they are being incorporated which, as this study seeks to illustrate, is not a direct translation of the English text.

A comparison between the current Article 3 of the Constitution and the proposed new Article 3 illustrates the difficulty encountered in adding amendments to the Constitution which are literal translations while the basic Irish text of the Constitution is not a 'mere' literal translation. The current Article 3 reads:

... the laws enacted by that Parliament shall have the like area and extent of application as the laws of Saorstát Éireann .... bainfidh na dlíthe a achtófar ag an bParlaimint sin leis an limistéar céanna lenar bhain dlíthe Shaorstát Éireann.

The proposed new Article 3, which is now embodied in the recently enrolled text of the Constitution along with the original Article 3, is based directly on the earlier Article; note, however, that the Irish text which translates a version of the above English text of the original Article 3 differs greatly from the Irish text above, the proposed new Article 3 reading as follows:

... the laws enacted by the Parliament ... shall have the like area and extent of application as the laws enacted by the Parliament .... bainfidh na dlíthe a achtófar ag an bParlaimint ... leis an limistéar feidhme céanna, agus beidh an raon feidhme céanna acu, lenar bhain na dlíthe, agus a bhí ag na dlíthe, a d'achtaigh an Pharlaimint.

We see that it was felt necessary to add 'feidhm' after 'limistéar' in order to render 'area of application', along with two clauses to include 'extent of application'. Moving on to the concluding clause of the current Article 3, '(they will have) the like extra-territorial effect' is expressed as 'beidh an éifeacht chéanna acu taobh amuigh den limistéar sin'; in the new Article 29.8, following the 1998 Amendment, we find 'críoch' replacing 'limistéar' above, and 'exercise' rendered by 'feidhmigh' as against 'oibrigh' throughout the original Irish text of the Constitution:

The State may exercise extra-territorial jurisdiction in accordance with the generally recognised principles of international law. Tig leis an Stát dlínse a fheidhmiú taobh amuigh dá chríoch de réir bhunrialacha gnáth-admhaithe an dlí idirnáisiúnta.

In the phrase 'bunrialacha gnáth-admhaithe an dlí idirnáisiúnta' the wording adheres to that of the original text, as against the general direct translation of 'principle' as 'prionsabal'. Future amendments to the Constitution will contain an amalgam of both literal and non-literal translations of the English text, striving on the one hand to adhere to the language of the original text, and on the other to the language of the Acts and current Irish legal terminology. Not alone will these amendments differ in spelling and grammar from the original text but in some cases in the very language itself, in the terms and phrases found therein, leading to two distinctly different styles in the Irish text.

To illustrate the difficulty of dealing with amendments at present we will look at the amendments of Articles 15.7 and 41.2 recommended in the First Progress Report of the All-Party Oireachtas Committee on the Constitution (1997). Article 15.7 currently reads as follows:

The Oireachtas shall hold at least one session every year. Ní foláir don Oireachtas suí uair sa bhliain ar a laghad.

The Committee recommends amending the English text as follows:

Each House of the Oireachtas shall hold at least one meeting each year.

Whereas ‘meeting’ is simply translated as ‘cruinniú’ in Téarmaí Dlí we find ‘meeting’ expressed in the Constitution by ‘tionól’ (which is translated as ‘assembly’ in Téarmaí Dlí) in Articles 15.11.3°, 16.5 and 31.4 and by forms of the verb ‘comóir’ in Articles 13.2.3°, 31.8 and 32. While ‘each House of the Oireachtas’ is expressed as ‘gach Teach den Oireachtas’ in Article 15.8.1°, in Article 15.9.1° we find ‘gach Teach ar leith den Oireachtas’. Although ‘cruinniú’ renders ‘meeting’ in the amendment on Cabinet confidentiality in Article 28.4.3°, the translation proposed by Rannóg an Aistriúcháin in the case of the above recommended amendment is as follows:

Ní foláir do gach Teach den Oireachtas teacht le chéile uair sa bhliain ar a laghad.

The phrase ‘Ní foláir’ of the original would be retained, although not generally used in modern translations of the Acts, while ‘teacht le chéile’ here follows section 2 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), where ‘On the first day of the meeting of the Dáil’ is translated as ‘An chéad lá a thiochfaidh an Dáil le chéile’. In the enrolled version of the Constitution following incorporation of this amendment, ‘meeting’ would be expressed in four different ways in the Irish text of the Constitution.

Articles 41.2.1° and 41.2.2° read as follows:

In particular, the State recognises that by her life within the home, woman gives to the State a support without which the common good cannot be achieved. Go sonrach, admhaíonn an Stát go dtugann an bhean don Stát, trína saol sa teaghlach, cúnamh nach bhféadfaí leas an phobail a ghnóthú dá éagmais.

The State shall, therefore, endeavour to ensure that mothers shall not be obliged by economic necessity to engage in labour to the neglect of their duties in the home. Uime sin, féachfaidh an Stát lena chur in áirithe nach mbeidh ar mháithreacha clainne, de dheasca uireasa, dul le saothar agus faillí a thabhairt dá chionn sin ina ndualgais sa teaghlach.

The All-Party Oireachtas Committee on the Constitution has recommended eradicating this ‘dated provision which is much criticised’ and substituting in its place the following provision, which acknowledges the caring function of families without re-defining the family:

The State recognises that family life gives to society a support without which the common good cannot be achieved. The State shall endeavour to support persons caring for others within the home.

Based particularly on the terms in the Irish text of the current Articles 41.2.1° and 41.2.2°, it is proposed that the Irish text read:

Admhaíonn an Stát go dtugann saol an teaghlach don chomhdhaonnacht cúnamh nach bhféadfaí leas an phobail a ghnóthú dá éagmais. Féachfaidh an Stát le cúnamh a thabhairt do dhaoine a thugann aire do dhaoine eile sa teaghlach.

The repetition of the word ‘cúnamh’ above, however, may create a potential problem in that ‘cúnamh’ expresses ‘aid’ in Article 44.2.4° where ‘Legislation providing State aid for schools’ is expressed in the Irish text as ‘Reachtaíocht lena gcuirtear cúnamh Stáit ar fáil do scoileanna’. Technically, then, the second sentence of the Irish version of the amended Article 41.2 above could be read as ‘The State shall endeavour to give aid to people caring for others within the home’. ‘Tacaíocht’ rather than ‘cúnamh’ would be used in a direct translation of the above, independent of the context of the original wording of Article 41.2.1° – ‘A Long-term Support Framework for Female Carers of Older People and People with Disabilities’, the title of a 1996 report, is styled in Irish ‘Gréasán Tacaíochta Fadtéarmaí do Bhanchúramóirí Daoine Scothaosta agus Daoine faoi Mhíchumas’, for example. We also find ‘tacaíocht’ in phrases expressing ‘support’ in Articles 12.10.4° and 13.2.2°. In Article 45.4.1°, on the other hand, ‘to contribute to the support of the infirm’ is expressed as ‘cabhair maireachtála a thabhairt don easlán’. ‘Cabhair maireachtála’ literally means ‘living/subsistence help/aid’ and this again would involve the sense of ‘cúnamh’ which could result in the Irish text of the proposed new section being the subject of litigation. By way of conclusion here, the above is a good illustration of the need to take both texts of the Constitution into account when drafting amendments of the Constitution.

Script and Spelling

‘The position is that the spelling in the Constitution is a certain compromise. It is not the spelling that was used in the Acts.’<sup>77</sup> So stated An Taoiseach Éamon de Valera, ‘father’ of the 1937 Constitution,<sup>78</sup> addressing Seanad Éireann on 14 May 1941 during the debate on the Second Amendment of the Constitution Bill, 1940. He could well have added that the script, or type, used in the Constitution also differed from that in the Acts, for the 1937 Constitution was presented to the Parliament and the people in Gaelic type as against the roman type of the 1922 Constitution and of the Acts from 1922 onwards.

In A View of the Irish Language, Professor Brian Ó Cuív, son-in-law of the former Taoiseach, states:

So powerful were the conservatives that in spite of the fact that Roman type and a more simplified form of spelling were already in use in parliamentary publications in Irish, the government decided to publish the new Irish constitution in 1937 in Gaelic type and the outmoded spelling.<sup>79</sup>

Quite apart from the fact that the choice of script can also be viewed as having a radical aspect to it in departing from the script of the 1922 Constitution and the Acts – the medium as the message – this statement does not take into account the efforts made by De Valera to present the 1937 Constitution in a more modern spelling, or orthography, which efforts will be outlined below. Furthermore, as will also be revealed below, An Taoiseach Éamon de Valera was personally responsible for the pivotal role in the simplification and standardization of Irish spelling played by the 1945 ‘Oireachtas edition’ of the Constitution; not only was the spelling used in that edition an advancement on that in the Acts theretofore, and a model for the Acts published in the following years, but that edition was printed in roman type. Therefore, within a decade of the publication of the 1937 Constitution, with its Gaelic type and ‘old spelling’<sup>80</sup>, an edition in standardized spelling and in roman type was provided and versions of that edition, currently termed the ‘Stationery Office text’ or the ‘popular edition’, have been regularly reprinted ever since.

Script

Irish script and spelling were linked closely together in the early decades of this century as an emotive issue which had both political and economic aspects to it. Roman type greatly facilitated the printing of bilingual forms and documents after the foundation of the State and began to be used extensively in the Irish publications of the new State.<sup>81</sup> A memorandum was sent to the Secretary of the Executive Council on 25 May 1923, on the direction of the Minister of Industry and Commerce, seeking a decision from the Executive Council on the question of what type should be used in printing official documents in Irish. It is stated therein that ‘it is understood from the Stationery Office that while printing in romanised type costs 20% more than in English type, printing in Gaelic type costs 150% more’.<sup>82</sup> At a meeting of the Executive Council on 29 July 1924, it was decided that ‘Roman type is to be used generally throughout the Civil Service except as regards Intermediate examinations papers, in which case Gaelic lettering should continue so long as text books are printed in that manner’.<sup>83</sup> This followed on a letter from the Ministry of Finance on 17 July 1924, in which it was stated that ‘the interest of Finance in the matter is (1) printing in Gaelic script is more costly than printing in Roman script’ and (2) ‘typewriting in Gaelic script would mean an increase in typewriter equipment, practically all of which at present is in Roman script’.<sup>84</sup> The Ministry of Finance submitted that an order be made by the Executive Council to the effect that roman script be used throughout the Service (except as regards Intermediate Examination papers), stating that 'there ought to be uniformity in the whole Government service' – while the roman script was used in the Acts of the Oireachtas and in Dáil literature generally, in the Civil Service, on the other hand, Gaelic script was used in some Departments.

Looking briefly at the history of Gaelic type here, the basis of the printing type known as 'an cló Gaelach' was the form of Irish writing found in Irish manuscripts from over a thousand years ago onwards.<sup>85</sup> In the earliest extant manuscripts, Irish is written in a style which was already distinctively Irish and, as the centuries passed, it grew increasingly divergent from the scripts which were evolving in Europe.<sup>86</sup> In later manuscripts the norm was to use the Irish script for Irish and the contemporary roman script for quotations and names in Latin, English and other languages. In a monograph entitled 'The Irish Character in Print, 1571-1923', E.W. Lynam writes:

The Irish letter is a strange survival from the past, which owes its preservation partly to Irish conservatism, partly to political and religious conflict. The letters are simply the Roman manuscript letters as they appeared after three centuries of careful and characteristic development in the hands of Irish scribes. Two manuscript hands were chiefly employed in Ireland at the end of the ninth century, the 'round' or half-uncial, and the 'pointed' Irish. Of these the 'pointed' was destined to become the popular hand, chiefly because it used up less parchment. And accordingly it was upon a lean and angular letter that the earliest authentic Irish printed letters (Antwerp, 1611) were modelled.<sup>87</sup>

Roman type was used in the first book to be printed in Irish, a translation of the 'Liturgy' of John Knox, printed in Edinburgh in 1567. Four years later, however, by order of Elizabeth I, in an attempt to promote the Protestant faith in Ireland, letters resembling those of Irish manuscript style were cut for practically all of the most distinctive letters in the Irish script, for the publication of Seán Ó Kearnaigh's Aibidil Gaoidheilge & Caiticiosma.<sup>88</sup> The font cut by the Franciscans in Louvain for the publication of Giollabhrighde Ó hEodhasa's An Teagasg Criosdaidhe in 1611 was an even more exact replication of Irish manuscript writing than that of Elizabeth I<sup>89</sup> and Irish types were produced in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, as well as in the present century. Gaelic type was clearly distinguishable from roman type not only by the forms of the letters but also by the use of a dot or stylised 'h' over consonants to mark the 'séimhiú' or lenition. The attraction of this distinctive Irish type and the attachment of many to it was expressed as follows by E.W. Lynam in the above-mentioned article in 1924:

Any one who is familiar with Irish in the Irish character will find not only difficulty but annoyance in reading it in Roman type. The language loses much of its individuality, just as Greek does in Roman type. The sounds of Irish, not well conveyed by Irish spelling, are still worse conveyed by a character which has alien and very definite phonetic associations. Apart, however, from considerations of language or traditions, it would be wrong to deprive the art of printing of any legitimate form of expression. Printing in the Irish letter is a rare and beautiful form of expression.<sup>90</sup>

An Irish 'Catechism' was published by Fr Theobald Stapleton in roman type in 1639 and a few authors of religious works followed suit.<sup>91</sup> Douglas Hyde printed An Sgeuluidhe Gaodhalach in roman script in 1895 and roman type was used to some extent in the official printed reports and other documents of the First Dáil Éireann, 1919-21.<sup>92</sup>

Spelling

The issue of type was the subject of much debate in the new Free State and was, as we have stated, bound closely with that of spelling. The Gaelic League passed a resolution in 1928, for example, 'That it is better for Irish that no great change be made in the type or the spelling of Irish until the language is out of danger of death or destruction'.<sup>93</sup> The background to the question of spelling or orthography is outlined as follows in a memorandum by T.F. O'Rahilly to Éamon de Valera in early 1942, the circumstances for which we shall see below:

Every reasonable person will agree that, if the Irish language is to have a chance of survival against English, its spelling must be made less cumbersome and antiquated, and must be brought into some decent conformity with the pronunciation of to-day.

The constant trend of the manuscript literature of 1650-1850 was towards modernizing the spelling; and if a complete modern system of spelling was not evolved, the reason is that Irish literature during that period was, owing to historical causes, but little cultivated. Unfortunately the clock was set back when, a generation ago, people began to take the spelling adopted by Atkinson in 1890 (Trí Biorghaoithe an Bháis) as a standard; and (with the change of sg to sc) Atkinson's spelling was taken over by Dinneen in his Dictionary (1905), and thus got a new lease of life.

The need for bringing Irish spelling up-to-date has long been felt. J.H. Molloy, a native of Co. Galway, in his Irish Grammar (first published in 1867), protests strongly against the antiquated spelling: 'Is it, then, any wonder that the Irish language should be dying away, when [owing to the way in which it is spelled] it is fettered, encumbered, and made quite unintelligible even to those who speak it?' (p. x f.). As specimens of his own improved spellings may be quoted bliain, sleán, Dónall, córsa (he explains that the ó here is nasal), canúint, fearúil, cruinneód, d'oibreóinn, ceárta, tiarna, tiubh, colla (sleep), peaca.

In 1893 William Larminie, who had studied Irish in Galway, Mayo and Donegal, wrote: 'The greatest defect in the English language is admitted to be its extraordinary spelling. But in this respect it is completely outdone by Irish Gaelic, which is troubled in an aggravated form with every evil that afflicts English. Different sounds are written in the same way, identical sounds are written in different ways. Silent letters attain to a tropical forestine luxuriance, through which the tongue of the learner despairs of hewing a way' (West Irish Folk Tales, p. 232).

Our Scottish kinsmen have long since introduced innumerable changes into the Early Modern Irish spelling (which was common to both countries at one time) in order to accommodate it to their modern pronunciation. Thus they write Nollaig, ainnis; and they drop silent consonants in imeachd, biog (E. Mod. Ir. biodhg), fianáis (fiadhnaise), dòruinn, (doghraing), lúnasd (Lughnasadh), taibhse (-dhbh-), leòb (leadhb), meòraich (meabhraigh), solar (soláthar), òran (amhrán), fearail (-amhail), urras (urradhas), cunnart (cuntabhairt), and so on.

The example of Wales should also be borne in mind. Welsh owes its vigorous life in large measure to the fact that its spelling is infinitely superior to that of its powerful competitor, English. I have read somewhere that a Welsh bilingual child learns to read and write Welsh in half the time that it takes him to learn to read and write English.<sup>94</sup>

The text Trí Bior-Ghaoithe an Bháis referred to above, and edited by Dr Robert Atkinson in 1890, was written by Fr Geoffrey Keating (Séathrún Céitinn) in the early seventeenth century and it was the orthography in this and other books printed in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries which was favoured by influential figures in the language revival movement at the turn of the century.<sup>95</sup> While the Early Modern norm and its conventions were 'codified and powerfully promoted' by Dinneen's dictionary (first published in 1904 and again, revised and enlarged, in 1927), there was a growing acceptance in the early decades of the century that the writer should 'give us the language exactly as he speaks it himself, and as he hears it from the best native speakers' and that the forms of the spoken language ought to be reflected in spelling, the received spelling being, by now, in relation to pronunciation, 'extremely cumbersome'.<sup>96</sup> T.F. O'Rahilly argued that 'such cumbrous spellings as beirbhiughadh (for beiriú), imthighthe (for imithe), faghbháil (for fáil), urradhas (for urrús) and filidheacht (for filíocht) would be a severe handicap on any language, and are simply impossible in the case of Irish if we really mean to give it a fair chance of life'.<sup>97</sup> We find the following in the notes to his edition of Papers on Irish Idiom by the late Canon Peter O'Leary P.P. (1929):

Irish spelling is at present in a transition stage, and must needs be so for some time to come. When, in the nineties of the last century, Irish began to be re-cultivated as a literary language, the only well-edited Modern Irish text and vocabulary were to be found in a book then easily procurable, Professor Robert Atkinson's edition of Keating's Tri Bior-ghaoithe an Bháis, which was published in 1890. It was most unfortunate, but easily intelligible, that the spelling employed by Atkinson in this book, being the only available model, should have been adopted by writers who in other respects aimed at reproducing the Irish of our own time. The handful of people living in Dublin thirty years ago who, in the circumstances of the moment, found themselves called on to decide what was the 'correct' Irish spelling, were men who were much better acquainted with the older literature than with the living speech. The fact was then unrecognized that our MSS. and printed books during the last three centuries, afford ample evidence of an ever-growing tendency to bring modern spelling into harmony with modern sounds. The result has been that most Irish books produced during the present century are burdened with an antiquated system of spelling which takes no account of present-day pronunciation. Like every other living language, Irish has been growing and changing all through the centuries. Its Sounds, its Grammar, and its Vocabulary are admittedly very different now from what they were three or four centuries ago. With regard to the Spelling alone many people nowadays appear to think that there is something sacrosanct and immutable in the system which an Englishman adopted when editing an Early-Modern text thirty-two years ago, and which in many ways is more rigid and more reactionary than even that of the antiquarian scribes of Keating's day. The Atkinsonian system has, therefore, little claim to be called either the 'correct' or the 'traditional' spelling from a present day standpoint. ... Canon O'Leary, the greatest of contemporary writers of Irish, was soon in revolt against the tyranny of the antiquated spelling; and, though he did not pause from his literary work to construct a system which would take its place, his voice was always raised against those who would erect Atkinson's spelling of a seventeenth-century text into an immutable law for current Irish. Speaking of the 'hideous-looking monsters' into which the antiquated spelling turns so many Irish words, he wrote in 1902: 'Look at one of them! You expect it ought to consist of seven or eight syllables. Get a native Irish speaker to pronounce it, and, presto! it becomes a nice, tidy little word of two nice, musical little syllables.' Elsewhere he appeals to those writers who know the language as a living tongue to turn a deaf ear to the would-be 'scholars' who try to force 'correct' spelling on them. The duty of such writers, he says, is 'to give us, in black and white on paper, the real living speech of the people, ... unclogged and unhampered with strings of adventitious letters whose original phonetic purpose has been obsolete for generations, and whose presence, therefore, in the spelling is a violation of the fundamental principle which has regulated Irish spelling from time immemorial'.<sup>98</sup>

Osborn Bergin and Shán Ó Cuív (father of Professor Brian Ó Cuív referred to above), with assistance from Richard O'Daly, had put forward a system of 'simple spelling', Letiriú Shimplí, in 1910. Work on devising a simplified standard had been officially begun by 1929,<sup>99</sup> the Translation Section of the Oireachtas having been engaged on an on-going basis in simplifying the orthography contained in Dinneen's Irish-English Dictionary. As early as 1931 the Department of Finance issued a circular entitled 'Spelling in Irish in Official Documents', to acquaint all members of the Civil Service 'with the system of Irish orthography followed in the Oireachtas Translation Office'. This contained a list of 'modifications of the spelling given in Dr Dinneen's dictionary adopted in the Oireachtas Translation Office'.<sup>100</sup> All changed, however, with the change of Government in March 1932; the new Fianna Fáil administration favoured the traditional spelling as it favoured the Gaelic script. At a Cabinet meeting of 29 March 1932, it was decided that 'any existing regulations prohibiting the use of Gaelic script in official communications or publications, including publications under the Department of Education's schemes for the preparation of books in Irish, shall be cancelled and that the use of Gaelic or Roman script should in future be optional'.<sup>101</sup> The Department of Education abandoned its plan for an ordered change-over in the schools from Gaelic to roman type<sup>102</sup> and instruction given by the Department of Education to L. Mac Cionnaith to produce his English-Irish dictionary in roman type was now reversed.<sup>103</sup> Thus it came about that the 1937 Constitution was in Gaelic rather than roman type.

1937 Committee

The orthography of the Constitution, however, was, as stated above, ‘a compromise’. Éamon de Valera set up a committee on 4 May 1937, before publication of the Constitution, to make recommendations by the end of the month regarding any changes that should be made to the orthography of the Draft Constitution in order to simplify it (‘chun molta do dhéanamh i dtaobh aon atharuithe ba mhaith a dhéanamh ar litriú na Gaedhilge sa Dréacht-Bhunreacht d’fhonn an litriú san do shimpliú’<sup>104</sup>). This committee was chaired by Professor Eoin Mac Néill and included Prof. T.F. O’Rahilly, along with Shán Ó Cuív and Prof. Osborn Bergin (the authors of Letiriú Shimplí referred to above), Risteárd Ó Foghludha (who acted as ‘editor’ of the Irish version of the 1937 Constitution), Colm Ó Murchadha (Clerk of the Dáil), Micheál Breathnach, Prof. Tomás Ó Máille, Pádraig Ó Siochfhradha, Prof. Séamus Ua Searcaigh and Peadar Mac Fhionnlaoich.<sup>105</sup> This Committee met on the 7th, 8th, 10th and 21st of May, completing their work before the 31st, submitting ‘an Alternative Report’, written by a small minority who did not agree completely with the general judgment, along with the general Report.<sup>106</sup> Among the recommendations to be signed by seven of the eleven members of that Committee (the signatures of T.F. O’Rahilly, Shán Ó Cuív, Osborn Bergin and Colm Ó Murchadha being absent<sup>107</sup>) were that ‘-ughadh’ be shortened to ‘ú’ (‘bunú’, for example, as against the headword ‘bunughadh’ in Dinneen’s Irish-English Dictionary), the conjunction ‘acht’ be written simply as ‘ach’, and ‘-aidh’ and ‘-ighidh’ (‘-idh’) be written respectively as ‘-a’ and ‘-e’ in the Present Subjunctive (e.g. ‘mura ndéana’, ‘go dtéighe sé’). While those signatories recommended replacing ‘-faidh’ and ‘-fidh’ with ‘-fa’ and ‘-fe’ respectively before a pronoun in the Future Tense (e.g. ‘leanfa sé’) – a modification of Irish orthography as yet not implemented – they were, on the whole, conservative in their approach to spelling reform, as they were in matters of morphology; with regard to the latter, for example, they recommended the retention of the old form of the dative plural in ‘-(a)ibh’.<sup>108</sup> Thus it is that the text of the 1937 Constitution contains an amalgam of both ‘old’ and (some) ‘new’ spellings. Taking the text of Article 1, for example, ‘do bhunú’ and ‘sinsear’ (‘sinsear’ being the form of the headword in Dinneen) of the new system appear alongside ‘riaghaltas’ (the form given as headword in Dinneen, whereas ‘rialtas’ occurs in the 1922 Constitution); ‘saoghal’ rather than ‘saol’, whereas the derivative adjective is spelled ‘saolta’ in section 5(7) of the Dublin Reconstruction (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1924; ‘poilitidheachta’ rather than ‘poilitíochta’, the form ‘politíochta’ occurring in the First Schedule to the District Justices (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923; the old spelling is retained in ‘deimhnigheann’ (‘deimhníonn’ today), ‘do-chlaoidhte’ (‘dochloíte’), ‘saoidheacht’ (‘saíocht’), and ‘dúthchas’ (‘dúchas’); and, finally, the old dative plural is retained in ‘náisiúnaibh’:

Deimhnigheann náisiún na hÉireann leis seo a gceart do-shannta, do-chlaoidhte, ceannasach chun cibé cinéal Riaghaltais is rogha leo féin do bhunú, chun a gcaidreamh le náisiúnaibh eile do chinneadh, agus chun a saoghal poilitidheachta is geilleagair is saoidheachta do chur ar aghaidh do réir dhúthchais is gnás a sinsear.

The Irish nation hereby affirms its inalienable, indefeasible, and sovereign right to choose its own form of Government, to determine its relations with other nations, and to develop its life, political, economic and cultural, in accordance with its own genius and traditions.

In the May 1941 Seanad address referred to above, Éamon de Valera acknowledged that political rather than linguistic considerations dictated the orthography of the Constitution and expressed regret for that decision:

104 See Séamas Daltún, op. cit., pp. 16, 20.

105 Eoin Mac Néill, T. F. O’Rahilly, Osborn Bergin and Colm Ó Murchadha had been on the Committee which prepared the Irish version of the 1922 Constitution, as was Liam Ó Rinn, who along with Tomás Page, as members of the Oireachtas Translation Staff, had examined a draft of the Irish version of the 1937 Constitution before it was printed — see Séamas Daltún, op. cit., p. 15.

The position is that, for the original Draft, we did get together a number of scholars, and those representing different points of view. I do not think they were satisfied themselves, and I do not think that the group that met would say that there would be anything like unanimity or common agreement as to spelling. We did it because I did not want to have controversy on what appeared to me to be a minor point. We did not have any of the controversies which might have arisen had we gone on a line which, in the long run, might have been a wiser line, that is, to follow the spelling of the translation department.

I am interested in it only from the Irish point of view – I am not interested in any small matters – in increasing the use of Irish in our lives, and I must say that the belief I have come to, with no other aim in mind than the development of the language and its increasing use in our lives, is that one of the things that would help us most would be to get a standardised spelling.<sup>109</sup>

Standardization

On 16 May 1938, the very year following the presentation to the Parliament and people of the Constitution in Gaelic script and in a ‘compromised’ orthography, the Ministry of Finance circulated to the members of the Government copies of a memorandum entitled ‘Adoption of a uniform script and orthography in Irish’. The Commission on Irish in the Civil Service had recommended to the Minister for Finance that ‘uniformity should be introduced as regards the spelling and script used in documents in Irish published under Government auspices’. The Commission considered that ‘the Government, being the only authoritative body in the country competent to do so, should, after obtaining such advice as they deem fit, make and enforce an order that the type and orthography employed in future in Irish should conform to particular specified forms’. The principal argument in favour of the Oireachtas Translation Staff’s style of simplified spelling and roman script, according to this memo, was that ‘its comparative simplicity results in an economy of time and money in printing and typing’. Secondly, its adoption would introduce ‘increased accuracy and uniformity in the spelling of Irish by the elimination of alternative spellings, obscure dialectical forms and unnecessary accents’. It is stated, however, that ‘a strong body of influential opinion is opposed to simplification as being destructive of the integrity of the language’. As regards the modern roman lettering, the arguments in its favour were that roman type ‘avoids duplication of typewriters and printing machines’ and that its adoption would encourage the greater use of Irish ‘in business and newspapers’. Against this was the fact that all writers of Irish and students of the language were accustomed to Gaelic script.<sup>110</sup>

On 14 February 1939, Éamon de Valera spoke with the Clerk of the Dáil, Colm Ó Murchadha, about the system of Irish spelling in use in Dáil Éireann and asked him to suggest some names for a proposed Commission on Irish orthography. Colm Ó Murchadha suggested Osborn Bergin, T.F. O’Rahilly, Tadhg Ó Donnchadha (Tórna), Gearóid Ó Murchadha agus Séamus Ó Searcaigh.<sup>111</sup> A memo supplied by Colm Ó Murchadha on the system of Irish spelling used by the Translation Staff of Dáil Éireann (which memo had been printed in Iris an Phuist, 2/9/1931) was sent by the Taoiseach’s Office to those people suggested by Colm Ó Murchadha. Éamon de Valera wrote personally to An tAthair Pádraig de Brún on 17 May 1939, seeking his opinion on the system and stating that he felt increasing its usage would benefit the language (‘is dóigh liom go raghadh sé chun tairbhe don teangain a úsáid do mhéadú’).<sup>112</sup> The Dublin Institute for Advanced Studies, for the establishment of which in 1940 De Valera himself was responsible to a large extent, was also approached, and a copy of the decisions made by the School of Celtic Studies of that Institute on the question of Irish spelling was sent to the Private Secretary of the Taoiseach on 27 March 1941.<sup>113</sup> Were the Senators whom the Taoiseach addressed on 14 May 1941 aware of this, they might not have been as amused as Éamon de Valera certainly must have been by the following remarks he made on that occasion:

The Taoiseach: ... The point is that standard spellings are symbols to the eye, and I, for one, would like to be a dictator in that I would like to be able to say, “Let us get a group of people who know the language. Let them give us definitely what they think would be the best spelling and let us standardise it everywhere as far as we could, even if we could not insist on private individuals using it.”

Peadar Mac Fhionnlaoidh: Níl mise i gcoinnibh sin. [I am not against that]<sup>114</sup>

An Taoiseach: Níl. [No]

Mr. M. Hayes: Was not the official Dáil system a good beginning?

The Taoiseach: It is a very good basis and, as I said, if I were allowed to be a dictator and having no kinks whatever, I would take the spelling which has been adopted by the Dáil translation staff. I would take it, say, to those who are in the present Institute and ask them for their opinion upon it, because they know the history of the language and its foundations. I would ask for their suggestions and then make sure the standard spelling was used in all Government publications of every kind – in every text book issued by a Government Department. ...

Mr. M. Hayes: I will vote for dictatorial powers for the Taoiseach on that.

The Taoiseach: You will be prepared to give them to me on that?

Mr. M. Hayes: Certainly, but not further or otherwise, as the lawyers say.<sup>115</sup>

1945 popular edition

Later on in that same address of 14 May 1941 the Taoiseach referred as follows to what was to become the first ‘popular edition’ of the Constitution, which was not destined to be published for a further four years, in 1945:

I was asked that, when a new edition of the Constitution was being prepared for the Dáil, it should be in the Roman lettering. I was asked if it was imperative that they should follow the previous form, and I said they should keep to what was consistent with the work they had done. Whatever views we may hold, or may have held at the start, a certain mass of work has been done. A standard has been reached.

I would like to send that standard to the Institute and ask them if they had any suggestions to make and to consider it in conjunction with the translation staff doing this work. Then we could say that this would be the standard and that every book for whose publication the State would be responsible would in future be published in that spelling.<sup>116</sup>

On 11 November 1941, Éamon de Valera went on to set up a committee ‘to recommend a system of abbreviated Irish spelling suitable for adoption as a standard system for general use’ (‘Córas litrithe ghairid don Ghaedhilg do mholadh a bhéas feiliúnach le n-a ghlacadh mar chóras chaighdeánach chóchoiteann’). This system was to avoid, as far as practicable, variant forms of spelling, and, at the same time, enable the speakers of different dialects to read words according to their own dialectical pronunciation, without undue strain. ‘The system recommended should be suitable for either Gaelic or roman characters and, particularly, for roman characters’.<sup>117</sup> T.F. O’Rahilly was appointed Chairman, and Séamus Mac Úgó Secretary, and the other members included Proinnsias S. Ó Tighearnaigh, Micheál Breathnach, Liam Ó Rinn, Domhnall Mac Grianna and Máirtín Ó Flaitheartaigh. The Taoiseach was to be disappointed by this Committee as he was by the 1937 Committee: by April 1942, it was acknowledged by the Chairman that agreement could not be reached among the members – this was the circumstance which occasioned the memo on Irish spelling from T.F. O’Rahilly quoted at length above – and it was agreed to discontinue the work of the Committee. That work was to be continued in a different manner: in a letter dated 29 April 1942, Muiris Ó Muimhneacháin, Secretary to the Taoiseach, informed the Clerk of the Dáil of the Taoiseach’s wish that the Chief Translator of the Oireachtas Translation Section, Liam Ó Rinn, be asked to undertake ‘to propose a system of abbreviated Irish spelling which would be suitable for adoption as a standard system for general use’. It was proposed that Professor T.F. O’Rahilly, by now Director of the School of Celtic Studies of the Dublin Institute for Advanced Studies, be asked to examine the results of the work when that would be available. ‘To start off this work’, according to the memo to the Clerk, the Taoiseach wished that a version of the Constitution as in force at the time be prepared in the spelling proposed as a standard spelling. The new Oireachtas edition of the Constitution was to be based on the manner of spelling that would be decided as a result of Liam Ó Rinn’s work:

Mar thús leis an obair seo, ba mhaith leis an dTaoiseach go ndéanfaí leagan den Bhunreacht mar atá i bhfeidhm anois d’ullmhú sa litriú a molfar mar litriú chaighdeánach. Is ar an modh litrithe a socrófar de bharr na h-oibre a bheidh ar siubhal ag Liam Ó Rinn ba cheart eagrán nua an Oireachtais den Bhunreacht do bhunú.<sup>118</sup>

Éamon de Valera was personally involved in the work. Points set out by Liam Ó Rinn on 12 October 1942, were discussed on the 19th of October by the Taoiseach, T.F. O’Rahilly and Liam Ó Rinn. Among the decisions arrived at were that the letter ‘v’ was not to be used in place of ‘mh’ or ‘bh’: ‘Generally “v” should only be used in words adopted from other languages, such as “vóta”.’<sup>119</sup> The Taoiseach met Liam Ó Rinn on 22 July 1943, to discuss recommendations made by Ó Rinn and in a memo from the Department of the Taoiseach the following day, based on the discussions, we read for example, that the Taoiseach inquired whether the form ‘cuirimíd’ alone should be recognised, on the ground that little difficulty would be experienced by those who wish to pronounce the word as ‘cuireamaid’.<sup>120</sup>

A comparison of Article 1 of the original 1937 Constitution with that of the 1945 popular edition (on the right below) illustrates the extent of orthographic changes involved:

Deimhnigheann náisiún na hÉireann leis seo a gceart do-shannta, do-chlaoidhte, ceannasach chun cibé cineál Ríaghaltais is rogha leo féin do bhunú, chun a gcaidreamh le náisiúnaibh eile do chinneadh, agus chun a saoghal poilitidheachta is geilleagair is saoidheachta do chur ar aghaidh do réir dhúthchais is gnás a sinsear.

Deimhníonn náisiún na hÉireann leis seo a gceart do-shannta, do-chlaoite, ceannasach chun cibé cineál Rialtais is rogha leo féin do bhunú, chun a gcaidreamh le náisiúnaibh eile do chinneadh, agus chun a saol polaitíochta is geilleagair is saíochta do chur ar aghaidh de réir dhúchais is gnás a sinsear.

On 7 March 1946, in answering a question in the Dáil from Deputy Dillon on ‘the standard spelling used in the Bunreacht’, the Taoiseach outlined the history of the standardization and referred to the resulting publication in July 1945 of the official standard for Irish spelling, Litriú na Gaeilge: lámhleabhar an chaighdeáin oifigiúil (i.e., ‘Irish Orthography: a handbook of the official standard’):

This standard spelling was the result of several years’ examination of the question. In 1941, I set up a committee to examine the whole problem of Irish spelling and to make recommendations for a system as simple as possible and suitable for adoption as a standard for general use. This committee found itself unable to make progress. I then entrusted the task to the chief translator on the Oireachtas Staff and, after his death, to his successor who, with the assistance of the whole translation section, re-examined the question in the greatest detail and, after some years of study, finally submitted the recommendations now incorporated in the booklet published under the title Litriú na Gaeilge: An Caighdeán Oifigiúil.<sup>121</sup>

Éamon de Valera was later responsible for charging the Translation Section with the task of standardizing Irish grammar which also resulted in a new official standard of orthography, both of which were set out in Gramadach na Gaeilge agus Litriú na Gaeilge (An Caighdeán Oifigiúil) (‘The Official Standard’), published by the Stationery Office in 1958. Following that publication, major revision of the orthography of the popular edition was undertaken for the edition published in the early 1960’s, as a comparison of Article 1 of the 1945 edition with that of current popular edition illustrates to some degree:

Legal considerations

We see from ‘le náisiúin’ of the current edition above, as against the earlier ‘le náisiúnaibh’ that the dative plural in ‘-aibh’ was finally abandoned in the sixties. We remember that the 1937 Committee on the orthography of the Draft Constitution had recommended that this form be retained in the 1937 Constitution. In a draft version of the 1945 popular edition Rannóg an Aistriúcháin, the Oireachtas Translation Section, following the practice in the Acts, did not include this ending, except in the phrases ‘i gcoinnibh’ and ‘de dheascaibh’, which continue in the speech of some localities. The Taoiseach explained in his Dáil reply to Deputy Dillon on 7 March 1946, that legal considerations rather than political considerations were on that occasion responsible for the reluctance of the Department of the Taoiseach to allow that standardization:

I might perhaps add that in the edition of the Bunreacht to which I have referred, the -aibh form of the dative-plural, although not in accordance with the new standard, has been retained solely because of certain legal considerations. I am now inclined to the view that we were too meticulous in this matter.<sup>122</sup>

From the early history of the popular editions, particularly on the advice of the Attorney General’s Office, there has been an understandable reluctance to make any changes to the text of the 1937 Constitution in the popular editions which might in any way be suspected of affecting the sense of the original. In a memo from Muiris Ó Muimhneacháin to the Clerk of the Dáil on 14 June 1944, we read of the following limitations set by the Taoiseach to the work on the new edition of the Constitution:

As to the text of the Constitution to be issued under your supervision, the Taoiseach desires that the standard spelling should be adopted, subject to the proviso that no change should be made which would involve the substitution of different words or distinctive forms of words for words or forms of words occurring in the Irish text of the Constitution as enrolled in the Office of the Registrar of the Supreme Court. Apart from changes involving merely aspiration, eclipses or accents no change should be made in grammatical forms, so far as the Constitution is concerned, even where the existing forms appear to be imperfect or erroneous. Changes in regard to aspiration, eclipses and accents should be made sparingly and only where it is perfectly clear that the meaning of a word cannot be affected.<sup>123</sup>

The above memo was written following memos from the Oireachtas Translation Section towards the end of the previous month on changes made in the draft popular edition other than changes due to the new spelling system and on forms in the Constitution which were not consistent throughout the text. In referring in the memo above to ‘forms (which) appear to be imperfect or erroneous’, the Taoiseach would perhaps in particular have been thinking of the phrase ‘i mbun an Roinn Airgeadais’ (‘in charge of the Department of Finance’) in Article 28.7.1<sup>o</sup>. The Translation Section pointed out to the Department of the Taoiseach in 1944 that they saw no grammatic authority for that phrase as against the grammatically correct ‘i mbun na Roinne Airgeadais’.<sup>124</sup> Similarly, in Articles 27.5.1<sup>o</sup> and 27.6, one finds ‘an oiread sin tábhacht náisiúnta’ (‘such national importance’) instead of the gramatically correct ‘an oiread sin tábhachta náisiúnta’, ‘tábhacht’ being in the genitive case following ‘oiread’. It was queried in 1944 whether ‘Láithreach d’éis na scéala sin ... d’fhagháil don Uachtarán’ (‘Upon receipt of such notification ... the President ...’) in Articles 33.5.3<sup>o</sup> and 35.4.3<sup>o</sup> should be corrected to ‘Láithreach d’éis an scéala sin ... a fháil’ in the popular edition, but this phrase appeared as ‘Láithreach d’éis na scéala sin ... d’fháil’ in that 1945 edition. All of the above phrases have survived in popular edition after popular edition and still appear in the current popular edition.<sup>125</sup>

Many of the inconsistencies in the text of the Constitution which were pointed out in 1944, but remained unaltered in the 1945 popular edition, have been rectified in later popular editions of the 122 Ibid, col. 2087.

123 National Archives.

124 The genitive singular following the noun ‘bun’ in the prepositional phrase ‘i mbun’.

125 The Translation Section also questioned whether ‘comhairlí feadhmannais’ (‘functional councils’) in Article 15.3.1<sup>o</sup> in the 1937 Constitution and ‘comhairle feadhma’ (‘functional council’) in Article 19 should correspond. These appeared respectively as ‘comhairlí feadhmannais’ and ‘comhairle feidhme’ in the 1945 popular edition, appearing respectively as ‘comhairlí feidhmeannais’ and ‘comhairle feidhme’ in the current popular edition, as against either ‘comhairlí feidhmeannais’ and ‘comhairle feidhmeannais’ on the one hand or ‘comhairlí feidhme’ and ‘comhairle feidhme’ on the other.

Constitution. It was pointed out, for example, that there were two different forms of certain words in the Constitution. In Article 12.8 we find the form ‘dearbhadh’ in ‘an dearbhadh so leanas do dhéanamh’ (‘taking the following declaration’), and we find ‘Dearbhann Éire’ (‘Ireland affirms’) in Articles 29.1 and 29.2. On the other hand, the modern standard form ‘dearbhú’ is found instead of ‘dearbhadh’ on three occasions in Article 27.4.2° (following the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941): ‘breith do chraoladh dá dhearbhú ... do chraoladh breithe dá dhearbhú sin ... ag dearbhú mar adubhradh’ (‘has pronounced a decision ... to the effect ... a decision to that effect is pronounced ... to the effect aforesaid is pronounced’). These forms were published in popular editions up till the sixties, and in the current popular edition Article 12.8 reads as ‘an dearbhú seo’ and Articles 29.1 and 29.2 read as ‘Dearbhaíonn Éire’. Similarly, in Article 23.1.1°, the form ‘diúltadh’ is found in ‘mura ndéanann Seanad Éireann diúltadh dhó’ (‘nor rejected by Seanad Éireann’) alongside ‘go ndiúltuigheann Seanad Éireann’ (‘is ... rejected by Seanad Éireann’) – ‘diúltú dó’ replaces ‘diúltadh dhó’ in the current popular edition. The form ‘scrúdadh’ is found in Article 12.10.5° in ‘an chúis do scrúdadh’ (‘investigate the charge’), while the verb ‘scrúdaigh’ (modern standard form ‘scrúdaigh’) occurs in Article 12.10.7° in ‘do scrúdaigh an chúis’ (‘by which the charge was investigated’). We find ‘scrúdadh’ in the 1951 popular edition, for example, ‘scrúdú’ appearing in the current popular edition. Another such case is ‘aontadh’ and ‘aontú’. Finally, in Article 40.4.3° (following the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941), we find ‘do thabhairt’ (‘is produced’) alongside ‘go dtí go dtiubhraidh an Chúirt Uachtarach breith ar an gceist’ (‘until the Supreme Court has determined the question’); this appears as ‘go dtí go dtabharfaidh ...’ in the current popular edition.

While one finds ‘go’ in the 1937 Constitution in ‘Gach Bille go ndearnadh an tréimhse chun a bhreathnuighthe ag Seanad Éireann do ghiorrú’ (‘Every Bill the time for the consideration of which by Seanad Éireann shall be abridged’) in Article 25.3, ‘a’ is the predominant (and now standard) form in that context and is so found in Article 25.4.2°, ‘Gach Bille a gcuireann an tUachtarán a lámh leis’ (‘Every Bill signed by the President’), for example. While the Translation Section recommended substituting ‘a’ for ‘go’ in cases such as Article 25.3, ‘Gach Bille go ndearnadh an tréimhse’ remained in early popular editions, appearing as ‘Gach Bille a ndearnadh an tréimhse’ for the first time in the current popular edition. Again while one finds the relative particle ‘a’ in ‘chun sannadh ... na n-uiscí a thiocfas ina sheilbh amhlaidh’ (‘the alienation ... of the ... waters so acquired’) in Article 10.4, earlier on in the same section one finds the more conservative ‘uiscí thiocfas i seilbh an Stáit’ (‘waters acquired by the State’), that is, without the particle ‘a’. ‘Do’ is found in place of ‘a’ in other instances of that construction. The Translation Section recommended the use of ‘a’ in all such cases, and also recommended ‘a’ in place of ‘do’ before the verbal noun – which we see above in the current version of Article 1 in ‘a bhunú’, ‘a chinneadh’ and ‘a chur ar aghaidh’. Both ‘tar’ and ‘thar’ are found in the 1937 Constitution, the Translation Section recommending the use of ‘thar’ throughout.

Relative

The final category of inconsistencies in the 1937 Constitution which we will touch on here is the old relative ending in ‘-s’ in ‘(a) bheas’, ‘(a) thagas’, etc. It was pointed out in one of the memos referred to above,<sup>126</sup> that while the form ‘a bheas’ occurs in ‘is Coimisiún a bheas comhdhéanta’ (‘a Commission constituted’ – i.e. the special form of the relative, future tense, of ‘bí’) in Article 14.1, in Article 25.5.3° one finds ‘an chóip a bheidh sínithe’ (‘The copy so signed’ – i.e. the ordinary third person singular, future, ending, instead of which, to be consistent, the form should have been ‘an chóip a bheas sínithe’). In Article 28.5.2° one finds ‘nithe a bhaineas le beartas’ (‘matters of ... policy’) as against ‘cibé saoráid eile a chinnfidh an tOireachtas’ (‘such other facilities ... as the Oireachtas may determine’) in Article 15.15. In Article 26.2.2° the older form of the future relative in ‘-s’ is followed by the general form of the future without ‘-s’ in the clause ‘isé chraolfas an bhreith sin ná an duine sin de na breitheamhnaibh sin a cheapfaidh an Chúirt chuige sin’ (‘and shall be pronounced by such one of those judges as the Court shall direct’). As the relative in ‘-s’ is generally found in the Constitution, the Translation Section asked whether the form in ‘-s’ be inserted throughout the text in the popular edition. The advice given was to leave the forms as they were in the original 1937 Constitution<sup>127</sup> and this advice has been followed to this day in the popular edition, with the result that one finds an amalgam of forms with and without the ending in ‘-s’ in relative phrases in the current popular edition.

This situation is being compounded with each new amendment of the Constitution. In line with the practice in the modern Acts, the form of the relative in ‘-s’ is not employed in the latest amendments. Thus we find ‘a bheidh’ in ‘aon duine eile a bheidh forordaithe le dlí’ (‘any other person prescribed by law’) in Article 41.3.2<sup>o</sup>iii following the Fifteenth Amendment of the Constitution, 1995, as against ‘faoin dlí a bheas i bhfeidhm’ (‘under the law ... in force’) in Article 41.3.3. The special form of the relative of the verb, ending in ‘-(e)as’ in the present tense and ‘-f(e)as’ in the future, is in the spoken language today confined to Ulster and Connacht Irish.<sup>128</sup> While these forms are allowed in official standard Irish<sup>129</sup>, they are not, however, given in the tables of the regular verbs therein, and are generally not written in standard Irish except in the set phrase ‘a leanas’ (‘the following ...’). In 1944, it was proposed that the ‘-s’ form should be generalized to all relevant constructions in the text but, today, to bring the popular edition into conformity with current practice would in fact require the exact opposite, i.e. the complete removal of all ‘-s’ relative forms. This would involve substituting ‘a bheidh’ for ‘a bheas’ in the following Articles: 14.1, 14.2.2<sup>o</sup>, 14.2.3<sup>o</sup>, 14.2.4<sup>o</sup>, 15.8.2<sup>o</sup>, 15.11.1<sup>o</sup>, 15.11.2<sup>o</sup>, 15.11.3<sup>o</sup>, 15.14, 16.2.3<sup>o</sup>, 16.2.4<sup>o</sup>, 16.2.6<sup>o</sup>, 16.6, 17.1.2<sup>o</sup>, 18.4.2<sup>o</sup>, 18.9, 22.2.3<sup>o</sup>, 28.7.1<sup>o</sup>, 28.11.2<sup>o</sup>, 30.6, 31.2, 32, 41.3.3<sup>o</sup>, 43.2.2<sup>o</sup>, 45.4.1<sup>o</sup>, 46.2, 48, 50.1 and 50.2. We find the form ‘a bhaineas’, usually written today simply as ‘a bhaineann’, in Articles 13.9, 14.5.1<sup>o</sup>, 18.7.1<sup>o</sup>ii, 28.5.2<sup>o</sup>, 28.12, 29.4.2<sup>o</sup>, 36, 36.iii and 45.1. The relative forms of other verbs in the Constitution are given below, followed by the forms which would be substituted in a standardized popular text:

6.1	a thagas	a thagann
10.4	a thiocfas i seilbh	a thiocfaidh i seilbh
10.4	a thiocfas ina sheilbh	a thiocfaidh ina sheilbh
12.10.2 <sup>o</sup>	a dhéanfas	a dhéanfaidh
13.2.1 <sup>o</sup>	a chomórfas agus a lánscoirfeas	a chomórfaidh agus a lánscoirfidh
14.1	a oibreos is a chomhlionfas	a oibreoidh is a chomhlíonfaidh
15.3.1 <sup>o</sup>	a ionadaíos	a ionadaíonn
15.11.1 <sup>o</sup>	a dhéanfas	a dhéanfaidh
23.2.2 <sup>o</sup>	a thosaíos an tréimhse	a thosaíonn an tréimhse
26.2.2 <sup>o</sup>	a chraolfas	a chraolfaidh

45.2.ii	a rachas	a rachaidh
45.2.iv	a rialós	a rialóidh

Amendments

Whatever of the original inconsistencies of the 1937 Constitution, a process of systematically adding inconsistencies to the enrolled version of the Constitution was begun in 1983. Up until that year the old spelling was employed in the Irish text of all the amendments. Thus, for example, the Third Amendment of the Constitution, in 1972, involving the addition of a new subsection 3 to Article 29.4, contained such forms as ‘do bunuigheadh’, ‘Connradh’, ‘do sínigheadh’, ‘adh’, ‘insan’, ‘dlighthe’, ‘d’achtuigh’, ‘le n-ar’ and ‘dlighidh’ as against ‘a bunaíodh’, ‘Conradh’, ‘a síníodh’, ‘ú’, ‘sa’, ‘dlíthe’, ‘a d’achtaigh’, ‘lenar’ and ‘dlí’ (which forms are now in the popular edition as against the forms in the enrolled edition):

Tig leis an Stát do bheith ina chomhalta den Chomhphobal Eorpach do Ghual agus Cruach (do bunuigheadh le Connradh do sínigheadh i bPáras an 18adh lá d'Aibreán, 1951), de Chomhphobal Eacnamaíochta na hEorpa (do bunuigheadh le Connradh do sínigheadh insan Róimh an 25adh lá de Mhárta, 1957) agus den Chomhphobal Eorpach do Fhuinneamh Adamhach (do bunuigheadh le Connradh do sínigheadh insan Róimh an 25adh lá de Mhárta, 1957). Ní dhéanann aon fhoráileamh atá insan Bhunreacht so aon dlíghthe d'achtuigh, gníomhartha do rinne nó bearta le n-ar ghlac an Stát, de bhíthin riachtanais na n-oibleagáidí mar chomhalta de na Comhphobail, do chur ó bhail dlíghidh ná cosc do chur le dlíghthe d'achtuigh, gníomhartha do rinne nó bearta le n-ar ghlac an Comhphobail, nó institiúidí de na Comhphobail, ó fheidhm dlíghidh do bheith acu sa Stát.

The State may become a member of the European Coal and Steel Community (established by Treaty signed at Paris on the 18th day of April, 1951), the European Economic Community (established by Treaty signed at Rome on the 25th day of March, 1957) and the European Atomic Energy Community (established by Treaty signed at Rome on the 25th day of March, 1957). No provision of this Constitution invalidates laws enacted, acts done or measures adopted by the State necessitated by the obligations of membership of the Communities or prevents laws enacted, acts done or measures adopted by the Communities, or institutions thereof, from having the force of law in the State.

This was the form in which that amendment was put before the people, even though the new spelling was by that time being taught in all schools. The Fourth Amendment of the Constitution, also in 1972, merely involved the substitution of 'ocht mbliadhna déag' for 'bliadhain agus fiche', the old spelling 'mbliadhna' rather than the new 'mbliana' being in line with the spelling of that word throughout the text of the Constitution at the time. The Sixth Amendment of the Constitution, the 1979 adoption amendment, contained such old spellings as 'sainráidhte', 'dlíghthe', 'd'achtuigh', 'sonruighthe', 'feadhmanna' and 'do bunuigheadh' as against the official standard forms 'sainráite', 'dlíthe', 'a d'achtaigh', 'sonraithe', 'feidhmeanna' and 'a bunaíodh' respectively. 'Dlíghtheadh' and 'dlíghidh' rather than 'dlí' are again found in the Seventh Amendment of the Constitution, also in 1979, with 'socróchar', 'luaidhtear' and 'tíomsuighthe' in place of the modern standard forms 'socrófar', 'luaitear' and 'tíomsaithe' respectively.

The Eighth Amendment of the Constitution, 1983, however, which recognized the right to life of the unborn, introduced the new spelling to the enrolled text of the Constitution. The subsection introduced by this Amendment, Article 40.3.3°, reads as follows:

Admhaíonn an Stát ceart na mbeo gan breith chun a mbeatha agus, ag féachaint go cuí do chomhcheart na máthar chun a beatha, ráthaíonn sé gan cur isteach lena dhlíthe ar an gceart sin agus ráthaíonn fós an ceart sin a chosaint is a shuíomh lena dhlíthe sa mhéid gur féidir é.

The State acknowledges the right to life of the unborn and, with due regard to the equal right to life of the mother, guarantees in its laws to respect, and, as far as practicable, by its laws to defend and vindicate that right.

Compare the new spelling of the latter part of that subsection to that found in subsection 1 of the very same section (i.e. in Article 40.3.1°), which the above follows in the current enrolled text of the Constitution:

Ráthuigheann an Stát gan cur isteach le n-a dhlíghthibh ar cheartaibh pearsanta aon tsaoránaigh, agus ráthuigheann fós na cirt sin do chosaint is do shuidheamh le n-a dhlíghthibh sa mhéid gur féidir é.

The State guarantees in its laws to respect, and, as far as practicable, by its laws to defend and vindicate the personal rights of the citizen.

As against 'Admhaíonn an Stát' ('The State acknowledges'), with which the new Article 43.3.3° commences, we find 'Admhuigheann an Stát' in the enrolled text of Articles 41.1.1°, 41.2.1°, 42.1, 43.1.1°, 43.2.1° and 44.1. 'Ráthaíonn' ('guarantees') occurs twice in the new subsection as against 'Ráthuigheann' in Articles 40.3.1°, 40.6.1°, 41.1.2°, 42.1, 43.1.2° and 44.2.2°. 'Do shuidheamh' ('vindicate') and 'le n-a dhlíghthibh', as against 'a shuíomh' and 'lena dhlíthe' of the new subsection, are also found in the very preceding subsection (i.e. in Article 40.3.2°), 'dlíghtheadh' rather than 'dlí' being cited throughout the original Articles of the Constitution. As against 'ag féachaint go cuí (do)' ('with due regard [to]') in the new subsection, we find 'ag féachaint go cuibhe (do)' in Articles 16.2.4°, 42.4 and 42.5, with 'ná féachfaidh an Stát go cuibhe (do)' ('that the State shall not have due regard [to]') in Article 40.1.

The Ninth Amendment of the Constitution, 1984, substituted a new subsection 2 in Article 16.1 and kept with the spelling of the original. We therefore have ‘dligheadh’ instead of ‘dlí’ of the new spelling, ‘coingheallacha’ instead of the modern ‘coinníollacha’, ‘aca’ instead of ‘acu’ and ‘ceart bhótála’ instead of ‘ceart vótála’:

| <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>i. Gach uile shaoránach, agus</li> <li>ii. cibé daoine eile sa Stát a cinnfear le dligheadh,</li> </ul> cibé aca fir nó mná, ag a bhfuil ocht mbliadhna déag slán agus ná cuirtear fá dhícháilidheacht le dligheadh, agus a choimhlíonas coingheallacha an dlí i dtaobh toghcháin comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann, tá ceart bhótála aca i dtoghchán comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann. | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>i. All citizens, and</li> <li>ii. such other persons in the State as may be determined by law,</li> </ul> without distinction of sex who have reached the age of eighteen years who are not disqualified by law and comply with the provisions of the law relating to the election of members of Dáil Éireann, shall have the right to vote at an election for members of Dáil Éireann. |

In the current popular edition this Irish text reads as follows:

- i. Gach uile shaoránach, agus
  - ii. cibé daoine eile sa Stát a cinnfear le dlí,
- cibé acu fir nó mná, ag a bhfuil ocht mbliana déag slán agus ná cuirtear<sup>130</sup> faoi dhícháilíocht le dlí, agus a chomhlíonann coinníollacha an dlí i dtaobh toghcháin comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann, tá ceart vótála acu i dtoghchán comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann.

The Tenth Amendment of the Constitution, 1987, which involved the addition of a sentence to Article 29.4.3<sup>o</sup> regarding the Single European Act, was passed in the old spelling, with ‘do sínigheadh’, ‘tar’, ‘adh’ and ‘insan’ of the old system as against ‘a síníodh’, ‘thar’, ‘ú’ and ‘sa’ of the new:

|---|---|
| Tig leis an Stát an Ionstraim Eorpach Aonair (do sínigheadh tar ceann Bhallstáit na gComhphobal i Lucsamburg an 17adh lá d’Fheabhra, 1986, agus insan Háig an 28adh lá d’Fheabhra, 1986) do dhaingniú. | The State may ratify the Single European Act (signed on behalf of the Member States of the Communities at Luxembourg on the 17th day of February, 1986, and at the Hague on the 28th day of February, 1986). |

The Eleventh Amendment of the Constitution, 1992, dealing principally with the Maastricht Treaty, was passed in the old spelling, adding new subsections 4, 5 and 6 to Article 29.4, ‘sínigheadh’, ‘dligthe’ and ‘tarraingigheadh’ of the old system being found respectively in subsections 4, 5 and 6 as against ‘síníodh’, ‘dlíthe’ and ‘tarraingíodh’ of the new spelling.

The Twelfth Amendment of the Constitution Bill, 1992, which dealt with the right to life of the unborn and proposed the addition of a sentence to Article 40.3.3<sup>o</sup>, returned again to the new spelling of the original Article 40.3.3<sup>o</sup>, which had been introduced by the Eighth Amendment of the Constitution, in 1983, as we saw above. While that Bill was not approved by the people in the referendum which took place on 25 November 1992, the Bills for the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments of the Constitution, which also dealt with Article 40.3.3<sup>o</sup>, were so passed. Both of these were in the new spelling:

All subsequent amendments have been made in the new spelling and are so enrolled in the 1999 enrolled text of the Constitution. The Fifteenth Amendment, 1995, substitutes a lengthy subsection on divorce for the original short Article 41.3.2<sup>o</sup>; the Sixteenth Amendment, 1996, adds a new subsection on bail to Article 40.4 and the Seventeenth Amendment, 1997, adds a whole new subsection on Cabinet confidentiality to Article 28.4. Thus ‘an Rialtas’, for example, appears under the heading ‘an

Riaghaltas' in the new enrolled edition of the amendment contained in Article 28.4.3<sup>o</sup> and alongside 'an Riaghaltas' in the original subsections of that section. Article 28.4.3<sup>o</sup> reads as follows:

Déanfar rúndacht na bpléití ag cruinnithe den Rialtas a urramú i ngach toisc ach amháin i gcás ina gcinneadh an Ard-Chúirt gur ceart nochtadh a dhéanamh i dtaobh ní áirithe –

- i. ar mhaithe le riaradh cirt ag Chúirt, nó
- ii. de bhua leasa phoiblí sháraithe, de bhun iarratais chuige sin ó bhinse arna cheapadh ag an Rialtas nó ag Aire den Rialtas le húdarás Thithe an Oireachtais chun fiosrú a dhéanamh faoi ní a luafaidh siad ina thaobh go bhfuil tábhacht phoiblí ann.

The confidentiality of discussions at meetings of the Government shall be respected in all circumstances save only where the High Court determines that disclosure should be made in respect of a particular matter –

- i. in the interests of the administration of justice by a Court, or
- ii. by virtue of an overriding public interest, pursuant to an application in that behalf by a tribunal appointed by the Government or a Minister of the Government on the authority of the Houses of the Oireachtas to inquire into a matter stated by them to be of public importance.

In subsection 2, which precedes the above in the enrolled text, 'údarás' and 'Rialtas' are spelled respectively as 'ughdarás' and 'Riaghaltas' and, as against 'a luafaidh siad' ('stated by them'), we find the phrase 'a ghníomhóchaid' ('[they] shall act'), a feature dealt with below:

I gcomhghdarás a thiochfaidh an Riaghaltas le chéile agus a ghníomhóchaid, agus táid go léir le chéile freagarthach insna Rannaibh Stáit a riartar ag comhaltaibh an Riaghaltais.

The Government shall meet and act as a collective authority, and shall be collectively responsible for the Departments of State administered by the members of the Government.

Unlike the 1992 Amendment on the Maastricht Treaty, the 1998 Amendment on the Amsterdam Treaty was in the new spelling and the new Article 29.4.5<sup>o</sup> now has 'Conradh', 'síníodh' and 'ú' ('2ú') instead of 'Conradh', 'sinigeadh' and 'udh' of the preceding subsection on the Maastricht Treaty:

Tig leis an Stát Conradh Amstardam ag leasú an Chonartha ar an Aontas Eorpach, na gConarthaí ag bunú na gComhphobal Eorpach agus Ionstraimí gaolmhara áirithe, a síníodh in Amstardam an 2ú lá de Dheireadh Fómhair, 1997, a dhaingniú.

The State may ratify the Treaty of Amsterdam amending the Treaty on European Union, the Treaties establishing the European Communities and certain related Acts signed at Amsterdam on the 2nd day of October, 1997.

The 1998 Amendment which deals with the Belfast Agreement adds a very lengthy Article 29.7 to the Constitution in the new spelling, and also contains new Articles 2 and 3 and a new Article 29.8, which reads as follows:

Tig leis an Stát dlínse a fheidhmiú taobh amuigh dá chríoch de réir bhunrialacha gnáth-admhaithe an dlí idirnáisiúnta.

The State may exercise extra-territorial jurisdiction in accordance with the generally recognised principles of international law.

We find 'bunriaghlacha gnáth-admhaithe an dlíghidh eadarnáisiúnta' in Article 29.3, however, rather than 'bunrialacha gnáth-admhaithe an dlí idirnáisiúnta' above. Again, if the terms of the Belfast Agreement are complied with, following the 1998 Amendment of the Constitution, the following new Article 2 would come immediately after the predominantly old spelling in Article 1 which we saw earlier:

Tá gach duine a shaolaítear in oileán na hÉireann, ar a n-áirítear a oileáin agus a fharraigí, i dteideal, agus tá de cheart oidhreachta aige nó aici, a bheith páirteach i náisiún na hÉireann. Tá an teideal sin freisin ag na daoine go léir atá cáilithe ar shlí eile de réir dlí chun bheith ina saoránaigh d'Éirinn. Ina theannta sin, is mór ag náisiún na hÉireann a choibhneas speisialta le daoine de bhunadh na hÉireann atá ina gcónaí ar an gcoigrioch agus arb ionann féiniúlacht agus oidhrecht chultúir dóibh agus do náisiún na hÉireann.

It is the entitlement and birthright of every person born in the island of Ireland, which includes its islands and seas, to be part of the Irish nation. That is also the entitlement of all persons otherwise qualified in accordance with law to be citizens of Ireland. Furthermore, the Irish nation cherishes its special affinity with people of Irish ancestry living abroad who share its cultural identity and heritage.

For this new Article 2 to be of uniform spelling with the preceding Article 1, forms of 'saoghluigh', 'áirmheann' and *cáilidheann would replace the above forms of the verbs 'saolaigh', 'áirigh' and 'cáiligh'; 'slighe' and 'comhnaidhe' respectively would replace the forms of the nouns 'slí' and 'cónaí' above and 'san' would replace 'sin'.

With the increase in the number of amendments being made to the Constitution this will result in a Constitution which will contain two different orthographic standards throughout the text. The only alternative to amending the later amendments to the older spelling and presenting all further amendments in the old spelling is to present a complete Irish text of the Constitution to the people in the official standard spelling, availing of that opportunity to remove the inconsistencies in that text that have already been pointed out, along with further inconsistencies as regards compliance with the official Irish standard, An Caighdeán Oifigiúil, published in 1958. While the popular edition can be taken as a basis for such a new text, due to the reluctance noted above in changing grammatical forms found in the original text, we see below that that text in the popular edition has not been fully grammatically standardized.

Grammar

Under the current practice, the latest enrolled text of the Constitution, in addition to containing two orthographic or spelling standards, contains two different grammatical standards, as does the current popular edition of the Constitution. In the Seventeenth Amendment of the Constitution, 1997, for example, a 'séimhiú' has been added to 'Tithe' in the phrase 'le húdarás Thithe an Oireachtais' ('on the authority of the Houses of the Oireachtas') in Article 28.4.3°. On the other hand, even in the popular edition, following the original text, we find 'Tithe' without 'séimhiú', or lenition, in the phrase 'faoi bhráid Tithe an Oireachtais' ('[communicate with] the Houses of the Oireachtas') in Article 13.7.1°. This 'séimhiú' in Article 28.4.3° follows a major rule contained in An Caighdeán Oifigiúil: when a definite noun ('an tOireachtas' above) is in the genitive case following another noun (i.e. 'Tithe') which is subject to a word or phrase which takes the genitive case ('faoi bhráid'), the first noun simply has its initial consonant lenited (i.e. 'Thithe') and is not inflected<sup>131</sup> – in Article 1, therefore, in place of 'de réir dhúchais is gnás a sinsear' ('in accordance with its own genius and traditions'), where 'dúchais' is the genitive singular form of 'dúchas', according to the official standard we would have 'de réir dhúchas is ghnás a sinsear'. This rule has as yet not been implemented throughout the popular edition and its implementation would involve the following changes:

Article	Current form	Standardized form
1	de réir dhúchais is gnás a sinsear	de réir dhúchas is ghnás a sinsear
6	chun leasa an phobail	chun leas an phobail
6	i dtaobh beartas an Náisiúin	i dtaobh bheartas an Náisiúin
9.1.2°	cailleadh ... saoránacht Éireann	cailleadh shaoránacht Éireann
12.5	Faoi chuimsiú forálacha an Airteagail seo	Faoi chuimsiú fhorálacha an Airteagail seo
12.7	i ndiaidh deireadh théarma oifige a réamhtheachtaí	i ndiaidh dheireadh théarma oifige a réamhtheachtaí
12.8	I láthair Dia na nUilechumhacht	I láthair Dhia na nUilechumhacht

Two different systems as regards the verbs in the Constitution are being created in both the popular edition and in the enrolled text under the current practice. 'Leanfaidh siad' would generally be written today in place of 'leanfaid' in 'Na comhaltaí den Rialtas a bheas in oifig lá lánscotha Dháil Éireann, leanfaid dá n-oifig nó go gceaptar a gcomharbaí' ('The members of the Government in office at the date of a dissolution of Dáil Éireann shall continue to hold office until their successors shall have been appointed') in Article 28.11.2<sup>o</sup>. As we saw above, 'luafaidh siad' (the analytic form of the verb) rather than 'luafaid' (the synthetic form) is found in the amendment contained in Article 28.4.3<sup>o</sup>, in 'le húdarás Thithe an Oireachtais chun fiosrú a dhéanamh faoi ní a luafaidh siad ina thaobh go bhfuil tábhacht phoiblí ann' ('on the authority of the Houses of the Oireachtas to inquire into a matter stated by them to be of public importance'), following current official practice, whereas 'a ghníomhóidh' ('[they] shall act') is found in the previous subsection. The following are the synthetic forms found in the Constitution, the analytic forms being given in the column on the right:

Staying with the verb, according to the official standard, the form of the future tense can be used for the present subjunctive except in phrases such as ‘go dté tú slán’ (i.e., when the present subjunctive has an optative function<sup>132</sup>). In Article 31.5, for example, ‘go dté’ and ‘mura dtarlaí’ in ‘nó go dté comharba an Uachtaráin a cheap é i gcúram a oifige, is é sin mura dtarlaí roimhe sin go n-éagfaidh an comhalta sin’ (‘until the successor of the President by whom he was appointed shall have entered upon his office ... unless he previously dies’), would generally be written today as ‘go rachaidh’ and ‘mura dtarlóidh’, that is, in the future tense rather than in the present subjunctive. The following Articles contain forms of the present subjunctive where generally today, in official documents in particular, the future tense would be found:

Turning to the adjective, according to the official standard, a qualifying adjective is lenited only following a feminine noun in the dative singular, ‘don bhean mhór’ being cited as example in An Caighdeán Oifigiúil<sup>133</sup>. Therefore the heading above Article 45, ‘Buntreoracha do Bheartas Chomhdhaonnach’ (‘Directive Principles of Social Policy’) would, according to the official standard, read as ‘Buntreoracha do Bheartas Comhdhaonnach’. This feature occurs in but a few Articles:

133 Section 1(a) under the heading ‘Séimhiú ar Aidiachtaí’ in the chapter entitled ‘Séimhiú agus Urú’. In Old Irish, as both o-stems (masculine nouns) and a-stems (feminine nouns) ended in a vowel in the dative singular, the following adjective was lenited in every gender (Kim McCone, in K. McCone et al., op. cit., p.120, cites ‘don chéiliu chumachtach’ [Modern Irish ‘don chéile cumhachtach’] and ‘úan chluich thruimb’ [‘ón gclloch throm’]). Lenition of the adjective qualifying an article and noun in the dative singular masculine still continues in Ulster Irish (Art Hughes, ibid., p. 633, cites ‘don fhear mhór’, ‘as an teach bheag’ and ‘ar an uan bhocht’) and in North Connacht. In Conamara, however, we find this lenition of masculine adjectives confined to certain phrases (Ruairí Ó hUiginn, ibid., p. 605, cites ‘faoi Sheán Mhór’ [as against ‘le Seán Mór’] and ‘ina chogadh dhearg’), non-lenition being the practice in every other case. Generally one does not find lenition of the adjective in the dative case in Munster Irish, though one often finds such lenition in Muskerry (Seán Ua Súilleabháin, ibid., p. 499, cites ‘fén gcrann mhuar’, for example).

Variant forms

We saw above how it was pointed out in 1944 that two different forms of some words were found in the original 1937 Constitution. This situation is being compounded with the later amendments of the Constitution. The standard Irish form of the phrase ‘a bheirtear (do)’ (‘conferred (on)’), which occurs in Articles 12.1, 13.9, 15.1.1<sup>o</sup>, 28.5.1<sup>o</sup> and 40.4.2<sup>o</sup>, is ‘a thugtar (do)’.<sup>134</sup> Following the official standard, in the 1998 Amendment to the Constitution contained in Article 29.7.2<sup>o</sup>, ‘conferred’ is rendered as ‘a thugtar’ and we find ‘tugtar’ later on in the same sentence:

Tig le haon institiúid a bhunófar leis an gComhaontú nó faoin gComhaontú na cumhachtaí agus na feidhmeanna a fheidhmiú a thugtar di dá chionn sin i leith oileán na hÉireann ar fad nó i leith aon chuid de d’ainneoin aon fhorála eile den Bhunreacht seo lena dtugtar cumhacht nó feidhm dá samhail d’aon duine ... .

Any institution established by or under the Agreement may exercise the powers and functions thereby conferred on it in respect of all or any part of the island of Ireland notwithstanding any other provision of this Constitution conferring a like power or function on any person or any organ of State ... .

While the 1937 Committee on the orthography of the Draft Constitution recommended substituting ‘tuistidhe’ for ‘tuismightheoir’ the official standard form today is ‘tuismitheoir’. ‘Tuistí’ in Articles 42.1, 42.2, 42.3.1<sup>o</sup> and 42.5 in the current popular edition would today be replaced by ‘tuismitheoirí’. Similarly ‘ar thrátha’ in Article 31.5 would be written as ‘ar thráthanna’ and ‘comhfhurtacht’, ‘ionadóir’, ‘chifear’, ‘sítheoilte’, ‘fundúireachtaí’, ‘dilleacht’, ‘foráileamh’ and ‘ar fianas’ in the Preamble, in Articles 15.1.2<sup>o</sup> (and 15.15), 25.5.1<sup>o</sup>, 40.6.1<sup>o</sup>ii, 42.4, 45.4.1<sup>o</sup>, 29.4.2<sup>o</sup> and 38.4.2<sup>o</sup> respectively would be written as ‘comhfhortacht’, ‘ionadóir’, ‘feicfeair’, ‘síothóilte’, ‘fondúireachtaí’, ‘dilleachta’, ‘foráil’ and ‘ar fiannas’, with ‘riala’ in Articles 6.1 and 6.2 being written as ‘rialach’ and ‘míthreora’ as ‘míthreorach’ in Article 33.5.1<sup>o</sup>. Finally, ‘a gheibheann’ in Article 44.2.1<sup>o</sup> would be written as ‘a fhaigheann’.

Miscellaneous other changes would also need to be made to the popular edition to ensure consistency in the Irish text. The clause ‘go ngeobhaidh míthreoir bhuan é’ (‘becomes permanently incapacitated’) in Article 31.5 of the popular edition, following the enrolled version, is found as ‘go ngabhfaidh míthreoir bhuan é’ in Article 12.3.1<sup>o</sup>, for example, following the official standard. Some forms would be lenited today which are unlenited in the current popular edition and the reverse also occurs, particularly in relation to lenition after a compound preposition.<sup>135</sup>

134 The verb that is inflected in ‘a bheirtear’ is not the simple verb ‘beir’ (‘bear’, ‘take’, ‘bring’, ‘carry’) but the compound verb ‘do-bheir’, or ‘do-beir’ in Old-Irish, prototonic form ‘tabair’, which gives us Modern Irish ‘tabhair’ (‘give’). As Dinneen states (s.v. ‘do-bheirim’), ‘bheirim’ became the general form of ‘do-bheirim’ and was often replaced by ‘tugaim’. In Munster, while ‘bheirim’ is found in some phrases, ‘tugaim’ and ‘tugann’ are the usual forms in Kerry — see Seán Ua Súilleabháin, ibid., p. 532, and the commentary on Article 12.1. ‘Bheirim’, ‘bheir sé’ and ‘bhe(i)rt(e)ar’ are found in Ulster Irish (see Art Hughes, ibid., p. 648). In Connacht, however, although the form ‘bheireann’ is heard in phrases such as ‘bheirim do shláinte’, the stem ‘tug’ is the usual stem in the present tense (see Ruairí Ó hUiginn, ibid., p. 592). The standard Irish form is also ‘tug’.

We find the preposition ‘do’ (or d’ before a vowel) before a verbal noun in the following Articles: 13.1.3°, 14.1.3°, 14.5.1°, 15.8.2°, 21.2.1°, 25.4.4°, 27.4.2°, 28.9.3°, 31.1, 40.4.5°, 43.1.2°, 44.2.4° and 50.2. While ‘do’ is found even in recent translations of Acts of the Oireachtas, according to Niall Ó Dónaill, Foclóir Gaeilge-Béarla (1977), the preposition ‘a’ replaces the preposition ‘do’ in standard Irish before verbal nouns – note that we find both prepositions in Article 50.2: ‘Dlíthe a bheas achtaithe roimh an mBunreacht seo a theacht i ngníomh agus a mbeidh luaite iontu iad do theacht i bhfeidhm dá éis sin’ (‘laws enacted before, but expressed to come into force after, the coming into operation of this Constitution’).

The special form of the dative singular found in some Articles is no longer generally found in official documents in Irish in the case of the following:

Article	Current form	Standardized form

42.5	dá gclainn	dá gclann

Other changes necessary to standardize the popular edition simply involve removing the hyphen, the general rule being that, if the elements of the compound are clearly identifiable, there is no need for hyphenation in a compound of two basic elements<sup>136</sup>:

Article	Current form	Standardized form
Preamble	Ró-naofa	Rónaofa

136 See An Caighdeán Oifigiúil, s24(iv) of the part headed ‘Litríú na Gaeilge’. The opposite situation arises in Articles 3 and 31.1 where ‘athchomhlánú’ and ‘inchomhlíonta’ would respectively in standard Irish be replaced by ‘ath-chomhlánú’ and ‘in-chomhlíonta’. Perhaps the final entry given in the table above, ‘maothóige’, should remain hyphenated, the headword ‘maothóg’ having the sense of ‘soft thing; soft person, softy’ and ‘shell-less egg’ (Ó Dónaill).

45.4.2 <sup>o</sup>	maoth-óige	maothóige

Among the remaining changes which would be made in standardizing the popular edition is the application of a genitive inflection to forms which would not in the current standard be left uninflected in such constructions:

Article	Current form	Standardized form
12.8	de réir an Bhunreacht	de réir an Bhunreachta

29.4.2 <sup>o</sup>	chun a leithéid sin	chun a leithéide sin

The opposite situation occurs in Article 40.4.5<sup>o</sup> where, according to the official standard, ‘tar éis an fheidhmithe sin a mhoilliú’ would be written as ‘tar éis an feidhmiú sin a mhoilliú’. The following miscellaneous forms remain, among them the article being inserted in ‘Bunreacht Éireann’, ‘dlíthe Éireann’ and ‘Mí Nollag’, along with ‘lomdíreach’ being split as two separate words:

Article	Current form	Standardized form
10.2	go mba	gur

12.8	Dia na nUilechumhacht	Dia na hUilechumhachta

45.4.2 <sup>o</sup>	idir fheara is mná	idir fhir is mhná
49.1	de Mhí Nollag	de mhí na Nollag

The standardization of ‘Dia na nUilechumhacht’ to ‘Dia na hUilechumhachta’ also involves the substitution of a singular form for a plural form.

As stated in the blurb inside the cover of the Stationery Office text, or popular edition, that text conforms to the spelling, or orthographic, standard of the Translation Section of the Houses of the Oireachtas – no claim is made as regards the grammatical standard of the Translation Section.<sup>137</sup> We see from the above that the limitations laid down from the beginning regarding the ‘popular edition’ are reflected in each new such edition of the text of the Constitution. While generally conforming to the standard of orthography contained in An Caighdeán Oifigiúil, the text in the popular edition does not conform fully with the grammatical standards as laid out in that guide-book. As we have seen, six broad areas are involved in standardizing the popular text:

‘An litriú atá ar théacs Gaeilge an eagrán seo de Bhunreacht na hÉireann tá sé de réir chaighdeán litrithe Rannóg an Aistriúcháin d’Oifig Thithe an Oireachtais. (i.e. The spelling/orthography of the Irish text of this edition of the Irish Constitution is in accordance with the orthographic standard of the Translation Section of the Office of the Houses of the Oireachtas).

- The nominative in place of the genitive
- Analytic in place of synthetic forms of the verb
- The standard form in place of the special form of the relative
- The future in place of the present subjunctive
- Non-lenition of the adjective in the dative singular
- Standardization of variant forms

With amendments which conform to the official standard being introduced to a text which does not so conform, the level of grammatical inconsistency is being increased with each amendment. In this study, the unstandardised words and phrases which are presented above are noted in the commentaries on the subsections, sections and Articles in which they occur, and some additional words and phrases whose standard form is ambiguous are likewise noted. A standardised edition of the Irish text of the Constitution is incorporated in the study, with each commentary on any subsection, section or Article which contains unstandardised forms concluding with a standardised text. This text is also gender-proofed where necessary.

Gender-proofing

Since the mid-nineties, the Acts of the Oireachtas are obliged to be gender-proofed. At its most basic level, in the English version of the Acts, this involves inserting ‘he or she’ and ‘his or her’ respectively where one formerly merely had ‘he’ and ‘his’. In the Irish version, where formerly one had ‘sé’ one now finds ‘sé nó sí’; the personal pronoun ‘a’ followed by lenition of the initial consonant of the noun (e.g. ‘a cheart’, ‘his right’) now has, in addition to that, ‘nó a’ followed by the noun with unlenited initial consonant (i.e. ‘a cheart nó a cheart’, ‘his right or her right’). A gender-proofed version of the English text of the Constitution has been prepared by the All-Party Oireachtas Committee on the Constitution and is published in the First Progress Report of that Committee, April 1997. The author of this study has prepared a gender-proofed version of the Irish text of the Constitution for the Committee which has been officially approved by the Translation Section of the Houses of the Oireachtas.

Unlike the English text, gender-proofing has already been introduced to the enrolled Irish text of the Constitution. In the opening sentence of the proposed new Article 2 contained in the text of the 1998 Amendment following the British-Irish Agreement, ‘it is the birthright of every person’ is rendered in Irish as ‘tá de cheart oidhreachta aige nó aici’, literally, ‘he or she has the birthright’, the complete sentence reading as follows:

It is the entitlement and birthright of every person born in the island of Ireland, which includes its islands and seas, to be part of the Irish nation. Tá gach duine a shaolaítear in oileán na hÉireann, ar a n-áirítear a oileáin agus a fharraigí, i dteideal, agus tá de cheart oidhreachta aige nó aici, a bheith páirteach i náisiún na hÉireann.

Again, in the context of future amendments of the Constitution, if those amendments are to be gender-proofed, a gender-proofed version of the complete text of the Constitution is desirable to ensure uniformity in the text.

A gender-proofed edition of the Irish text of the Constitution is provided in the study which follows. The published gender-proofed English text was naturally taken into account in gender-proofing the Irish text. Nevertheless, in line with one of the general arguments of this study, the author would argue that the Irish text, as the text which has precedence, be taken into account in gender-proofing the English text. While the clause ‘such resolution shall operate to remove the President from his office’ in Article 12.10.7<sup>o</sup> is gender-proofed in the version published by the All-Party Oireachtas Committee on the Constitution to ‘such resolution shall operate to remove the President from his or her office’, for example, the Irish text needs no gender-proofing, reading ‘... is é is feidhm don rún sin an tUachtarán a chur as oifig’, literally ‘such resolution shall operate to remove the President from office’. Gender-proofing the English text from ‘from his office’ to ‘from office’, following the Irish text, would appear to be the better course rather than emending to read ‘from his or her office’. Note that in Article 12.3.3° ‘... before or after he enters upon his office’ is gender-proofed to ‘... before or after he the President enters upon his office’, and in Articles 12.7 and 12.8 ‘... shall enter upon his office’ is gender-proofed to ‘... shall enter upon his office’ (note also that ‘upon’ itself is emended in Article 12.3.1°: ‘... the date upon which he enters upon his office’ is gender-proofed to ‘... the date upon which he or she enters ~~upon his~~ into office’).

Like the concluding clause in Article 12.10.7° above, the Irish version of ‘without fear or favour, affection or ill-will towards any man’, in Article 34.5.1°, ‘gan eagla gan claonadh, gan bá gan drochaigne chun duine ar bith’, needs no gender-proofing. The English text on the other hand is gender-proofed to read ‘without fear or favour, affection or ill-will towards any man or woman’. On approximately forty occasions in the Constitution ‘duine’ expresses ‘person’; therefore, translated literally, ‘chun duine ar bith’ would be ‘towards any person’. In view of this, ‘without fear or favour, affection or ill-will towards any man’ might be gender-proofed to read ‘without fear or favour, affection or ill-will towards any man person’. Other possible cases where the English text could be differently gender-proofed, based on the Irish text, are outlined in Appendix 3, which Appendix looks at cases where there would appear to be an option in how the text is gender-proofed and at some wider textual consequences of gender-proofing.

We shall see in the study which follows that in a few cases gender-proofing the Irish text may necessitate amending clauses more severely than simply altering ‘sé’ to ‘sé nó sí’ or ‘é’ to ‘é nó í’. As can be seen from the gender-proofed English version of Article 12.6.2°, it has occasionally been necessary to emend whole clauses, the gender-proofed version of that subsection reading as follows:

If A member of either House of the Oireachtas ~~be~~ who is elected President, ~~he~~ shall be deemed to have vacated his or her seat in that House.

The Irish version, however, only needs the following straightforward additions:

Má thoghtar comhalta de cheachtar de Thithe an Oireachtais chun bheith ina Uachtarán nó ina hUachtarán, ní foláir a mheas go bhfuil scartha aige nó aici le comhaltas an Tí sin.

The opposite situation arises in the following three instances, which would need more emendation than most of the Articles. While the English version of Article 31.2.ii, ‘Every person able and willing to act as a member of the Council of State who shall have held the office of President or the office of Taoiseach, or the office of Chief Justice, or the office of President of the Executive Council of Saorstát Éireann’, needs no gender-proofing, the words in bold below indicate the insertions which would have to be made to the Irish text in particular to include women who held the various offices listed above:

Gach duine ar cumas dó nó di agus ar fonn leis nó léi gníomhú ina chomhalta nó ina comhalta den Chomhairle Stáit, agus a bhí tráth ina Uachtarán nó ina hUachtarán nó ina Thaoiseach nó ina Taoiseach nó ina Phríomh-Bhreitheamh nó ina Príomh-Bhreitheamh, nó ina Uachtarán nó ina hUachtarán ar Ard-Chomhairle Shaorstát Éireann.

The repetition in the above text could be avoided by emending the text as follows, this being a more literal translation of the English:

Gach duine ar cumas dó nó di agus ar fonn leis nó léi gníomhú ~~ina mar~~ chomhalta den Chomhairle Stáit, agus a bhí tráth ~~ina~~ i seilbh oifige mar Uachtarán nó ~~ina mar~~ Thaoiseach nó ~~ina mar~~ Príomh-Bhreitheamh, nó ~~ina mar~~ Uachtarán ar Ard-Chomhairle Shaorstát Éireann.

The phrase ‘held the office of Deputy Chairman of Dáil Éireann’ is translated as ‘i seilbh oifige mar Leas-Chathaoirleach Dháil Éireann’ in section 1(3)(b) of the Ministerial and Parliamentary Offices Act, 1972, for example.

Article 44.1, ‘The State acknowledges that the homage of public worship is due to Almighty God. It shall hold His Name in reverence, and shall respect and honour religion’, is gender-proofed as follows:

The State acknowledges that the homage of public worship is due to Almighty God. It shall hold the Name of God in reverence, and shall respect and honour religion.

The Irish version of Article 44.1 reads as follows:

Admhaíonn an Stát go bhfuil ag dul do Dhia na nUilechumhacht é a adhradh le hómós go poiblí. Beidh urraim ag an Stát dá ainm, agus bhéarfaidh oirmhidin agus onóir do Chreideamh.

Unlike the English text, gender-proofing the above involves emending both sentences. There is no difficulty gender-proofing the second sentence:

Beidh urraim ag an Stát dá d'ainm Dé, agus bhéarfaidh oirmhidin agus onóir do Chreideamh.

However, a straightforward gender-proofing of the first sentence of the Irish text, emending 'é' to 'é nó í', would involve referring to God as 'he or she'. To avoid this situation by substituting 'Dia na nUilechumhacht' for 'é' results in that phrase following immediately on its first usage:

Admhaíonn an Stát go bhfuil ag dul do Dhia na nUilechumhacht é Dia na nUilechumhacht a adhradh le hómós go poiblí.

An alternative to the above, retaining the current wording of the Irish text, would be to amend that text as follows:

Admhaíonn an Stát go bhfuil adhradh le hómós go poiblí ag dul do Dhia na nUilechumhacht.

A more severe emendation perhaps would read:

Admhaíonn an Stát go bhfuil adhradh poiblí le hómós ag dul do Dhia na nUilechumhacht.

Lastly, a similar type of emendation to that outlined above is necessary in the Preamble in order to avoid repetition in gender-proofing the Irish version of the clause 'so that the dignity and freedom of the individual may be assured', 'ionas go dtiocfaidh linn a uaisleacht agus a shaoirse a chur in áirithe do gach aon duine'. The straightforward gender-proofing of this clause would read as follows:

ionas go dtiocfaidh linn a uaisleacht agus a shaoirse nó a huaisleacht agus a saoirse a chur in áirithe do gach aon duine

ionas go dtiocfaidh linn a uaisleacht nó a huaisleacht agus a shaoirse nó a saoirse a chur in áirithe do gach aon duine.

Following the wording of the clause in English more closely, one could avoid such repetition by emending the Irish clause to:

ionas go dtiocfaidh linn uaisleacht agus saoirse gach aon duine a chur in áirithe.

As stated above, other questions arising in gender-proofing the Irish text are outlined in Appendix 3.

The Irish language

One of the principal interests of the author is in the way the Irish language developed over the centuries in response to the development of Irish life and society and how the language reflects and illustrates these developments.<sup>138</sup> The fact that 'slí' ('way'), for example, developed from 'slige', verbal noun of 'sligid', which originally had the sense of 'act of felling, smiting; a slaughter', hence the sense of 'of what is cleared or cut out', i.e. 'road, way, path', fascinates the author, particularly as we have written evidence from the ninth century of the sense of 'slaughter', a sense this word no longer has. Irish monks on the Continent in the eighth and ninth centuries, in writing notes or glosses on Latin words and phrases in texts they were using, have left us evidence of Irish words and phrases from those centuries. In a Latin commentary on the Psalms in a ninth-century manuscript which formerly belonged to the Columban monastery of Bobbio, and which is now in the Ambrosian Library at Milan, we find the following gloss: 'ata són .i. soirad iudae <sub>7</sub> slige assar' ('that is, to wit, deliverance of the Jews and slaughter of the Assyrians' — we find the Latin phrase 'extinxit Assirios' in the commentary itself).<sup>139</sup> We can follow the trail of 'slige' in Irish texts over the eleven hundred years right down to today. In an entry s.v. 'rót' in a glossary compiled by the King and Bishop of Cashel, Cormac mac Cuilleanáin, 836-908, we find an example of the use of 'slige' in the sense of 'road, way':

138 See Micheál Ó Cearúil, 'Sa teanga atá tábhacht na teanga' in M. Ó Cearúil, ed., Gníomhartha na mBráithre (1996), pp. 389-460.

139 See Whitley Stokes and John Strachan, Thesaurus Palaeohibernicus – A Collection of Old-Irish Glosses ... (1901), p. 161.

Atát tra ilanmand for na conaraib .i. sét 7 rúut 7 rámut 7 slige . . . bóthur. . . Slige dano, doscuet carpait sech alaile. Dorrónad fri himchomrac dá charpat' (Now there are many names for ways: sét, rúut, ramut, slige . . . bothar. . . Slige [high-road] then, for the passing of chariots by each other was it made, for the meeting of two chariots).<sup>140</sup>

This sense of 'road, way' is found today on the road-sign 'Géill Slí' ('Yield'). The 'five great roads' of Ireland in medieval times were called 'An tSlighe Mhór' ('The Great Road' – from Dublin to Clarinbridge, dividing the country in two halves), 'Slighe Dhála Meic Umhóir' ('The Road of Dála, son of Umhóir', from Dublin to Tarbert, being the road from West Munster to Tara), 'Slighe Assail' ('The Road of Assal', the main road from the ancient Midhe to Connacht [Rathcroghan]), 'Slighe Mhidhluachra' (possibly 'The Road of the Rushy Place of Meath', from Tara to Emain Macha, the main Dublin to Newry Road) and the 'Slighe Chualann' ('The Road of Cuala', a district comprising South Co. Dublin and part of Co. Wicklow).<sup>141</sup> In an early Irish law-text in Egerton 90, a manuscript in the British Library (formerly the British Museum), we have an example of 'slighe' in the later sense of 'way, means, method': 'cethre slighe imdénta' ('four methods of proof'). It is in this sense we find 'slí' in the Constitution; in Article 12.8, for example, 'Is é slí a rachaidh an tUachtarán i gcúram a oifige ná leis an dearbhú seo a leanas a dhéanamh' expressing 'The President shall enter upon his office by taking . . . the following declaration' (lit. 'The way the President will enter office is . . .').

Highlighting here just a couple of the terms found in the Constitution and which will be dealt with in the commentaries which follow, the term 'ceap' is found in the Constitution principally in the sense of 'appoint', 'Ceapfaidh an tUachtarán an Taoiseach', for example, expressing 'The President shall . . . appoint the Taoiseach' in Article 13.1.1<sup>0</sup> and 'ceapfaidh an Ard-Chúirt lá chun an bhreith bháis sin a fheidhmiú' expressing 'the High Court shall appoint a day for the execution of the said sentence of death' in Article 40.4.5<sup>0</sup>. This term comes from Latin 'cippus' and the date it was borrowed into Irish can be fixed at some time between 55 BC, when Julius Caesar invaded Britain (from where the Irish borrowed the Latin term), and AD 450 – most likely about the time St Partick was brought captive from Roman Britain to Ireland.<sup>142</sup> Latin 'cippus' had the senses of 'a boundary stone or pillar' and 'a tombstone, usually indicating the extent of the burial-ground'. The earliest examples of the form 'cepp' in Irish are in the sense of 'tree-stump, log, block' – we find the following in Cormac's ninth-century Glossary, for example: 'dobert buille don chip bóí isin étach' ([Athairne came and] gave a blow to the post that was in the dress' [i.e. as a dummy body]). Other senses included in the Dictionary of Old and Middle Irish, where examples are cited from early Irish literature, are 'anvil-block', 'stocks (for confinement), pillory, log to which a snare or trap was attached' and 'genealogical stock, ancestor'. From 'cepp' as the block on which articles were fashioned developed the verb 'ceppaid' in the sense of 'shapes, forms, fashions' and this has further developed to the general sense in Modern Irish of 'conceive, think' and 'mean, intend', along with 'appoint'.

The first item on the agenda of the first session of the First Dáil Éireann, held in the Mansion House, Dublin, on 21 January 1919, was 'Togađ Cinn Comhairle i gcóir an lae' ('Appointment of Speaker for the day').<sup>143</sup> Seóirse Pluinnceád proposed Cathal Brugha as 'Ceann Comhairle' and this was seconded by Pádraig Ó Máille. The third Article of the Constitution which was read and approved at that meeting deals specifically with the appointment each year by the Dáil of a 'Ceann Comhairle', and of a deputy ('Ceann Ionaid') in the absence of the 'Ceann Comhairle'. In Article 21 of the 1922 Constitution, the chairman of both the Dáil and the Seanad are referred to as 'Ceann Comhairle' ('Déanfaidh gach Tigh a Cheann Comhairle agus a Leas-Cheann Comhairle féin do cheapa' [Each House shall elect its own Chairman and Deputy Chairman]) and in Article 35 the chairman of the Committee of Privileges is also referred to as 'Ceann Comhairle'. 'An Ceann Comhairle' is referred to in Article 14.2 of the 1937 Constitution.

This term 'Ceann Comhairle' is attested in the Old Irish law-tract Cáin Aicillne ('The Law of Base Clientship') where we find the following phrase: 'nach ben forsa-mbe cenn comuirle', translated in Ancient Laws of Ireland as 'every woman over whom there is an adviser', i.e. a husband.<sup>144</sup> In the pseudo-historical text Leabhar Gabhála ('The Book of Invasions'), a version of which is contained in the twelfth-century manuscript Leabhar Laighean / The Book of Leinster, Ninus son of Belus, the King of the world, is referred to as 'Cenn Comairle'<sup>145</sup> and in the version of Táin Bó Cúalnge in the same manuscript we find the following conversation between Queen Medb and Fergus: 'Ra gattá 7 ra brattá in slúag sa indiu. Feib théit echrad láir rena sergraig i crích n-aneóil gan chend cundraid ná comairle rempo, is amlaid testa in slúag sa indiu' ('This host has been plundered and despoiled today. As when a mare goes before her band of foals into unknown territory, with none to lead or counsel them, so this host has perished today').<sup>146</sup> Finally, in a thirteenth-century poem written from the Mediterranean, we find the line 'tech ar cind comairle', translated by Gerard Murphy as 'our counsellor's house'.<sup>147</sup>

'Aire', which expresses 'Minister' in the Constitution, is a word of Indo-European origin, related to Old Persian 'ariya-' ('Aryan'), and Old Indian 'ari-' ('attached to, faithful; a faithful devoted person'), 'aryá-' ('kind, favorable, attached to, true, devoted') and 'arya-' ('Aryan; one who is faithful to the Vedic religion').<sup>148</sup> The term 'aire' is found in early Irish law-tracts such as the eighth-century text Críth Gablach, which text has been edited by D. A. Binchy, who writes as follows on the meaning of 'aire' in early Irish legal literature:

[aire] is used to describe every freeman, 'commoner' as well as noble, who possesses an independent legal status, with an honour-price accruing to him in virtue of his own status. The aire is therefore sui iuris, as opposed to those persons, such as women and sons in potestate, whose honour-price is derived from the status of their 'superiors'. Occasionally however aire is used in the more restricted sense of 'noble' (as opposed to 'commoner'), which is the usual meaning in the [non-legal] literature.<sup>149</sup>

Dinneen (1927) translates 'aire' as 'a nobleman; one privileged', with 'recent' in parenthesis following the sense of 'a minister of state'. Ó Dónaill gives 'aire' in the sense of 'minister (of state)' as a separate headword to 'aire' in the sense of 'nobleman, chief', indicating that this latter sense is found only in earlier Irish literature.

Finally, we have citations of both 'dáiil' and 'Éire' in Irish literature going back approximately one thousand years, 'dál' in the sense of 'a meeting, conference, assembly, convention, a legal meeting, court' being frequent in early Irish laws, one such tract providing that a client must escort his lord 'fri dáiil' ('to a public assembly').<sup>150</sup> Yet the phrase 'Dáil Éireann', probably first used within Sinn Féin at its 'Ard-Fheis' in October 1918, only came into being in this century, 'Dáil Éireann' being the name given to a future national assembly by a writer under the pseudonym 'Gaeilgeoir' writing in the Gaelic League Journal An Claidheamh Soluis in 1906.<sup>151</sup> As stated by James Burke, one of the Deputies of the first Dáil, 'the ancient Irish word Dáil ... had the sanction of centuries of Gaelic history and tradition behind it', the name 'Dáil Éireann' giving the new assembly an immediate identity.<sup>152</sup>

Much emphasis has heretofore been placed, sometimes for propaganda purposes by the Irish language movement itself in the early decades of the century, on the break in the continuum of the language. In his pamphlet What's This About the Gaelic League? (1941), for example, Daniel Corkery wrote:

(The Gaelic League's) aim was to replace one of the most wide-flung, most up-to-date and progressive languages in the world by one that has been for almost three centuries neither the appendage of princes, nor the medium of trades, nor the language of the schools, nor the text book of even the humblest science, that had indeed become a pariah among languages, and was used no longer except by the hewer of wood and the drawer of water.

145 See R.A. Stewart Macalister, ed. Lebor Gabála Éirenn, II (1939), pp. 12-13: 'Tóesig imorro batar and reme, .i. in fer ba húasle ... issin túaith, issé ba cend comairle do chách' ('Aforetime there had been chieftains: he who was noblest ... in the community, he it was who was chief counsellor for every man').

In the year 2006, according to the writer in An Claidheamh Soluis, 'Dáil Éireann' would be discussing the introduction of Japanese into Ireland as a second language, Irish being spoken by all and Russia having overcome England.

152 Arthur Mitchell, op. cit., p. 12.

Quite apart from the continued predominance of Irish in parts of the country right down to today, Corkery, author of The Hidden Ireland, would have been well aware of the vast amount and range of material in Irish available and sought after in manuscripts written and copied right up to and including the nineteenth century. According to Professor Brian Ó Cuív, 'there are still in existence in libraries in Ireland and elsewhere over three thousand Irish manuscripts which were written before the present century, and of these over a hundred were written between the ninth century and the second half of the sixteenth century when the first Irish books were printed'<sup>153</sup>; it follows from this that there are approximately two thousand nine hundred extant Irish manuscripts which were written between 1550 and the end of the last century. There was also a growing stream of material in Irish which was printed particularly in magazines and journals, but also in books, from the turn of the century onwards, following on the Irish of the later manuscripts as if no break had taken place in a tradition 're-established' by the Gaelic League at the end of the nineteenth and beginning of the twentieth century.<sup>154</sup> The amount of terms in the Constitution which are also to be found in early Irish law-tracts, as will be seen in the study which follows, illustrates the continuity of the language over the centuries. While great emphasis is placed in the study on what the author sometimes refers to as the 'recreation' of the language in the early decades of this century – especially in the context of early official translations, some of the terms of which had only a short span of life, others living today as if long-established – the citations of other terms from the Glosses of the eighth and ninth centuries and from the manuscripts of the twelfth and following centuries serve to remind us of the continuity of the language for well over one thousand years. The phrase 'síocháin ... a bheith ar bun' in Article 29.1 ('Ireland affirms its devotion to the ideal of peace ... amongst nations', Dearbhaíonn Éire gur mian léi síocháin ... a bheith ar bun idir náisiúin) corresponds almost exactly to 'in síd do beth ar bun', found in the Leabhar Breac, a manuscript compiled in 1411 or earlier, and 'gach achrann ... a réiteach' in the following section ('Ireland affirms its adherence to the principle of the pacific settlement of international disputes', Dearbhaíonn Éire fós gur mian léi go ndéanfaí gach achrann idir náisiúin a réiteach go síochánta) is almost the exact equivalent of 'an uile achrann ... a réigteach' ('to settle every dispute'), in a poem by Aogán Ó Rathaille (1670-1726). To coin Pearse's words, substituting 'language' for 'country', 'our language wears to us a new aspect, and yet she is her most ancient self'. This living language, in all its vigour and flexibility, informed every draft of the 1937 Constitution.

Modus operandi

In the commentaries which follow on each Article, section and subsection, the senses of the headwords in Niall Ó Dónaill's 1977 Irish-English Dictionary (abbreviated as Ó Dónaill), are generally given first, these being the senses of the headwords in current Modern Irish. If the headword is included in Téarmaí Dlí then the meaning there is given, that being the official legal meaning of the word. The senses in Rev. Patrick S. Dinneen's 1927 Irish-English Dictionary (abbreviated as Dinneen) follow this, reflecting the senses given just ten years before the drafting of the Irish text of the Constitution. The earlier forms and meanings of the headwords are then given from the Dictionary of the Irish Language based mainly on Old and Middle Irish Materials (compact edition, 1983; abbreviated as DIL). Special emphasis is placed on citations from the Glosses of the eighth and ninth centuries, along with the senses of the headwords in early Irish law-tracts. Citations are then given from the Acts of the Oireachtas ('s' in these citations refers to the 'section' of the Act) and from other official Irish translations; emphasis is placed on the early official translations of the 1920s and on the variety of terms tested until those of the modern Acts were settled on. Emphasis is also placed on citations from two important sources for the drafters of the Irish text which had only become available in 1935: a four-volume typescript entitled Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms and L. Mc Cionnaith's English Irish Dictionary. The four-volume typescript entitled Téarmaí Oifigiúla post-dates the 1937 Constitution and contains citations therefrom, but also gives us some relatively early official translations.

153 Brian Ó Cuív, op. cit., p.24.

154 Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú commends the standard of Irish in particular of Siamsa an Gheimhridh, by Domhnall Ó Fotharta, published in 1892, and Muinntear na Tuatha, by Séamas Ó Dubhghaill, published in 1910, and refers to Dubhghlás De h-Íde's and Pádraig Ua Duinnín's Mac Tiernan Prize essays on Irish poetry and prose respectively.

In the literal English translations, emphasis is placed in the early Articles on the variety of interpretations possible, alternative individual terms being separated by a slash and alternative phrases being separated by a slash with a character space on either side of it – ‘relationship/relations’ as against ‘the nature / natural bent of’ in the literal English translation of Article 1, for example. For the most part, however, only the principal literal sense in the context of the subsection, section or Article is given, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú having in many cases chosen between alternatives given in the author’s draft. The ‘Transitory Provisions’, which are not included in the popular edition of the Constitution, are not included in the study. The Preamble, the Irish text of which is an acknowledged translation of the English text, is commented on in Appendix 1.

The direct translation of the English text of the Constitution presented here evolved as an illustration of how such a text would be translated today and of the use of the terms discussed in the commentaries. This was a natural progression in the commentaries and had not been originally intended by the author. The process of translation itself gave the author an insight into the challenges faced by the drafters of the Irish text and, just as the drafters of that text at times departed from the translation of the 1922 Constitution in favour of their own words, the author of this work would admit yielding to the same temptation. The direct translation is preceded by a standardised and/or gender-proofed edition of the Irish text of the Constitution where that text needs emendation in order to standardise or gender-proof it.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú has read a draft of this work subsection by subsection, Article by Article, and his scholarly contributions are included as fully as possible in the work which follows. The author has benefited enormously from the master-classes he received as Professor Ó Murchú patiently and generously discussed his recommendations week after week over a period of many months. As will be noted in the commentaries presented here, the author has not always followed Máirtín Ó Murchú’s recommendations as regards the direct translations presented therein, Professor Ó Murchú at times favouring a less direct translation – this is of particular relevance in the context of the original Irish text not being a direct translation.

The enthusiasm for this project by the chairman of the All-Party Oireachtas Committee on the Constitution, Brian Lenihan TD, has been inspiring and a great support and encouragement for the author. The expertise of Jim O’Donnell, secretary of the committee and author of Wordgloss (1990), assisted by Karen Cullen, maintained the momentum which ensured the completion of this project in due time. The author is indebted to Tom Turley who is responsible for the design of the work and for the presentation of the mass of material which follows. The author also wishes to thank David Cooke for designing the cover of this study. Wendy A. Commins skilfully undertook the task of typesetting. The author also wishes to thank Sinéad Buckley of Rannóg an Aistriúcháin, and Eileen Mills, of the All-Party Oireachtas Committee on the Constitution, for typing early commentaries but without the help of Cliona Ní Bhréartúin, Peanntrónaic, along with Máire Ní Sheighin and Muireann Ní Chárthaigh, this work would never have been completed. Thanks finally to the Clerk of Dáil Éireann, Kieran Coughlan, who facilitated the ten-week secondment of the author from Rannóg an Aistriúcháin to the All-Party Oireachtas Committee on the Constitution to carry out this study and to Michelle O Riordan who read drafts of the work. Go raibh míle maith acu go léir.

THE NATION AN NÁISIÚN

TÉACS GAEILGE

Deimhniú náisiúna na hÉireann leis seo a gceart doshannta, dochloíte, ceannasach chun cibé cineál Rialtais is rogha leo féin a bhunú, chun a gcaidreamh le náisiúin eile a chinneadh, agus chun a saol polaitíochta is geilleagair is saíochta a chur ar aghaidh de réir dhúchais is gnás a sinsear.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The nation of Ireland hereby affirm(s)/certif(y)(ies) their unassignable/inalienable, invincible/conclusive, sovereign/commanding right to establish whatever type of Government they themselves choose, to determine their relationship/relations with other nations, and to promote their political and economic and learned life in accordance with the nature / natural bent and practices of their ancestors.

ENGLISH TEXT

The Irish nation hereby affirms its inalienable, indefeasible, and sovereign right to choose its own form of Government, to determine its relations with other nations, and to develop its life, political, economic and cultural, in accordance with its own genius and traditions.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'To choose its own form of Government' is expressed as 'chun cibé cineál Rialtais is rogha leo féin a bhunú' ('to establish whatever type of Government they themselves choose') in the Irish text.
- 2 'In accordance with its (i.e. the Irish nation's) own genius and traditions' is expressed in the Irish text as 'de réir dhúchais is gnás a sinsear' ('in accordance with the nature / natural bent and practices of their ancestors').
- 3 The verb 'deimhnigh', here expressing 'affirms', expresses 'certifies' in Articles 22.2.1°, 24.1 and 40.4.2°, this verb being translated as 'certify, vouch' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'I affirm (decree, etc.)' is translated as 'daingnim'; 'dearbhaigh' expresses 'affirms' in Articles 29.1 and 29.2.
- 4 The Irish term expressing 'indefeasible', 'dochloíte', expresses 'conclusive' in Article 25 and 'imprescriptible' in Articles 41 and 42.
- 5 'Develop' is expressed by 'cuir ar aghaidh', 'promote'/'advance', in the Irish text.
- 6 'The Irish Nation' is referred to in the plural in the Irish text and in the singular in the English text – 'a gceart', 'a gcaidreamh' ('their right', 'their relationship'), etc., versus 'its' in the English text.
- 7 The Irish text has 'a saol polaitíochta is geilleagair is saíochta' ('their political and economic and cultural life') while the English text has 'its life, political, economic and cultural'.

- 8 'Culture' today would be rendered simply as 'cultúr'; 'saíocht', on the other hand, is a very rich native term connoting 'learning', 'lore'.

Commentary

a chur ar aghaidh This phrase expresses 'promote' in the Preamble and in Article 45, and generally translates 'promote', rather than 'develop' as in the present Article, in the Acts. In Article 1(1) of the Schedule to the Bretton Woods Agreement Act, 1957, for example, 'To promote international monetary co-operation' is translated as 'comhar idirnáisiúnta airgeadaíochta a chur ar aghaidh' and 'the promotion of friendly relations among nations' is translated as '(ar) chaidreamh cairdiúil a chur ar aghaidh idir náisiúin' in the First Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967. Ó Dónaill translates 'cuir ar aghaidh é' as 'put it forward' and cites 'scéim a chur ar aghaidh, to promote a scheme'. DIL s.v. 'agad' ('face'), cites 'do chum gnothuighe móra ar nanama do chur air aghaidh' ('to help on the great affair of our salvation') from Donlevy's Catechism (1st ed., 1742). Note that 'dul chun cinn' expresses 'develop' in Article 45.2.iii.

In official translations in the years following the founding of the State we can witness the multiplicity of terms expressing 'develop(ment)'. 'The Development Fund' is translated as '(don) Chiste Fás-saothrúcháin' in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922, with 'The Ireland Development Grant' being translated as 'Deontas Fás-saothrúchán na hÉireann' in Schedule (B) to the Appropriation Act, 1923, for example. 'To ensure the maximum development' is translated as 'chun a chur in áirithe an feabhsú maximum ... do dhéanamh' in s53(2) of the Railways Act, 1924, while in the Long Title of the Telephone Capital Act, 1924, 'An Act to grant money for the development of the telephonic system of Saorstát Éireann' is translated as 'Acht chun airgead do dheona chun scéim thelefónach Shaorstáit Éireann do chur i bhfeabhas'. 'Ag saothrú na cumadóireachta nó á cur ar aghaidh' translates 'in developing or exploiting the invention' in s43(6) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, with 'ag saothrú na dtailte' translating 'in developing the lands' in s7(6) of the Land Act, 1927. According to the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms, 'to develop building sites' is translated as 'ionaid tógála do chur ar aghaidh' in the (Proceedings of the Public Accounts Committee, 1927, p. xxiii, with 'fás' translating 'develop' in the 1928 Proceedings, p. xxix. 'Cumadóireacht d'fhorás' (as against 'saothrú' above), is cited in the same source as translating 'to develop an invention' in the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1929; 'déanamh' is cited as translating 'develop (horse power)' and 'saothrachán' as translating 'development' in translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health.

As David Greene points out in his monograph The Irish Language (1966, p. 57), 'forbairt is an old word meaning "growing, increasing", revived in recent years as an all-purpose equivalent for the English development'. According to the late Professor Greene, the native resources of the language were such that there was no necessity for the revival of the word 'forbairt', 'which, indeed, never meant "development" at any stage of its history'. Professor Greene states:

Unfortunately, many people are under the impression that such modern terms as development, influence, interesting represent essential concepts of human thought, and that no language can afford to be without them; yet, although they are all of Latin origin, not one of them occurs in Latin in anything resembling its modern meaning, and neither development nor interesting occurs in either the Authorised Version of the English Bible or the works of Shakespeare.... But most European languages, from Welsh to Russian, have accepted them either as loanwords, or calques.... It is not surprising that Irish has been under considerable pressure to admit equivalents, which could then be used with the freedom, and impreciseness, with which they are used in other languages; fortunately, the authority of de Bhaldraithe's English-Irish Dictionary has been brought to bear against the coining of unnecessary neologisms of this type. Thus under development we find saothrú (na haighe) ('cultivation [of the mind]'), forleathnú (smaoinimh) ('widening out [of an ideal]'), tabhairt chun cinn (ceantair) ('advancing [of a district]'); forbairt (ceantair) ('development [of a district]'), ... tarlú (happening); toradh (result); imeachtaí (proceedings); 'to await further developments': fanacht le cor nua sa scéal ('waiting for a new turn in the matter').

Nevertheless, thirty-three years later, 'forbairt' has gained common currency as a direct translation of 'development' – 'development scheme' is translated as 'scéim forbartha' in Téarmaí Dlí, for example – as has 'forbair' as a direct translation of the verb 'develop'. Note that L. Mc Cionnaith does not cite 'forbair' s.v. 'develop, -ment', focusing on translations of 'develop into' rather than 'develop'. Dinneen, however, translates 'forbraim' as 'I develop, grow, increase; irritate, bring to a crisis, strengthen' and translates 'forbairt' as 'act of increasing, growing, developing, bringing to a crisis; irritation; a growth, increase, or development; profit, emolument', citing 'díochur dubháilcí, forbairt subháilcí, abolition of vices, development of virtues'. 'Development' is translated as 'forás, forbairt, eascarthain' in Téarmaí Staire (1934), all of which terms are avoided in the examples cited there:

The Greeks believed in the harmonious development of body and mind, ba mhór ag na Gréagaigh cómhfhás cuirp agus intinne, nó bhí tóir ag na Gréagaigh ar, etc. The King wished to be kept in touch with the latest development of the situation, ba mhaith leis an Rí an t-athrughadh ba dheireannaighe a tháinig ar an sgéal a bheith ar eolus aige, ba mhian leis an Rí go gcuirfí i n-iúl do gach cor don sgéal do réir mar a thuitfeadh amach.

Turning to the Acts, 'to develop, construct, maintain and administer industrial estates and factory buildings' is translated as 'easáit tionscail agus foirgnimh mhonarchan ... a fhorbairt, a dhéanamh, a chothabháil agus a riaradh' in s11(iii) of the Industrial Development Act, 1969 (An tAcht um Fhorbairt Tionscail, 1969). We find 'forbair' in the same subsection alongside 'a chur ar aghaidh' in the following examples from the Acts: in s3(a) of the Higher Education Authority Act, 1971, 'furthering the development of higher education' is translated as 'forbairt ard-oideachais a chur ar aghaidh' and in s57(4) of the Finance Act, 1970, 'with a view to promoting industrial ... or other development' is translated as 'd'fhonn forbairt thionscail ... nó aon fhorbairt eile a chur ar aghaidh'.

de réir dhúchais 'Dúchas' is one of those terms, often emotive – like 'die Heimat' ('home, homeland, home [native] country') in German, for example – which are difficult to express in translation, carrying as they do many interconnected senses and having a long language-specific history behind them. Ó Dónaill translates 'dúchas' as (1) 'hereditary right or claim; birthright, heritage; ancestral estate, patrimony' (translating 'de réir dúchais agus reachta' as 'by traditional custom and law'), (2) 'native place or country, ancestral home; traditional connection', (3) 'kindred affection, natural affinity', (4) 'heredity, innate quality, natural bent' and (5) 'natural, wild, state; wildness, madness'. 'Dúthchas' is translated in Dinneen as 'nature; innate, intrinsic or ingrained quality; instinct, natural bent, heredity; ancestral stock or estate, one's home estate, district or country', translating 'do réir dúthchais' as 'inherently'. DIL translates 'dúthchas' as (a) 'hereditary right, claim by descent, birthright', (b) 'claim, privilege, custom', (c) 'inheritance, patrimony, territory', (d) 'native place or land', (e) 'connection, affinity, or attachment due to descent or long standing' and (f) 'inherited instinct or aptitude, natural (as opposed to acquired) tendency or bias'. It is based on 'dúthaig', translated in DIL as 'belonging to by virtue of descent or heredity'.

Turning to the Acts, in s20 of the Courts Act, 1971, 'whether the child is or is not a natural-born British subject' is translated as 'cibé acu atá nó nach bhfuil an leanbh ina ghéillsineach Briotanach de réir dúchais'. In the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97, 'Our main priority will be to build a stronger indigenous industrial base' is translated as 'Mar thosaíocht, féachfaimid le bonn níos treise a chruthú don tionscal dúchasach' and 'deliveries of home-grown products' is cited as 'ar tháirgí dúchais a sholáthar' from translations of European legislation (CEE 1, 325).

Turning specifically to 'genius' (expressed in this Article as 'dúchas'), in Foclóir Oifigiúil 'native genius' is translated as 'dúchas', followed by the abbreviation for 'Leabhráin Choiste na dTéarmaí' (see below s.v. 'geilleagair'), with 'genius' itself being cited as 'ard-eagnaíocht, éirim' from the same source. Téarmaí Staire (1934) is the original source of these citations; we find the following entry there s.v. 'genius':

Ard-eagnaidheacht. The genius of the Romans for law and government, éirim na Rómhánach chun reachtais is riaghaltais. Native genius, dúthchas.

Having 'dúchas' qualified by 'a sinsear' reinforces the sense of ethnic inheritance but might also perhaps be considered tautology, though 'a sinsear' might be read as qualifying only 'gnás'. De Bhaldraithe translates 'genius' as (1)(a) 'ginias, sprid caomhnaithe', (2) 'sprid, mianach (aoise ar leith)' and (3)(a) 'féith (dúchais), bua ...'. Dinneen includes 'a vein of talent or genius; spirit, vigour' among the senses of 'féith' and Ó Dónaill includes the figurative use, 'streak, strain, natural bent, talent', citing 'tá an fhéith ann chuige, it is in his nature'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that while 'féith' is an individual talent, 'dúchas' may define a social group, large or small.

According to the official standard, while 'dúchas' would be lenited here, it would remain in the nominative case rather than the genitive (as here). See the chapter in An Caighdeán Oifigiúil entitled 'Foirm an Ainmnigh in ionad an Ghinidigh' (i.e. 'The Nominative instead of the Genitive Form'), p. 93, where it is stated that when a definite noun is in the genitive case, following another noun, the first noun is usually not inflected, but having its initial consonant lenited, when subject to a word or phrase which takes the genitive case – in this case, 'sinsear', genitive plural, being preceded by a possessive adjective, is a definite noun, therefore 'dúchas' and 'gnás', even though subject to a prepositional phrase, which takes the genitive case, are not inflected but simply lenited, i.e. 'de réir dhúchas is ghnás a sinsear'.

See the commentary on Article 14.5.2° regarding 'de réir' (which is translated as 'in accordance with' in Téarmaí Dlí); Dinneen cites 'ag caitheamh Gaedhilge leis de réir nótaí a shinnsir', speaking to him in Irish in the ancestral way' from the Blasket Islands.

gnás 'Gnás' is translated as 'custom, usage' in Ó Dónaill, citing 'gnás na tíre, na haimisire, the custom of the country, of the time' and 'de réir gnáis, in the customary manner'. Dinneen translates 'gnás' as 'practice, fashion or habit; presence, company; a statute' with DIL translating this headword, based on cited examples of its usage from the eighth-century Glosses onwards, as (a) 'intercourse, companionship, frequentation' and (b) 'custom, usage, practice, manners', citing 'is comáith gnais caich diaraile' ('the customs are equally good') from an early Irish law-tract. 'Gnás' is based on 'gnáth', translated in DIL as 'customary, usual, familiar, well-known'.

Turning to the Acts, in s11(3)(a) of the Transport (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1971, 'Maidir le hoibleagáidí an Chomhchoiste ..., cibé acu dlí nó gnás is foras dóibh' translates 'The obligations, whether obtaining legally or by customary practice, of the Joint Committee'. In s13(3) of the First Schedule to the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, 'mura ndéileáiltear amhlaidh leo de réir ghnás stocmhargaidh sa Stát' translates 'unless they are so treated by the practice of a stock exchange in the State'. 'Gnás na nGiúdach' is cited as translating 'Jewish ritual method' in Statutory Instrument 48/175. In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 245), '(le) hoibleagáidí forlionsa nach bhfuil baint ar bith acu, óna nádúr ná ó ghnás na tráchtála, le hábhar na gconarthaí sin' translates 'obligations which, by their nature or according to commercial usage, have no connection with the subject of such contracts'.

Turning to 'tradition', in s15 of the Shannon Electricity Act, 1925, '(any) ancient monument which in the opinion of the Minister is of public interest by reason of the historical, traditional, archaeological, or artistic interest attaching thereto' is translated as 'séadchomhartha ina mbeadh suim ag an bpuiblíocht dar leis an Aire, toisc stair, béaloideas, ársaíocht, no maise do bheith ag baint leis'. We find the following entry s.v. 'tradition' in Téarmaí Staire (1934):

Oral tradition, tiodhnacal na sean, béaloideas na sean. Facts transmitted by oral tradition, seanchus a tháinig anuas tré bhéaloideas (ó bhéal go béal). They inherited the traditions of the Romans, tháinig béasa na Rómhánach anuas chúcha.

'Tradition' is cited in Foclóir Oifigiúil as being translated as 'sean-chuimhne shinsir', and 'traditional laws' as 'dlithe béaloideasacha', in Stair an Bhíobla I (edited by Máire Ní Mhuirgheasa from a manuscript written by Uaitéar Ua Ceallaigh c. 1726), with 'in consonance with its best traditions' cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'do réir mar is dual' in Iris an Phuist, 2/11/27. Neither Dinneen nor DIL appear to give 'traidisiún', the general modern translation of 'tradition', as a headword, Dinneen translating 'béalaireacht' as 'tradition' (citing Fr Francis Molloy's treatise on the Christian Doctrine in Irish, Lucerna Fidelium [published in Rome, 1676] as source), along with 'gnáth-chuimhne', which he also translates as 'constant remembrance'.

'Tradition' is simply translated as 'traidisiún' in more recent translations. 'Their education shall be entrusted to persons of a similar cultural tradition' is translated as 'is daoine arb ionann a dtraidisiún cultúrtha a thabharfaidh an t-oidreachas dóibh' in Article 24 of the Fourth Schedule to the Geneva Conventions Act, 1962, for example. In s7 of the Joint Declaration of 15 December 1993, 'when the genuine feelings of all traditions in the North must be recognised' is translated as 'nuair nach mór braithstintí macánta na dtraidisiún go léir sa Tuaisceart a aithint'; 'can accommodate all traditions' is translated as 'atá in ann freastal ar na traidisiúin go léir' in the Report of the New Ireland Forum (1984, 4.6), with 'while respecting their history, their culture and their traditions' being translated as 'agus a stair, a gcultúr agus a dtraidisiúin á n-urramú acu' in the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 3). Finally, note how 'in all the diversity of their ... traditions', in the proposed new Article 3 contained in Article 29.7.3° (see below s.v. 'saíochta'), is translated as 'in éagsúlacht uile a ... dtraidisiún'.

is rogha leo féin 'Rogha' is translated as 'option' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'déanaim rogha' translated as 'I exercise discretion'. 'Mar is rogha leat' is translated as 'as you choose' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'is rogha liom imeacht anois, I prefer to go now' and 'cibé acu is rogha leat, whichever of them you like'. Dinneen translates 'is rogha liom' as 'I choose, elect'. We find 'is lib atá a rogu' ('it is you that have the choice') in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles – see DIL s.v. 'rogu'.

Turning to modern legislation, 'mar is rogha leis an bhféichiúnaí breithiúnais' translates 'at the option of the judgment debtor' in s28(1)(b) of the Central Bank Act, 1971. In the Treaty establishing the European Atomic Energy Community, 'ag cibé céim den táirgeadh is rogha leis' translates 'at whichever stage of production he chooses' (Treaties establishing the European Communities, 1973, p. 550). Note that 'the right to live wherever one chooses without hindrance' is translated as 'ceart duine cónaí ina rogha áit, gan bhac' in the Joint Declaration of December 1993. 'Rogha' also translates 'preference' in the Acts – see, for example, s58(1) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, where 'the same order of preference' is translated as 'an t-ord céanna rogha'. While 'roghnaím' is translated as 'I elect (i.e. in equity)' in Téarmaí Dlí, the general sense of 'roghnaigh' is 'choose, select' – see the Treaties establishing the European Communities (p. 1002), for example, where 'That judge shall be chosen by lot' is translated as 'Roghófar trí chrannchur an breitheamh sin'.

a chinneadh 'Cinneadh' is the verbal noun of 'cinn'. 'Cinnim' is translated as 'I determine (issue, etc.); I find (as a fact)' in Téarmaí Dlí, and as 'I fix, appoint, decide, resolve, agree, decree, determine, assign' in Dinneen. 'Cinn' is translated as 'fix, determine, decree' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'comhairle a chinneadh, to decide upon a course of action'. Like 'ceannas' below, the Old Irish verb 'cinnid' is based on 'cenn' ('head'); 'cinnid' is translated in DIL as (a) 'defines, fixes, settles' (an example of this sense being cited from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms: 'sech is no cinned aimsir sóin' ['that it should determine time']), (b) 'completes, finishes' and (c) 'decides (on a course of action), makes a decision'. Turning to the Acts, 'to have the matter determined by the tribunal' is translated as 'an t-ábhar a chur á chinneadh ag an mbinse' in s9(1)(d) of the Fourth Schedule to the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, for example.

Deimhniú 'Ireland affirms' is expressed as 'Dearbh-aíonn Éire' in Articles 29.1 and 29.2 ('International Relations').

'Deimhním' is translated as 'I certify; I vouch' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill translates 'deimhnigh' as 'certify; affirm, assure; check' and cites 'rud a dheimhniú, to certify something, to confirm something' and 'breith cúirte a dheimhniú, to affirm a court decision'. Dinneen translates 'deimhnighim' as 'I affirm, prove, verify, emphasise'. Old Irish 'deimnigid(ír)' is translated as 'confirms, certifies' in DIL, where examples are cited from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards – 'demnigid' glosses Latin 'confirmat' in the ninth-century St Gall Glosses on Priscian, for example. The verb 'deimnigid(ír)' is based on 'deimin', translated as 'sure, certain, undoubted' (as an adjective) and 'certainty, assurance, proof' (as a noun) in DIL.

Turning to the Acts, following Téarmaí Dlí, 'deimhnigh' generally translates 'certify' therein. In s75(4) of the Companies Act, 1963, for example, 'The registrar shall certify under his hand the registration of the order' is translated as 'Déanfaidh an clárathóir clárú an ordaithe ... a dheimhniú faoina láimh' and in s10(b) of the Finance Act, 1990, 'the aforementioned evidence shall include a certificate by an industrial development agency certifying that it has satisfied itself ... that ...' is translated as 'go mbeidh ar áireamh san fhianaise sin a dúradh deimhniú ó ghníomhaireacht forbartha tionscail á dheimhniú gur shásaigh sí í féin ... gur ...'.

Henry Murdoch, A Dictionary of Irish Law (2nd edition, 1993), has the following entry s.v. 'affirm': (1) 'To elect to be bound by a voidable contract', (2) 'To make a solemn declaration instead of an oath'. In Téarmaí Dlí 'I affirm (decree, etc.)' is translated as 'daingním' and 'I affirm (as an unsworn witness)' is translated as 'dearbhascaim', following the fourth Irish Legal Terms Order (S.I. No. 68 of 1949 – terms connected with Practice, Evidence and Procedure). In the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 215), for example, 'The Conference affirms that ... the usual practice ... shall be continued' is translated as 'Daingníonn an Chomhdháil ... go leanfar den ghnáthchleachtas'. In s30(5) of the Road Traffic Act, 1933, 'and on the hearing of such appeal such Judge shall, if he affirms such conviction, confirm the consequential disqualification order made in respect of such person' is translated as 'agus ar éisteacht an athchomhairc sin déanfaidh an Breitheamh san, má dhaingníonn an ciontú san, daingniú ar an ordú di-cháilochta iarmartach do rinneadh maidir leis an duine sin'. In s30(2) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, on the other hand, we find the following as the form of the oath and affirmation to be administered by the presiding officer to the Assembly elector:

I swear by Almighty God (or – do solemnly, sincerely and truly declare and affirm – as the case may be) that my sight is so impaired ... that I am unable to vote without assistance. Bheirim Dia Uilechumhachtach (nó – Dearbhaím agus dearbhascaim go sollúnta, go fireannach agus go hionraic – de réir mar a bheidh) go bhfuil mallachar radhairc chomh mór sin orm ... nach féidir liom vótáil gan chabhair.

Note, however, that 'affirm' is sometimes translated as 'dearbhaigh' in the Acts – in the First Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, for example, 'The States Parties to the present Convention, ... Affirming that the rules of customary international law should continue ...' is translated as 'Tá na Stáit is Páirtithe sa Choinbhinsiún seo, ... Á dhearbhu dóibh gur cheart go leanfadh ...' and in the New Ireland Forum Report (1984, 3.16), 'the British Government affirmed ...' is translated as 'rinne Rialtas na Breataine dearbhuithe'. As stated above, 'Ireland affirms ...' is expressed as 'Dearbh-aíonn Éire ...' in Articles 29.1 and 29.2 of the Constitution. 'Dearbhaigh' is translated as 'declare, affirm; assure, confirm; attest, prove' in Ó Dónaill, with 'dearbhaím' translated as 'I declare' in Téarmaí Dlí. Finally, note that in the Joint Declaration of 15 December 1993 – perhaps following the present Article of the Constitution – 'notwithstanding the solemn affirmation by both Governments in the Anglo-Irish Agreement that ...' is translated as 'd'ainneoin an deimhniú sollúnta ón dá Rialtas sa Chomhaontú Angla-Éireannach nach ...'.

Looking at the earlier Acts, in s2(9) of the Damage to Property (Compensation) Act, 1923, 'where such decree has been varied or affirmed upon an appeal' is translated as 'in aon chás 'nar dineadh an aithne sin d'atharú no do dhaingniú ar athchomharc'. In s12(1) of the same Act, however, 'the Judge may make an order for the examination of such person upon oath or affirmation' is translated as 'féadfaidh an Breitheamh ordú do dhéanamh chun an duine sin do scrúdú fé mhóid no fé dhearbhu', while in s8(2) of the Treasonable Offences Act, 1925, 'to take or enter into ... an oath, affirmation or declaration' is translated as 'mionn do thabhairt no deimhniú no dearbhú do dhéanamh', with 'deimhniú' also being cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'affirm' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 16/1/24.

Of the two terms expressing 'affirm' in the Constitution, 'dearbhaigh' might be favoured in the present context. 'Daingníonn' might appear to carry the sense of 're-affirm'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that in the literary language we would probably have 'maíonn' in this context.

dochloíte This adjective, which expresses 'indefeasible' in the present Article, expresses 'imprescriptible' in Articles 41.1.1° and 42.5, along with 'conclusive' in Articles 25.4.5° and 25.5.3°. 'Fianaise dochloíte' and 'toimhde dochloíte' are translated respectively as 'conclusive evidence' and 'conclusive presumption' in Téarmaí Dlí. This compound of the prefix 'do-' and 'cloíte', participle of 'cloigh', is translated as 'indomitable, invincible, indefatigable' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'fianaise dhochloíte' as 'irrefutable evidence'. Dinneen translates 'do-chlaoidhte' as 'indefatigable, invincible, unconquered'. DIL cites two examples of 'dochloíte', translated as 'invincible, impregnable', the earliest being from the fifteenth-century Book of Lismore. 'Cloíte' is based on 'cloid', the general meaning of which is 'overthrows, vanquishes, conquers, destroys', according to DIL.

Turning to the Acts, in s8(2) of the Foyle Fisheries Act, 1952, probably following the present Article of the Constitution, 'absolute and indefeasible title' is translated as 'teideal iomlán dochloíte' and in s38(1) of the Finance Act, 1970, 'limited to take effect indefeasibly on the death of the survivor of the donor' is translated as 'teorannaithe chun éifeacht dochloíte a ghlacadh ar bhás mharthanóir an deontóra'. 'Imprescriptible rights' is translated as 'cearta dochloíte' in s3(1) of the Adoption Act, 1988, while in s64(3)(a) of the Building Societies Act, 1989, 'may be conclusively proved' is translated as 'féadfar a chruthú go dochloíte', with 'any such appeal shall be final and conclusive' being translated as 'is cinneadh críochnaitheach dochloíte a gcinneadh' in s416(4) of the Income Tax Act, 1967, for example.

'Indefeasible' in Article 1 of the Constitution echoes the third paragraph of the Easter Proclamation which reads as follows: 'We declare the right of the people of Ireland to the ownership of Ireland ... to be sovereign and indefeasible'. (See below s.v. 'ceannasach', regarding a recent Irish version of this Proclamation, which seems to follow closely the wording of the present Article of the Constitution.) According to Liam de Paor, On the Easter Proclamation and Other Declarations (1997, p. 63), this passage in the Proclamation is but a condensation of Pearse's final pamphlet, The Sovereign People (31 March 1916), in which Pearse refers to a secret manifesto issued to the Friends of Freedom in Ireland in June 1791, 'attributed to Tone in collaboration with Neilson and others', and from which he quotes the following passage:

The inherent and indefeasible claims of every free nation to rest in this nation – the will and the power to be happy, to pursue the common weal as an individual pursues his private welfare, and to stand in insulated independence, an imperial people. (cited ibid, p. 64)

Liam de Paor interprets 'sovereign and indefeasible (right)' as 'a right (of the people of Ireland) which is supreme and cannot be annulled'. 'Indefeasible' is defined in the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary as 'not defeasible; not liable to be made void, or done away with; that cannot be forfeited', while 'imprescriptible' is defined in A Dictionary of Irish Law as 'that which cannot be rightfully taken away, lost or revoked; inviolable'. Note that De Bhaldraithe translates 'indefeasible' as '(ceart) dochloíte, dochealaithe', also translating 'imprescriptible' as 'dochealaithe' – 'imprescriptible rights' is translated as 'cearta dochealaithe' in Téarmaí Dlí and 'dochealaithe' is

doshannta We find this adjective again in Articles 41.1.1° and 42.1, where it also expresses 'inalienable', with 'sannadh' expressing 'alienation' in Articles 10.3 and 10.4, while 'a shannadh' expresses 'to transfer (property)' in Article 43.1.2°. 'Doshannta', composed of the prefix 'do-' and the participle of 'sann', is translated as 'unassignable, inalienable' in Ó Dónaill. It does not seem to be given as a headword in Dinneen. 'Sannaim' is translated as 'I assign' in Téarmaí Dlí, 'sannaid' being translated as 'separates, alienates (land)' in DIL, where examples are given from early Irish law-tracts in particular. See further the commentary on Article 43.1.2° where 'sann' expresses 'to transfer'.

Turning to the Acts, in the Margin Title of s16 of the Children's Allowances Act, 1944, 'Children's allowances to be inalienable' is translated as 'Liúntais leanbhaí do bheith neamh-inaistrithe'. 'Neamh-inaistrithe', however, translates 'non-transferable' in s61(5) of the Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, for example. 'Alienable' is translated as 'do-inaistrithe' in the Widows' and Orphans' Act, 1935 (p. 29, reference in Foclóir Oifigiúil). 'The alienation, assignment ... of a holding' is translated as 'aistriú, sana ... ar ghabháltas' in s65(2) of the Land Act, 1923 and, in s10(2) of the Army Pensions Act, 1923, 'No pension ... shall be capable of being taken in execution or otherwise alienated by process of law for the payment of any debts' is translated as 'Ní féadfar aon phinsean ... do thógaint i bhfeidhmiú ná a seilbh d'aistriú in aon tslí eile tré chúrsa dlí in íoc aon fhiacha', while 'to alienate a residence, etc.' is translated as 'scarúint (le)' in the Methodist Church in Ireland Act, 1928 (p. 27, reference in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms). 'Aistrim' is translated as 'I transfer' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'scaraim le' translated as 'I relinquish'.

Article 1 of the Constitution echoes the 'Message to the Free Nations of the World' from the Opening Session of the First Dáil Éireann, 21 January 1919, among other documents significant in Irish political history (see J.M. Kelly, The Irish Constitution, p. 11, n. 2). This Message states that in every generation Ireland 'defiantly proclaimed her inalienable right of nationhood'. While this is expressed in French as 'elle a affirmé hardiment à chaque génération ... ses inaliénables droits de nation', in Irish it is expressed as 'níor leig sí riamh do ré dul thairste gan an náisiúntacht is dual di féin ar leithligh do dhearbhadh go dána ...' (Dáil Éireann, Minutes of Proceedings of the First Parliament of Ireland, 1919-1921, pp. 18-20). Regarding the background of the word 'inalienable' in the Constitution, see Liam de Paor, op. cit., p. 63:

The American Declaration speaks of 'unalienable' rights (of 'all men'), that is, rights which cannot be transferred to another. The French Declaration lists rights that are 'natural, imprescriptible and inalienable' (in Tom Paine's contemporary translation), that is, rights ('of man') which are founded in nature and can neither lapse through the passage of time nor be transferred.

'Inalienability' is defined as 'not transferable' in Henry Murdoch, A Dictionary of Irish Law, and as 'not alienable; that cannot be transferred from its present ownership or relation' in the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary. 'Alienate' is defined as 'to exercise the power of disposing or transferring property' in A Dictionary of Irish Law. 'I alienate' is translated as 'coimhthím' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'alienation' translated as 'coimhthiú'. 'The alienation of a cottage' is translated as 'coimhthiú iostáin' in s2(2) of the Labourers Act, 1965, and 'transfer or alienate his share in the Company' is translated 'a scair sa Chuideachta a aistriú nó a choimhthiú' in s11(2) of the Fóir Teoranta Act, 1972. In the New Ireland Forum Report (1984), 'deep and growing alienation' is translated as 'tá siad coimhthithe go mór, agus á gcoimhthiú tuilleadh'. 'Dochoimhthithe' is offered as a possible literal translation of 'inalienable' rather than 'doshannta' or 'neamh-inaistrithe' in the direct translation of this Article below.

ceannasach This headword also expresses 'sovereign' in Article 5. 'Ceannasach' is translated as (1) 'ruling, sovereign', (2) 'commanding, masterful' and (3) 'forward, self-assertive; bold, assured' in Ó Dónaill and as 'powerful, commanding; having supreme power; important; haughty; noble, good' in Dinneen. Only three examples are cited in DIL s.v. 'ceannasach', all of them fairly recent: 'fer ... cendasach' ('authorative' man) from the seventeenth-century Annals of the Four Masters, 'macaomh ... ceannasach' from Keating's seventeenth-century poetry and the final example, 'go ceannasach' ('haughtily'), from the glossary in Egerton 158, a paper manuscript in the British Museum, written in Cork in the eighteenth century. 'Cennasach' is based on 'cennas' (translated as 'headship, lordship, superiority, precedence' in DIL), which in turn is based on 'cenn' ('head').

In the Irish version of the 1916 Proclamation contained in Mark Tierney's Ón nGorta Anall (1982), 'We declare the right of the people of Ireland to the ownership of Ireland ... to be sovereign and indefeasible' is translated as 'Dearbhaímid gur ceart ceannasach dochloíte ceart mhuintir na hÉireann chun tír na hÉireann', with 'their right to national freedom and sovereignty' translated as 'a gceart chun saoirse agus ceannais náisiúnta' – see above s.v. 'dochloíte', for Liam de Paor's commentary on 'sovereign', including his reference to Pearse's The Sovereign People (1916), in his monograph on the Easter Proclamation.

Turning to the Acts, 'Sovereign States' is translated as 'Stáit cheannasacha' in Article 14.5(a) of the Second Schedule to the Radiological Protection Act, 1991; 'the sovereign equality of States' is translated as 'comhionannas ceannasach Stát' in the First Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, and 'of any foreign sovereign State' is translated as 'le haon Stát ceannasach iasachta' in s4 of the Second Schedule to the Defamation Act, 1961. In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 538), 'the signature of a State acting in its sovereign capacity' is translated as 'síniú Stáit ag gníomhú dó ina cháil cheannasach'. In the Anglo-Irish Agreement of 1985, however, 'sovereign united Ireland' is translated as 'Éire aontaithe fhlaithiasach' and this is followed in the Joint Declaration of 15 December 1993, where 'a sovereign united Ireland' is translated as '(le) hÉirinn aontaithe fhlaithiasach'.

'Sovereignty' is translated as 'flaitheas' in s17(3) of the Air Navigation and Transport Act, 1936, where 'Any reference in the First Schedule to this Act to the territory of any High Contracting Party to the Warsaw Convention shall be construed as a reference to the territories subject to his sovereignty, suzerainty, mandate or authority, in respect of which he is a party' is translated as 'Aon tagairt sa Chéad Sceideal a ghabhann leis an Acht so do chrích aon Ard-Pháirtí Chonnarthaigh i gConvensiún Warsaw léireofar í mar thagairt do sna críocha, fé n-a fhlaithias, fé n-a thiarnas, fé n-a mhandáid, no fé n-a údarás, dar páirtí é'. 'Sovereignty' is translated as 'oireachas, flaitheas' in Téarmaí Staire (1934), while Dinneen cites 'oireachas Éireann, the Irish throne'. 'Flaithius'/'Flaitheas' is translated principally as 'rule, sovereignty' in DIL, where 'cach rí gaibés fláithiús' ('every king who assumes sovereignty') is cited from the Glosses on the Psalms contained in a tenth-century manuscript in the library of St John's College, Cambridge. 'Flaithius' is based on 'flaith', translated as 'lordship, sovereignty, rule' in DIL, where examples are cited from the eighth-century Glosses onwards, this term also expressing 'a chief, lord' in Irish social organization – see DIL for references to 'flaith' from early Irish law-tracts. Note that in a draft of Article 5 we find 'Árd-fhlaithias is eadh Stát na hÉireann gurb iad muinntir na dúithche atá ina cheannas' (see Breandán Mac Giolla Choille, op. cit., p. 67), this Article reading as follows in the popular edition:

Finally note that 'sovereign' is translated as 'ríonach' in Article 6 of the Aliens Order, 1946 (see Téarmaí Oifigiúla), that 'ceannasach' translates 'paramount' in s11 of the First Schedule to the Companies Act, 1963, where 'The company shall have a first and paramount lien on every share...' is translated as 'Beidh tús-lian ceannasach ag an gcuideachta ar gach scair', and that 'flaitheasach' is translated as 'heavenly, celestial' in Ó Dónaill, DIL citing two examples of 'flaitheasach' in the sense of 'belong to the heavens, celestial', from the Irish Corpus Astronomia – this being, as Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks, a particular development of 'flaitheas Dé'.

Regarding translating 'ceannasach' as 'commanding' above, Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that 'commanding' has two senses in English, that of adjective and participle, and would be against translating 'ceannasach' as 'commanding' for fear the sense of the participle 'commanding' would be understood, which sense does not suit the context. Note that the sense of the adjective 'commanding' is very often expressed in Irish by 'ceannais', that is the genitive singular of 'ceannas' as attributive adjective, rather than 'ceannasach'. 'Commanding' was included in the translation above to illustrate the set of senses of 'ceannasach' other than 'sovereign'.

saíocht 'An tSaíocht Náisiúnta' expresses 'National Culture' in Article 18.7.1<sup>o</sup>; in the proposed new Article 2 contained in Article 29.7.3<sup>o</sup> (the Amendment following the Belfast Agreement), however, 'cultural identity and heritage' is rendered as 'féiniúlacht agus oidhreacht chultúir'.

'Saíocht' is translated as 'learning, erudition' in Ó Dónaill, with 'mastery, accomplishment' given as senses from earlier literature. Dinneen translates 'soidheacht' as 'wisdom, lore, culture, expert knowledge; sages (collectively)'. Earlier 'saidecht' is translated as 'skill, mastery, accomplishment (in an art or craft)' in DIL; this abstract noun is based on 'sú', translated in DIL as I(a) 'man of learning, scholar, wise man, sage', (b) 'head of a monastic or poetic school'; and II 'expert, master'. Professor Ó Murchú recommends 'inherited high culture' as a translation of 'saíocht'. See further the commentary of Article 18.7.1<sup>o</sup>.

Neither Dinneen nor DIL seem to have the headword 'cultúr', the usual translation of 'culture' today. The date 1510 follows the following figurative sense of 'culture' in the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary: 'Improvement or refinement by education and training', with the date 1805 following the following absolute sense: 'The training and refinement of mind, tastes, and manners; the condition of being thus trained and refined; the intellectual side of civilization'. See further Jim O'Donnell, Wordgloss (1990, p. 192) s.v. 'politics':

Colere, the Latin word from which 'cultural' derives, means 'to tend to', 'to cultivate'; 'culture' is sometimes used in a comprehensive sense to mean 'way of life' but here it is used in a restricted sense to cover education, the arts, language, leisure activities.

'Culture' is translated as 'cultúr' in L. Mc Cionnaith, who also refers the reader to 'refine', 'learning', 'polite', while De Bhaldraithe translates 'culture' as 'cultúr, oiliúint, saothúilacht'. In s5(1)(f) of the Institute for Advanced Studies Act, 1940, 'of the cultural and social background of Celtic civilisation' is translated as 'ar chúlrath chultúrtha agus shóisialta na sibhialtacha Ceiltighe' and in Schedule (B) to the Appropriation (No. 2) Act, 1947, 'certain Miscellaneous Educational and Cultural Services' is translated as 'Seirbhísi Ilghnéitheachta áirithe Oideachais agus Cultúir'. 'Culture media' is translated as 'méidia cultúir' in Foclóir Oifigiúil, followed by the abbreviation for the Department of Local Government, 787/39. Turning to the modern Acts, the wording of the Constitution as regards 'culture' is followed in s4 of the Higher Education Authority Act, 1971, where 'An tÚdarás shall bear constantly in mind the national aims of restoring the Irish language and preserving and developing the national culture' is translated as 'coimeádfaidh sé i gcumhne i gcónaí na haidhmeanna náisiúnta atá ann an Ghaeilge a aisiriú agus an tsaocht náisiúnta a chaomhnú agus a fhorbairt'. Similarly, in the New Ireland Forum Report (1984, 4.13), 'all cultural, political and religious belief can be freely expressed and practised' is translated as 'saorhead a bheith acu a mbarshamhla saíochta, polaitíochta agus creidimh a chur os ard agus a chleachtadh'. In general, however, 'cultúr' expresses 'culture', the recent 'Department of Arts, Culture and the Gaeltacht', for instance, being styled 'An Roinn Ealaíon, Cultúr agus Gaeltachta' in Irish. In s33(3) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, for example, 'for educational, cultural or recreational purposes' is translated as 'chun críocha oideachais, cultúir nó caitheamh aimsire', while in the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 47), 'their cultural and linguistic diversity' is translated as 'a n-éagsúlacht chultúrtha agus teanga', with 'cultural heritage' being translated as 'oidhreacht chultúrtha'. 'Cultural Relations Committee' is translated as 'An Coiste um Chaidreamh Cultúrtha' in the Dáil Order Paper of 24/6/1980, while 'the National Cultural Institutions Bill, 1996' is cited in Irish as 'an Bille um Fhorais Chultúir Náisiúnta, 1996'.

geilleagair The adjective 'geilleagrach' expresses 'economic' in Articles 15.3.1<sup>o</sup>, 45.2.v and 45.4.1<sup>o</sup>, with 'the European Economic Community' being cited by its official Irish title '(de) Chomhphobal Eacnamaíochta na hEorpa' in Article 29.4.3<sup>o</sup>.

'Geilleagar' (of which we have the genitive singular in the present Article) is translated as 'economy', following the abbreviation for 'Administration', in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'geilleagar na tíre, the national economy' and 'geilleagar talmhaíochta, agronomy'; Ó Dónaill translates 'geilleagrach' as 'pertaining to economy'. 'Eacnamaíocht' is translated by Ó Dónaill as (1) 'economy', citing 'eacnamaíocht pholaitiúil, political economy', (2) 'economics' and (3) 'cúiseanna eacnamaíochta, economic reasons'. As stated by Jim O'Donnell and Seán de Fréine, Ciste Cúrsaí Reatha (1992, p. 94), the Greek word 'oikonomia' ('oikos' ['house'] combined with 'nomus' ['law']) is the original source of the English terms 'economy' and 'economics' but, while 'economics' is expressed as 'eacnamaíocht' in Irish, a new word was composed to express 'economy', i.e. 'geilleagar' ('geall' combined with 'eagar' – ibid, p. 121). 'Eacnamaíocht', however, is not confined to expressing 'economics'; while 'geilleagar' seems to be the favoured translation of 'economy' in Irish legislation, the genitive of 'eacnamaíocht', 'eacnamaíochta', or the adjectival form 'eacnamaíoch', seem to be the favoured translation of 'economic'. This is vividly illustrated in s2(2) of the Ministers and Secretaries (Amendment) Act, 1977, the Act which established the 'Department of Economic Planning and Development', styled in Irish 'an Roinn Pleanála agus Forbartha Eacnamaíochta', while 'economy' itself is translated as 'geilleagar'; s2(2) reads as follows:

to promote and co-ordinate economic and social planning for the development of the economy both generally and as respects different sections thereof and different regions of the country .... pleanáil eacnamaíochta agus sóisialach a chur ar aghaidh agus a chomhoirdniú chun an geilleagar a fhorbairt i gcoitinne agus maidir le hearnálacha éagsúla de agus maidir le réigiúin éagsúla den tír.

In s6(c) of the Liability for Defective Products Act, 1991, 'for an economic purpose' is translated as 'chun críche eacnamaíche' and in s96(1) of the Fisheries Act, 1939, 'the economic conditions affecting the commercial development of fisheries' is translated as '(i dtaobh) na gcoinníollacha eacnamaíochta a bhaineann le hiascaigh d'fhorbairt ó thaobh na tráchtála'.

Turning to translations of European legislation, we find again that while 'eacnamaíochta' and 'eacnamaíoch' are favoured as translations of 'economic' – with the 'European Economic Community' itself, as we have seen, being officially styled 'Comhphobal Eacnamaíochta na hEorpa' – 'geilleagar' generally translates 'economy'. We find 'economies of Member States' translated as 'geilleagair na mBallstát' in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 200), 'the various branches of the economy' as 'bránsí éagsúla an gheilleagair' (p. 247) and 'unity of their economies' as 'aontacht a ngeilleagair' (ibid, p. 173). Similarly in the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 3), 'to establish an economic and monetary union' is translated as 'aontas eacnamaíoch agus airgeadaíochta a bhunú', while 'into the world economy' is translated as 'sa gheilleagar domhanda' (p. 60).

We do, of course, find exceptions to the usages noted above. In s1(1) of the Prices (Amendment) Act, 1965, for example, 'Whenever and so often as the Government are satisfied that the condition of the national economy is such that it is necessary to maintain stability of prices generally' is translated as 'Aon uair agus gach uair is deimhin leis an Rialtas go bhfuil eacnamaíocht an náisiúin sa riocht gur gá praghsanna i gcoitinne a chobhsú'. 'Economic and Social Council of the United Nations' is translated as 'Comhairle Gheilleagrach agus Sóisialach na Náisiún Aontaithe' in s20(2)(c) of the Poisons Act, 1961. In s8 of Article XII of the Bretton Woods Agreement Act, 1957, 'cora airgeadaíochta nó geilleagair' translates 'monetary or economic conditions', with 'the general international economic situation' being translated as '(ar) chúrsaí geilleagair idirnáisiúnta i gcoitinne' in s3(a) of Article VII. In s6 of the Schedule to the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1986, 'useful economic life' (in relation to a fixed asset) is translated as 'saol eacnamúil úsáideach'.

Neither 'geilleagar' nor 'eacnamaíocht' seem to be given as headwords in Dinneen, where we find 'fearachas' translated as 'economy, husbandry', with 'fearachas tigh is baile' translated as 'thrift and economy'. 'Ní hamháin d'éifeachtúlacht ach fós do bhaileachas' translates 'not only efficiency, but also to economy' in s20 of the 'Limerick County Borough Scheme' in the First Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, with 'necessity for economy' being translated as 'gá atá le bheith fearachasach' in Iris an Phuist, 12/10/1927 (cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms). 'Có-ionmhasach' translates 'economic' in Article 45 of the 1922 Constitution, with 'the economic welfare of the district' being translated as 'staid chó-ionmhuis an cheanntair' in s10(2)(b) of the Damage to Property (Compensation) Act, 1923.

Turning to 'eacnamaíocht' in the early Acts, in s2(1) of the Railways (Existing Officers and Servants) Act, 1926, 'or other economic cause' is translated as 'no de chúis eile eacnomíochta' and 'any matter affecting the general economic and other activities and conditions' is translated as 'éinní a bhaineann le gníomhachtaí agus cor an tsaol go generalta i gcúrsaí eacnomíochta agus eile' in s2 of the Statistics Act, 1926. 'Eacnomíocht' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'economy' in the Limerick Harbour Act, 1926 (p. 29). 'Eacnomiciúil' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'economic' in a 'Cover of Official Reports of Dáil Debates' (abbreviated as D.D.), 29/5/1923, and 'coiste eacnomice' translates 'Economic Committee' in D.D. 21/11/1928, with 'Coiste Eacnomíochta' cited in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 29/135. 'Economic interests' is translated as 'leasanna eacnamúla' in the Local Government Act, 1941 (cited in Téarmaí Oifigiúla) and 'economically' is translated as 'go heacnamúil' in the Town and Regional Planning Act, 1934 (ibid).

L. Mc Cionnaith translates 'economy (political, &c.)' as 'eacnomaidheacht' and 'economist' as 'eacnomaí', followed by the abbreviation for 'Terms published by Department of Education (Foclóir Staire, Téarmaí Gramadaighe, &c., Téarmaí Eoluigheachta, Téarmaí Ceoil)'. 'Economic statistics' is translated as 'staitistíochta eacnomiceamhla' in L. Mc Cionnaith, followed by the abbreviation for 'Terms from Staff of Dáil, Foclóir Oifigeamhail' ('economic and social statistics, staitistíochta eacnomiciúla agus sóisialta') is cited in Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms, from D.D., 29/5/23). L. Mc Cionnaith translates 'Economy (sci.)' as 'geilleagar' and 'economist' as 'geallagraí', both of which are followed by the abbreviation from 'Terms published by Department of Education'.

geilleagrach', 'eacnamaíoch' being one of the translations of 'economical' given therein. 'Economics' is translated as 'eacnamaíocht (pholaitiúil)', with 'the economics of a country' translated as 'geilleagar tíre'. 'Economist' is translated as 'eacnomaí, geilleagraí' and 'political economy' as 'eacnamaíocht pholaitiúil, geilleagar polaitiúil'. Finally, note that Ó Dónaill translates 'eacnamaíoch' as 'economic(al)', giving 'eacnamúil' as a variant. Note also that 'by economic necessity' is expressed as 'de dheasca uireasa' (lit. 'because of want') in Article 41.2.2°.

sinsear Note that 'ár sinisir' translates 'our fathers' in the Preamble, for which see the commentary thereon, and Appendix 4 on the later Amendments.

caidreamh See the commentary on Article 29.3.

ENGLISH TEXT

The national territory consists of the whole island of Ireland, its islands and the territorial seas.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The English text refers to 'The national territory' while the Irish text refers to 'na críocha náisiúnta' ('the national territories/territory'), i.e. the plural form of 'críoch'; this plural form, however, is sometimes used in the sense of singular 'country'.
- 2 The Irish text makes 'its islands and the territorial seas' a sub-clause of 'the whole island of Ireland' – i.e. 'maile lena oileáin agus a fharraigí teorann' ('along with its islands and its territorial seas') – the emphasis being on the island of Ireland, with which phrase the Irish text commences.
- 3 The Irish text refers to 'its (i.e. the island of Ireland) territorial seas' ('a fharraigí teorann'), while the English text refers to 'the territorial seas'.

Commentary

críocha The plural of 'críoch', this form expressing the singular 'territory' in Article 3 also. Note, however, that in the proposed new Article 3, contained in Article 29.7.3°, following the Amendment of the Constitution after the British-Irish Agreement concluded in Belfast on 10 April 1998, 'territory' is rendered as 'críoch' rather than 'críocha', with 'all the people who share the territory of the island of Ireland' being rendered as 'na daoine go léir a chomhroinneann críoch oileán na hÉireann i bpáirt lena chéile'.

Dinneen includes 'region, territory, land' among the senses of 'críoch', stating that 'críoch' in the sense of 'country, etc.' is often in the plural, and refers the reader to Latin 'finis' and 'fines'. Latin 'finis', is translated as 'a boundary, limit, border ... in plural borders, and hence territory, land, country enclosed within boundaries' in Charlton T. Lewis and Charles Short's Latin Dictionary (1890). DIL translates 'crích' as (a) 'boundary, limit (of territory), end, aim, purpose' and (b) 'confines, territory, district, land (in sg. and pl.)', and cites examples from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards, including 'hifar crichaib fadisin' ('in your own territories') from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms. Note how E.G. Quin, General Editor of DIL (1953-75), in his edition of the text Stair Ercuil, a Bás (Life and Death of Hercules, p. 73), translates 'Ro fagaib in tremile cricha na Greige iar sin' as 'The great warrior then left the land of Greece'.

Regarding those two senses above of 'crích' in DIL, see Francis John Byrne, 'Tribes and Tribalism in Early Ireland' (Ériu 22, 1971, p. 162):

I should venture to propound the hypothesis that Irish history between the seventh and tenth centuries presents us with the spectacle of a tribal society being transformed by the introduction of a dynastic polity to a state wherein territorial lordship replaces hegemony over tribes as a political principle. By this I do not mean to imply that the archaic 'tribes' had no territorial sense (in this context it is interesting to note the semantic equivalence between the Irish crích 'border', secondarily 'territory', and the Latin fines), but merely that 'people' rather than 'district' was the concept uppermost in men's minds when they spoke of the tuath.

The proposed new Article 2, contained in Article 29.7.3°, following the 1998 Amendment of the Constitution, replaces the emphasis on 'district' in the present Article 2 with an emphasis on 'people':

It is the entitlement and birthright of every person born in the island of Ireland, which includes its islands and seas, to be part of the Irish nation. That is also the entitlement of all persons otherwise qualified in accordance with law to be citizens of Ireland. Furthermore, the Irish nation cherishes its special affinity with people of Irish ancestry living abroad who share its cultural identity and heritage. Tá gach duine a shaolaítear in oileán na hÉireann, ar a n-áirítear a oileáin agus a fharraigí, i dteideal, agus tá de cheart oidhreacht a aige nó aici, a bheith páirteach i náisiún na hÉireann. Tá an teideal sin freisin ag na daoine go léir atá cáilithe ar shlí eile de réir dlí chun bheith ina saoránaigh d'Éirinn. Ina theannta sin, is mór ag náisiún na hÉireann a choibhneas speisialta le daoine de bhunadh na hÉireann atá ina gcónaí ar an gcoigríoch agus arb ionann féiniúlacht agus oidhreacht chultúir dóibh agus do náisiún na hÉireann.

'Críoch' is translated as (1) 'limit; boundary', (2) 'region, territory' and (3) 'end ...' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'críocha Laighean, na nDéise, the territories of Leinster, of the Decies'. 'Críoch Cuinn' is a poetic name of Ireland, cited in DIL from the Martyrology of Donegal, for example. Note that De Bhaldraithe translates 'territory' as 'fearann, ceantar, dúiche, críocha'.

Turning to the Acts as regards the question of the plural 'críocha', we find 'críoch' and 'críocha' alternating with one another therein. In s4(2) of the Oireachtas (Allowances to Members) Act, 1938, 'a normal place of residence within the national territory' is translated as 'gnáth-áit chomhnaithe laistigh de sna críocha náisiúnta'. In s47(3) of the Transport Act, 1944, on the other hand, 'all persons who are ordinarily resident within the national territory' is translated as 'na daoine uile chomhnaíos de ghnáth laistigh den chrich náisiúnta', this English phrase being translated as 'na daoine uile a mbeidh gnáth-chónaí orthu laistigh de na críocha náisiúnta' in s35(2)(c) of the Transport Act, 1950. Again in s11(2) of the Turf Development Act, 1946, 'ceases to be ordinarily resident in the national territory' is translated as '(go) scoirfidh sé de bheith ina ghnáth-chomhnaí sna críocha náisiúnta' and in s24(2) of the Maritime Jurisdiction Act, 1959, 'any part of the national territory' is translated as '(le) haon chuid de na críocha náisiúnta'. In Article 126 of the Fourth Schedule to the Geneva Conventions Act, 1962, on the other hand, 'proceedings against internees who are in the national territory of the Detaining Power' is translated as '(le) himeachtaí i gcoinne imtheorannaithe atá i gcríoch náisiúnta na Cumhachta Coinneála' and, finally, 'Section 7 ... shall apply for the purposes of this Act to the national territory as it applies to designated areas' is translated as 'Beidh feidhm ag alt 7 chun críocha an Achta seo maidir leis an gcríoch náisiúnta mar atá feidhm aige maidir le limistéir ainmnithe' in s36(2) of the Sea Pollution Act, 1991.

In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 963), 'the new Member States are authorized to retain the methods applied in their territory for declaring a herd of cattle officially free of tuberculosis or brucellosis' is translated as 'údaraitear do na Ballstáit nua leanúint den chóras a fheidhmítear ina gcríocha chun dearbhú oifigiúil a thabhairt go bhfuil eallach glan ón eitinn nó ón mbrúisealóis'. On p. 221, however, 'to move freely within the territory of Member States' is translated as 'chun gluaiseacht faoi shaoirse laistigh de chríoch na mBallstát – note that in s13 of the Liability for Defective Products Act, 1991, ‘within the territory of any Member State’ is translated as ‘laistigh de chríoch aon Bhallstáit’.

Looking at early translations, the singular ‘críoch’ translates ‘territory’ in Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution also: ‘All the lands and waters ... within the territory of the Irish Free State’ is translated as ‘Gach talamh agus uisce ... laistigh de chríoch Shaorstáit Éireann’, ‘críoch’ being the old dative singular of ‘críoch’. ‘British Territory’ is translated as ‘Crích Bhriotáineach’ in ‘Translations for An Ard-Chomhairle’, 72 (reference in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms).

teorann ‘Teorainn’, genitive ‘teorann’, is translated as ‘limit’ in Téarmaí Dlí, and as ‘boundary, limit; border, frontier’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘clai teorann, boundary fence’, ‘baile teorann, border town’ and ‘uiscí teorann, territorial waters’. Earlier ‘tórann’, the verbal noun of ‘do-foirndea’ (*to-fo-rind-) is translated in DIL as follows: ‘act of marking out, delimiting’, (b) ‘share, division’, (c) ‘boundary, limit’; examples are cited from the Milan Glosses of the ninth century onwards, ‘fal torainde do flaith iar n-elod’ being cited from an early Irish law-tract (printed in Ancient Laws of Ireland, vol. 5; ‘fal torainde’ = Modern Irish ‘clai teorann’ cited above from Ó Dónaill). See further the commentary on Article 43.2.2° where ‘teorainn a chur le’ expresses ‘delimit’.

Regarding ‘farragai teorann’ (‘the territorial seas’), see s2 of the Maritime Jurisdiction Act, 1959, where ‘the territorial seas of the State shall be ...’ is translated as ‘is iad farragai teorann an Stáit ...’. We also find ‘territorial seas’ translated as ‘farragai teorann’ in s23(b) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1992. Looking at the earlier Acts, ‘reisimint dúithche’ translates ‘territorial regiment’ in s3(10) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, while in s3(5) of the Wireless Telegraphy Act, 1926, ‘the waters (whether inland or territorial) of Saorstát Éireann’ is translated as ‘uiscí Shaorstáit Éireann (pe’ca laistigh no lasmuich de dhóibh)’; in s14(1) of the same Act, ‘within the territorial waters of Saorstát Éireann’ is translated as ‘laistigh d’uiscí tíriúla Shaorstáit Éireann’. In s7(1) of the Enforcement of Law (Occasional Powers) Act, 1926, ‘whether within or outside his bailiwick, and whether within or outside the territorial boundaries of Saorstát Éireann’ is translated as ‘pe’ca laistigh no lasmuich dá bháillíocht atáid, no laistigh no lasmuich de theoranta críche Shaorstáit Éireann’ – ‘críche’ here being the genitive singular form of ‘críoch’, which in the plural expresses ‘territory’ in the present Article 2 of the Constitution.

go hiomlán ‘Iomlán’ is translated by Ó Dónaill as ‘full, whole, complete’, citing ‘tá sé ann go hiomlán, it is all there’, ‘ó mo chroí go hiomlán, with all my heart’ and ‘go huile agus go hiomlán, totally and entirely’. Dinneen translates ‘go hiomlán’ as ‘entirely, perfectly, fully’. In DIL s.v. ‘iomlán’, ‘rí ro gabasdair flaitheas ... an domhain mhoir uili go himlan’ (i.e. a king who seized the sovereignty of the whole world) is cited from the late text Cath Finntrága. ‘Iomlán’ is translated as ‘absolute’ in Téarmaí Dlí, where ‘i dteideal iomlán’ and ‘úinéir iomlán’ are translated as ‘absolutely entitled’ and ‘absolute owner’. ‘Éagumas iomlán’, ‘míchumas iomlán’ and ‘praghas iomlán ceannaigh’, however, are translated respectively as ‘total incapacity’, ‘total disablement’ and ‘total purchase price’.

Turning to the Acts, ‘go hiomlán’ mainly translates ‘wholly’ or ‘in whole’, but also translates ‘entirely’, ‘totally’, ‘completely’, ‘solely’, ‘utterly’, ‘absolutely’ and ‘fully’, with the common phrases in the Acts, ‘wholly or partly’ and ‘in whole or in part’, being translated as ‘go hiomlán agus go páirteach’. In s18(3)(a) of the Radio and Television Act, 1988, ‘the need for understanding and peace within the whole island of Ireland’ is translated as ‘a riachtanaí atá comhthuiscint agus síocháin ar fud oileán na hÉireann uile’, following s13 of the Broadcasting Authority (Amendment) Act, 1976, where ‘within the whole island of Ireland’ is similarly translated as ‘ar fud oileán na hÉireann uile’. In s5.7 of the New Ireland Forum Report (1984), ‘embracing the whole island of Ireland’ is translated as ‘a chuimseoidh oileán iomlán na hÉireann’ while, in s6.5, ‘recruited from the whole island’ is translated as ‘d’earcfaí í ón oileán ar fad’. In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 1391), ‘the extension to the whole of the Community of Community preference for agricultural products’ is translated as ‘go leathnófar go dtí an Comhphobal go léir an fabhar Comhphobail i leith táirgí talmhaíochta’ while, on p. 1488, ‘pig production throughout the whole Community’ is translated as ‘(do) tháirgeacht muc ar fud an Chomhphobail uile’.

See further the commentary on Articles 45.1 (where ‘leas an phobail uile’ expresses ‘the welfare of the whole people’) and 45.2.iv (where ‘uile’ expresses ‘as a whole’).

Is é Literally ‘it is’. ‘Treason shall consist only in’ is expressed as ‘Is é amháin is tréas ann’ in Article 39. ‘The Commission shall consist of the following persons’ is expressed as ‘Is iad na daoine seo a leanas an Coimisiún’ is Article 14.2.1°, while ‘An tUachtarán agus dhá Theach atá san Oireachtas’ expresses ‘The Oireachtas shall consist of the President and two Houses’ in Article 15.1.2°. ‘To the satisfaction of the Supreme Court consisting of not less than five judges’ is expressed as ‘go sásamh na Cúirte Uachtaraí agus í comhdhéanta de chúigear breitheamh ar a laghad’ in Article 12.3.1°, while in Article 22.2.3° ‘he shall appoint a Committee of Privileges consisting of an equal number of members’ is expressed as ‘ní foláir dó Coiste Pribhléidí a cheapadh. An líon céanna de chomhaltáí ... a bheas ar an gCoiste sin’ and in Article 26.2.1° ‘The Supreme Court consisting of not less than five judges shall ...’ is expressed as ‘Ní foláir don Chúirt Uachtarach, cúirt ina mbeidh cúigear breitheamh ar a laghad, ...’. ‘The Government shall consist of not less than seven’ is expressed in Article 28.1 as ‘Mórsheisear ar a laghad ... líon comhaltáí an Rialtais’ while in Article 31.2 ‘The Council of State shall consist of the following members’ is expressed as ‘Is iad na daoine seo a leanas a bheas ina gcomhaltáí den Chomhairle Stáit’. Finally, in Article 40.4.4°, ‘The High Court ... shall ... in respect of any particular case, consist of three judges and shall, in every other case, consist of one judge only’ is expressed as ‘Is tríúr breitheamh is Ard-Chúirt in aon chás áirithe ... agus is breitheamh amháin is Ard-Chúirt i ngach cás eile den sórt sin’.

Turning to ‘consists of’, in the present context, in the Acts, see s7(4)(b) of the Housing Act, 1970, for example, where ‘an area consisting of – (i) a borough ... or, (ii) an urban district’ is translated as ‘limistéar atá comhdhéanta – (i) de bhuirg ... nó, (ii) ceantar buirge’. In s8 of the Value-Added Tax (Amendment) Act, 1978, on the other hand, 'if the consideration consisted entirely of an amount of money equal to the open market price' is translated as 'dá mba é a bhí go huile sa chomaoin suim airgid is comhionann leis an margadh-phraghas oscailte'; in s6 of the same Act, 'in any period consisting of ...' is translated as 'in aon tréimhse arb é atá inti ...'. In s63(6) of the Finance Act, 1990, 'the exchange concerned of shares ... shall constitute a disposal of interests' is translated as 'is éard a bheidh ... sa mhalartú áirithe sin ar scaireanna ... diúscairt leasanna' while in s42 (Table) of the same Act, 'activities carried on by a company in the course of a trade and which consist of -' is translated as 'gníomhaíochtaí arna seoladh ag cuideachta i gcúrsa trádála arb éard iad -'. This phrase 'arb éard iad/i/é' is frequently used in Acts, with 'nó ar a n-áirítear', translating 'consisting of or including'. Finally, regarding 'is éard é' etc., note that 'Is éard é ráta faoin gcéad chun críche mhír (a)(i) -' translates 'A percentage rate for the purpose of paragraph (a)(i) shall be -' in s11(1)(b) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example. See further the commentary on Article 14.2.1<sup>o</sup>.

maille le This phrase is translated as 'with, along with' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'maille le míle eile acu, together with a thousand more of them'. See DIL s.v. 'immalle', where examples of the prepositional phrase 'immalle fri/la' ('with, along with') are cited from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards.

TÉACS GAEILGE

Go dtí go ndéantar athchomhlánú ar na críocha náisiúnta, agus gan dochar do cheart na Parlaiminte is an Rialtais a bhunaítear leis an mBunreacht seo chun dlínse a oibriú sna críocha náisiúnta uile, bainfidh na dlíthe a achtófar ag an bParlaimint sin leis an limistéar céanna lenar bhain dlíthe Shaorstát Éireann, agus beidh an éifeacht chéanna acu taobh amuigh den limistéar sin a bhí ag dlíthe Shaorstát Éireann.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Until the national territories are made complete again, and without prejudice to the right of the Parliament and the Government that is established by this Constitution to operate jurisdiction in all the national territories, the laws that will be enacted by that Parliament will apply/relate to the same area as the laws of the Irish Free State applied/related to, and they will have the same effect outside of that area as the laws of the Irish Free-State had.

ENGLISH TEXT

Pending the re-integration of the national territory, and without prejudice to the right of the Parliament and Government established by this Constitution to exercise jurisdiction over the whole of that territory, the laws enacted by that Parliament shall have the like area and extent of application as the laws of Saorstát Éireann and the like extra-territorial effect.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'The laws ... shall have the like area and extent of application as the laws of Saorstát Éireann' is expressed as 'bainfidh na dlíthe ... leis an limistéar céanna lenar bhain dlíthe Shaorstát Éireann' ('the laws will apply/relate to the same area as the laws of Saorstát Éireann applied / related to') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Re-integration' is expressed as 'athchomhlánú' ('made complete again') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Over the whole of that territory' is expressed as 'sna críocha náisiúnta uile' ('in all the national territories/territory') in the Irish text.
- 4 'Territory' is twice expressed by 'críocha' (plural), as in Article 2, but we find 'taobh amuigh den limistéar sin' expressing 'extra-territorial' in the final clause, with 'limistéar' expressing 'area' earlier in the Article.
- 5 'Exercise' is expressed in the Irish text by 'oibrigh', which is translated as 'operate' in Téarmaí Dlí.
- 6 'The like extra-territorial effect (as the laws of Saorstát Éireann)' is expressed as 'an éifeacht chéanna ... taobh amuigh den limistéar sin a bhí ag dlíthe Shaorstát Éireann' ('the same effect outside of that area as the laws of Saorstát Éireann had') in the Irish text.

Commentary

bainfidh ... le 'The laws enacted by the Parliament shall have the like area and extent of application as the laws of Saorstát Éireann' is expressed above as 'bainfidh na dlíthe a achtófar ag an bParlaimint sin leis an limistéar céanna lenar bhain dlíthe Shaorstát Éireann'. Compare this Irish text with that of the new Article 3 (following the Belfast Agreement), the final part of which reads as follows:

... the laws enacted by the Parliament ... shall have the like area and extent of application as the laws enacted by the Parliament ... . bainfidh na dlíthe a achtófar ag an bParlaimint ... leis an limistéar feidhme céanna, agus beidh an raon feidhme céanna acu, lenar bhain na dlíthe, agus a bhí ag na dlíthe, a d'achtaigh an Pharlaimint.

While this new amended Article 3 is based directly on the current Article 3, and strives to adhere as closely as possible to the wording of the Irish text, retaining 'bainfidh le', it was felt necessary to add 'feidhm' after 'limistéar' to translate 'area of application', and two extra clauses were felt necessary to include 'extent of application'. This illustrates one area of difficulty in amending the Irish text of any Article, the translator having to adhere to the Irish form of that Article and at the same time give as literal a translation as possible of the amendment.

Note that in s2(2) of the Constitution (Consequential Provisions) Act, 1937, 'any area which is ... not within the area and extent of application of the laws enacted by the Oireachtas' is translated as 'aon liomataíste ná beidh ... laistigh de liomataíste feidhme na ndlithé achtófar ag an Oireachtas', the same English phrase being translated as 'aon liomataíste bheidh ... gan bheith sa liomataíste le n-a mbaineann dlithé an Oireachtais' in s30 of the Finance Act, 1938, and as 'aon liomataíste ná fuil laistigh den liomataíste ina bhfuil feidhm ag na dlithé a hachtuítear ag an Oireachtas' in s7(6) of the Local Authorities (Combined Purchasing) Act, 1939.

'Bain le' is translated as (1) 'touch, interfere with' and (2) 'concern, relate to' in Ó Dónaill, with 'bainim le' translated as 'I touch, I meddle with, I am connected with' in Dinneen. DIL cites 'benad fria chubus fessin' ('let it concern his own conscience'), from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, as an example of the figurative use of 'benaoid fri (la)', which phrase is translated in DIL as 'touches, affects; is concerned with, meddles with'. See further the commentary on Article 29.4.2°.

In the modern Acts, 'bain le' generally translates 'relate to' – see s10 of the Sea Pollution Act, 1991, for example, where 'féadfaidh go mbainfidh Rialacháin faoin alt seo le longa i gcoitinne' translates 'Regulations under this section may relate to ships generally'. 'Apply to' in the modern Acts is generally translated as 'beidh feidhm ag ... maidir le' – see, for example, s23(4) of the Finance Act, 1990, where 'Sections 500 and 503 ... shall apply to a failure to ...' is translated as 'Beidh feidhm ag ailt 500 agus 503 ... maidir le mainneachtain' – with 'feidhm' translating 'application': see s42(2) of the same Act, for example, where 'For the purposes of subsection (1) and the application of section 116' is translated as 'Chun críocha fho-alt (1) agus fheidhm alt 116'.

In earlier Acts in general, however, 'bain le' and 'baint' translated 'apply' and 'application' respectively (although 'the Article shall apply ...' is translated as 'beidh feidhm ag an Airtíogal' in Article 79 of the 1922 Constitution, for example, and 'bain le' translates 'apply to' in some modern Acts) – see s3(1) of the Interpretation Act, 1923, for example, where 'the expression "Saorstát Éireann" ... when used for the purpose of defining the application of any law or the extent or incidence of any authority, obligation or imposition' is translated as 'ciallóidh an focal "Saorstát Éireann" ... nuair a húsáidfar é chun baint aon dlí no leithé no achar aon údaráis, oblagáide no leaga do mhiniú' – note here, also, how 'leithe' translates 'extent' which, as we have seen, is not specifically expressed in the Irish text of Article 3. In the Margin Title of s10 of the Second Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923, 'Application of Rules in First Schedule' is translated as 'Rialacha den Chéad Sceideal á gcur i mbaint', the section itself reading as follows:

Rules 9 to 14 ... of the First Schedule to this Act, so far as they relate to the registration of Dáil ... Electors, shall apply to University constituencies. Sa mhéid go mbainid le clárú Dáil-toghthóirí ... bainfidh le dáilcheanntair Phríomh-scoile Rialacha 9 go dtí 14 ... de Chéad Sceideal an Achta so.

In the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms, 'application of Act' is translated as 'cad leis go mbainfidh an tAcht', with 'general' following this entry (as against a specific reference). Finally, in s7(1) of the Local Elections (Amendment) Act, 1942, 'The Minister may by order make provision for the holding of the first elections of the members of public assistance authorities to which this section applies' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an tAire, le hordú, socrú do dhéanamh chun céad-toghcháin chomhaltai údarásanna conganta phuiblí le n-a mbaineann an t-alt so do chomóradh'. See further the commentary on Article 23.1°.

Returning to 'extent', we have seen above how 'leithe' translates this term in s3(1) of the Interpretation Act, 1923; while 'leithe' is translated as 'extent, breadth' in Dinneen, this headword is translated principally as 'broadness, stoutness' in Ó Dónaill. In the Third Schedule to the Local Government Act, 1941, the heading 'Extent of Application' is translated as 'Méid an Churtha-i-mBaint', referring to 'Enactments Applied to Elections of Members of Local Authorities' ('Achtacháin a Cuirtear i mBaint le Toghcháin do Bhaill d'Údaráis Áitiúla'). 'Extent of Application of Part II' is translated as 'Méid na feidhme ag Cuid II' in the Margin Title of s8 of the Patents Act, 1991. In s190(4) of the Companies Act, 1963, 'The nature and extent of the interest or right in or over any shares ... shall ... be indicated' is translated as 'Déanfar nádúr agus réim an leasa nó an chirt in, nó ar, aon scaireanna ... a chur in iúl'. In s4(3)(g) of the Law Reform Commission Act, 1975, 'indicate the desirability, priority, scope and extent of any proposals for law reform' is translated as 'inmhianaitheacht, tosaíocht, scóip agus fairsinge aon tograí le haghaidh athchóiriú an dlí a chur in iúl'. Note that 'range, extent' is given as a secondary meaning of 'réim' in Ó Dónaill, who gives 'width, extent, amplitude, spaciousness' as the principal meaning of 'fairsinge'. As we have seen above, 'raon feidhme' translates 'extent of application' in the new Article 3.

limistéar This headword is translated as (1) 'area, tract, territory' in Ó Dónaill, citing 'limistéar tíre, tract of country', and (2) 'sphere of action, district', citing 'limistéar údaráis, sphere of authority'. Dinneen translates 'limistéar' as 'space, room; district, area, franchise'. It does not appear to be given in DIL.

'Limistéar' translates 'area' in the modern Acts. In s6(3) of the Road Transport Act, 1978, for example, 'Gairfear limistéar nua de gach limistéar díobh seo a leanas – an limistéar laistigh de chiorcal dar ga fiche míle agus dar lárphointe an phríomh-phostóifig i gcathair Bhaile Átha Cliath' translates 'Each of the following areas shall be known as a new area – the area included within a circle having a radius of twenty miles and its centre at the principal post office in the city of Dublin'. In Article 3 of the 1922 Constitution 'liomataíste' translates 'area', as it did in general in the earlier Acts – in s24 of the 'Offaly County Scheme' in the First Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, for example, 'it is intended to pay on the area population basis our part of such salaries' is translated as 'isé rud atá beartuithe ná ár gcuid-ne de sna tuarastail sin d'íoc do réir méid na liomataístí agus do réir líon na ndaoine ionta' while, in s86 of the 'Tirconnail County Scheme', 'the proportion payable by the authority ... is to be calculated on an "area and population" basis' is translated as 'is do réir "liomataíste agus daoiniúlacht" a áireófar an cion a bheidh len' íoc ag an údarás'. 'Limistéar' translates 'region' in s1 of the Place-Names (Irish Forms) Act, 1973, where we find the following Interpretation: of any territorial feature (whether natural or artificial), district, region or place .... Folaíonn "logainm" ainm aon chúige, contae, cathrach, mórbhaile, sráidbhaile, barúntachta, paróiste nó baile fearainn, nó ainm aon ghné tíre (nádúrtha nó saorga), aon dúiche, limistéir nó áite ....

Regarding 'extra-territorial', see the commentary on Article 2 (where '[the] territorial seas' is expressed as '[a] fharragí teorann'). In s35(1) of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925, 'san áit sin de ghrinneall agus de chladach Chuan Dhún Dealgan atá lasmuich den pharóiste' translates 'in that extra-parochial place of the bed and foreshore of Dundalk Harbour'. Note, however, that in s4 of the Pier and Harbour Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 2) Act, 1940, 'in the harbour and tidal waters of Fenit and in the extra parochial places thereof' is translated as 'i gcuan agus in uiscí taoide na Fiannaite agus sna háiteanna eachtar-pharóisteacha bhaineann leis an gcéanna'.

Turning to more modern legislation, in Article 8 of the 1985 Anglo-Irish Agreement, 'extra-territorial jurisdiction' is translated as 'dlinse sheach-chríochach', most likely modelled on 'seachbhreithiúnach' ('extra-judicial') – see, for example, Article 5(j) of the Second Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, where 'transmitting judicial and extra-judicial documents' is translated as 'tarchur doiciméad breithiúnach agus doiciméad seachbhreithiúnach'. Note finally that 'extraterritorial' is cited in Rannóg an Aistriúcháin as being translated as 'allchríche', followed by the reference 'Rep. Sec. Legn. Economic & Mon. Union, 28 June 1978, par 27(6)'.

athchomhlánú The verbal noun of 'athchomhlánaigh', which verb is not found as a headword either in Ó Dónaill or in Dinneen. According to the official standard, one would have a hyphen between 'ath' and 'comhlánaigh' (as one finds in the enrolled text), 'athchomhlánaigh' being composed of two prefixes combined with a verbal form based on 'lán' – see An Caighdeán Oifigiúil, p. 125, s.24(iii), regarding the use of a hyphen between two prefixes and note 'ath-chomhcheangal' in Ó Dónaill.

The verb 'comhlánaigh' is translated as 'complete, complement' in Ó Dónaill and the adjective 'comhlán' is translated as 'full up; complete, perfect' and 'gross' (as in 'brabús comhlán, gross gain', which is also cited in Téarmaí Dlí). 'Cómhlánaighim' is translated as 'I complete, fulfil, perfect' in Dinneen, who cites 'cómhlánaighthead cumhachta na hEaglaise, the Church's powers were completed'. 'Comhlán' is therein translated as 'full, very full; perfect; equally numerous'. The prefix 'aith-, ath-', with verbs and verbal nouns, corresponds in sense to Latin re-, according to DIL, 'comlán(aig)id' being translated as 'fulfils, completes'. The adjective 'comlán', based on 'lán', is translated in DIL as 'complete, perfect'.

'Comhlánaigh' translates 'complement', 'add to' and 'complete' in modern legislation. In the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 197), for example, 'tacóidh an Comhphobal le gníomhaíochtaí na mBallstát agus comhlánóidh sé iad' translates 'the Community shall support and complement the activities of the Member States'; 'forálacha ... chun na cearta dá bhforáiltear sa Chuid seo a chomhlánú' translates 'provisions to strengthen or add to the rights laid down in this Part' (p. 16), while 'faoi chuimsiú chomhlánú an mhargaidh inmheánaigh' translates 'in the context of the completion of the internal market' (p. 50). 'Agus ullmhóimid clár nua mar chomhlánú ar an gceann láithreach' translates 'and prepare a new programme to complement the existing one' in the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-'97 (p. 32). In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 68), 'i ndiaidh comhlánú na hoibríochta' translates 'following completion of the transaction' while 'comhlánófar an Coiste Eacnamaíoch agus Sóisialach trí daichead is dhá chomhalta a cheapadh' translates 'the Economic and Social Committee shall be enlarged by the appointment of forty-two members' (p. 1002).

Turning specifically to 're-integration', we find the wording of Article 3 of the Constitution followed directly in the opening of s7(1) of the Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act, 1957, where 'Pending the re-integration of the national territory' is translated as 'Go dtí go ndéantar athchomhlánú ar na críocha náisiúnta'. In Article 4 of the Schedule to the International Common Fund for Commodities Act, 1982, however, 'Any intergovernmental organization of regional economic integration' is translated as 'Aon eagraíocht idir-rialtasach um chomhtháthú eacnamaíoch réigiúnach', while in the Long Title of the Youth Employment Agency Act, 1981, 'the establishment, development ... co-ordination and integration ... of schemes' is translated as 'scéimeanna a bhunú, a fhorbairt ... a chomhordú agus a chomhaonadh', with 'for the co-ordination of the plans and activities ... and for their integration with national and social plans' being translated as 'chun na pleananna agus na gníomhaíochtaí ... a chomhoirdniú agus iad a chuimsiú sna pleananna náisiúnta eacnamaíochta agus sóisialacha' in s2(2)(d) of the Ministers and Secretaries (Amendment) Act, 1977.

In the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-'97 (p. 11), 'the aim of this Scheme will be permanent re-integration of long-term unemployed people back into the workplace' is translated as 'is é aidhm na scéime seo go bhfaighidh daoine atá difhostaithe le fada lánpháirtíocht bhuan ar ais sa bhfórsa saothair', while 'integration of the shipping, fishing, aquaculture and marine leisure strategies with industrial development strategy in ancillary industry' is translated as 'straitéis loingis, iascaireachta, dobharchultúir agus siamsaíocht mhara a lánpháirtíú le straitéis forbartha tionsclaíoch i dtionscail choimhdeacha' (p. 51). 'To study ... the integration of the tax and social welfare codes' is translated as 'staidéar a dhéanamh ar chomhtháthú na gcód cánach agus leasa shóisialaigh' (p. 4), while 'following integration of the tax and social welfare systems' is translated as 'tar éis chomhiomlánú na gcóras cánach agus leasa shóisialaigh' (p. 27). 'Integrated economic development' is translated as 'forbairt eacnamaíoch chomhtháite' in the New Ireland Forum Report (1984, 5.2(8)) while 'integrated pollution control licence' is cited in Rannóg an Aistriúcháin as being translated as 'ceadúnas um rialú comhtháite ar thruailliú'. 'All Ireland economic integration' is translated as 'nascadh ar eacnamaíocht na hÉireann uile' in the New Ireland Forum Report.

In the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 48), 'in order to facilitate vocational integration, and re-integration into the labour market' is translated as 'chun an t-imeascadh agus an t-athimeascadh gairmiúil ar mhargadh an tsaothair a éascú', while 'in the process of European integration undertaken with the establishment of the European Communities' is translated as 'i bpróiseas na lánpháirtíochta

Eorpaí a gabhadh ar láimh le bunú na gComhphobal Eorpach' (p. 3), with 'as a factor for integration within the Union' translated as 'mar thoisic ar mhaithe le lánpháirtíú laistigh den Aontas' (p. 62), and 'the smooth and gradual integration of the developing countries' translated as 'na tíortha i mbéal forbartha a lánpháirtíú go comhchuí comhleanúnach' (p. 60). In Treaties establishing the European Communities (p. 936), 'In the interest of the smooth functioning of the process of integration' is translated as 'Ar mhaithe leis an lánpháirtíú a dhéanamh chomh rianúil agus is féidir'. On the Dáil Order Paper of 26/2/75, '(objective of) European integration in economic ... spheres' is translated as '(go dtacaíonn sé le) lánpháirtíú na hEorpa sa réim eacnamaíoch ...'.

Based on the above, it is no wonder that 'integration' finds itself in the select list of terms and phrases 'which are not settled or which translators should be very careful in their use' appended to Maolmhaadhóg Ó Ruairc's guide-book for translators, Aistrigh go Gaeilge (1997). The author cites 'integration of races, comhréimniú ciníoch', 'integration of drainage, iomlánú draenála', 'political integration, lánpháirtíú polaitiúil' and 'integration (of schools, factories, etc), lánaontú' from the Department of Education's Dictionary of Geography and Planning (1981 [1972]), and 'economic integration, lánpháirtíocht gheilleagrach', 'forward integration, réamh-lánpháirtíú', 'backward integration, cúlchumasc' and 'monetary integration, imeascadh airgeadaíochta' from the same Department's Dictionary of Business Studies (1989). De Bhaldraithe translates 'I integrate' as 'slánaím, iomlánaím, déanaím iomlán' and 'integration' as 'slánú'.

Looking at some of the above terms translating 'integration', which is defined in the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary as 'the making up of a whole by adding together or combining the separate parts or elements; a making whole or entire', 'comhpháirtíocht' is translated as 'partnership' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'conraitheoir compháirteach' and 'deonú comhpháirteach' translated respectively as 'joint contractor' and 'joint grant'. Ó Dónaill translates 'comhpháirtíocht' as 'copartnership' translating 'comhiomlán' as 'aggregate'. 'Comhtháthaigh' is therein translated as 'join together, fuse; coalesce, cohere; integrate', with 'comhtháthú' being translated as 'fusion, cohesion, coalescence; integration'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú emphasises the importance of the development of the sense of 'integrate' in English since 1937 and the importance in particular of the Mathematical sense (<integer) in relation to De Valera's and the drafters' interpretation in 1937. While 'lánpháirtíú' attempts to express the contemporary sense of 'integrate' (as in 'the immigrants are integrated into the country', for example), 'ath-chomhlánú' perhaps better expresses the sense of all the parts being together again – in this context Professor Ó Murchú also refers to the term 'slánú' – which appears to be the sense of 're-integrate' in the present Article.

a oibriú 'Oibriú' is the verbal noun of the verb 'oibrigh', this verb generally expressing 'exercise' in the Constitution: in Article 40.6.1°, 'for the exercise of the following rights' is expressed in the Irish text as 'chun na cearta seo a lenas a oibriú'; in Article 6.2, 'These powers of government are exercisable only by ...' is expressed as 'is féidir na cumhachtaí riala sin a oibriú'; 'For the purpose of the exercise of any executive function of the State' is expressed as 'Ionas go bhféadfar aon fheidhm chomhallach leis an Stát a oibriú' in Article 29.4.2° and in Article 35.2 'in the exercise of their judicial functions' is expressed as 'maidir lena fheidhmeanna breithimh a oibriú'. 'Exercise' is found in association with 'powers' and 'functions' in many Articles: 'feidhmeanna agus cumhachtaí ... a oibriú' expresses 'the exercise of ... functions and powers' in Article 37.1, 'na feidhmeanna agus na cumhachtaí sin a oibriú' expressing 'to exercise such powers and functions' in s2 of Article 37 and 'na cumhachtaí, na feidhmeanna ... a oibriú' expressing 'the ... powers, functions ... shall ... be exercised' in Article 49.2. 'Na cumhachtaí agus na feidhmeanna a oibriú agus a chomhlíonadh' expresses 'exercise and perform the powers and the functions' in Articles 12.1 and 14.4, with 'is cead don Uachtarán na cumhachtaí agus na feidhmeanna ... a oibriú is a chomhlíonadh' expressing 'The powers and functions ... shall be exercisable and performable by him' in Article 13.9 and 'Ní cead don Uachtarán aon chumhacht ná feidhm ... a oibriú ná a chomhlíonadh' expressing 'No power or function ... shall be exercisable or performable by him' in Article 13.11, 'cumhachtaí is feidhmeanna ... a oibriú is a chomhlíonadh' expressing 'exercise and perform the powers and the functions' in Article 14.1 and 'aon chumhacht nó feidhm a oibriú nó a chomhlíonadh' expressing 'to exercise or perform any power or function' in Article 14.5.2°. Finally, 'gach cumhacht, gach feidhm ... a oibriú agus a chomhlíonadh' expresses 'exercise and perform all ... powers, functions' in Article 30.1 and 'cumhachtaí nó feidhmeanna ... a oibriú nó a chomhlíonadh' expresses 'exercise or perform ... the powers or functions' in Article 32. Nevertheless, in the Amendment to the Constitution contained in Article 29.7.2°, following the Belfast Good Friday Agreement, we find the following:

Any institution established by or under the Agreement may exercise the powers and functions thereby conferred on it .... Tig le haon institiúid a bhunófar leis an gComhaontú nó faoin gComhaontú na cumhachtaí agus na feidhmeanna a fheidhmiú a thugtar di dá chionn sin ...

This is in line with the modern translation of 'exercise' in the Acts, and illustrates the potential danger of inconsistencies in the text with each Amendment of the Constitution.

'Oibrím' is translated as 'I operate' in Téarmaí Dlí, based on the first Irish Legal Terms Order (Statutory Rules and Orders No. 249 of 1947). 'Oibrigh' is translated as 'work' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'cumhacht a oibriú' as 'to wield power'. 'Oibrigid', translated as 'works, acts' and 'effecting, causing' in DIL, is based on 'opair', which comes from Latin 'opus'/opera', and is translated as 'work, activity, employment, occupation' in DIL, the dative plural of which, 'oiprib', is cited from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, 'arna epiltis oc opair semper' ('that they might not die by being at work always') being cited from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms. Dinneen translates 'oibrighim' as 'I work, work upon, operate, act (as a chemical, medicine, etc.), seethe, take effect on (ar), influence, seek to influence ...' and cites the following example and comment:

ar ólais? d'ólas; ar oibrigh? d'oibrigh, did you drink (the sea-water as physic)? I did; was it effective? yes;

cf. “gaybrick” and “olisher”, names for seaside visitors in Anglo-Irish at Youghal and Dungarvan.

Turning to ‘oibrigh’ in the Acts, ‘Cistí eischósta a oibríonn comhshocraíochtaí comhionannaithe’ translates ‘Off-shore funds operating equalisation arrangements’ in s64 of the Finance Act, 1990; ‘cé acu a d’oibreodh nó nach n-oibreodh an cumasc nó an tátcheangal áirithe atá beartaithe i gcoinne leas an phobail’ translates ‘whether or not the proposed merger or take-over concerned would operate against the common good’ in s8(2) of the Mergers, Take-overs and Monopolies (Control) Act, 1978, and ‘Oibreoidh ceadúnas ócáideach chun an té dá ndeonfar é do shaora ... ó sna forálacha den Acht so’ translates ‘An occasional licence shall operate to exempt the person to whom the licence is granted ... from the provisions of this Act’ in s6(4) of the Intoxicating Liquor Act, 1927. As regards ‘operate’ in the Constitution, in Article 12.10.7° ‘such resolution shall operate to remove the President from his office’ is expressed as ‘is é is feidhm don rún sin an tUachtarán a chur as oifig’ while ‘Nothing in this Constitution shall operate to invalidate the exercise of ...’ is expressed as ‘ní bheidh an t-oibriú sin gan bhail dlí de bhíthin aon ní sa Bhunreacht seo’ in Article 37.1, ‘oibriú’ here expressing ‘exercise’.

Turning to ‘exercise’ in the Acts, in the ‘Definitions’ in s1 of An Blascaod Mór National Historic Park Act, 1989, for example, ‘the reference to the performance of functions includes ... a reference to the exercise of powers and the carrying out of duties’ is translated as ‘folaíonn an tagairt do chomhlíonadh feidhmeanna ... tagairt d’fheidhmiú cumhachtaí agus do chomhall dualgas’ and in s8(3) of the Shipping Investment Grants Act, 1969, ‘any person who wilfully obstructs a person in the exercise of a right of entry and inspection’ is translated as ‘aon duine a choisfidh go toiliúil aon duine a bheidh ag feidhmiú cirt dul isteach agus iniúchta’. In Article 22 of the 1922 Constitution ‘for the exercise of its powers’ is translated as ‘chun a chomachta do chur i bhfeidhm’ and in Article 14, ‘(the) place of exercising this right’ is translated as ‘an áit na mbainfeadh feidhm as an gceart so’. In the Long Title of the Currency Act, 1927, ‘to exercise certain other functions in relation to the currency’ is translated as ‘chun feidhmeanna áirithe eile d’fheidhmiú maidir leis an airgead reatha’ and in s130(1) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, ‘make, use, and exercise the invention’ is translated as ‘an chumadóireacht ... do dhéanamh, d’úsáid, agus d’fheidhmiú’. Finally, note that ‘The European Parliament shall exercise the powers conferred upon it by this Treaty’ and ‘the rights ... may not be exercised’ are translated respectively as ‘Déanfaidh Parlaimint na hEorpa ... na cumhachtaí a thugtar di sa Chonradh seo a fheidhmiú’ and ‘ní fhéadfar na cearta ... a fheidhmiú’ in the Treaty on European Union (1992, pp. 62 and 28). See further the commentary on Article 13.5.1°.

éifeacht ... acu In Article 37.2, following the Sixth Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1979, ‘(No) adoption of a person taking effect or expressed to take effect at any time ...’ is rendered as ‘aon uchtáil ar dhuine a ghlac éifeacht nó a bhfuil sé sainráite gur ghlac sí éifeacht aon tráth ...’ and in Article 40.4.5°, following the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941, ‘that sentence shall have effect’ is rendered as ‘beidh éifeacht ag an mbreith bháis sin’. Similarly in the Amendment contained in Article 29.7.3°, ‘obliged ... to give effect to the amendment of this Constitution’ is rendered as ‘faoi oibleagáid ... éifeacht a thabhairt don leasú ar an mBunreacht seo’ and in subsection 5, ‘this section shall cease to have effect’ is rendered as ‘scoirfidh an t-alt seo d’éifeacht a bheith leis’. In Article 50.1 ‘shall continue to be of full force and effect’ is expressed as ‘leanfaid de bheith i lánfheidhm agus i lánéifeacht’ and ‘to secure the effective administration of justice’ is expressed as ‘chun riaradh cirt a chur i bhfeidhm le héifeacht’ in Article 38.3.1°. In Article 16.2.4°, however, ‘shall not take effect’ is expressed as ‘ní thiochfaid i bhfeidhm’ and ‘the legislation required to give effect to the Financial Resolutions’ is expressed as ‘an reachtaíocht a bheas riachtanach chun feidhm dlí a thabhairt do Rúin Airgeadais’ in Article 17.1.2°. In Article 27.4.2°, ‘until the Supreme Court has pronounced a decision ... to the effect that the said Bill ... is not repugnant to this Constitution’ is expressed as ‘go dtí go ndéanfaidh an Chúirt Uachtarach ... breith a chraoladh á dhearbhu gan an Bille sin ... a bheith in aghaidh an Bhunreacht seo’, followed by ‘if a decision to that effect is pronounced’, expressed as ‘i gcás an Chúirt Uachtarach do chraoladh breithe á dhearbhu sin’, with ‘to the effect aforesaid’ expressed as ‘ag dearbhú mar a dúradh’. ‘As effectively as it may’ is expressed as ‘chomh fada lena chumas’ in Article 45.1. Finally, in Article 29.7.4° (following the 1998 Amendment of the Constitution), ‘other than the amendment of this Constitution effected thereby’ is rendered as ‘seachas an leasú ar an mBunreacht seo a dhéantar leis an bhfo-alt sin 3°’.

Turning to the Acts, in s13(4)(b) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1967, ‘the court shall enter a plea of not guilty, which shall have the same operation and effect in all respects as an order of a justice of the District Court’ is translated as ‘taifeadfaidh an chúirt pléadail neamhchiontach, arb ionann oibriú agus éifeacht di, go huile agus go hiomlán, agus d’ordú ó bhreitheamh den Chúirt Dúiche’. In s3(2)(b) of the Place-Names (Irish Forms) Act, 1973, ‘any instrument having or intended to have legal effect or consequences’ is translated as ‘aon ionstraim a mbeidh éifeacht dhlíthiúil nó iarmhairtí dlíthiúla aici nó beartaithe a bheith aici’. We find ‘éifeacht ag’ in the s93 of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925, for example, where ‘The following provisions ... shall apply and have effect’ is translated as ‘Beidh feidhm agus éifeacht ag na forálacha so a leanas’.

Usually in the Acts today we find ‘éifeacht le’ rather than ‘éifeacht ag’ – see s4 of the Finance Act, 1976, for example, where ‘subsection (1) shall not have effect for the year of assessment’ is translated as ‘ní bheidh éifeacht le fo-alt (1) maidir leis an mbliain mheasúnachta’. In s21 of the Finance Act, 1990, ‘Subsection (3) shall not have effect in relation to a person where he so elects’ is translated as ‘Ní bheidh éifeacht le fo-alt (3) i ndáil le duine i gcás ina roghnóidh sé amhlaidh’. See further the commentary on Article 40.4.5°.

dlínse This headword is translated as 'jurisdiction' in Téarmaí Dlí and in Ó Dónaill, the latter citing 'Cén dlínse atá agat orm? What jurisdiction have you over me?' The earlier form, 'dlighinse', is translated as 'authority' in Dinneen ('dligheadh' therein corresponding to standard Modern Irish 'dlí'), citing 'tá dlighinse agam ar, I have jurisdiction over' – Dinneen also cites the standard Irish form 'dlínse' from Dr Michael Sheehan's Sean-chaint na nDéise (1906).

Turning to modern legislation, in Article 4 of the Fourth Schedule to the Radiological Protection Act, 1991, 'the territorial sovereignty and jurisdiction of a State' is translated as '(do) cheannasacht agus dlínse Stáit ar a chríocha' and in Article 8(1) of the same Schedule 'to establish its jurisdiction over the offences' is translated as 'chun a dhlínse a bhunú ar na cionta'. In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 307), 'the courts of the country concerned shall have jurisdiction over complaints that ...' is translated as 'beidh dlínse ag cúirteanna na tíre lena mbaineann ar ghearáin go ...'.

'Údarás' translates 'jurisdiction' in the early Acts – in Article 3 of the 1922 Constitution, for example, 'in the area of the jurisdiction of the Irish Free State' and 'within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Irish Free State' are translated respectively as 'i líomataíste údaráis Shaorstáit Éireann' and 'laistigh de theoranta údaráis Shaorstáit Éireann'. When 'jurisdiction' was found in association with 'authority' ('údarás) in the Long Title of the Deputy Registrar in Bankruptcy (Cork) Act, 1926, 'breath-údarás' was called on to translate 'jurisdiction', 'those powers, authorities, and jurisdictions' being translated as 'na comhachta, na húdaráis agus na breath-údaráis sin'. We find 'dlínse' in s37(2)(ii) of the Dublin Port and Docks (Bridges) Act, 1929, where 'before a Court of summary jurisdiction' is translated as 'i láthair Cúirte dlighinse achmair', 'in aon chúirt údaráis inniúla' having translated 'in any Court of competent jurisdiction' in s66(4) of the Currency Act, 1927. See further the commentary on Article 34.3.2°.

gan dochar This phrase is translated as 'without prejudice' in Téarmaí Dlí and in the Acts in general, the common phrase therein, 'but without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done thereunder' being translated as 'ach sin gan dochar do bhailíocht aon ní a rinneadh roimhe sin faoin ordú' in s11 of the Regulation of Banks (Remuneration and Conditions of Employment) (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1973, for example.

Looking at earlier Acts, in Article 8 of the 1922 Constitution, 'or affect prejudicially the right of any child' is translated as 'ná baint go díobhálach ó cheart aon leinbh'. In s24 of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925, however, 'No action ... shall abate or be discontinued, annulled or prejudicially affected by the repeal of the Act of 1855' is translated as 'Ní dhéanfaidh athghairm Acht 1855 maolú, scur, nea-mbríochaint, ná oibriú docharach ar aon aicsean', with 'was contrary to or in conflict with or prejudicial to the enforcement of a decree of a Dáil Court' being translated as 'do bheith contrárdha no coinbhliochtach no docharach d'aithne Dháil-Chúirte d'fheidhmiú' in s27(1)(c) of the Dáil Éireann Courts (Winding-Up) Act, 1923. Finally, in s2(2) of the Deputy Registrar in Bankruptcy (Cork) Act, 1926, 'This section shall not prejudice or affect the operation of any order heretofore made ... by the Judge' is translated as 'Ní dhéanfaidh an t-alt so dochar ná difir d'oibriú aon ordú a dhin an Breitheamh roimhe seo'.

'Dochar' is translated as 'harm; hurt, injury; loss, distress' in Ó Dónaill, where 'gan dochar duit' is translated as 'without wishing you any harm', Ó Dónaill also citing 'cás a dhíbhe gan dochar, to dismiss a case without prejudice'. Dinneen translates 'dochar' as 'misfortune, hardship, damage, harm, hurt, loss, mischief; debit', citing 'gan díth gan dochar, gan díoghbháil, without loss, harm or damage'. Earlier 'dochor', formed from 'do' + 'cor' (v. 'sochar' = 'so' + 'cor'), also had the sense of 'unfair or disadvantageous contract' in the early Irish laws. Rudolf Thurneysen comments as follows (in an article on 'sochor' in Féil-sgríbhinn Eóin Mhic Néill, 1940, p. 158):

The 'Brehon Laws' distinguish two kinds of contract, so-chor 'good contract' and do-chor 'bad contract'. The meaning of dochor leaves no room for doubt: it is a contract (sale, barter, etc.) in which the purchase-price, being either too high or too low, does not represent the value of the purchase so that one of the parties suffers a loss.

a bhunaítear See the commentary on Article 40.6.1°iii where this verb expresses 'form'.

THE STATE AN STÁT

ARTICLE 4 AIRTEAGAL 4

TÉACS GAELIGE

Éire is ainm don Stát nó, sa Sacs-Bhéarla, Ireland.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Éire is the name of the State or, in the English tongue, Ireland.

ENGLISH TEXT

The name of the State is Éire, or in the English language, Ireland.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Sacs-Bhéarla' differs in resonance from the direct translation of 'English', i.e. 'Béarla', which is found in the 1922 Constitution, for example.
- 2 One might perhaps expect different words to be italicized in the different texts – 'Éire' in one text and 'Ireland' in the other, or perhaps 'Ireland' in italics in the Irish text alone (as is the practice in the Acts in such cases, as we see in the commentary); both 'Éire' and 'Ireland' are in italics in the enrolled English text.
- 3 A comma comes before 'or' in the English text, a comma coming after the corresponding 'nó' in the Irish text; note that a comma is found both before and after 'or' in the enrolled English text.

Commentary

Sacs-Bhéarla 'Saics-Bhéarla' is translated as 'the English language' in Dinneen, who cites 'Saics-Bhéarlamhail, relating to English, "Englishry"', along with 'Saics-fhear, an English-man' and 'Sacs-Ghail, the English'. The prefix 'Sacs-' is translated as 'Saxon, English' in Ó Dónaill, who does not give 'Sacs-Bhéarla' as a headword.

Cathal Brugha, Ceann Comhairle of the Opening Session of the First Dáil, on 21 January 1919, used the term 'Saxbhéarla' on two occasions. After informing the audience not to shout ('gan éin liúirigh do dhéanamh'), no matter what was said in the Dáil, he said that because of the kind of education available in Ireland over a long period a lot of Irish people did not understand Irish and he would therefore ask them in 'Saxbhéarla gioblach' (i.e. 'tattered') not to cheer:

B'éidir go bhfuil roinnt daoine i láthair ná tuigeanann an Ghaedhilg: de dheascaibh an tsóirt sin oideachais atá in Éirinn le fada, tá, forior, a lán Éireannach ann ná tuigeanann teanga a dtíre féin, agus dá bhrígh sin tá orm cúpla focal do rádh insa Saxbhéarla gioblach: We desire that there shall be no cheering whatever.

Later on in the proceedings the Ceann Comhairle asked

Deputy Eumonn Ó Dubhgáin, from South Meath, as follows, to read the Declaration of Independence in English: 'Iarraidm ar an dTeachta ó Dheisceart na Midhe an Fhaisnéis do léigheadh dúinn insa Sacsbheurla' – the Declaration having previously been read out in Irish and French.

L. Mc Cionnaith (1935) does not include 'Sacs-Bhéarla' s.v. 'English' (language), citing 'labhram, bhí sé ag labhairt, Béarla; é do rádh i mBéarla [Connacht, Ulster, Munster], as Béarla [in Munster]; bíonn sé ag Béarlóireacht [in Connacht, Munster]' and in his series, Cainnt na nDaoine (1920, p. 217), an Canónach Pádraig Ó Laoghaire refers to English simply as 'Béarla'. As stated above, 'Sacs-Bhéarla' is not given as a separate headword in Ó Dónaill, who gives 'English language' as the current sense of 'Béarla', citing 'cainteoir Béarla, English speaker', 'Béarla briste, broken English' and 'lucht an Bhéarla, (i) History/historical: the Englishry, (ii) English speakers, promoters of English'.

In Article 4 of the 1922 Constitution, 'The National language of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) is the Irish language, but the English language shall be equally recognised as an official language' is translated as 'Sí an Ghaedhilg teanga Náisiúnta Shaorstáit Éireann, ach có-aithneofar an Béarla mar theanga oifigiúil'. Similarly, in s16 of the Defence Act, 1954, 'It shall be lawful for the Government to raise ... defence forces to be called and known as Óglaigh na hÉireann or (in English) the Defence Forces' is translated as 'Is dleathach don Rialtas fórsaí cosanta dá ngairmfear agus ar a dtabharfar Óglaigh na hÉireann nó (i mBéarla) the Defence Forces a bhunú' – note the italicisation here, as in s10(1) of the Postal and Telecommunications Services Act, 1983, where 'The names of the companies shall be ... An Post or, in the English language, The Post Office' is translated as 'Is iad ainmneacha na gcuideachtaí ... An Post nó, sa Bhéarla, The Post Office'.

The earlier form of 'Béarla', 'bérlae', had the principal sense of 'speech, language' and was in use as such long before the English language itself came to be spoken – 'ataat ilchenéle bérlí isin biuthso' ('there are in this world many kinds of language') is cited in DIL from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, this Irish phrase glossing Latin 'multa ... genera linguarum'. We find reference in an early Irish law-tract to 'an berla nEgebtacca' (the Egyptian language) and in other early texts we find 'isin berla Greddaí' (Greek) and 'o'n berla Ebraide' (Hebrew). 'Bérlae' also had the sense of 'technical language', with 'legal language' being referred to as 'bérlae Féine' ('the language of the Féini'). The highest grade of judge in early Irish law is referred to as 'brithem trí mbérla' ('judge of three languages' / three styles of language) in one early Irish law-tract, being competent in traditional law, poetry and canon law – see Fergus Kelly, A Guide to Early Irish Law (1988, p. 52). Cork is referred to as the main centre of legal language ('Bérlae Féne Érenn: Corcach', cited ibid., p. 242, n.2) in the ninth-century Triads of Ireland. Only in the modern period did 'bérla' have the specific sense of '(the) English (language)' – DIL cites 'a hucht a bérla, relying on ... her knowledge of the English language' from the Annals of the Four Masters, s.a. 1530. 'Lucht Bearla' in vol. ii of Irish Minstrelsy (1831) is translated by James Hardiman as 'the English race', for example, 'An aicme-so an Bheurla' being translated as '(No) Sassanach band' (p. 83).

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that 'béarla' (-belre) meant 'language, speech' and, before the Norman period, was the word used, with an adjective (examples of which we see above) or a prefix, to name languages. Examples of a prefix other than 'Sacs-' include 'Frainc-', i.e. 'Frainc-Bhéarla', 'French', and you even had 'Scoit-Bhéarla', perhaps as a pseudo-learned term, for 'Irish'. When the suffix '-is', in naming languages (Modern Irish 'Fraincis', 'French', for example), was taken from Anglo-Norman, the old forms gradually died out, all except 'Sacs-Bhéarla' – it has even been suggested that 'English' may have been the original sense of 'Anglais', which is translated as 'milk and water; any diluted or inferior liquor' in Dinneen. With the passage of time, it was understood that 'Sacs-Bhéarla' and 'Béarla' were the same, or were stylistic alternatives, and the form 'Béarla' alone is in general usage throughout Ireland and Scotland; Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that 'Béarla' as a term for the English language specifically is established in all varieties of Irish and Scots-Gaelic. Traces still remain of the original sense of the word 'béarla', however. Professor Ó Murchú quotes 'is ansin a bhí an béarla acu' (i.e. the argument/discussion), Ó Dónaill citing 'sin é an uair a bhí an béarla acu le chéile, it was then that they started to talk excitedly to one another'.

Finally, we may note that the earlier form of 'Sacs', 'Saxa', comes from Latin 'Saxo', which is translated as (a) 'a Saxon' and (b) 'England' in DIL; Modern Irish 'Sasanach' comes from 'Saxanach', which is based both on 'Saxa' and on 'Saxain' (from Latin Saxones), 'the Saxons, Saxonland, England', according to DIL.

is ainm don Stát The phrase 'is ainm do' usually refers to personal names, Ó Dónaill citing 'Brian is ainm dó, his name is Brian'. 'And declares his name and address' is translated as 'agus a dhearbhóidh cad is ainm agus seoladh dó' in s37(1) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, for example. Examples of 'ainm' ('name') are given in DIL from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles onwards, the earlier Ogam form, 'ANM', being therein interpreted as perhaps expressing either 'inscription' or 'mortal remains'. The earliest example of 'is ainm do' cited by DIL appears to be the following from Keating's seventeenth-century History of Ireland: 'an Colum Cille ... is é fá hainm baiste dhó Criomhthann' (i.e. Criomhthann was Colm Cille's christian name). In s10(1) of the Forestry Act, 1988, 'The name of the company shall be Coillte Teoranta or, in the English language, The Irish Forestry Board Limited' is translated as 'Coillte Teoranta nó, sa Bhéarla, The Irish Forestry Board Limited, is ainm don chuideachta'. Note 'Is iad ainmneacha na guideachtaí ...' translates 'The names of the companies shall be ...' in s10(1) of the Postal and Telecommunications Services Act, 1983, cited above.

TÉACS GAEILGE

Is Stát ceannasach, neamhspleách, daonlathach Éire.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Ireland is a sovereign/commanding, independent, democratic State.

ENGLISH TEXT

Ireland is a sovereign, independent, democratic state.

Divergences between the official texts

- As noted in the commentary on Article 1, where 'ceannasach' expresses 'sovereign' also, 'sovereign' is translated as 'flaitheasach' in the 1985 Anglo-Irish Agreement and in the 1993 Joint Declaration; 'ceannasach' can also be interpreted as 'commanding' or 'ruling', for example.
- 'Stát' has a capital 'S' in the Irish text as against the lower-case 's' in 'state', this also being the case in the enrolled texts.

Commentary

daonlathach This headword is translated as 'democratic' in Ó Dónaill, who cites the variant form 'daonfhathach', that being the earlier form of this adjective. 'Daonlathach' is a compound of 'daon-' (translated as 'human', in compounds, in Dinneen) and an adjectival form based on 'flaith' ('lordship, sovereignty' and 'ruler, prince, lord, chief' according to Ó Dónaill). 'Democracy' derives through French from the Greek 'démocratiā' (a compound of 'demos' ['people'] and 'kratein' ['rule'] – see Jim O'Donnell and Seán de Fréine, Ciste Cúrsaí Reatha, p. 79, for example), of which the Irish is a calque or loan translation.

Dinneen does not appear to give 'daonlathach' as a headword, reflecting the recent origin of this compound. The abstract term 'daonfhathas' ('democracy') is, however, found in Foclóir Staire is Tír-eóluíochta (1928), the first of a series of collections of terms published by the Department of Education, s.v. 'government', this Irish term not being cited therein s.v. 'democracy' (the reader being referred to 'government', however):

Democratic measures, dlichthe i bhfabhar na coitchiantachta; the advance of democracy, méadú ar chomhacht na ndaoine; democratic government, rialú mar mhaithe leis an gcoitchiantacht (le tromlucht na ndaoine, le ionndamhlacht na ndaoine).

A version of this entry is followed in Téarmaí Staire (1934) by a separate entry s.v. 'democrat(ic)', translated simply as 'daonfhilathach', with 'social democrat' translated as 'daonfhilathach comhdhaonnach'. L. Mc Cionnaith gives these collections of terms as the source of his translation of 'democracy' as 'daonfhilathas', also citing 'rights of the democracy, ceart an phobail choitianta [Munster, Connacht]' and 'laws in favour of democracy, democratic laws, &c., dligthe i bhfabhar, &c. na coitiantachta [Connacht, Munster]'.
De Bhaldraithe translates 'democracy' simply as 'daonlathas' and 'democratic' as 'daonlathach'. So it is in the Acts also – see, for example, s13 of the Broadcasting Authority (Amendment) Act, 1976, where 'uphold the democratic values enshrined in the Constitution' is translated as 'tacóidh sé leis an bhfiúchas daonlathach atá cumhdaithe sa Bhunreacht'. 'A prosperous democratic society' is translated as 'sochaí dhaonlathach rathúil' in s4.7 of the New Ireland Forum Report (1984) and 'a modern democratic and pluralist society' is translated as 'sochaí dhaonlathach iolraíoch nua-aimseartha' in the Joint Declaration of December 1993.

The term 'flaith' in the compound 'daonlathach' itself reveals the hierarchical as against the democratic nature of early Irish society. In his 'Legal Glossary' appended to the early Irish law text, Críth Gablach (1979, p. 91), D.A. Binchy writes as follows regarding 'flaith':

flaith is both absolute and concrete: 'authority, rule', and the person who exercises such authority or rule.... flaith may be used of the king, of a noble, of a 'lord' over clients, etc .... The grád flatha, the 'noble grades', are distinguished from the commoners (subsequently called the grád Fhéne), not merely by birth and property qualifications, but also by certain well-defined prerogatives, above all by the possession of clients.

Professor Binchy has described early Irish society as being 'tribal, rural, hierarchical, and familiar' (see D.A. Binchy, 'Secular Institutions' in Myles Dillon, ed., Early Irish Society, 1954, p. 54), and elaborates on the hierarchical aspect as follows (p. 56):

When I speak of a hierarchical order I mean one in which society was more or less rigidly stratified, and in which the inequality of man – based on differences in birth and calling – had been erected into a legal principle.... Most men were free but they were certainly not equal.

At the top of the pyramid in each túath stood the king.... After the king came what the jurists call 'the grades of nobility'. Whether the various subdivisions of the aristocracy enumerated in the law tracts had much significance in real life I am inclined to doubt: the real distinction was between those of gentle birth ... and the commoner or churl.

'Flaitheasach', 'sovereign', is also based on 'flaith'.

neamhspleách This headword is translated as 'independent' in Ó Dónaill, 'conraitheoir neamhspleách' being translated as 'independent contractor' in Téarmaí Dlí. Dinneen translates 'neamh-spleádhach' as 'independent', citing 'fear neamh-spleádhach, a man of independent character or means'. This adjective is composed of the prefix 'neamh-' (implying absolute negation or non-existence', according to Dinneen) and 'spleadhach', 'dependent' actually being the final sense of this headword in Dinneen, the others being 'flattering, vain-glorious, intriguing; fictitious'. DIL only gives one example of 'spleadhach': 'gairm spleadhach' ('flattering titles'), from the seventeenth-century translation of Job xxxii. 21. This adjective is based on 'spled', which comes from Anglo-Saxon 'plega' and is translated in DIL as (a) 'sport, play' and (b) 'boasting, exaggeration; flattery'. Against this etymology, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú notes firstly that the Lexique Étymologique points out that 'spleadhach' is very similar to Welsh 'ysbleddach' and that, if those are related etymologically, they could not have come from the Anglo-Saxon form. Professor Ó Murchú secondly refers to the form 'spleádhach' (translated as 'act of looking sharply at' in Dinneen) in the context of 'spleách'.

'Independent (of)' is translated as 'neamhspleádhach (do), ar neamhthuilleamaidhe (le), neamhthuilleamaidheach, ar neamhacra (do)' in Téarmaí Staire (1934). 'Independent' is translated as 'nea-spleách' in Article 69 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Independent assessor' is translated as '(ar) mheastóir nea-spleách' in s7(2) of the Public Safety (Punishment of Offences) Temporary Act, 1924. Note that 'if the parties to the transaction had been independent parties dealing at arm's length', in s376(1)(b) of the Income Tax Act, 1967, is translated as 'dá mba pháirtithe neamhspleácha ag déileáil ar neamhthuilleamaí le chéile na páirtithe san idirbheart'.

Note finally that 'independent' is expressed as 'saor neamhspleách' in Article 35.2.

Éire Sometimes a personal pronoun is found in apposition to the subject in phrases such as this, i.e. 'Is Stát ... í Éire'. This is called a 'fo-ainmní' ('secondary' or 'sub-subject') in Graiméar Gaeilge na mBráithre Críostaí (1960, s429, p. 209), where 'is áit dheas é Dún Garbhán' is cited as an example. As the same Grammar states, however, this 'fo-ainmní' is not necessary.

ceannasach See the commentary on Article 1.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Is ón bpobal, faoi Dhia, a thagas gach cumhacht riala, idir reachtaíocht is comhallacht is breithiúnas, agus is ag an bpobal atá sé de cheart rialtóirí an Stáit a cheapadh, agus is faoin bpobal faoi dheoidh atá gach ceist i dtaobh beartas an Náisiúin a shocrú de réir mar is gá chun leasa an phobail.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is from the people, under God, that every power of rule, both legislation and fulfilment and judgement, comes and it is the people who have the right to appoint the rulers of the State, and it is up to / rests with the people finally to settle every question regarding the policies of the Nation in accordance with what is necessary for the welfare of the people.

ENGLISH TEXT

All powers of government, legislative, executive and judicial, derive, under God, from the people, whose right it is to designate the rulers of the State and, in final appeal, to decide all questions of national policy, according to the requirements of the common good.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The terms corresponding to 'executive' ('comhallacht') in particular and, to a large extent, 'government' ('riala'), have been superseded, the former term, 'comhallacht', not being readily identifiable today or, as in the case of the term expressing 'government', 'riail', would not be interpreted as the corresponding terms in the English text.
- 2 'To decide all questions of national policy' follows on 'whose (i.e. the people) right it is' in the English text; this is not the case in the Irish text where 'gach ceist i dtaobh beartas an Náisiúin a shocrú' ('to settle all questions regarding the policies of the Nation') follows on 'agus is faoin bpobal faoi dheoidh atá' ('and it is (up) to / rests with the people'), a phrase found only in the Irish text. 'To decide all questions' is expressed as 'gach ceist a shocrú' ('to settle all questions') and 'national policy' is expressed as 'beartas [gen. pl.] an Náisiúin' ('the policies of the Nation') in the Irish text, 'Náisiúin' having a capital 'N' as against lower case 'n' in 'national'. A comma follows 'to decide all questions of national policy', no corresponding comma being found in the Irish text, which therefore emphasises more that it is for the people not simply to decide all questions of national policy but to decide them according to the requirements of the common good.
- 3 'Derive from' is expressed plainly as 'a thagas' ('come from') in the Irish text.
- 4 The Irish text refers to the right 'to appoint' ('a cheapadh') the rulers, whereas the English text has 'to designate' (the rulers), 'designate' having the senses of both 'nominate' and 'appoint'.
- 5 'In final appeal' is expressed as 'faoi dheoidh' ('finally') in the Irish text – though, as Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú notes, in a form redolent of high narrative style. 'In final appeal' can be either taken literally or in the sense of 'in the final analysis', this latter sense being the sense of the Irish text.

Note that Article 2 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

All powers of government and all authority, legislative, executive, and judicial, in Ireland are derived from the people of Ireland .... Tagann gach comhacht rialtais agus gach údarás reachtúcháin, feidhmiúcháin agus breithiuntais in Éirinn ó mhuintir na hÉireann ....

Commentary

a thagas The special form of the relative, present indicative, of 'tar', this would now generally be replaced by 'a thagann'. We find the old special form of the relative in '-s' in quite a number of Articles in the Constitution. While this special relative is allowed in the official standard (see An Caighdeán Oifigiúil, p. 46), it is not, however, given in the tables of the regular verbs, and is seldom written in official standard Irish except in the fixed expression 'a leanas' ('which follows').

The old special form of the relative of the verb, ending in '-(e)as' in the present tense and '-f(e)as' in the future, is well preserved in Ulster Irish – see Art Hughes, 'Gaeilge Uladh', in Kim McCone, Damian McManus, Ruairí Ó hUiginn, Cathal Ó Háinle, Nicholas Williams, Liam Breatnach, ed., Stair na Gaeilge (Maynooth 1994, p. 641), who states that the ending '-anns' is often found in the present tense, i.e. the normal present third person ending plus the relative '-s'. In Connacht, the future relative ends in 's' and we find both the old relative form in '-s' and the new form in '-nns' (as in Ulster Irish) in the present relative (see Ruairí Ó hUiginn, ibid., p. 582). In Munster Irish, however, the relative ending '-as' has almost died out and only on the Galway border is the present relative form '-ans', and the future '-as', heard (see Seán Ua Súilleabháin, ibid., pp. 516 and 523). The disregard of the relative ending was one of the features of the language which Richard Henebry (Ristead de Hinderberg) criticized in his series of articles on 'Revival Irish' in the Leader, 1908-9 (see Cathal Ó Háinle, ibid., p. 760).

Note that 'a thagas' appears as 'a thigeas' in the enrolled text, the variant form 'tig' being allowed in the Stationery Office text in the phrase 'tig le'.

'Tar ó' literally means 'come from'. 'Tig', with the preposition 'ó', is found in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 888), where 'guidelines deriving from those declarations' is translated as 'na treoirilinte a thig ó na dearbhuithe'. Turning specifically to 'derive', 'I derive title from' is translated as 'gabhaim teideal ó' in Tearmaí Dlí, where 'derivative title' is translated as 'teideal díorthaíoch'. 'Díorthaigh' is the technical term in the Acts for 'derive', though 'faigh' with the preposition 'as' or 'ó', is also found – see, for example, s17(Table) of the Finance Act, 1990, where 'in the nature of a rent derived from any lands' is translated as 'ar mhodh cíosa a fhaightear ó aon taillte'. Regarding 'díorthaigh', see, for example s28 of the Value-Added Tax (Amendment) Act, 1978, where 'products deriving essentially from his agricultural production' is translated as 'táirgí ... a dhíorthaíonn go bunúsach óna tháirgeadh talmhaíochta'. In s18(3)(b) of the Finance Act, 1966, 'a succession derived under a disposition made by the deceased' is translated as 'comharbas ... a dhíorthaigh faoi dhiúscairt a rinne an t-éagach' and in s8(2)(a) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, 'where any capital is derived from assets' is translated as 'i gcás aon tsuim chaipitiúil díorthú as sócmhainní'.

riala 'The organs of government' is expressed as 'na horgain rialtais' in Article 39, 'an Rialtas' expressing 'the Government' (i.e. with capital 'G') throughout the text.

'Riaghla', the form in the enrolled text, is given in Ó Dónaill as a variant form of the genitive singular of 'riaghail', which itself is an older spelling of 'riail'; the standard genitive singular of 'riail' is 'rialach'. 'Riail' is translated as 'rule' in Tearmaí Dlí. 'Riaghla' is cited before 'riaghlach' as the form of the genitive singular of 'riaghail' in Dinneen, who translates 'riaghail' as 'a rule, law or regulation; rule, government, direction or jurisdiction; a religious rule, discipline, a religion; a system or dispensation', citing 'fá riaghail, under the rule or government of'. Old Irish 'riagol' comes from Latin 'régula' and is translated as 'a rule whether prescription, law, tradition or custom' in DIL s.v. 'riagal', where it is stated that 'riagol' is used in a less definite and legal sense than 'dliged', and that it passed into the sense of 'rule, authority'.

Ó Dónaill s.v. 'riail', gives the following senses: (1) 'regulation, principle' and (2) 'sway, authority; order'. 'Rialú', verbal noun of 'rialaigh' (translated as (1) 'govern, control' and (3) 'regulate' in Ó Dónaill), is translated as 'rule, regulation; control, government'. 'Government' is translated as 'riaghaltas [Connacht, Munster]' in L. Mc Cionnaith, who cites 'ceann, 7 c. an riaghaltais' and translates 'representative government' as 'dáil riaghaltais, riaghaltas tré theachtaí', followed by the abbreviation for 'Terms published by Department of Education', which abbreviation also follows 'riaghaltas coisde, áiteamhail', translating 'cabinet, local, government'. 'Method, system, of government' is translated as 'is maith an riaghlaidheacht í [Munster]'. Dinneen translates 'riaghaltas' as 'sovereignty, government'.

Note above that we find 'All powers of government' translated as 'gach comhacht rialtais' in the corresponding Article 2 of the 1922 Constitution. Subsection 1 of s6 of the Offences Against the State Act, 1939, is entitled 'Usurpation of functions of government', 'Feidhmeanna riaghaltais d'fhorghabháil', and reads as follows:

Every person who usurps or unlawfully exercises any function of government, whether by setting up ... a body of persons purporting to be a government or a legislature but not authorised in that behalf by or under the Constitution .... Gach duine dhéanfaidh aon fheidhm riaghaltais d'fhorghabháil nó d'fheidhmiú go nea-dhleathach, tré chólucht daoine bhéarfáidh le tuigsint bheith ina riaghaltas no ina reachtasach ná beidh údarúithe chuige sin ag an mBunreacht ná fé do chur ar siúl.

Subsection 1 of s7, which section is entitled 'Obstruction of government', 'An riaghaltas do bhac', and is based closer still on Article 6 of the current Constitution, reads:

Every person who prevents or obstructs ... the carrying on of the governemnt of the State or any branch (whether legislative, judicial, or executive) of the government of the State .... Gach duine chuirfidh cosc no bac ... le riaghaltas an Stáit no le haon bhrainse (pe'ca brainse reachtúcháin no breithiúntais no feidhmiúcháin e) de riaghaltas an Stáit do choimeád ar siúil ....

While one might perhaps expect a verbal noun (see 'riailú' above or see s27(2)(f) of the Defence Act, 1954, where 'the management, control and good government of such institutions' is translated as 'bainistí, rialú agus dea-riaradh na bhforas sin'), remember that 'local government' is translated as 'rialtas áitiúil'.

comhallacht 'Executive power' is expressed as 'cumhacht chomhallach' in Articles 28.2, 29.4.1° and 49.1, with 'aon fheidhm chomhallach' expressing 'any executive function' in Article 29.2.2°. In Article 29.7.3°, however, following the 1998 Amendment, 'executive powers and functions' is translated as 'cumhachtaí agus feidhmeanna feidhmiúcháin', this being the current general translation of 'executive'.

'Comhallacht' does not appear as a headword in Téarmaí Dlí, Ó Dónaill nor in Dinneen. The adjective 'comhallach', however, is given as a headword in Ó Dónaill, where it is translated as 'observant (ar riail, of a rule)'. 'Comhall' is translated as 'fulfilment, performance' in Ó Dónaill, where 'comhall rialach, reachta, observance of rule, of law' is cited, this being the verbal noun of 'comhail', translated as 'fulfil, perform' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'gealltanais, dualgas, a chomhall, to carry out a promise, an obligation' and 'riail a chomhall, to observe a rule'. Dinneen translates 'cómhall' as 'act of fulfilling; covenant, performance, execution, fulfilment; act, deed' and 'cómhallaim' as 'I fulfil or accomplish, discharge an office'. The Old Irish deponent verb 'comalnaitheir' is translated as 'fulfils, discharges, performs (a duty, undertaking), carries into effect, brings to pass (a promise, prophecy); fulfils, observes (a law, command); satisfies' in DIL, the verbal noun 'comalnad' being translated as 'act of fulfilling, completing, performing, carrying into effect; fulfilment'. 'Comall' is a later verbal noun of 'comalnaitheir', which itself is based on 'comlann', i.e. 'com' + 'lán' – see Article 3, where 'athchomhlánú' is a doublet more recently formed from the same components.

Turning to 'executive' in the Acts, in s6 of the County Management (Amendment) Act, 1942, in accordance with the wording of the Constitution, 'the executive functions of such elective body' is translated as 'feidhmeanna comhallacha an chóluchta san'. In s7(1) of the Offences Against the State Act, 1939, 'the executive' is translated as '(an) chomhallacht' but 'executive (branch)' is translated as '(brainse) feidhmiúcháin':

... the carrying on of the government of the State or any branch (whether legislative, judicial, or executive) of the government of the State or the exercise or performance by any member of the legislature, the judiciary, or the executive .... le riaghaltas an Stáit no le haon bhrainse (pe'ca brainse reachtúcháin nó breithiúntais no feidhmiúcháin e) de riaghaltas an Stáit do choimeád ar siúl nó le haon bhall den reachtas, de sna breithiúin no den chomhallacht.

'The Executive Authority of the Irish Free State' is translated as 'Údarás Feidhmiúcháin Shaorstáit Éireann' in Article 51 of the 1922 Constitution; 'the Executive Council' is styled 'an Ard-Chomhairle' in that Article, 'the Executive Council of Saorstát Éireann' being accordingly styled 'Ard-Chomhairle Shaorstát Éireann' in Article 31.2.ii of the current Constitution – note that 'the National Executive' is translated as '(ag) an gCoiste Náisiúnta' in s13(1) of the Slaughtered Animals (Compensation) Act, 1928, and that 'an Coiste Feidhmiúcháin' translates 'the Executive Committee' in the 'Galway County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923.

Ó Dónaill gives the adjective 'feidhmitheach' ('executive') as a headword and De Bhaldraithe so translates that adjective. De Bhaldraithe translates the noun 'executive' as (a) 'feidhmeannach' and (b) 'coiste gnóthaí (cumainn)'. L. Mc Cionnaith translates 'executive authority' as 'údarás feidhmiúcháin', citing 'Terms from Staff of Dáil, Foclóir Oifigeamhail' as source. In the Margin Title of s17 of the County Management Act, 1940, 'Executive functions' is translated as 'Feidhmeanna feidhmiúcháin' but in s7(2) of the County Management (Amendment) Act, 1942, 'the executive functions of such elective body' is translated as 'feidhmeanna comhallacha an chóluchta thoghaidhe sin'. In s17(e) of the Dublin Cemeteries Committee Act, 1970, 'to provide such executive, professional, clerical, skilled or labouring staff as may be required by the Committee' is translated as 'cibé foireann fheidhmeannais, ghairmiúil, chléireachais, oilte nó oibreachais a fhostú a bheidh ag teastáil'. In the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, 'by reason of legislation in the country in which they have accrued or of executive action of the government of that country' is translated as 'mar gheall ar reachtaíocht sa tír inar fhaibhrigh siad nó mar gheall ar ghníomh feidhme ag rialtas na tíre sin'. In s10(3) of the Finance Act, 1953, 'by reason ... of executive action of the Government of that country' is translated as 'mar gheall ar bheart feidhmiúcháin ag Rialtas na tíre sin' and this form, the genitive of 'feidhmiúchán', generally translates 'executive' in the Acts and in current official usage. In s4 of Article IX of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, 1957, for example, 'any other form of seizure by executive or legislative action' is translated as 'aon tsórt eile urghabhála trí ghníomhú feidhmiúcháin nó gníomhú reachtach'. 'The Executive Board' is translated as 'an Bord Feidhmiúcháin' in the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 31), and on the Dáil Order Paper of 11/2/1981 the 'Civil Service Executive Union' is styled 'Aontas Feidhmiúcháin na Státseirbhíse'.

a cheapadh In Article 28.12 'the designation of members of the Government to be the Ministers in charge of the said Departments' is expressed as 'comhaltaí den Rialtas a cheapadh chun bheith ina nAíri i mbun na Ranna sin'. 'A cheapadh' expresses 'appoint' in Articles 22.2.3° and 31.3. In Article 13.8.2°, where both 'appoint' and 'designate' are found together, 'ainmnigh' expresses 'designate', with 'tribunal or body appointed or designated by either of the Houses of the Oireachtas' being expressed as 'binse nó comhlacht a cheapfar nó a ainmneofar ag ceachtar de Thithe an Oireachtais'. In Article 41.3.2°, a recent Amendment to the Constitution, 'a Court designated by law' is rendered as 'Cúirt a bheidh ainmnithe le dlí' and in Article 42.3.1° 'any particular type of school designated by the State' is expressed as 'aon chineál áirithe scoile a ainmnítear ag an Stát'. In Article 37.2, 'any person or body of persons designated by those laws' is expressed as 'aon duine nó aon dream a bheidh sonraithe leis na dlíthe sin'. Finally, in Article 15.10, 'beidh sé de chumhacht ag gach Teach acu pionós a cheapadh do lucht a sáraithe sin' expresses 'with power to attach penalties for their infringement'.

'Ceapaim' is translated as 'I appoint' in Téarmaí Dlí and 'appoint, assign' is just one of the sets of senses of this verb given in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'duine a cheapadh do rud, to appoint someone to something' and 'is é an bás a cheapadh dúinn, it is assigned to us to die'. Dinneen cites 'ceapadh 'na thaoiseach é, he was appointed leader' and 'do cheapas lá don chruinniúghadh, I fixed upon a day for the assembly'. The earlier form 'ceppaid' is translated as 'shapes, forms, fashions' and 'confines, restrict' in DIL, this verb being based on 'ceap', which comes from Latin 'cippus' – based on citations up to the beginning of the third century, 'cippus' had the senses of 'a boundary stone or pillar' and 'a tombstone', and came into Irish most likely before the second half of the fifth century (see Micheál Ó Cearúil, ed., Gníomhartha na mBráithre, p. 395). See the commentary on Articles 13.1.1°, 15.10, 34.4.5° and 40.4.3° where 'ceap' expresses respectively 'appoint', 'attach', 'direct' and 'fix'.

Turning to the Acts, in s2(vii)(a) of the Second Schedule to the Value-Added Tax Act, 1972, 'not ... otherwise designated for the use of dogs' is translated as 'nach bhfuil ceaptha ar shlí eile le haghaidh madraí'. In s2(2) of the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, 'The provisions of this Act replace the law providing for the designation by the Oireachtas of delegates to the Assembly' is translated as 'Gabhann forálacha an Achta seo ionad an dlí a fhoráil go gceapfadh an tOireachtas toscairí chun an Tionóil'. Usually, however, 'designate' is translated by 'ainmnigh' in the Acts, although 'sainigh' is sometimes found. In s10(2) of the Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, for example, 'one other person designated by the candidate' is translated as 'duine amháin eile arna ainmniú ag an iarrthóir'. 'Designated areas' is translated as 'limistéir ainmnithe' in s30 of the Finance Act, 1990. 'Ainmnigh' also translates 'name' and, in particular in Parliamentary usage, 'nominate', which may have contributed to the use of other terms. In s13(1)(b) of the Misuse of Drugs Act, 1977, 'designate that drug as a drug to which this subsection applies' is translated as 'an druga sin a shainiú mar dhruaga a mbaineann an fo-alt seo leis'. 'Designated order' is translated as 'ordú sainiúcháin' in s2(1) of the Wildlife Act, 1976. 'Sainigh' is translated as 'state expressly, specify; define' in Ó Dónaill. DIL translates 'sainigidir' as (a) 'is different, distinct', (b) 'makes different, distinguishes, gives pre-eminence to' and 'legal perhaps appropriates (defines? specifies?)'. It is based on 'sain', translated as 'different, distinct, separate (from other things)' and 'peculiar, special (of a characteristic which distinguishes one thing from others)', in DIL.

We have seen above that, unlike Article 41.3.2°, a recent Amendment to the Constitution, where 'a Court designated by law' is rendered as 'Cúirt a bheidh ainmnithe le dlí', in Article 37.2, 'any person or body of persons designated by those laws' is expressed as 'aon duine nó aon dream a bheidh sonraithe leis na dlíthe sin'. 'Sonrú' also translates 'designate' in the Industrial Relations Act, 1946 (see Téarmaí Oifigiúla).

We find the following entry in Henry Murdoch, A Dictionary of Irish Law s.v. 'designated':

When considered in its Latin etymological sense relates to a sign or a mark of approval; the formal introduction to an accused renders a doctor a designated registered medical practitioner under the Road Traffic Acts....

The Shorter Oxford Dictionary s.v. 'designate', reads as follows:

(1) To point out, indicate; to specify 1801. (2) To point out by a name or description; to name, denominate 1818. (3.) To appoint, nominate for duty or office; to destine to a purpose or fate 1791.

The Irish text of Article 6.1 clearly reads 'appoint' as against 'nominate'. See further the commentary on Articles 13.8.2° and 42.3.1°.

i dtaobh beartas an Náisiúin ... chun leasa an phobail According to the official standard (i.e. An Caighdeán Oifigiúil), 'beartas' would be lenited here and in the nominative plural rather than the genitive plural, as here, and 'leas' would remain in the nominative case rather than the genitive, both 'beartas' and 'leas' being followed by 'definite' nouns (i.e. nouns preceded by the article) – see the commentary on Article 1 s.v. 'de réir dhúchais', regarding this rule of nominative instead of genitive. Note that ‘chun leasa an phobail’ appears as ‘chun leas an phobail’ in the enrolled edition.

Regarding ‘náisiún’, this is a late Romance loanword – only three examples are cited in DIL s.v. ‘náisiún’ (‘a nation, people’), all from Ó Cianáin’s Flight of the Earls; other seventeenth-century texts show it to be well established in Irish usage, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú referring to Scáthán Shacramúinte na hAithridhe and Buaidh na Naomhchroidhe, for example.

Ó Dónaill translates ‘leas an phobail’ as ‘the common good’. ‘Leas’ is translated as ‘interest’ in Téarmaí Dlí, ‘the common good’ being translated therein as ‘an mhaitheas phoiblí’. Note that ‘the common good’ is translated as ‘an mhaitheas phoiblí’ in the Preamble, ‘leas an phobail’ being found throughout the body of the Irish text. In the Long Title of the Local Government (Planning and Development) Act, 1963, ‘in the interests of the common good’ is translated as ‘chun tairbhe don mhaitheas phoiblí’. This is usually translated as ‘ar mhaithe le leas an phobal’ however – see, for example, the Long Title of the Local Government (Planning and Development) Act, 1976, where ‘An Act to make better provision, in the interests of the common good, in relation to ...’ is translated as ‘Acht do dhéanamh sócrú níos fearr, ar mhaithe le leas an phobail, i ndáil le ...’. See further the commentary on Articles 42.3.2° and 45.2.ii. Note, finally, that DIL cites ‘a mbearar ... do bhreathaibh díorgha dlighe isin maitheas phuiblidhe’ (‘... in the common weal’) from the seventeenth-century ‘Contention of the Bards’, also citing ‘san maitheas phuibhlidhe’ from Keating’s seventeenth-century Three Shafts of Death. Dinneen translates ‘an maitheas poiblidhe’ as ‘the public good’, Ó Dónaill translating ‘an mhaitheas phoiblí’ as ‘the common weal’.

faoi dheoidh This phrase is translated as ‘in the end, at last’ in Ó Dónaill. Old Irish ‘fo deud’ glosses Latin ‘in fine’ in the ninth-century St Gall Glosses on Priscian and is translated as ‘at last, in the end, ultimately’ in DIL s.v. ‘dead’, where examples are cited from the Glosses onwards. ‘Court of Final Appeal’ is styled ‘Cúirt Achomhairc Dheiridh’ in Article 34.2 of the Constitution, as it is in the Courts (Establishment and Constitution) Act, 1961, and in Téarmaí Dlí. ‘Cúirt Aith-éisteachta Deire’ translates ‘Court of Final Appeal’ in Article 64 of the 1922 Constitution.

rialtóirí ‘Rialtóir’ is translated as ‘ruler’ in Ó Dónaill, ‘riaghlóir’ being translated as ‘a ruler, an abbot, a censor’ in Dinneen (‘riaghlóirí’ is the form in the enrolled edition). ‘Riaglóir’, in original sense ‘a regulator’, hence according to DIL in Old Irish this word is used of the ‘regular’ numbers for calculating the age of the moon on the first day of each month. Only in late literature did it have the sense of ‘a ruler’ in general (DIL citing ‘riaghlóir do phobuil’ from the seventeenth-century translation of Exodus, xxii 28), this being a development of the sense of ‘a ruler or director in a monastery’. ‘Riagal’ (‘rule’), as we have already stated, comes from Latin ‘régula’. In contemporary Irish, the form ‘rialóir’ (< ‘riaghlóir’) is used of the instrument – see Ó Dónaill.

is faoin bpobal ‘Faoi’, literally ‘under’ – see Ó Dónaill s.v. ‘faoi’ (3)(c): ‘(Of assignment). Rud a fhágáil faoi dhuine (le déanamh), to leave something to someone (to do) ... Fút féin atá sé, it is up to yourself’.

breithiúnas This headword is translated as ‘judgment’ in Téarmaí Dlí, with ‘judicial discretion’ being translated as ‘rogha bhreithiúnach’. ‘The judiciary’ is translated as ‘an bhreithiúnacht’ in Statutory Instrument No. 308 of 1991.

reachtaíocht This headword is translated as ‘legislation’ in Ó Dónaill. ‘Legislative’ is translated as ‘reachtach’ in Téarmaí Dlí. See the commentary on Article 20, ‘Reachtaíocht’ being the heading of that Article.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Is leis na horgain Stáit a chuirtear ar bun leis an mBunreacht seo, agus leo sin amháin nó lena n-údarás, is féidir na cumhachtaí riala sin a oibriú.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is by the organs of State / State organs that are established by this Constitution, and by those alone or by/with their authority, that those powers of rule can be operated.

ENGLISH TEXT

These powers of government are exercisable only by or on the authority of the organs of State established by this Constitution.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Are exercisable only by or on the authority of the organs of State' is expressed in the Irish text as 'Is leis na horgain Stáit ..., agus leo sin amháin nó lena n-údarás, is féidir ... a oibriú' ('It is by the organs of State, and by them alone or by/with their authority, that ... can be exercised'); the English text is theoretically capable of being read as follows: 'are exercisable only by the authority of the organs of State or on the authority of the organs of State' rather than 'are exercisable only by the organs of State or on the authority of the organs of State'.
- 2 As in the previous subsection, 'government' is expressed in the Irish text by the term normally expressing 'rule'.
- 3 'Oibrigh' expresses 'exercise' in the Irish text, as in Article 3; 'oibrim', however, is translated as 'I operate' in Téarmaí Dlí.
- 4 The Irish text expresses 'on the authority of' as 'lena n-údarás' ('with/by their authority').

Commentary

orgain The plural form of 'organ'. 'Aon organ stáit' expresses 'any organ' in Article 29.4.2° and 'any organ of State' is rendered as 'aon organ Stáit' in Article 29.7.2° (following the 1998 Amendment of the Constitution). 'Na horgain rialtais' expresses 'the organs of government' in Article 39, with 'organs of public opinion' being expressed as 'orgain aigne an phobail' in Article 40.6.1°i and 'by any of the organs established by this Constitution' being expressed as 'le haon organ dá mbunaítear leis an mBunreacht seo' in Article 49.2.

'Organ' is given as a variant form of 'orgán' in Dinneen, who translates 'orgán' simply as 'an organ (musical instrument)'. Ó Dónaill does not give 'organ' as a headword, translating 'orgán' (pl. 'orgáin') as 'organ' (in the musical and physiological sense). 'Orgán' comes from Latin 'organum' and examples of this word are cited in DIL s.v. 'orgán', from the eighth-century Glosses onwards, in the sense of 'a musical instrument (probably a wind instrument, but frequently used in generic sense, often of martial music)'.

In the First Schedule to the Army Pensions Act, 1923, 'Wounds of ... internal ... abdominal organs' is translated as 'créachta in orgáin inmheánacha', with 'Total organic paralysis' being translated as 'Pairilis orgánach iomlán'. 'Orgáin' translates 'organs' in Schedule A (headed 'Maximum Rates Payable on Goods') to the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925. In s11 of Article IV of the Third Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, on the other hand, 'Representatives of Members to the principal and subsidiary organs of the United Nations' is translated as 'Ionadaithe Comhaltaí chun príomh-organ agus fo-organ na Náisiún Aontaithe' and in s1 of the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities (Amendment) Act, 1976, 'international organisations ..., their institutions or organs' is translated as 'eagraíochtaí ... idirnáisiúnta, a bhforais nó a n-orgain'. In the Margin Title of s75 of the Postal and Telecommunications Act, 1983, 'Messages to certain organs of State' is translated as 'Teachtaireachtaí chuig orgain áirithe Stáit'.

We find the form 'orgán' rather than 'organ' in translations of European legislation. In Treaties establishing the European Union (1973, p. 786), 'This Protocol shall also apply to the European Investment Bank, to the members of its organs' is translated as 'Bainfidh an Prótacal seo freisin leis an mBanc Eorpach Infheistíochta, le comhaltaí a orgán' – the same text in the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 187), with the substitution of 'the European Central Bank' for 'the European Investment Bank', being translated as 'Beidh an Prótacal seo infheidhme freisin ar an mBanc Ceannais Eorpach, ar chomhaltaí a orgán'.

Note that while 'organic' is translated as 'organta', following the abbreviation 'phil', in L. Mc Cionnaith, in Colmán Ó Huallacháin's Foclóir Fealsaimh (1993 [1958]), 'orgánach' translates 'organic' and we get the following entry s.v. 'orgán': 'Páirt le feidhm áirithe in iomlán coimpléascúil', with Gualterus Burley: De Potentiis Animae (a manuscript in the National Library of Scotland) and Regimen na Sláinte cited as sources of 'orgán'. 'Organ', in the physiological sense, is now generally translated as 'ball' in the Acts – see, for example, s12(1) of the Health (Family Planning Act), 1979, where 'any disease affecting the generative organs of either sex' is translated as 'aon ghalar a thagann ar bhaill gheiniúna fir nó mná'.

leo sin amháin nó lena n-údarás, is féidir ... a oibriú In Article 49.2, 'the said powers, functions, rights and prerogatives shall not be exercised or be capable of being exercised ... save only by or on the authority of the Government' is expressed as '(achtaítear leis seo) nach dleathach agus nach féidir na cumhachtaí, na feidhmeanna, na cearta, agus na sainchumais sin a oibriú ... ach amháin ag an Rialtas nó le húdarás an Rialtais'. In Articles 28.2 and 29.4.1°, 'The executive power of the State shall ... be exercised by or on the authority of the Government' is expressed as 'is é an Rialtas a oibreos, nó is le húdarás an Rialtais a oibreofar, cumhacht chomhallach an Stáit'. 'On the authority of the Houses of the Oireachtas' is rendered as 'le húdarás Thithe an Oireachtais' in the new subsection 3 in Article 28.4.

Turning specifically to 'exercisable', in Article 13.9 'is cead don Uachtarán na cumhachtaí agus na feidhmeanna ... a oibriú is a chomhlíonadh' expresses 'The powers and functions ... shall be exercisable and performable by him', with 'Ní cead don Uachtarán aon chumhacht ná feidhm ... a oibriú ná a chomhlíonadh' expressing 'No power or function ... shall be exercisable or performable by him' in Article 13.11. 'In relation to the exercise and performance by him of such of his powers and functions as are by this Constitution expressed to be exercisable and performable' is expressed as 'maidir le hé d'oibriú is do chomhlíonadh na gcumhachtaí is na bhfeidhmeanna a luaitear sa Bhunreacht seo a bheith inoibríthe is inchomhlíonta' in Article 31.1 and in Article 32, 'any of the powers or functions which are by this Constitution expressed to be exercisable or performable' is expressed as 'Cumhachtaí nó feidhmeanna ar bith a luaitear ina dtaobh sa Bhunreacht seo gur dleathach don Uachtarán iad a oibriú nó a chomhlíonadh'. Finally, in Article 49.1, 'All powers, ... whatsoever exercisable in ...' is expressed as 'Gach uile chumhacht ... a bhí inoibríthe í'.

'Oibrim' is translated as 'I operate' in Téarmaí Dlí whereas 'feidhmigh' usually translates 'exercise' in the Acts, as it does in one of the amendments to the Constitution –

see the commentary on Article 3. Turning to ‘exercisable’ in the Acts, ‘any other powers exercisable by the Minister’ is translated as ‘aon chumhachtaí eile is infheidhmithe ag an Aire’ in s8 of the Fuels (Control of Supplies) Act, 1971, for example. In s155(3)(c) of the Companies Act, 1963, ‘any shares held or power exercisable by any person ... shall be disregarded’ is translated as ‘tabharfar neamhaird ar aon scaireanna a bheidh ar seilbh, nó ar aon chumhacht is infheidhmithe, ag aon duine’. In s16(4) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978, ‘the said power may be exercisable only with such consent’ is translated as ‘ní bheidh an chumhacht sin infheidhmithe ach amháin leis an toiliú sin’. Finally, looking at earlier Acts, in s1(1) of the Local Authorities (Extension of Time) Act, 1923, ‘and such powers are ... exercisable only during a period of time’ is translated as ‘agus ... ná fuil na comhachtanna san infheidhmithe ach ar feadh tréimhse aimsire’. See further the commentary on Article 13.9.

Regarding ‘on the authority of’, in s3(3) of the Local Authorities (Indemnity) Act, 1923, ‘every payment by such trustee shall be deemed to have been made on the authority of the members of the local authority’ is translated as ‘gach íocaíocht a dhin an t-iontaobhaí sin tuigfar ... gur dineadh í le húdarás ballra an údaráis áitiúla’. In s1(2) of the Executive Authority (External Relations) Act, 1936, on the other hand, ‘The consular representatives of Saorstát Éireann in other countries shall be appointed by or on the authority of the Executive Council’ is translated as ‘Isé an Ard-Chomhairle dhéanfaidh no is ar údarás na hArd-Chomhairle déanfar ionadaithe consalta Shaorstáit Éireann i dtíortha eile do cheapadh’. In s12(3)(b)(i) of the Unit Trusts Act, 1972, ‘every untrue statement not purporting to be made on the authority of an expert’ is translated as ‘gach ráiteas bréagach nach n-airbheartóidh a bheidh déanta ar údarás saineolaí’. In s6 of Part I of the Second Schedule to the Defamation Act, 1961, however, ‘Any notice ... published by or on the authority of any court in the State’ is translated as ‘Aon fhógra ... a fhoilseoidh aon chúirt sa Stát ... nó a fhoilseofar lena n-údarás’. See further the commentary on Article 13.6 regarding ‘údarás’ and on Article 21.1.1<sup>o</sup> regarding ‘amháin’.

sin ‘Sin’ rather than ‘seo’ generally translates ‘these’ in the Acts – see, for example, s17 of Article V of the Third Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, where ‘these categories shall be communicated to the Governments of all Members’ is translated as ‘cuirfear na hearnálacha sin in iúl do Rialtais na gComhaltáí go léir’.

is féidir ‘Is féidir (go)’ is translated as ‘it is possible (that)’ in Ó Dónaill, who translates ‘an rud is, nach, féidir a dhéanamh’ as ‘what can, cannot, be done’. See DIL s.v. ‘étir, éter’, translated as ‘able; possible, feasible’, the earlier form of which is taken to be ‘sétir’, which is connected with ‘sétrech’, ‘strong, powerful’. Note that ‘nach féidir a oibriú’ expresses ‘shall not be capable of being exercised’ in Article 49.2.

TÉACS GAELIGE

An bhratach trí dhath .i. uaine, bán, agus flannbhuí, an suaitheantas náisiúnta.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The flag of three colours i.e. green, white, and orange, (is) the national emblem/flag.

ENGLISH TEXT

The national flag is the tricolour of green, white and orange.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 ‘The national flag’ is expressed as ‘an suaitheantas náisiúnta’ (‘the national emblem’) in the Irish text, ‘suaitheantas’ today being more associated with ‘emblem’ than ‘flag’; the harp being the national emblem, the Irish text might occasion some obscurity.
- 2 ‘Oráiste’ is the usual term which expresses ‘orange’ in the context of Northern Ireland rather than the term found in this Article, ‘flannbhuí’, which adjective, however, currently expresses ‘orange’ in general usage.
- 3 ‘The tricolour’ is expressed as ‘An bhratach trí dhath’ (‘the flag of three colours’) in the Irish text.
- 4 ‘Is’ in the English text is expressed by the syntax of the Irish text; this construction adds a stylistic terseness to the Irish text.
- 5 The English text has no comma after ‘white’ corresponding to the Irish text’s comma after ‘bán’.

Commentary

flannbhuí Simply translated as ‘(Of colour) orange’ in Ó Dónaill, this compound of ‘flann’ and ‘bui’ does not appear to be given as a headword in Dinneen. ‘Flann-bhuí’ is cited as the translation of the colour ‘orange’ in Statutory Rules and Orders 47/1. ‘Orange RN’, the common name of one of the colours for foodstuffs, is translated as ‘flannbhuí RN (flannbhuí croicéine)’ in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 1262).

'Flann' is translated as 'red', especially 'blood-red', in DIL, and is found in personal and proper names. 'Buide' is translated as 'yellow' in DIL, and glosses Latin 'flauus' in the ninth-century St Gall Glosses on Priscian. 'Oráiste', 'an orange', is a Romance loanword, cited in DIL only from Ó Cianáin's Flight of the Earls. While both Dinneen and Ó Dónaill give 'dath oráiste' (as 'dath óráiste' in the former case) as 'orange colour', De Bhaldraithe only gives 'flannbhuí' as the translation of the colour 'orange'. 'Orange' is translated as 'dearg-bhuidhe, buidhe, óráisdeach' in Daniel Foley's English-Irish Dictionary (1855), as 'dearg-bhuidhe, óráiste' in Edmund Fournier d'Albe's English-Irish Dictionary and as 'ruadh-bhuidhe' in T. O'Neill Lane (2nd edition). Note that 'dath' precedes 'oráiste' in Ó Dónaill and in Dinneen, i.e. 'oráiste' is not given as a colour adjective – like 'buí', for example – the genitive singular of 'oráiste' being used as an attributive adjective. Dinneen cites 'Fear Óráiste, an Orangeman' (also 'fear láiste', perhaps from 'lóiste') and Ó Dónaill translates the adjective 'Oráisteach' as 'Orange', preceded by the abbreviation for 'Politics', with the noun 'Oráisteach' translated as 'Orangeman'. 'William of Orange' is referred to as 'Liam Oráiste' in Irish, with 'Orange Lodge' being translated as 'Áras Oráisteach' in Foclóir Oifigiúil. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that 'fir bhúí' was the usual earlier Irish term for 'Orangemen'. Dinneen translates 'Seán Buidhe' as 'the English', referring the reader to the term 'John Bull', and includes the sense of 'a rake, one aggressively dissolute'. 'Buidhe', according to Dinneen, was used as 'a disparaging epithet, like ugly, dirty, bad', citing 'Domhnall Buidhe, bad, bold Domhnall' and 'Tomás buidhe, tawny Thomas'. In 1831 James Hardiman gave the following note with his edition and accompanying translation of 'Seághan Buidhe' in Irish Minstrelsy, vol. ii (p. 138):

The air of this song is more generally known than the origin of its name. Shane Bui, means, literally, Yellow or Orange Jack, (the John Bull of former days) there being no other word in Irish to express the latter colour. It was an appellation given by the Irish to the English followers of William III in Ireland. Hence the term Orangemen.

R.P.M. Lehmann writes as follows regarding the earlier citations of 'crón' in particular, in an article entitled 'Color Usage in Irish' (in Studies in Language, Literature and Culture of the Middle Ages and Later [The University of Texas at Austin, 1969, p. 77]):

More yellow, probably orange, with variation both in the direction of true yellow and also of rusty red, is crón. Sometimes it is translated "swarthy," but it may refer to what we call an "olive" complexion. Crón, but also buide, is used to translate "tan." Saffron, copper, and the yellow of age are crón. Crón corcra would probably be scarlet or vermilion. Applied to a horse, crón is translated "roan"; perhaps a sorrel roan is meant. The clear yellow of a buttercup and a blackbird's bill is buide. The same term is used for yellow hair, and like crón, for the complexion. The two words overlap in meaning, but if they are distinguished, buide is lighter, less red. Buide may be used of a cow, and when describing the earth seems to emphasize the fertility of ripened grain. Buide is of high brilliance and saturation. Paler hair is finn or bán.

uaine This headword is translated as '(vivid) green' in Ó Dónaill, as against 'glas', which is therein translated as (1) 'green', (2) 'grey' and (3) (in earlier literature) 'blue'. 'Uaine' is translated as 'green, verdant' in Dinneen, who translates 'glas' as 'green, verdant (as grass); grey (as a horse ...); bluish-grey, silvery, bright ...'. DIL translates 'uaine' as 'green, verdant' and s.v. 'glas', comments as follows: 'adjective descriptive of various shades of light green and blue, passing from grass-green to grey, opposed on the one hand to uaine "green", and on the other to gorm "blue"'.

Turning to the Acts, in the 'Definitions' in s1 of the Curragh of Kildare Act, 1961, "the Green Lands" means the portion of the Curragh that does not include the Camp or Blue Lands and is defined on the deposited map by being coloured green' is translated as 'ciallaíonn "na Tailte Uaine" an chuid den Churrach nach bhfuil an Campa ná na Tailte Gorma ar áireamh air agus a shonraítear ar an léarscáil thaiscthe le dath uaine'. 'A Green Paper', in Parliamentary usage, is styled 'Páipéar Uaine' – see the Dáil Order Paper of 7/10/92, for example, where 'Government Green Paper – Education for a Changing World' is styled 'Páipéar Uaine an Rialtais – Oideachas do Shaol atá ag Athrú'.

suaitheantas This headword is translated in Ó Dónaill as (1)(a) 'distinguishing mark; badge, emblem; decoration', citing 'suaitheantas cine, emblem of race'; (b) 'device, crest (on seal)'; (c) 'standard, flag' ... (2) 'display, show, spectacle'. Dinneen cites 'bratach suaitheantais, a flag or standard' and 'ard-shuaitheantas na Sasanach, .i. meirge Sain Seoirse, i.e. St George's standard', translating 'suaitheantas' as 'remarkable or distinctive character, a distinguishing mark; ... a blazon, badge or escutcheon, a standard, flag or banner, a sign-post or land-mark; a demonstration, show or exhibit; ... a person wearing unusual or wretched attire, a "show"'. In the Romantic tale 'Sechrán na Banimpire' (Ériu v, 1911, pp. 184-5), Florens snatches a satin sleeve which was around Felicitá's arm, as she was taken from him against his will, saying: 'Cuirfeda an muinchille so ar cenn mo s[h]leighe ... mar bhratach s[h]uaitheantais mar mheirge cogaidh ...' ('I shall place this at the head of my spear as an emblazoned banner or standard of battle'). The earlier 'súaichentas/' 'súaithentas', based on 'súaichnid'/'súaithnid' (from *su-aith-gnid) is translated as (a) 'distinguishing mark, emblem, blazon, badge' and (b) 'flag, battle-standard, ensign' in DIL.

De Bhaldraithe, for example, does not include 'suaitheantas' as a translation of 'flag', his entry reading as follows: (a) 'Brat, bratach'; (b) 'Nautical: Bratach, meirge, an aimiréil', citing various phrases in both groups, none of which contain 'suaitheantas'. He translates 'emblem' as 'comhartha suaitheantais; Heraldry: samháltán' and 'ensign' as 'meirge, bratach'. L. Mc Cionnaith translates 'flag' (ensign) as 'brat; bratach [Connacht, Ulster]; dath an bhrait; dath an bhraitaigh [Dinneen], na brataighe [Ulster] ...', i.e. without reference to 'suaitheantas', translating 'flag' (ensign, banner) as 'meirge', again citing Dinneen.

In Facts about Ireland, published by the Department of Foreign Affairs (1995), an entry entitled 'Emblem' follows that entitled 'Flag' and reads:

The harp has been regarded as the official symbol or coat of arms of Ireland since medieval times. As such it is depicted alongside the coat of arms of a dozen or more medieval European kingdoms on a single folio of the Wijnbergen roll of arms compiled about 1270 .... The heraldic harp is invariably used by the Government, its agencies and its representatives at home and abroad. It is engraved on the seal matrix of the office of President as well as on the reverse of the coinage of the state. It is also emblazoned on the distinctive flag of the President ....

Turning to the Acts, in s2(1) of the Defence Act, 1954, we find the following 'Interpretations':

the word "decoration" means any medal, clasp, good-conduct badge or other decoration .... ciallaíonn an focal "oirneas", aon bhonn, claspa, suaitheantas dea-iompair nó oirneas eile;

the expression "flag officer" means an officer holding the commissioned naval rank of commodore .... ciallaíonn an focal "brat-oifigeach" oifigeach ag a bhfuil céim choimisiúnta cheannasóra chabhlaigh.

'An emblem' is translated as 'feathal' in s267(3)(f) of that Act. In s90(6)(b) of the Road Traffic Act, 1961, 'provisions for the issuing of official badges by the Commissioner to licensed parking attendants and the wearing of the badges by the attendants' is translated as 'forálacha chun an Coimisinéir d'eisiúint suaitheantas oifigiúla chun freastalaithe lochta ceadúnaithe agus chun na freastalaithe do chaitheamh na suaitheantas'. 'Badge' is translated as 'feathal', with 'suaitheantas' translating 'tab', in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 1257), where 'Made up accessories for articles of apparel ...., excluding badges, tabs' is translated as 'Gabháltais chóirithe eile do bhaill éadaigh .... gan feathail, suaitheantais ... a áireamh'. Ó Dónaill cites the following senses of 'feathal' from earlier Irish literature: 'emblem, insignia; device, ornament; distinguishing feature'. 'Feathail' translates 'emblems' in Article 5 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement (1985, C).

Looking at the earlier Acts, in s151 of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, 'any badge, device, emblem, or flag, reserved by law for the use of ... the State' is translated as 'aon leabhrún, suaitheantas, comhartha, no bratach a bheidh curtha ar leithligh do réir dlí le haghaidh úsáide ... ag an Stát'. 'Supply of ordinary regimental badges' is translated as 'soláthar gnáth-leabhrún reisiminte' in s193 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. 'Any badge of distinction' is translated as 'aon tsuaitheantas aitheantais' in s7(1) of the Eucharistic Congress (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1932.

bratach Ó Dónaill cites 'bratach náisiúnta, national flag' and 'bratach na hÉireann, the flag of Ireland'. Dinneen translates 'bratach' as 'a standard, an ensign; a sail; ... also a robe, a garment' and includes 'a flag, a banner' as one set of the senses of 'brat' (principally 'a cloak, a mantle'). As the fourth set of senses of 'brat' Ó Dónaill gives '=Bratach'. 'Bratach' is based on 'brat', translated as 'cloak, mantle' in DIL s.v. 'bratt', where examples are also cited in the more general sense of 'covering, cover; cloth, etc.' – among them 'le brataibh' ('with flags'), from the works of the seventeenth-century poet Aogán Ó Rathile.

DIL translates 'brattach' as 'clothing; shield; banner, standard', translating 'bratacha' as 'flags' in the citation 'na bratacha snathcaine sreabanncaela sroil' from the Irish version of Lucan's Pharsalia, in Cath Catharda. See above s.v. 'suaitheantas' for 'bratach' translating 'flag' in s151 of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927. 'An bhratach náisiúnta' translates 'the national flag' in s48(2) of the Fisheries Act, 1980, in which subsection 'that the flag so worn was not a flag distinctive of nationality' is translated as 'nár bhratach de shainghné náisiúntachta an bhratach a bhí ar foluain amhlaidh'.

trí dhath Ó Dónaill gives the headword 'trídhathach', translated as 'three-coloured, tricolour', and De Bhaldraithe translates 'tricolour' as (1) (adjective) 'trídhathach' and (2) (substantive) 'The Tricolour, Bratach na dTrí Dhath'. Note that the form in the enrolled text is 'An bhratach trí ndath'.

.i. DIL's entry s.v. '.i.' is as follows: 'Compendium for Latin id est, and in Irish usually representing "ed ón", that is to say, namely'. This Irish abbreviation is generally found in manuscripts rather than in later printed Irish texts. We would expect to find 'i.e.' in the English text corresponding to this Irish form of 'id est'.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As/since (the) Irish (language) is / Irish being the national language it is the principal official language.

ENGLISH TEXT

The Irish language as the national language is the first official language.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'First' is expressed in the Irish text by the prefix generally expressing 'principal/main' – note that the following subsection refers to English as a 'second' official language, following 'first' in this section, the Irish text having English as 'another' ('eile') official language.
- 2 Irish being the national language is given more emphasis in the Irish text, 'as' being expressed as 'Ós í' ('since it is') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 4 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

The National language of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) is the Irish language .... Sí an Ghaedhilg teanga Náisiúnta Shaorstáit Éireann.

On this Article in general see Tomás Ó Máille, The Status of the Irish Language – A Legal Perspective (1990). Commenting on Article 4 of the 1922 Constitution, Leo Kohn, The Constitution of the Irish Free State, pointed out that the linguistic arrangement provided for in that Article was unique among Commonwealth countries in giving prominence to a language other than the predominantly-used English – see Tomás Ó Máille, op. cit., p. 3.

Commentary

Ós The preposition ‘ó’ combining with ‘is’ of the copula – ‘ó’ in this capacity as conjunction being translated as ‘for the reason that, inasmuch as’ by Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘ós teach nua é, since it is a new house’ and ‘ós agat atá an ceart, as you are in the right’. Dinneen translates ‘ós’ as ‘since’ and cites ‘(of cause:) ó taoi-se id’ shagart anois, since you are now a priest’ and ‘ós agat-sa atá na cosa, since you have the legs (are a good walker)’. DIL’s entry s.v. ‘ó’ (ii) is as follows: ‘As causal conjunction, as, since, inasmuch as (not in Glosses); especially common with copula’. Among the examples cited therein are ‘osa lim Albain cen fheill’ (‘as I am ruler of Alba’) and the following ‘nature-friendly’ phrase from John of Gaddesden’s Rosa Anglica: ‘osa cara don naduir an fuil’ (‘since blood is the friend of nature’).

In Treaties establishing the European Union (1973, p. 173), ‘Ós é a mianghas aontacht a ngeilleagar a neartú’ translates ‘Anxious to strengthen the unity of their economies’ and in the Fourth Schedule to the Finance Act, 1973, ‘Ós mian leo Prótacal a chur i gcrích’ translates ‘Desiring to conclude a Protocol’.

‘Mar’ is regularly used to express ‘as’ in the sense of ‘in the character, capacity, of’ – see Ó Dónaill s.v. ‘mar’ (1)(b), where the following examples are cited: ‘lena fáil mar bhean, to get her as a wife’, ‘bhí sé mar athair acu, he acted as a father to them’, ‘mar chomhartha síochána, as a token of peace’ and ‘mar dhuine againn féin, as one of ourselves’. Note, however, that none of these examples have the definite article, which one might be uncomfortable with following ‘mar’ in this context. Ó Dónaill, however s.v. ‘mar’ (1)(d), ‘considering’, cites ‘mar an gcéad uair a thug tú faoi, considering it is the first time you tried it’ – Dinneen gives this as ‘mar an gcéad uair thugais fá n-a leithéid’. As examples of ‘mar’ (1)(a), ‘in the manner of’, the following are cited: ‘mar an ngrian ag éirí, like the sun rising’, ‘mar an sneachta séidte, like driven snow’ and, of course, ‘mar an gcéanna, likewise’. DIL s.v. ‘immar’, the earlier form of ‘mar’, cites ‘mar’, with article, in the sense of ‘like, as’, from Keating’s seventeenth-century History of Ireland: ‘mar an druing do mhair ré n-a linn féin’.

Turning to the Acts, in s2(3) of the Liability for Defective Products Act, 1991, ‘any person who supplied the product ... shall ... be liable, as the producer, for the damage’ is translated as ‘beidh aon duine a sholáthair an táirge ... faoi dhliteanas, mar an táirgeoir, i leith an damáiste’. Again, as regards ‘mar’ followed by the definite article, see s5 of the Decimal Currency Act, 1970, where ‘so much of that amount as is in shillings or pence may be treated as the corresponding amount in the new currency’ is translated as ‘féadfar déileáil leis an oiread sin den tsuim sin is scillingí nó pingíní mar an tsuim chomhréire san airgead reatha nua’.

an phríomhtheanga In Articles 13.1.1° and 28.5.1°, ‘Prime Minister’ is expressed as ‘an Príomh-Aire’, with ‘the Chief Justice’ being styled ‘an Príomh-Bhreitheamh’ in Article 14.2.1°, for example. ‘The natural primary and fundamental unit group’ is expressed as ‘buíon-aonad príomha bunaidh’ in Article 41.1.1° with ‘the primary and natural educator of the child’ being expressed as ‘múinteoir príomha dúchasach don leanbh’ in Article 42.1. Finally, in Article 45.2.iv, ‘the constant and predominant aim’ is expressed as ‘is buanchuspóir agus is príomhchuspóir’.

On the other hand, ‘The first President shall ...’ is expressed as ‘Ní foláir don chéad Uachtarán’ in Article 12.7, with ‘to have vacated his first seat’ being expressed as ‘go bhfuil éirithe aige as an gcéad ionad’ in Article 15.14. ‘The date of its first meeting’ is expressed as ‘lá a céad-tionóil’ in Article 16.5, with ‘teacht le chéile ar chéad-tionól’ expressing ‘first meeting’ in Article 18.8. ‘Courts of First Instance’ are styled ‘Cúirteanna Céadchéime’ in Article 34.2, for example. ‘The day on which the Bill is first sent’ is expressed as ‘an lá a sheoltar an Bille ar dtús’ in Article 23.1.2° and as ‘an lá a sheoltar an Bille ... den chéad uair’ in Article 23.2.2°. ‘At the first meeting thereof’ is expressed as ‘an chéad uair a bheidh sé ar thionól den Chomhairle sin’ in Article 31.4.

The prefix ‘príomh-’ is translated as ‘prime, principal, chief, major, cardinal’ in Ó Dónaill and as ‘first, prime, chief, principal, great’ in Dinneen. It comes from Latin ‘primus’ and is translated as (a) ‘first (in time), primary’, and (b) ‘foremost, chief, principal, and without comparison, prime (in quality), eminent’ in DIL s.v. ‘prím-’, where examples are cited of ‘prím-’ compounded with ‘béla’ (Modern Irish ‘béarla’), translated therein as ‘primitive (original) language’. Hebrew is referred to in the first example of such a compound, from Micheál Ó Céirigh’s seventeenth-century recension of the Leabhar Gabhála (‘an primberla .i. Eabhra’), and Greek and Latin are included along with Hebrew in the second example, from the fourteenth-century Leabhar Breac: ‘isna primbelraib .i. Ébra 7 Grec 7 Latén’ (perhaps in sense (b) above, according to DIL). As an example of sense (b) we note in passing that Moses is referred to as ‘prímthoisech túaithi De’ in one text – this compound, rather like ‘Prime Minister’, is attested in Saltair na Rann, composed c. AD 1000. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú draws attention to the following from the inscription on the gravestone over poet Eoghan Ó Caoimh (1656-1726): ‘ba fhile fóghlamtha, fir-eólach, agus cléireach clisde, caoin, a b-príomh-theangadh a dhúithche agus a shínnsear é’ – see O’Daly, Poets and Poetry of Munster, p. 38.

Note that ‘céad’ translates ‘first’ in the following phrases cited in Téarmaí Dlí: ‘on the first count, ar an gcéad scór’; ‘principal in the first degree, príomhaí den chéad ghrád’; ‘imprisonment in the first division, príosúnacht sa chéad roinn’; ‘court of first instance, cúirt chéadchéime’; ‘of the first part, den chéad pháirt’ and ‘first private sitting, an chéad suí príobháideach’. As we see above, ‘céad’ can also be prefixed and as a prefix is translated simply as 'first' in Ó Dónaill and as 'first, for the first time; fundamental' in Dinneen, who cites 'céid-rí, first king' and 'céid-riaghail, first rule'. See DIL s.v. 'cét-', (a) 'with nouns first and allied meanings (early, original, proto-, primary, primal, former, first-mentioned, aforesaid, foremost)', where 'is hé in cét sians didiu' ('this is the first meaning then') is cited from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Psalms.

Máirtín Ó Murchú points out that 'príomh-' connotes 'importance' while 'céad-' connotes order or sequence, i.e. sequence of time, movement, etc.

Finally, note that in s2 of the Adoption Act, 1974, 'the Board ... shall regard the welfare of the child as the first and paramount consideration' is translated as 'áireoidh an Bord gur ní ró-thábhachtach ag a bhfuil tosach airde leas an linbh'.

ENGLISH TEXT

The English language is recognised as a second official language.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Is recognised' is expressed as 'Glactar leis' ('is accepted') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Second' in this section follows on 'first' in the English text of the previous section; the Irish text's 'other' follows 'príomh-' ('principal') in the Irish text of the previous section.
- 3 As in Article 4, 'an Sacs-Bhéarla' expresses 'the English language', this being translated simply as 'an Béarla' in the 1922 Constitution, as we see below.

Article 4 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

The National language of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) is the Irish language, but the English language shall be equally recognised as an official language. Sí an Ghaedhilg teanga Náisiúnta Shaorstáit Éireann, ach có-aithneofar an Béarla mar theanga oifigiúil.

Commentary

Glactar leis 'Admhaigh' rather than 'glac le' generally expresses 'recognise' in the Constitution. In Article 41.1.1°, 'The State recognises the Family as the natural primary and fundamental unit group of Society' is expressed as 'Admhaíonn an Stát gurb é an Teaghlach is buíon-aonad príomha bunaidh don chomhdhaonnacht de réir nádúir'. Similarly in s2.1° of the same Article, 'the State recognises that ...' is expressed as 'admhaíonn an Stát go ...'. In Article 42.2 'in schools recognised or established by the State' is expressed as 'i scoileanna a admhaítear nó a bhunaítear ag an Stát'. In Article 43.2.1°, 'The State recognises, however, that the exercise of the rights ... ought ... to be regulated' is expressed as 'Ach admhaíonn an Stát gur cuí ... oibriú na gceart ... a rialú'. In Article 29.3, 'the generally recognised principles of international law' is expressed as 'bunrialacha gnáth-admhaithe an dlí idirnáisiúnta' – we also find this phrase in Article 29.7, the Amendment to the Constitution that followed the British-Irish Agreement of 10 April 1998.

'Glacaim le' is translated as 'I accept' in Téarmaí Dlí and in Dinneen. Ó Dónaill translates 'glacadh le rud' as 'to accept, admit, something', citing 'ghlac siad leis mar chomhairleoir, they accepted him as counsellor', along with 'ní ghlacfaínn leis sin uaidh, I wouldn't tolerate that from him'. The earlier form of this verb, 'glacaid', based on 'glac(c)' (translated as 'the fist half-opened, a hand [used of hand only, whereas "lám" frequently = "arm"]' in DIL), is of rare occurrence till late Middle and early Modern Irish, according to DIL, where two examples of 'glacaid' with 'le' (earlier 're') are cited: 'go nglacar linn mur gheall ar phais losa' (in O'Molloy's Lucerna Fidelium, 1676) and 'an t-aos óg do phósas nó do ghlacas re chéile' (in Donlevy's Teagasg Críosduidhe, 1742). See the commentary on Article 40.2.2° regarding 'glac' without accompanying 'le'.

Turning to the Acts, in s128(4)(c) of the Companies Act, 1963, perhaps echoing the Constitution, 'a religion recognised by the State' is translated as 'aicme creidimh atá admhaithe ag an Stát'. In the New Ireland Forum Report (1984, 3.16), 'in which the Irish Government recognised' is translated as 'inar admhaigh Rialtas na hÉireann'. In Téarmaí Dlí, however, 'admhaím' is translated as 'I acknowledge, I confess'. Although we find 'except for ... a purpose recognised by international law' translated as 'ach amháin ... chun críche a cheadaíonn an dlí idirnáisiúnta' in s5 of the Fisheries (Amendment) Act, 1978, 'aithin' generally translates 'recognise' in the Acts, as it does in Article 4 of the 1922 Constitution cited above, with 'aitheanta' generally translating 'recognised'. In s470 of the Income Tax Act, 1967, for example, "Local authority" ... includes any public body which is recognised as a local authority' is translated as 'Folaíonn "údarás áitiúil" ... aon chomhlacht poiblí atá aitheanta mar údarás áitiúil'. In s86(13) of the Patents Act, 1964, 'to refuse to recognise as agent in respect of any business under this Act any person' is translated as 'diúltú aon duine a aithint mar ghníomhaire i leith aon ghnó faoin Acht seo'. The Long Title of the Arbitration Act, 1980, commences as follows:

An Act to enable effect to be given to the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards done at New York on the 10th day of June, 1958 ... . Acht dá chumasú éifeacht a thabhairt don Choinbhinsiún maidir le Dámhachtainí Eadrána Coigríche a Aithint agus a Fhorghníomhú a rinneadh i Nua-Eabhrac an 10ú lá de Mheitheamh, 1958.

In s30(4)(a) of the Fisheries Act, 1980, 'with any recognised staff associations or trade unions' is translated as 'le haon chomhlachais foirne nó ceardchumann aitheanta'. 'Recognised bodies' is translated as 'comhlachtaí aitheanta' in s7(1)(j)(iii) of the Wealth Tax Act, 1975. 'Any such person as the Revenue Commissioners recognise as carrying on the business of the builder of a ship', in s29(2) of the Mercantile Marine Act, 1955, is translated as 'aon duine a aithníos na Coimisinéirí Ioncaim mar dhuine a bhfuil gnó déantóra loinge á sheoladh aige'. Finally, 'The Council may ... determine the specialities which it shall recognise for the purpose of its functions under this Act' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an Chomhairle ... na speisialtachtaí a chinneadh dá dtabharfaidh sí aitheantas chun críche a feidhmeanna faoin Acht seo' in s31(1) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978.

Looking at earlier Acts, in s19 of the 'Clare County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'Admission on a certificate signed by three "recognised" persons' is translated as 'Daoine do leigint isteach ar theistias fé láimh thríúir "aitheanta"' and 'any body or organisation not functioning under the Constitution which is entitled to be recognised as being the government of the country' is translated as 'cólucht no có-ghléasadh ar bith ná fuil ag feidhmiú fén mBunreacht agus atá i dteideal go n-aithneofaí é mar riaghaltas ar an tír' in s2(b) of the Offences Against the State Act, 1939. We also find various forms of 'admhaigh', however: in s7 of the Indemnity Act, 1924, 'by the confirmation, continuance, or recognition of such authority by that Government' is translated as 'de bharr an Rialtas san do dhaingniú, do bhuanú no d'admháil an údaráis sin'; in s24 of the Agricultural Credit Act, 1927, 'The Minister may ... appoint such bank to be a recognised bank for the purposes of this Part of this Act' is translated as 'féadfaidh an tAire ... an banc san do cheapa chun bheith ina bhanc admhuithe chun crícheanna na Coda so den Acht so' and in s32(2) of the Veterinary Surgeons Act, 1931, 'The Council may recognise for the purposes of this section any country ... in which there is in force at the time of such recognition legislation' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an Chomhairle, chun crícheanna an ailt seo, aon tír ... d'admháil ina mbeidh i bhfeidhm, le linn na hadmhála san, reachtúchán'.

eile This headword is translated as 'other, another; next, more, else' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'bealach eile, another, an alternative, way,' and 'fáth eile, another, an additional, reason'. Dinneen translates 'eile' as 'other, another, else, second, next'. DIL translates the earlier form 'aile' as 'other, one of two, second', citing 'nábat nacha arm aili' ('let it not be any other arms') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, along with 'forsin triur aili' ('the other three') and 'céd eili d'uaislib' ('a hundred other nobles'), for example, from later sources.

The opposite to the situation encountered with 'mar an' in the commentary on the previous subsection occurs here regarding 'dara', 'second', as one normally finds the definite article with 'dara' – it is found in every citation in Ó Dónaill, for example – and 'mar dhara' might not appeal to one. (Historically, it is interesting that the definite article now generally precedes 'dara', as 'dara' is actually formed from the definite article itself – i.e. 'ind', the earlier form of the article before vowels – combined with 'ala', a form of 'aile', from which 'eile' comes.) Dinneen, however, cites 'mar dhara cúrsa bídh, by way of a second course'. We find 'dara' without the article in the term 'dara rogha', 'second preference', for example – see s58(1) of the Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, where 'which clearly indicates a second preference' is translated as 'a thaispeánann dara rogha go soiléir'. 'Triú', without article, is found in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973), for example, particularly in translating 'third country/State' – see (also for example of lenition of an ordinal and for the plural following an ordinal) 'the new Member States shall amend their tariffs applicable to third countries' which is translated as 'déanfaidh na Ballstáit nua na taraifi dá gcuid is infheidhme ar thríú tíortha a leasú' (ibid, p. 924).

TÉACS GAEILGE

Ach féadfar socrú a dhéanamh le dlí d'fhonn ceachtar den dá theanga sin a bheith ina haonteanga le haghaidh aon ghnó nó gnóthaí oifigiúla ar fud an Stáit ar fad nó in aon chuid de.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

But provision may be made by law for either of those two languages to be a single language for any official businesses or business throughout the whole State or in any part of it.

ENGLISH TEXT

Provision may, however, be made by law for the exclusive use of either of the said languages for any one or more official purposes, either throughout the State or in any part thereof.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'For the exclusive use of either of the said languages' is expressed as 'd'fhonn ceachtar den dá theanga sin a bheith ina haonteanga' ('for either of those two languages to be a single language') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Purpose' is expressed in the Irish text by 'gnó', which term generally expresses 'business'.
- 3 'Oifigiúla', being the plural form of the adjective 'oifigiúil', only directly refers to the plural 'gnóthaí' and strictly speaking does not refer to the singular 'gnó', with 'for any one or more official purposes', therefore, being expressed as 'for any purpose or official purposes' in the Irish text.
- 4 The Irish text adds 'ar fad' ('all') to 'ar fud an Stáit'

(‘throughout the State’), ‘throughout the State’ being expressed, therefore, as ‘throughout the whole State’.

- 5 ‘However’ is expressed by ‘Ach’ (‘but’) in the Irish text, as it is in many other Articles, as we will see.

Note that Article 4 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

Nothing in this Article shall prevent special provisions being made by the Parliament of the Irish Free State (otherwise called and herein generally referred to as the ‘Oireachtas’) for districts or areas in which only one language is in general use. Ní choisfidh éinní san Airtíogal so ar an Oireachtas forálacha speisialta do dhéanamh do cheanntair no do líomatáistí ná fuil ach teanga amháin i ngnáth-úsáid ionta.

Commentary

Gnó ... gnóthaí ‘Gnó’ expresses ‘business’ in Article 28.12, with ‘gnóthaí’ expressing ‘interests’ in Article 18.7.1° and ‘a ngnóthaí féin’ expressing ‘its own affairs’ in Article 44.2.5°.

‘Purpose’ is generally expressed by ‘críoch’ in the Constitution as it is in the Acts. ‘For the purposes ...’ is expressed as ‘chun na gcríocha’ in Article 11 and as ‘chun críocha’ in Articles 13.8.2°, 26.2.2° and 47.2.2°, with ‘for local purposes’ being expressed as ‘chun críocha áitiúla’ in Article 22.1.2°, ‘for stated purposes’ as ‘chun críoch sonraithe’ in Article 29.7.3° and ‘for any purpose whatsoever’ as ‘chun críche ar bith’ in Article 15.6.2°. ‘For the purpose of’ is expressed as ‘chun críche’ in Articles 18.7.1°i and 47.1, ‘for all purposes’ being expressed as ‘chun gach críche’ in Article 28.6.2° and ‘for religious or charitable purposes’ as ‘chun críocha creidimh is carthanachta’ in Article 44.2.5°. ‘Unless the purpose of the appropriation shall have been recommended to Dáil Éireann by a message from the Government’ is expressed as ‘mura mbeidh teachtaireacht ag Dáil Éireann ón Rialtas ... ag moladh críche na leithghabhála dóibh’ in Article 17.2.

In Article 22.1.1°, however, ‘the imposition for the payment of debt or other financial purposes of charges on public moneys’ is expressed as ‘muirir a leagan ar airgidí poiblí chun fiacha a íoc nó chun cuspóirí eile airgeadais’. Article 29.4.2° provides a mixture of expressions of ‘purpose’: ‘the Government may ... avail of ... any organ ... used ... for the like purpose by the members ... for the purpose of international co-operation’ is expressed as ‘féadfaidh an Rialtas ... aon organ stáit ... a chur chun críche ... a chuirtear chun críche ... chun a leithéid sin de chuspóir ag na náisiúin is comhaltaí ... le haghaidh comhair idirnáisiúnta’. ‘For the purpose of this application’, in Article 23.2.2°, is expressed simply as ‘Chuirge sin’ in the Irish text, with ‘chuirge sin’ expressing ‘for that purpose’ in Article 25.5.3°. ‘Chun’ expresses ‘for the purpose of’ in Article 28.3.3°, this being expressed by ‘Tonas go’ in Article 29.4.2°. ‘Ina chomhair sin’ expresses ‘for that purpose’ in Article 30.3.

Returning to ‘gnó’, ‘áitreabh gnó’ and ‘ráiteas gnóthaí’ are translated respectively as ‘business premises’ and ‘statement of affairs’ in Téarmaí Dlí. ‘Gnó’ is translated as ‘business’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites (I) ‘(Of ordinary activity) (Often plural) Do ghnó(thai) a dhéanamh, to attend to one’s business, to one’s affairs’ and (II) ‘matter, concern, gnóthaí léinn, learned matters, gnóthaí eachtracha, foreign affairs, gnóthaí an tsaoil seo, mundane matters’. Dinneen translates ‘gnó’ as ‘business, affair, commerce, occupation, duty, concern’, citing ‘gnó sagairt, a priest’s office or duty’ and ‘gnó saighdiúra, a soldier’s duty’. DIL translates ‘gnó’ as ‘business, matter, concern’ and, as one of only about a half-dozen examples of this word cited therein, cites the phrase ‘gunó (=gnó) Góidrisce’ (‘a profitless venture’) from the works of the seventeenth-century poet Dáibhí Ó Bruadair – ‘Góidrisce’, according to Dinneen, was the name of the pagan chief of Dún Briste (Mayo) who foolishly threatened Patrick (see Nua-Dhuanaire 1 for references to ‘turas Ghóidrisce’). See further the commentary on Articles 18.7.1° and 44.2.5° where ‘gnó’ expresses respectively ‘interest’ and ‘affair’.

Ó Dónaill translates ‘rinne sé gnó dom’ as ‘it served my purpose’ and also cites ‘d’aon ghnó, on purpose’, as does Dinneen. ‘Gnóthaí teachlaigh’ translates ‘domestic purposes’ in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 1211), ‘gnóthaí’ usually translating ‘affairs’ in the Acts – see, for example, s9(1) of the Consumer Information Act, 1978, where ‘the Director of Consumer Affairs’ is styled ‘an Stiúrthóir Gnóthaí Tomhaltóirí’, with ‘the Department of Foreign Affairs’ being styled ‘an Roinn Gnóthaí Eachtracha’.

Turning to ‘purpose’ in the Acts, note that in Article 37 of the 1922 Constitution, ‘unless the purpose of the appropriation has in the same session been recommended’ is translated as ‘mara ndéanfar sa tsíosón céanna intinn a churtha i leithreasa do mhola’. In s3 of the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922, however, ‘This Act may be cited for all purposes as the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922’ is translated as ‘Chun gach críche féadfar an t-Acht um Bunreacht Shaor-stáit Éireann, 1922, do ghairm den Acht so’, ‘críoch’ being the general translation of ‘purpose’ in the Acts. In s14(c) of the Horse Industry Act, 1970, for example, ‘borrow money for capital or current purposes’ is translated as ‘airgead a fháil ar iasacht ... chun críocha caipitiúla nó críocha reatha’. In s6(2) of the Charities Act, 1973, ‘for such charitable purpose as may be so specified’ is translated as ‘chun cibé críche carthanúla a bheidh sonraithe amhlaidh’. Finally, note that ‘common purpose or design’ is translated as ‘comhchuspóir nó comhrún’ in Téarmaí Dlí.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú favours ‘gnó’ rather than ‘críoch’, remarking that ‘críoch’ expresses ‘purpose’ in the sense of ‘aim’, ‘object’. As the context of this Article involves speech, what is conveyed here is that in some speech situations English might be used, in others Irish might be used, that is, for that particular ‘purpose’/ ‘business’ (‘gnó’). Leo Kohn, The Constitution of the Irish Free State (London, 1932, p. 123) commented as follows on the corresponding provision of Article 4 of the 1922 Constitution:

An added proviso authorised Parliament to make special provisions for districts in which only one language was in general use. The object of this permissive clause, which allowed of the exclusive use of one language in districts where the other was not in use, was to provide for the contingency of the entry of Northern Ireland into the Free State and to preclude apprehensions of a bilingual fanaticism, which might impede that much desired consummation.

the Local Government (Toll Roads) Act, 1979, for example, where 'Vehicles belonging to and used for official purposes by the Defence Forces and the Garda Síochána' is translated as 'feithiclí de chuid Óglaigh na hÉireann agus feithiclí de chuid an Gharda Síochána a bheidh á n-úsáid chun críocha oifigiúla'. Regarding 'one or more' in the Acts, see s49(d) of the Finance Act, 1990, where 'Any tax assessable under one or more of the provisions of this section may be included' is translated as 'Féadfar aon cháin is inmheasúnaithe faoi aon fhoráil nó forálacha den alt seo a áireamh'. In s60 of the same Act, 'of one or more trustee savings bank' is translated as 'maidir le banc taisce iontaobhais amháin nó níos mó'. In s16 of the Courts Act, 1971, 'appoint one or more convenient places in every district court area' is translated as 'áit oiriúnach nó áiteanna oiriúnacha i ngach ceantar cúirte ... a cheapadh'. 'For any one or more of the following purposes' is translated as 'chun aon chríche nó críocha acu seo a leanas' in s54(1)(b) of the Agricultural Credit Act, 1978, and as 'chun aon chríche nó críocha de na críocha seo a leanas' in s26(1) of the Gas Act, 1976.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú notes, however, that the two examples of 'any' in the context of this section may have a specific sense – some authorities have suggested that the second example relates to a specific provision for Northern Ireland in the event of re-unification (see above) – and suggests translating 'any' as 'ar leith':

Féadfar socrú a dhéanamh le dlí, áfach, chun gurb aon teanga amháin den dá theanga sin a d'úsáidfi i ngnó oifigiúil ar leith, nó i ngnóthaí oifigiúla ar leith, ar fud an Stáit nó i gcuid ar leith de.

Regarding 'in aon chuid de', 'den Stát' is expressed here by the third personal singular of the prepositional pronoun 'de'. The noun would perhaps be repeated here in the Acts – see, for example, s33(1) of the Finance Act, 1990, where 'but excluding any payment or part thereof' is translated as 'ach gan aon íocaíocht nó cuid d'íocaíocht a áireamh'. Similarly, in s1(1) of the Performers' Protection Act, 1968, 'on which a performance of performers or part thereof is recorded' is translated as 'a bhfuil taibhiú, nó cuid de thaibhiú, ag taibheoirí taifeadta'. See further the commentary on Article 40.4.5°.

socrú 'To make provision' is generally expressed as 'socrú a dhéanamh' in the Constitution. 'Féadfar socrú a dhéanamh le dlí' expresses 'provision may be made by law' in Articles 10.3, 10.4, 15.2.2°, 19 and 40.4.7°, with 'provision shall be made by law' being expressed as 'ní foláir socrú a dhéanamh le dlí' in Article 16.6. 'Féadfar socrú a dhéanamh de réir dlí' expresses 'Provision may be made by law' in Article 40.6.1°ii. 'Save to the extent to which provision is made by this Constitution' is expressed as 'Ach amháin sa mhéid go ndéantar socrú leis an mBunreacht seo' in Article 49.2. In Article 14.4, 'The Council of State may ... make such provision as to them may seem meet' is expressed as 'Féadfaidh an Chomhairle Stáit ... cibé socrú is oircheas leo a dhéanamh', with 'The Oireachtas may make provision by law' being expressed as 'Tig leis an Oireachtas socrú a dhéanamh le dlí' in Article 15.15. Finally, in the amended Article 41.3.2°iii, 'such provision ... exists or will be made for the spouses' is rendered as 'go bhfuil cibé socrú ann, nó go ndéanfar cibé socrú ... le haghaidh na gceilí'.

On the other hand, 'provision(s)' without the accompanying verb 'make' is generally expressed not as 'socrú'/'socrúithe' but as 'foráil'/'forálacha' in the Constitution, as is the case in the Acts in general. 'The provisions of this Article' is expressed as 'forálacha an Airteagail seo' in Articles 12.5, 25.1 and 46.5; 'the provisions of this section' is expressed as 'forálacha an ailt seo' in Article 12.10.2°, with 'the provisions of section 1' being expressed as 'forálacha alt 1' in Article 46.5, 'the provisions of Article 19 hereof' being expressed as 'forálacha Airteagail 19 den Bhunreacht seo' in Article 18.7.2° and 'The provisions of Articles 34 and 35' being expressed as 'forálacha Airteagal 34 ná Airteagal 35' in Article 38.6. 'The provisions of this Constitution' is expressed as 'Na forálacha den Bhunreacht seo' in Article 14.5.1° and as 'forálacha an Bhunreacht seo' in Articles 28.1 and 28.2. 'Any provision of this Constitution' is expressed as 'foráil ar bith den Bhunreacht seo' in Article 46.1 and 'notwithstanding any other provision of this Constitution' is expressed as 'd'ainneoin aon fhorála eile den Bhunreacht seo' in Article 29.7.2°. 'Having regard to the provisions of this Constitution' is expressed as 'ag féachaint d'fhorálacha an Bhunreacht seo' in Articles 34.3.2°, 34.4.4° and 34.4.5°. 'Subject to the foregoing provisions of this Constitution' is expressed as 'Faoi chuimsiú na bhforálacha sin romhainn den Bhunreacht seo' in Article 36. 'Any of the provisions of this Constitution' is expressed as 'aon fhoráil d'fhorálacha an Bhunreacht seo' in Article 45 with 'any provision thereof' being expressed as 'aon fhoráil de' in Articles 27.4.2° and 48. 'Repugnant to any provision thereof' is expressed as 'in aghaidh aon fhorála de(n) Bhunreacht seo' in Articles 15.4.1°, 15.4.2°, 26.1.1°, 26.3.1° and 27.4.2°.

'Of the provisions of such law' is expressed as 'ar fhorálacha an dlí sin' in Article 25.4.5°. 'The validity of a law, or any provision of a law' is expressed as 'bailíocht dhlí nó fhorála ar bith de dhlí', and 'the validity of a provision of a law' as 'bailíocht fhorála de dhlí', in Article 34.3.3°, with 'the corresponding provision' being expressed therein as 'an fhoráil chomhréire'. 'Any provision or provisions of such Bill' is expressed as 'aon fhoráil nó aon fhorálacha áirithe de' in Article 26.1.1°, with 'any provision of a Bill' being expressed as 'aon fhoráil de' in Article 26.3.1° and 'the said provision' (of a Bill) as 'an fhoráil sin' in Article 27.4.2°. 'The provisions of the foregoing sub-section' is expressed as 'forálacha an fho-ailt sin romhainn' in Article 47.2.2°. 'The foregoing provisions of this Article' is expressed as 'na forálacha sin romhainn den Airteagal seo' in Articles 14.4 and 18.10.1°, with 'in the foregoing provisions' being expressed as 'sna forálacha sin romhainn' in Article 43.2.1°. 'Subject to the foregoing provisions of this Article' is expressed as 'Faoi chuimsiú na bhforálacha sin romhainn den Airteagal seo' in Articles 16.7 and 30.6, with 'in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this section' being expressed as 'de réir na bhforálacha sin romhainn den alt seo' in Article 27.5.2°. 'Subject to the subsequent provisions of this section' is expressed as 'faoi chuimsiú na bhforálacha inár ndiaidh den alt seo' in Articles 14.5.1° and 22.2.1°. Finally, 'provisions dealing with all ... of the following matters' is expressed as 'forálacha le haghaidh iomlán na n-ábhar seo a leanas' in Article 22.1.1°.

With 'provision(s)' referred to so frequently in the Constitution, the consistency with which 'socrú a dhéanamh' expresses 'to make provision' as against 'foráil' expressing 'provision' outside of this context is noteworthy. However, in Article 18.4.2°, 'Provision may be made by law' is expressed as 'Féadfar foráil a dhéanamh le dlí', this being followed by 'in the manner to be provided by law', expressed as 'ar an modh, a shocrófar le dlí'. In Article 29.4.5°, following the eleventh Amendment of the Constitution, 1992, 'No provisions of this Constitution (invalidates)' is rendered as 'Ní dhéanann aon fhoráileamh atá sa Bhunreacht seo ...', 'foráileamh' being the form of 'foráil' in the enrolled text. 'And comply with the provisions of the law relating to the election of members of Dáil Éireann' is expressed as 'agus a chomhlionann coinneollacha an dlí i dtaobh toghcháin comhaltai do Dháil Éireann' in Article 16.1.2° while, finally, in Article 45.2.i, 'the means of making reasonable provision for their domestic needs' is expressed as 'caoi chun soláthar réasúnta a dhéanamh do riachtanais a dteaghlach'.

Turning to 'socrú', this is the verbal noun of 'socraigh', the first person singular, present tense, of which, 'socraim', is translated as 'I settle' in Tearmaí Dlí, where 'cás i gcomhair comhairle (agus chun imeachtaí a shocrú)' is translated as 'case to advise (and settle proceedings)'. 'Socraigh' is translated as 'settle' in Ó Dónaill, also, with 'agree upon, arrange, decide' as one set of secondary senses of the verb, citing 'cás a shocrú, to settle a case', 'lá a shocrú, to fix a date', 'cleamhnas a shocrú, to arrange a marriage' and 'luach a shocrú, to agree a price'. Ó Dónaill cites s.v. 'socrú' ('settlement'), 'socrú dáta, coinne, arrangement of date, of tryst', 'socrú gnóthaí, arrangement of affairs' and 'socrú a dhéanamh le duine faoi rud, to reach an agreement with somebody about something'. Dinneen translates 'socrughadh' as 'act of levelling, evening, smoothing, planing, calming, quieting, comforting, settling, arranging, establishing, adjusting; agreement, arrangement, adjustment, settlement ...' and cites the saying 'socrughadh na cailliche mar do b'áil léi féin, the old lady's arrangement – to suit herself'. Only four examples of 'socrugud' are cited in DIL, where this verbal noun is translated as 'act of settling, establishing', with only two examples of the verb 'socraigid' ('settles, establishes, pacifies') being cited, neither of which is of great antiquity, this also being the case with the citations of 'socrugad'. 'Socraigid' is based on the adjective 'socair', translated as (a) 'smooth, even, level' and (b) 'easy, quiet, tranquil' in DIL, the first examples of both senses cited being taken from Bethada Náem nÉirenn (the Lives of the Irish Saints). See further the commentary on Article 42.4.

'Foráil' is translated as 'provision' in Ó Dónaill, following the abbreviation for 'Jurisprudence', with 'forálacha reachta, provisions of an enactment' being cited. In earlier literature, according to Ó Dónaill, it had the sense of (a) 'command, injunction' and (b) 'commendation, offer'. Dinneen translates 'foráil' as 'a command (for foráileamh), a gift, an offer (for ofráil)'. The forms 'eráil' and 'iráil' are found in sources from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards and are translated as (a) 'enjoining, urging, instigating', (b) 'requesting, a request' and (c) 'commanding, recommending, offering' in DIL, s. v. 'eráil'. The earlier form of 'foráil', 'foróil', also gave us 'foláil' (which is used negatively with the copula in the phrase 'ní foláil' ['it is necessary'], a phrase found many times in the Constitution) – see DIL s.v. 'foróil'. See further the commentary on Article 14.4.

As we have said above, 'foráil' translates 'provision' in the Acts, but 'to make provision' – found in the Long Title of many Acts – is translated as 'socrú do dhéanamh' or 'socrú a dhéanamh'. See the Long Title of the Public Hospitals Act, 1933, for example, where 'and also to make provision for the general improvement of the facilities' is translated as 'agus fós chun socrú do dhéanamh chun na saoráidí ... d'fheabhsú ... go generalta'. Staying with early Acts, while we find 'An Act to make provision for the payment of the salary of the Governor-General of the Irish Free State', in the Long Title of the Governor-General's Salary and Establishment Act, 1923, translated as 'Acht chun soláthar do dhéanamh chun tuarastal Seanascail Shaorstáit Éireann d'íoc', we find the following in the Preamble: 'And whereas it is expedient that specific provision should be made for the payment .... Agus de bhri go bhfuil sé oiriúnach socrú speisialta do dhéanamh chun go n-íocfaí ...'. Regarding the word 'provision' itself, in s64(1) of the Electoral Act, 1923, 'All rules, regulations ... or provisions made or framed by the Minister for Finance' is translated as 'Gach riail, rialachán ... no foráil dá ndéanfaidh no dá gcúmfaidh an t-Aire Airgid', for example, and in s56 (2) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1931, 'notwithstanding any express provision to the contrary' is expressed as 'd'ainneoin aon fhorála adeir a mhalairt go follus'. See further the commentary on Article 15.2.2°.

ina haonteanga In Article 15.2.1°, 'The sole and exclusive power of making laws for the State is hereby vested in the Oireachtas' is expressed as 'Bheirtear don Oireachtas amháin leis seo an t-aon chumhacht chun dlíthe a dhéanamh don Stát'. In Article 15.6.1°, 'The right to raise and maintain military or armed forces is vested exclusively in the Oireachtas' is expressed as 'Is ag an Oireachtas amháin atá de cheart fórsaí míleata nó fórsaí armtha a bhunú agus a chothabháil' and 'The application of those principles in the making of laws shall be the care of the Oireachtas exclusively' is expressed as 'Is ar an Oireachtas amháin a bheidh sé de chúram na bunrialacha sin a fheidhmiú i ndéanamh dlíthe' in Article 45.

'Aonteangach' is given as a headword in Ó Dónaill, who translates this adjective as 'unilingual'. 'Aon-', i.e. 'aon' as a prefix, is translated as 'one, uni-, mono-' in Ó Dónaill and as 'one-, united, uni-, mono-' in Dinneen, who states that sometimes it has no special meaning. DIL s.v. 'oen', cites the following example of 'oen' compounded with the adjective 'bélrach' (formed from the noun 'béla' ['language', Modern Irish 'béarla']) from the Passions and Homilies from the Leabhar Breac (composed in the second half of the eleventh century): 'dorath na n-ilbelra doib ... is iat oenbelraig có sin .i. Ebrai' (i.e. [he] gave them the gift of many languages ... they until then 'speaking [only] one language', i.e. Hebrew).

'Ina' in this phrase is made up of the preposition 'i' plus the feminine third person singular possessive pronoun. Ó Dónaill gives 'of arrangement, numbers, parts; after verbs of dividing, changing, etc.' as one of the senses of such constructions, citing 'tháinig siad ina mbeirteanna, ina nduine agus ina nduine, they came in twos, one by one' and 'ina iomláine, in its entirety'. Dinneen translates 'i' with 'tá' and 'possessive' as 'I am now a, am as a, have become', citing 'tá sé 'na fhear, he is (i.e. has become) a man'.

translated as ‘ceart eisiatlach’ in Téarmaí Dlí. In s3 of the Schedule to the Waterford Harbour Commissioners (Acquisition of Property) Act, 1964, ‘The Board shall have at all times the right to keep and to have exclusive use of the railway siding ... for all purposes’ is translated as ‘Beidh sé de cheart ag an mBord gach tráth an taobhach iarnróid ... a choimeád agus a úsáid eisiatlach a bheith acu chun na gcríocha uile ...’. In s22(b)(i) of the Trade Marks Act, 1963, ‘that the proprietor shall disclaim any right to the exclusive use of any part of the trade mark’ is translated as ‘go séanfáidh an dílseánach aon cheart chun úsáide eisiatlaí aon pháirte den trádmharc’. Note that ‘eisiatlach’ is given as the standard form of ‘eisiatlach’ in Ó Dónaill. Note also above that Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú, rather than using ‘eisiatlach’, translates this phrase as ‘chun gurb aon teanga amháin den dá theanga sin’. See further the commentary on Articles 15.2.1<sup>o</sup> and 15.6.1<sup>o</sup>.

Turning to the translation of ‘use’ with an adjective, see s56(1)(a) of the Road Traffic Act, 1961, for example, where ‘some other person who would be liable for injury caused by the negligent use of the vehicle at that time by the user’ is translated as ‘duine éigin eile a bheadh faoi dhliteanas i leith díobhála a thiocthadh den úsáidire sin, d’úsáid na feithicle go faillíoch an t-am sin’. Finally, ‘provision for the use of the seal of the society’ is translated as ‘socrú i dtaobh séala an chumainn a úsáid’ in s10(1)(n) of the Building Societies Act, 1976, for example.

ar fud ... ar fad ‘Ar fud’ is translated as ‘throughout’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘ar fud na háite, all over the place’ and ‘chuaigh a chlú ar fud na tíre, his fame spread throughout the land’. Dinneen translates ‘ar fuaid’ as ‘throughout, all over’, with ‘ar fud’ translated as ‘throughout, all over, through the length of, among, amongst’. ‘Ar fut’ is translated as ‘through, throughout (=for fut)’ in DIL s.v. ‘fot, fat’ (the earlier form of ‘fad’), where ‘ar fud Éirenn’ is cited from the eleventh-century Cogadh Gaedhel re Gallaibh.

sin This demonstrative pronoun sometimes translates ‘the said’ in the Acts also – see s39 of the Finance Act, 1990, for example, where ‘then in taxing the said trade for the chargeable period in which he commenced to carry on the said trade’ is translated as ‘ansin, le linn an trádáil sin a bheith á cur faoi cháin in aghaidh na tréimhse inmhuirthe a thosaigh sé ag seoladh na trádála sin’. We also find ‘a dúradh’ – see, for example s17(3)(b) of the Central Bank Act, 1971, where ‘A person who has in his power, possession or procurement any of the books or records aforesaid’ is translated as ‘Aon duine a bhfuil aon leabhar nó taifead acu sin a dúradh, ina chumhacht, ina sheilbh nó ar fáil aige’. See the commentary on Article 6.2 for ‘sin’ expressing ‘these’. ‘Sin’ also translates ‘such’ in the Acts, along with ‘den sórt sin’ – ‘comhalta den sórt sin’, for example, translates ‘such a member’ and ‘an comhalta sin’ translates ‘such member’.

ENGLISH TEXT

On the coming into operation of this Constitution any person who was a citizen of Saorstát Éireann immediately before the coming into operation of this Constitution shall become and be a citizen of Ireland.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 ‘Shall become and be’ is expressed simply as ‘is’ (‘is’) in the Irish text.
- 2 Note that while ‘Saorstát Éireann’ is found in both the English and Irish texts, ‘Éire’ is expressed as ‘Ireland’ in the English text.

Commentary

is This is the form of both the present and future affirmative of the copula – see Ó Dónaill s.v. ‘is’ and An Caighdeán Oifigiúil (1995, p. 80). Ó Dónaill cites ‘(Is) fear maith é, he is a good man’ and, with the copula following the predicate, along with the neutral pronoun ‘ea’, ‘fear maith is ea é, he is a good man’. Article 3 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

Every person ... domiciled in the area of the jurisdiction of the Irish Free State ... is a citizen of the Irish Free State. Saoránach de Shaorstát Éireann iseadh gach duine ... ar a bhfuil buan-chomhnuí i líomatáiste údaráis Shaorstáit Éireann.

Regarding ‘shall become and be’ in the Acts, see s6 of the Third Schedule to the Health Act, 1970, where ‘In any action ... the body specified in the relevant order under section 34 shall on the commencement become and be a party in the place of the dissolved body' is translated as 'Tiocfaidh an comhlacht a shonrófar san ordú iomchuí faoi alt 34 agus beidh sé, ar an tosach feidhme, ina pháirtí in ionad an chomhlachta in aon chéim'. In s26(2) of the National College of Art and Design Act, 1971, 'Every person ... who, immediately before the establishment day, was a member of the academic ... staff of the College ... shall become and be a member of the academic ... staff of the College' is translated as 'Gach duine ... a bhí, díreach roimh an lá bunaithe, ina chomhalta d'fhoireann acadúil ... an Choláiste ... tiocfaidh sé chun bheith agus beidh sé ina chomhalta d'fhoireann acadúil ... an Choláiste'. Similarly, in s3(2) of the Dublin and Blessington Steam Tramway (Abandonment) Act, 1932, 'each of such three persons shall become and be a member of the Committee' is translated as 'tiocfaidh gach duine den tríúr san chun bheith agus beidh sé ina bhall den Choiste'.

Ar theacht i ngníomh 'Gníomh' is translated as 'act' in Téarmaí Dlí, 'action' being given as one of this noun's senses in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'rud a chur i ngníomh' as 'to put something into action' and cites 'má chuireann tú mo chomhairle i ngníomh, if you act on my advice'. Dinneen also cites 'cuirim i ngníomh, I perform, practise, put into practice, execute' but, like Ó Dónaill, does not cite 'tar i ngníomh'. DIL, however s.v. 'gním', translates 'do-icc i ngním' as 'is carried into effect' and cites 'in fogail ... ni tainic a ngím' ('the injury ... did not take effect') from an early Irish law-tract. 'Gním', as verbal noun of 'gníid', is translated principally as 'doing, performing, executing' in DIL, where 'gním pectho' ('the commission of sin') is cited from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles.

While 'operation' is translated as 'oibriú' in Téarmaí Dlí and in the Acts in general today, 'come into operation' is generally translated as 'teacht i ngníomh', as it is in Foclóir Oifigiúil, for example. The stock phrase in the Acts, 'this Act shall come into operation on such day or days as ... may be fixed therefor' is translated as 'tiocfaidh an tAcht seo i ngníomh cibé lá nó laethanta a shocrófar ... chuige sin' in s1(4) of the Health Act, 1970, for example. In s2(2)(b) of the Local Elections Act, 1973, 'the terms of office of members of local authorities current when the order comes into operation shall stand extended' is translated as 'beidh téarmaí oifige comhaltaí d'údarais áitiúla, arb iad na téarmaí reatha iad ar theacht i ngníomh don ordú, arna síneadh'.

Looking at the earlier Acts, in Article 3 of the 1922 Constitution, 'at the time of the coming into operation of this Constitution' is translated as 'le linn an Bhun-reachta so do theacht i bhfeidhm'. In s20(2) of the Finance Act, 1929, however, 'This Part of this Act shall ... come into operation on the 6th day of April, 1930' is translated as 'Tiocfaidh an Chuid seo den Acht so i ngníomh an 6adh lá d'Abrán, 1930'.

saoránach This headword is translated as 'citizen' in Ó Dónaill and as 'freeman' in Dinneen, that being its literal meaning. 'Saer' in Old Irish usually glosses Latin 'liber', DIL citing 'eter sóir et dóir eter mug et coimidid' ('both free and unfree, both servant and lord') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. 'A citizen of the Irish Free State' is translated as 'Saoránach de Shaorstát Éireann' in Article 3 of the 1922 Constitution, as we have seen. In s11(4)(a) of the Air Navigation and Transport Act, 1973, 'the act is committed by a person who is a citizen of Ireland' is translated as 'más gníomh é ag duine is saoránach d'Éirinn'. 'Citizen of Ireland' is differentiated from 'Irish citizen' in s2 of the Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act, 1956, where "'Irish citizen" means a citizen of Ireland' is translated as 'ciallaíonn "saoránach Éireannach" saoránach d'Éirinn', with 'Every person who, immediately before the passing of this Act, was a citizen of Ireland shall remain an Irish citizen' being translated as 'Gach duine ba shaoránach d'Éirinn díreach roimh an Acht seo a rith, fanfaidh sé ina shaoránach Éireannach' in s5(2). In s20 of the Finance Act, 1990, however, 'or that being a citizen of Ireland he is not ordinarily resident in the State' is translated as 'nó gur saoránach Éireannach é ach nach sa Stát atá gnáthchónaí air'.

Direct gender-proofed translation

Ar theacht i ngníomh don Bhunreacht seo tiocfaidh aon duine a bhí, díreach roimh theacht i ngníomh don Bhunreacht seo, ina shaoránach nó ina saoránach de Shaorstát Éireann,<sup>1</sup> chun bheith agus beidh sé nó sí ina shaoránach nó ina saoránach d'Éirinn<sup>2</sup>.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is in accordance with law that (the) getting/receiving and (the) losing/loss (of) Irish nationality and citizenship will henceforth be determined.

ENGLISH TEXT

The future acquisition and loss of Irish nationality and citizenship shall be determined in accordance with law.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The Irish text, both in bringing forward 'Is de réir dlí' and in using 'feasta', 'henceforth', might be interpreted as implying that, formerly, receiving and losing Irish citizenship was not decided in accordance with law, i.e. from now on it will be decided in accordance with law.
- 2 'Future acquisition' is expressed as 'fáil ... feasta' ('acquisition henceforth') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 3 of the 1922 Constitution concludes as follows:

... the conditions governing the future acquisition and termination of citizenship in the Irish Free State ... shall be determined by law. ... socrófar le dlí na coiníollacha a rialóidh feasta saoránacht d'fháil agus do chríochnú i Saorstát Éireann.

Commentary

fáil The verbal noun of 'faigh', 'fáil', is translated as 'getting, finding' in Ó Dónaill, with 'fáil ruda' being translated as 'the procurement of something; the finding of something'. Dinneen translates 'fagháil' as 'act of finding, getting, receiving, obtaining, procuring; means of procuring, chance, opportunity; an income'. The earlier form 'faghál', verbal noun of 'fo-gaib', is translated in DIL as (a) 'finding, getting, obtaining, both of voluntary and involuntary acquisition' and (b) 'that which is obtained or gained'.

The Long Title of the Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act, 1956 ('Acht Náisiúntachta agus Saoránachta Éireann, 1956'), 'An Act to make provision for the acquisition and loss of Irish nationality and citizenship', is translated as 'Acht do dhéanamh socrúithe maidir le fáil agus cailliúint náisiúntacht agus saoránacht Éireann'. The Long Title of the 1935 Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act, 'An Act to provide for ... the acquisition by birth or otherwise of citizenship of Saorstát Éireann, and the forfeiture or loss of such citizenship', is translated as 'Acht chun socrúithe ... do dhéanamh ... maidir le saoránacht Shaorstáit Éireann d'fháil de bhíthin beirthe nó ar shli eile agus maidir leis an saoránacht san do dhul ar ceal no do chailliúint'. In s100(1) of the Housing Act, 1966, 'Where ... a cottage ... is acquired by the housing authority to whom, before the acquisition, the annuity was required to be paid' is translated as 'I gcás ... ina bhfaighidh an t-údarás tithíochta iostán ... agus gur dlíodh, roimh an bhfáil, blianacht a íoc leis an údarás tithíochta'.

cailleadh The verbal noun of 'caill', 'cailleadh', is translated as 'loss' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'cailleadh airgid' as 'loss of money'. Note that 'cailleamhaint' is the form found in the enrolled text, the standard form of which, 'cailliúint' is given as a separate headword in Ó Dónaill, translated as 'loss', this form also being given as a variant verbal noun of 'caill'. Dinneen translates 'cailleamhain' as 'loss, damage, failure, neglect; act of losing; act of disappointing', giving 'cailleamhaint' as a variant form. 'Caill(ain)', late verbal noun of 'caillid', is translated as 'act of losing' in DIL. 'Caillid', 'loses', is a later development of 'coillid', 'damages, violates, destroys', based on 'coll', translated as (a) 'destruction, spoiling, injury; later loss', (b) 'castration', (c) 'deflowering' and (d) 'violation' in DIL, i.e. Modern Irish 'coill', verbal noun 'coilleadh' – Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú emphasises that 'caill'/'cailleadh' and 'coill'/'coilleadh' have different phonological forms in the spoken dialects.

Turning to the Acts, in s9(1) of the Social Welfare (Occupational Injuries) Act, 1966, 'if he suffers as a result of the accident from loss of physical or mental faculty' is translated as 'má fhulaingíonn sé cailleadh cumais choirp nó mheabhrach de dheasca na tionóisce'. 'In respect of loss of time' is translated as 'i leith cailleadh ama' in s2(a) of the Schedule to the Trade Union Act, 1975.

'Loss' is translated as 'cailteanas' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'pecuniary loss' is translated as 'cailteanas airgid', with 'actual loss', 'consequential loss' and 'constructive loss' being translated respectively as 'cailteanas iarbhir', 'cailteanas iarmhartach' and 'cailteanas inchiallath'. See s307(1) of the Income Tax, 1967, for an example from the Acts of 'loss' in the financial sense, 'where in any year of assessment any person has sustained a loss in any trade' being translated as 'má tharlaíonn aon bhliain mheasúnachta gur bhain cailteanas do dhuine ar bith in aon trádáil'.

náisiúntacht ... Éireann 'Náisiúntacht' is translated by Ó Dónaill as (1) 'nationality' and (2) 'homeliness, naturalness, good nature'. Dinneen simply translates this headword as 'nationality', followed by the abbreviation for 'recent'.

As regards there being no definite article before 'Éireann', see the commentary on Article 12.8. Ó Dónaill cites 'plúr ban Éireann, the flower of Irish womanhood' and 'dúshlán fhear Éireann, ar fhearaibh Éireann, a challenge to the men of Ireland'. Dinneen notes s.v. 'Éire', 'generally with article in genitive'; he cites 'lucht cuarta Éireann, tramps' and 'i bhfad Éireann, for a very long time, a very long distance'. DIL cites 'cend fáithe nÉirenn' (i.e. head of the prophets of Ireland) from the ninth-century Féilire Oengusso ('Calendar of Oengus').

'The Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act, 1986' is cited in Irish as 'Acht Náisiúntachta agus Saoránachta Éireann, 1986', and in s3 thereof 'accepting Irish citizenship as post-nuptial citizenship' is translated as 'ag glacadh le saoránacht Éireann mar shaoránacht iarphósta'. This Act amends (and therefore adheres in language to) the Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act, 1956, where we find the following definition in s2:

'naturalised Irish citizen' means a person who acquires Irish citizenship by naturalisation .... ciallaíonn 'saoránach Éireannach eadóirsithe' duine a fuair saoránacht Éireann trí eadóirsiú.

Note, however, that 'his nationality (if not Irish)' is translated therein as 'a náisiúntacht (mura náisiúntacht Éireannach í)'. See the commentary on the preceding subsection regarding 'saoránach d'Éirinn' / 'saoránach Éireannach'. Note that in the New Ireland Forum Report (1984, 4.13), 'broadening the sense of Irish identity' is translated as 'fairsingiú a dhéanamh ar an mbrí atá le sainiúlacht Éireannach'. In s62 of the Finance Act, 1990, 'Irish equivalent profits' is translated as 'brabúis choibhéiseacha Éireannacha'.

feasta This adverb is translated as 'from now on, henceforth' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'déan mo chomhairle feasta, take my advice for the future'. Dinneen translates 'feasta' as 'now, from this on; at any moment; henceforth, ever more, ever again, in future ...'. Note that the future sense is not so pronounced in some of Dinneen's examples: 'bead-sa ag imtheacht feasta, I am going now' and 'tá do dhóthain ráidhte agat feasta, you have said enough'. 'Now, forthwith' is given as the first sense of 'festa' in DIL, followed by the sense 'from this time on, henceforth', with examples of this sense being cited from the twelfth-century Book of Leinster onwards. 'Festa' is rarely found with a past tense, according to DIL, 'a sgath festa fuarobhair' ('you have enjoyed the best [of the world] by now'), from a miscellaneous collection of Classical Irish religious poetry, Dán Dé, being one of only two such examples cited.

Turning to the Acts, in the Margin Title of s8 of the Labourers Act, 1936, we find 'Future acquisition of land for purposes of the Principal Act' translated as 'Talamh do gheobhfar feasta chun crícheanna na bPríomh-Achtanna'. In s93(4) of the Companies Act, 1963, 'the benefit of that provision may be given ... to all trustees of the deed, present and future' is translated as 'féadfar tairbhe na forála sin a thabhairt ... do gach duine is iontaobhaí faoin ngníomhas, faoi láthair agus feasta' and in s211(b) 'the estimated value of his liability to future calls as well as calls already made' is translated as 'luach measta a dhliteanas i leith glaochanna feasta, chomh maith le glaochanna a rinneadh cheana féin'. 'Feasta' more often translates 'hereinafter' in the Acts, the stock phrase 'hereinafter in this subsection referred to as' being translated as 'dá ngairtear ... anseo feasta san fho-alt seo' in s46 of the Finance Act, 1990, for example.

Turning specifically to 'future' in the Acts, in s24 of the 'Clare County Scheme' in the First Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'In future only Nurses with Medical and Surgical training shall be admitted to the County Nursing Staff' is translated as 'Ní leigfar d'éinne feasta bheith ar Fhuirinn Bhanaltrais na Contae ach Banaltrai a múineadh i Leigheas agus i Máin-liaghas'. In subsection 3 of the preceding section, on the other hand, 'the salaries (in reference to future appointments)' is translated as 'na tuarastail (maidir le ceapanna a déanfar san am a thiocfidh)'. Turning to the modern Acts, 'Subject to and charged with the future payment of an annuity' is translated as 'faoi réir blianachta agus faoi mhuirear a híoctha sa todhchaí'. In s20(2)(g) of the Judicial Separation and Family Law Reform Act, 1989, 'the degree to which the future earning capacity of a spouse is impaired' is translated as 'a mhéid a dhéantar dochar do chumas tuillimh céile sa todhchaí', while in s17(2)(a) of the same Act, 'to provide for the future security of the spouse' is translated as 'chun soláthar d'urraíocht thodhchaíoch an chéile'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú recommends expressing this Article as 'Feasta, is de réir dlí a dhéanfar fáil agus cailleadh náisiúntachta agus saoránachta Éireannaí a chinneadh' rather than using the phrase 'sa todhchaí'.

saoránacht Simply translated as 'citizenship' in Ó Dónaill, this term being cited above from Article 3 of the 1922 Constitution. See the commentary above on 'náisiúntacht' for citations from the Acts and see the commentary on the previous subsection s.v. 'saoránach'.

cinn 'Cinnim' is translated as 'I determine (issue, etc.); I find (as a fact, etc.)' in Téarmaí Dlí – see the commentary on Article 1.

de réir This prepositional phrase translates 'in accordance with' in Téarmaí Dlí. See the commentary on Article 1.

It is not permitted to withhold Irish citizenship and nationality from any person because that person is male or female.

ENGLISH TEXT

No person may be excluded from Irish nationality and citizenship by reason of the sex of such person.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Ní cead', 'it is not permitted', differs in tone from 'no (person) may be' of the English text; this Irish phrase expresses 'shall not' in many Articles.
- 2 The English text is concerned with the exclusion of a person from Irish nationality and citizenship, while the Irish text is concerned with nationality and citizenship being withheld from a person.
- 3 The Irish text spells out what is meant by 'by reason of the sex of such person', i.e. because that person is male or female.

Commentary

a cheilt Dinneen translates 'ceilim rud ar' as 'I conceal something from, I refuse one something' and cites 'dá mbeadh airgead agam ní cheilfinn ort é, if I had money I would not refuse it to you'. 'Ceilt bhreithe' is translated as 'concealment of birth' in Téarmaí Dlí, 'ceilt' being translated as 'concealment' in Ó Dónaill also, but with the secondary sense of 'withholding, denial', Ó Dónaill citing 'ceilt dí ar dhuine, withholding of drink from someone'. 'Ceilt' is the verbal noun of 'ceil', Ó Dónaill citing 'cheil tú do chabhair orm, you withheld your help from me'. DIL s.v. 'ceilid', gives examples of this verb in the sense of 'withholds, hoards, stints; suppresses, destroys' from the twelfth-century Book of Leinster onwards.

Turning to the Acts, in s293(1)(i) of the Companies Act, 1963, 'a dhéanfaidh ... aon leabhar nó páipéar ... a cheilt, a dhíothú, a lot nó a fhalsú, nó a bheidh ionpháirteach amhlaidh sa cheilt ... sin' translates 'conceals, destroys, mutilates, or falsifies or is privy to the concealment ... of any book or paper'. In s41(3)(a) of the Redundancy Payments Act, 1967, 'mar gheall ar aon fhíoras ábhartha a cheilt go toiliúil' translates 'by reason of the wilful concealment of any material fact'.

Regarding 'exclude' in the Acts, see s13(4) of the Sale of Goods and Supply of Services Act, 1980, where 'in a case in which the implied condition ... is either not incorporated in the contract or has been effectively excluded from the contract' is translated as 'i gcás nach cuid den chonradh nó gur coinníodh go héifeachtach as an gconradh ... an coinníoll intuigthe', while in s14(b) of the First Schedule to the National Institute for Higher Education, Limerick, Act, 1980, 'the conditions under which a student ... may be excluded from it' is translated as 'na coinníollacha faoina bhféadfar mac léinn ... a choinneáil amach as'. Note that in s73(1)(a) of the Building Societies Act, 1989, 'excluding the right to' is translated as 'an ceart a shéanadh chun' and, finally, that in s4 of the Erasmus Smith Schools Act, 1938, 'Provided always that ... no person of any Protestant denomination shall by reason of his religious beliefs be excluded from the benefits thereof' is translated as 'Ar choinníoll ná déanfar ... duine ar bith d'aon aicme Phrotastúnach do dhúnadh amach ó thairbhe an chéanna mar gheall ar a chreideamh'.

'I exclude' is translated as 'eisiaim' in Téarmaí Dlí and this term is accordingly employed in many modern Acts. In s5(1) of the First Schedule to the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, for example, 'there shall be excluded from the sums allowable as a deduction any expenditure' is translated as 'eisiafar ó na suimeanna in lamhála mar asbhaint ... aon chaiteachas'. In s47(1) of the Redundancy Payments Act, 1967, 'in respect of a class of employee excluded from the Act by section 4' is translated as 'i leith aicme fostaí atá eisiata ón Acht seo le halt 4'. 'And may publish notices fixing a day or days within which creditors not entered on the list are to claim to be so entered or are to be excluded from the right of objecting to the reduction' is translated as 'féadfaidh sí fógraí a fhoilsiú ag socrú lá nó laethanta ar laistigh de nó díobh a bheidh ar chreidiúnaithe nár cuireadh ar an liosta éileamh a dhéanamh chun iad a chur air amhlaidh nó a bheidh siad le heisiamh ón gceart chun agóid a dhéanamh in aghaidh an laghdaithe' in s73(2)(b) of the Companies Act, 1963. Finally, in s59(4) of the Fisheries Act, 1980, 'In case a fishery is by an order ... excluded from the application of subsections (1) and (2)' is translated as 'I gcás iascach a bheith eisiata ... ó fheidhm fho-ailt (1) agus (2)'.

Ní cead Literally 'it is not permitted'. Here 'ní cead ... a' expresses 'no ... may'. In Article 15.14, 'Ní cead d'aon duine' expresses 'No person may'; in Article 40.2.2°, 'Ní cead d'aon saoránach' expresses 'No ... may be ... by any citizen' and in Article 16.1.4°, 'Ní cead do thoghthóir' expresses 'No voter may'. 'Ní cead do' usually expresses 'shall not' in the Constitution – 'Ní cead don Uachtarán' expresses 'The President shall not' in Articles 12.6.3°, 12.9, 26.1.3° and 32, expressing 'No ... shall be ... by him' in Article 13.11. 'Ní cead don Stát' expresses 'The State shall not' in Articles 42.3.1° and 44.2.3° and 'shall not be ... by the State' in Article 40.2.1°. 'Ní cead don Oireachtas' expresses 'The Oireachtas shall not' in Articles 15.4.1° and 15.5. 'Ní cead d'aon duine' expresses 'No person shall' in Article 12.4.3° and, finally, 'Ní cead do cheachtar ... glacadh le' expresses 'No ... shall be adopted by either' in Article 12.10.4°.

'Is cead', on the other hand, expresses 'may' in Articles 26.1.1°, 27.1, 40.6.1°iii and 46.1 where we find, respectively, 'Is cead don Uachtarán' ('The President may'), 'Is cead do thromlach' ('A majority ... may'), 'is cead dlíthe a achtú' ('Laws ... may be enacted') and 'Is cead foráil ... a leasú' ('Any provision ... may be amended'). In Article 13.9, however, 'is cead don Uachtarán ... a oibriú' expresses 'shall be exercisable ... by him' and in Article 21.1.1° 'shall be initiated in Dáil Éireann only' is expressed as 'Is i nDáil Éireann amháin is cead'.

Only in the current Article does 'ní cead ... a' (i.e. as against 'ní cead do') express 'no ... may', this phrase generally expressing either 'no ... shall' or 'shall not'. 'Ní cead aon ní ... a agairt' expresses 'Nothing ... shall be invoked' in Articles 18.4.3°, 28.3.3° and 40.4.6°, 'No law shall be enacted' being expressed as 'Ní cead aon dlí a achtú' in Articles 16.1.3° and 34.4.4° and as 'Ní cead dlí a achtú' in Article 16.2.6°. 'Ní cead ... a bheith' expresses '... shall not be' in Articles 12.6.1°, 16.2.2°, 30.4 and 33.3, with 'No judge shall be' being expressed as 'Ní cead aon bhreitheamh a bheith' in Article 35.3. 'Ní cead aon duine a thriail' expresses 'No person shall be tried' in Article 38.1, this clause being expressed as 'Ní cead duine a thriail' in Article 38.5, with 'ní cead é a thriail' expressing 'shall not be tried' in Article 38.4.2°. 'Ní cead tuairim ar bith eile ... a chraoladh' expresses 'no other opinion ... shall be pronounced' in Articles 26.2.2° and 34.4.5°, with 'ní cead a nochtadh' expressing 'nor shall ... be disclosed' in those same Articles. 'Ní cead aird a thabhairt' expresses 'shall not be entertained' in Article 12.10.3°, 'ní cead aon cheist ... a tharraing anuas' expressing 'no ... question shall be raised' in Article 34.3.2°. 'Ní cead laghdú a dhéanamh' expresses 'shall not be reduced' in Article 35.5 and 'shall not be diminished' in Article 12.11.3°. 'Ní cead aon idirdhealú' expresses 'shall contain no discrimination' in Article 40.6.2° and 'ní cead idirdhealú a dhéanamh inti' expresses 'shall not discriminate' in Article 44.2.4°. 'No ... shall be deprived of his ... liberty' is expressed as 'Ní cead a shaoirse ... a bhaint' in Article 40.4.1°, 'The property ... shall not be diverted' being expressed as 'Ní cead maoin a bhaint' in Article 44.2.6°. 'A judge ... shall not be' is expressed as 'Ní cead breitheamh a ...' in Article 35.4.1°, 'The Comptroller and Auditor General shall not be ...' being expressed as 'Ní cead an tArd-Reachtair Cuntas agus Ciste a ...' in Article 33.5.1°. In Article 46.4 'shall not contain any' is expressed as 'ní cead ... a bheith ann', with 'Ní cead níos mó ná ...' expressing 'Not more than ... shall be' in Article 18.7.2°. Finally, in Article 40.5, 'ní cead dul isteach ann' expresses 'shall not be ... entered'.

As we have stated in the introductory essay, in his monograph Dúchas na Gaeilge (1996, pp. 213ff.), Maolmhaoldhóg Ó Ruairc, a translator in Brussels with the European Union, highlights the various ways in which 'may' and 'shall' are 'translated' in the Constitution, stating that there are (as we have seen above) over twenty cases in which 'is cead/ní cead' (literally 'it is / is not permitted') is used to translate 'shall' (there being three cases where this phrase translates 'may' and one example of it translating 'not entitled'), while 'ní foláir' features in nineteen Articles (translating 'must' rather than 'shall' in some Articles, this being the more general usage of that phrase – see the commentary on Article 11) and 'ní dleathach' (literally 'it is not / shall not be lawful') is found in two Articles ('is dleathach' and 'ní dleathach' translate 'may' and 'may not' respectively in two Articles – see the commentary on Article 10.1).

Turning to the Acts, 'Ní cead do chomhaltaí an Chomisiúin tairbhe a fháil iad féin de thoradh scoláir-eachtaí nó sparánachtaí taistil a sholáthraíonn Ciste Oideachasúil na hÉireann-Na Stáit Aontaithe' translates 'Members of the Commission may not themselves benefit by way of scholarships or travel bursaries provided by the Ireland-United States Educational Fund' in s7(2) of the Educational Exchange (Ireland and the United States of America) Act, 1991, and 'agus mura rud é, maidir leis na ceisteanna sin a chuirfear ar an gcompánach, gur freagra dearfach a thabharfar ..., ní cead don chompánach an páipéar ballóide a mharcáil' translates 'and unless such of those questions as are put to the companion are answered ... in the affirmative ..., the companion may not mark the ballot paper' in s103(4) of the Electoral Act, 1992. The more general translation of 'may not', 'ní fhéadfaidh', is found in s67 of the same Act, where 'no other person, except with the permission of the returning officer, may be present at the proceedings' is translated as 'ní fhéadfaidh aon duine eile ach amháin le cead ón gceann comhairimh, a bheith i láthair ag na himeachtaí'. In s29(5) of the Social Welfare Act, 1991, for example, 'the amount recovered by the Minister in any case may not exceed the amount of benefit' is translated as 'ní fhéadfaidh an méid a ghnóthóidh an tAire in aon chás a bheith níos mó ná méid an tochair'. Note that in Article 16 of the 1922 Constitution, for example, 'No person may be at the same time a member both of Dáil Éireann and Seanad Éireann' is translated as 'Ní fhéadfaidh éinne bheith 'na bhall de Dháil Éireann agus de Sheanad Éireann in aonacht'. 'May' is generally translated by 'féad', as we saw in Article 8.3, the future tense of the verb generally translating 'shall'.

In the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 74), perhaps following the wording of the Constitution, 'Ní cead do chomhaltaí na Cúirte Iniúchóirí, le linn a dtéarma oifige, gabháil le haon slí bheatha eile, sochrach ná neamhshochrach' translates 'The members of the Court of Auditors may not, during their term of office, engage in any other occupation, whether gainful or not'. 'Ní cead' expresses 'shall not' in the following example for Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 204): 'Ach ní cead áis a bhaint as na toirmisc ná na srianta sin le haghaidh idirdhealú treallach', 'Such prohibitions or restrictions shall not, however, constitute a means of arbitrary discrimination'.

'Cead' is basically translated as 'leave' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'is cead liom é; tugaim a chead, I permit it' and 'má tá cead agam labhairt, if I have permission to speak'. 'Cead' is translated as 'leave, permission, licence' in Dinneen, who cites 'is cead dó, let him'. Etymologically, 'cead' derives from the second syllable of the Latin 'licet' which, according to Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú, having been introduced into educated speech, was taken by speakers of Old Irish to represent a preposition 'li'/le' plus noun 'cet'/'cead'. Old Irish 'cet' is translated as 'permission, consent, will' in DIL, where reference is made to the following example of 'is cet' ('it is allowable') from a late Old Irish text (written some time in the 830s) on the traditions of the monastery of Tallaght:

Aithrus ind anmcharat dia bliadna beus mád hi céin beith. Cid mencui immurgo maith ind occus is cet. (To consult his confessor once a year regularly, if he be at a distance; if he be nearer, however, it is allowable to consult him oftener).

Note that De Bhaldraithe translates 'May I?' as 'Le do chead?', translating 'May I come in?' as 'Bhfuil cead agam teacht isteach?' and 'May I go now?' as 'An bhféadfaidh mé imeacht anois?'. 'The judge may decide ...' is translated by De Bhaldraithe as 'ag an mbreitheamh atá sé le socrú'. See further the commentary on Article 12.6.1°.

fireann ... baineann See the commentary on Articles 16.1.1° and 45.4.2° regarding the expression of 'sex' in the Irish text of the Constitution.

'Oidhre fireann' is translated as 'male heir' in Téarmaí Dlí. The adjective 'fireann' is translated as (1) 'male' and (2)(a) 'manly, virile' and (b) 'real, thorough' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'baineann' as (1) 'female' and (2) 'effeminate'. Dinneen s.v. 'fireann', gives 'male, masculine; active, manly, vigorous; thorough-paced', citing 'amadán (ropaire) fireann, a thorough fool (ruffian)'. Dinneen translates 'baineann' as 'female, feminine, she', citing 'gamhain baineann, a heifer calf' and 'mionnán baineann, a she kid'. DIL refers the reader to 'fer' (Modern Irish 'fear') regarding the formation of 'fireann', which is translated as 'male (of animals)', all the examples cited referring to male animals. Similarly s.v. 'boineann' the reader is referred to 'ben' (Modern Irish 'bean') – 'dá bonend ar firenn' ('two females for every male') is cited from a list of evils to come, and 'arguin bhoininn' ('boinninn' here in the sense of 'weak or perhaps illogical', according to the glossary) is cited from O'Molloy's Lucerna Fidelium, 1676.

In Article 3 of the 1922 Constitution, 'Every person, without distinction of sex, ... is a citizen of the Irish Free State' is translated as 'Saoránach de Shaorstát Éireann iseadh gach duine idir fireann agus buineann ...'. Similarly, in s80 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924, 'Children herein shall include young people of either sex' is translated as 'Áireofar mar leanbhaí anso daoine óga, fireann no baineann'. We find a more literal translation in s17(2) of the Employment Equality Act, 1977, however, where 'For the purposes of this section, the sex of a person shall be taken to be an occupational qualification for a post' is translated as 'Chun críocha an ailt seo, measfar gur cáilíocht ghairme le haghaidh poist gnéas duine' and 'a provision in which differences in rates of remuneration are based on or related to the sex of employees' is translated as 'foráil ina mbeidh éagsúlachtaí sna rátaí luach saothair bunaithe ar ghnéas na bhfostaithe nó bainteach leis'. In s67(3)(d)(ii) of the Pensions Act, 1990, 'which is not justifiable irrespective of the sex of the persons to which it applies' is translated as 'nach bhfuil inchosanta is cuma cad é gnéas na ndaoine lena mbaineann sé'. Note that the terminology of the Constitution is followed in the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 200) in that 'equal pay without discrimination based on sex' is translated as 'pá comhionann, gan idirdhealú idir fir agus mná'.

'Innscin' was the early official term translating 'sex': 'confining an examination to members of a particular sex' is translated as 'chun scrúdú do chimeád ar leithligh d'innscin áirithe daoine' in s2(3) of the Civil Service Regulation (Amendment) Act, 1926, while in s3, 'that such person is fully qualified as to age, sex ... and ability for that situation' is translated as 'go bhfuil an duine sin lán-cháilithe i gcóir an phuist sin maidir le haois, innscin ... agus ábaltacht'. In s2 of the Censorship of Publications Act, 1929, we find the following 'Definition':

The word 'indecent' shall be construed as including suggestive of, or inciting to sexual immorality or unnatural vice or likely in any other similar way to corrupt or deprave. Léireofar an focal 'nea-náireach' mar fhocal a fholuionn rud a mheabhródh mí-mhóráiltacht inscine no dubháilceas mí-nádúrtha do dhuine no a ghríosfadh chuige é no is dócha a dhéanfadh in aon tslí eile den tsórt san duine do thruaillíú no do chorba.

In Téarmaí Dochtúireachta (1942), 'sex' is translated as 'gné, geinghné', with 'homosexuality' being translated as 'saobhálgas cóimhghnéitheach', 'saobhálgas' translating 'perversion (sexual)' therein. We find 'gnéas' translating 'sex' in s21(1)(e) of the Local Government Act, 1941, where 'qualifications relating to sex' is translated as 'cáilíochta bhaineann le gnéas'.

ar bith 'Ar an mbith' literally means 'in the world', Ó Dónaill citing that phrase, along with 'ar bith cé, in this world' and 'trí bhith síor, for all eternity' from earlier Irish literature. The current phrase, 'ar bith', has the sense of 'any' or 'no' (with a negative), 'áit ar bith' being translated by Ó Dónaill as 'anywhere' and 'nowhere'. Dinneen translates 'bith' as 'the world; being, existence, life', translating the phrase 'ar bith' as 'any at all'. 'Isin biuthso' glosses the Latin 'in hoc mundo' in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, where we also find the phrases 'i ndiththrub in beotho' ('in the desert of Life') and 'is dered mbetho inso' ('this is the end of the world'). DIL translates the phrase 'isin bith', 'for (ar) bith', as 'in the world, in existence; hence developing to anywhere, at all; (following a noun) any, what(so)-ever', citing examples from the early twelfth-century Leabhar na hUidhre onwards. Modern Irish 'beatha', 'life', is not actually based on 'bith' but on 'béo', with original suffix '-tút-', i.e. Old Irish 'bethu', genitive 'bethad' – see Rudolf Thurneysen, A Grammar of Old Irish (1946, p. 165). See further the commentary on Article 15.6.2<sup>o</sup>.

Is bundualgas polaitiúil ar gach saoránach bheith dílis don náisiún agus tairiseach don Stát.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is a basic political duty on each/every citizen to be faithful/true to the nation and loyal/steadfast to the State.

ENGLISH TEXT

Fidelity to the nation and loyalty to the State are fundamental political duties of all citizens.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Fundamental political duties' is expressed as 'bundualgas polaitiúil' ('a basic political duty') in the Irish text.
- 2 The abstract nouns 'fidelity' and 'loyalty' are expressed as adjectives in the Irish text, the Irish terms 'dílis' and 'tairiseach' both including 'faithful' and 'loyal' among their senses, 'dílis' conveying a sense of 'continuity' and 'tairiseach' a sense of 'steadfastness'.

Commentary

tairiseach This adjective is translated as 'faithful, loyal; trustworthy, reliable; steadfast' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'ní raibh siad tairiseach ina thimpeall, they didn't stand firmly by him'. Dinneen translates 'tairiseach' as 'loyal, true, secure, loving', and cites s.v. 'tairise' ('loyalty, fidelity, security'), 'ag fagháil dílse agus tairise, receiving fealty and friendship'. DIL gives two examples of 'tairisech', one from the manuscript Egerton 88 in the British Museum ('na bi toirisech tuaithe', 'trusted by the "tuath"') and the other from Ó Bruadair's seventeenth-century poetry ('más tairisioch leatsa dealbh aoinmhic dé'). According to DIL 'tairisech = tairise', 'tairise' having the senses (in Old and Middle Irish) of (a) 'fitting, suitable, meet' and (b) 'trustworthy, faithful, worthy of confidence' – examples are cited in DIL from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards, one of which, 'is torisse dia' ('God is faithful'), in the Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, glosses Latin 'fidelis est'. In Middle and Modern Irish 'tairise' had the general sense of 'faithful, trusty, constant, certain', according to DIL.

'Loyalty' is translated as 'dílseacht, tairise (do chara, do choróin, etc.)' in De Bhaldraithe. 'Fidelity' is also translated as 'dílseacht' by De Bhaldraithe. As we shall see in the commentary on that headword, 'dílis' is translated as 'loyal, faithful' in Ó Dónaill and 'dílseacht' is translated as 'loyalty, fidelity', with 'dílse' and 'dílseacht' also having the sense of 'loyalty'. Ó Dónaill translates 'tairise' as (1) 'confidence, trust' – this being the sense from earlier literature – and (2) 'faithfulness, loyalty; trustworthiness, reliability; steadfastness'. 'Tairise(ach)' would not have the same general currency today as 'dílis'/'dílseacht'.

Turning to the Acts, in the First Schedule to the Defence Forces Act, 1937 (which followed on the enactment of the Constitution), the 'Form of Commission to an Officer' begins as follows.

To (Name of Officer) ... Trusting in your fidelity to Ireland and loyalty to the Constitution. Do (Ainm an Oifigigh) ... Le hiontaoibh as do dhílseacht d'Éirinn agus as do thairiseacht don Bhunreacht.

Following the wording of the present Article 9.2, 'has made a declaration ... of fidelity to the nation and loyalty to the State' is translated as 'go ndearna sé ... dearbhú ... go mbeidh sé dílis don náisiún agus tairiseach don Stát' in s4 of the Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act, 1986, as in s15 of the Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act, 1956. In the Long Title of the Garda Síochána Act, 1937, on the other hand, 'declaration of loyalty' is translated as 'dearbhu dílse'. In the New Ireland Forum Report (1984), 'were locked into a system based on sectarian loyalties' is translated as 'gaibhnithe i gcóras nach raibh ach dílseachtaí seicteacha de bhonn leis' and in the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 124), 'The Member States shall support the Union's external and security policy actively and unreservedly in a spirit of loyalty and mutual solidarity' is translated as 'Tacóidh na Ballstáit go gníomhach agus gan chuntar le beartas eachtrach agus slándála an Aontais de mheon dílseachta agus dlúthpháirtíochta i leith a chéile'.

While both 'tairiseach' and 'dílis' are translated as 'faithful, loyal' in Ó Dónaill, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú stresses that they do not convey the same sense here, that 'dílis' has an aspect of 'continuity' attached to it and 'tairise' an aspect of 'firmness'.

dílis 'Loyal, faithful' is one of the senses of 'dílis' given in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'bheith dílis do rud, to be loyal to something' and 'dílis go bás, faithful unto death'. Dinneen cites 'bí díleas (dílis) dam, be true to me'. The earlier form, 'díles', is a compound of 'dí-' and 'les', according to DIL, and literally means 'excluded from remedy'. DIL gives the following general senses of 'díles': (a) 'belonging, own, proper, appropriate', (b) 'permissible, lawful, prudent (?)', (c) (of people) 'faithful, loyal, true, trustworthy', (d) 'sure, confident, reliable' and (e) (of objects) 'perhaps firm, strong'. 'Díles' and 'tairise' are linked together in two of the eleven examples cited in DIL of sense (c) above: 'nir uindes dáe ba dílse', in the poets' technical language, is glossed 'i. ní facas duine ba tairise' in one text cited therein while we get the phrase 'im beth díles tairise dib' in another. Finally, note that in Keating's seventeenth-century Eochair-sgiath an Aifirinn, 'dílse', in the phrase 'aithin dona daoinibh dílse iat', expresses Latin 'fidelis'.

In early Irish law-texts 'díles' has the senses of (a) 'forfeited to (do); given over (to), set apart (for); belonging by imprescriptible right, not subject to claim'; (b) (with ó) 'forfeited by, irrecoverable by' and (c) 'not liable to penalty, immune from legal consequences'. Ó Dónaill gives 'loyalty; fidelity, allegiance' as senses of both the nouns 'dílse' and 'dílseacht'. Note that 'fidelity', as well as 'truthfulness, sincerity' and 'genuineness', are given therein as senses of 'fire'.

Section 10 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923 (Continuance and Amendment) Act, 1924, reads as follows:

Every officer in the Forces shall ... take an oath ... of fidelity, in the following form:- 'I, ..., do solemnly and sincerely swear ... that I will bear true faith and allegiance to ... Saorstát Éireann'. Déanfaidh gach oifigeach sna Fórsaí ... mionn dílse do thabhairt ... sa bhfuirm seo a leanas:- 'Dinim-se, ..., a mhionnú ... go solamanta agus go macánta go dtabharfad fíor-dhílseacht agus géillsine do Shaorstát Éireann'.

In the Fifth Schedule to the Defence Act, 1954, 'Trusting in your fidelity to Ireland and loyalty to the Constitution', in the 'Form of Commission to an Officer', is translated as 'Le hiontaoibh as do dhílseacht d'Éirinn agus as do thairiseacht don Bhunreacht'. 'He has made ... a declaration in the prescribed manner, of fidelity to the nation and loyalty to the State' is translated as 'go ndearna sé ... dearbhú sa tslí fhorordaithe go mbeidh sé dílis don náisiún agus tairiseach don Stát' in s15(f) of the Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act, 1956. In s15(1)(b) of the Local Government (Superannuation) Act, 1956, 'that in general he has served in such office with diligence and fidelity' is translated as 'gur fhónaigh sé i gcoitinne san oifig sin go dícheallach dílis'. Finally, in s39(1) of the Building Societies bundualgas A compound of 'bun' and 'dualgas'. 'Fundamental Rights' is expressed as 'Bunchearta' in the heading for Articles 40 to 44. In Article 41.1.1°, however, 'the natural primary and fundamental unit group of Society' is expressed as 'buíon-aonad príomha bunaidh don chomhdhaonnacht de réir nádúir'. 'Directive Principles of Social Policy', the heading for Article 45, is expressed as 'Buntreoracha do Bheartas Chomhdhaonnach'. In Article 45 itself, however, 'the principles of social policy' is expressed as 'na bunrialacha do bheartas chomhdhaonnach', and in Article 43.2.1° 'the principles of social justice' is expressed as 'bunrialacha an chirt chomhdhaonnaigh'. In Article 29.3, 'the generally recognised principles of international law' is expressed as 'bunrialacha gnáth-admhaithe an dlí idirnáisúinta'. Finally, 'bunoideachas' in Article 42.4 is the standard term for 'primary education' – this being in the special sense of the first stage in a scale from 'bun' to 'meán(ach)' to 'ard', as Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks.

'Bun-', as a prefix, is translated principally as 'basic, primary, elementary' in Ó Dónaill and as 'principal, basal, foot-; middling, fairly' in Dinneen. 'Dualgas' is translated as 'duty (of office, etc.)' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'dualgas iomlán' and 'dualgas poiblí' are translated respectively as 'absolute duty' and 'public duty'. Ó Dónaill cites 'dualgas a bheith ort rud a dhéanamh, to be in duty bound to do something', 'rud a bheith ar do dhualgas, de dhualgas ort, to be required by duty to do something' and 'níor cheart duit dualgas mar sin a chur ort féin, you shouldn't undertake such an obligation'. Dinneen translates 'dualgas' as 'duty, that which is due to or from; church duty, divine service; hire, wages, dues, just reward'. 'Dúalgas' is translated as (a) 'traditional right' and (b) 'custom, tribute or other obligation (due to someone)' in DIL. It is based on 'dúal', which headword is translated as (a) 'native, hereditary', (b) 'native, natural to, wanted', (c) 'belonging to by right or descent, right, possession' and (d) 'that which is natural, meet, fitting, right (for) ...' in DIL.

In the New Ireland Forum Report (1984, 2.4), 'the fundamental social bonds' is translated as 'na bunsnaidhmeanna sóisialta' and 'before there can be fundamental progress' is translated as 'sula bhféadfar dul chun cinn a dhéanamh ó bhun' (5.1(ii)). 'The fundamental defects', however, is translated as 'na laigí bunúsacha' (in 3.3), and this would be in line with the practice generally in the Acts – see, for example, the Fourth Protocol to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, where 'the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms' is translated as '(den) Choinbhinsiún chun Cearta an Duine agus Saoirsí Bunúsacha a Chaomhnú'. In s7 of Schedule C to the Bretton Woods Agreements (Amendment) Act, 1977, 'fundamental disequilibrium' is translated as 'éagothroime bhunúsach'. We find both 'bun-' and 'bunúsach' translating 'fundamental' in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973), but 'bunúsach' seems to have won out in the Treaty on European Union (1992). 'Bunúsach' also has the sense of 'basic'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that 'bun-' has the advantage over 'bunúsach' of being attached to 'dualgas', that is, as against 'polaitiúil', the unit 'fundamental duty' being qualified by 'political'.

ar gach saoránach We see above s.v. 'bundualgas', how 'ar' is used with 'dualgas' in certain phrases. Translated completely literally 'duties of' would simply be 'dualgais' with the genitive of the following noun – see, for example, s21(5) of the Health Act, 1970, where 'he has become incapable of performing the duties of chief executive officer' is translated as 'go bhfuil sé neamhábalta ar dhualgais príomh-oifigigh fheidhmiúcháin a chomhlíonadh'.

To literally express 'all' rather than 'each', one would use either 'uile' or 'go léir'. See s14(6) of the Land Act, 1965, for example, where 'the interest so vested shall be a graft on the interest of all persons whom the nominee represents' is translated as 'beidh an leas a dhílseofar amhlaidh ina ghreamacht ar leas na ndaoine go léir a mbeidh an t-ainmnitheach ag feidhmiú ar a son' and s119(2) of the Finance Act, 1983, where 'to meet the claims of all depositors' is translated as 'chun freastal d'éileamh na dtaisceoirí go léir'.

polaitiúil Note that 'poiliticeach' is the form of this headword in the enrolled edition, which form Dinneen gives as a headword, translated there as 'political', with O'Reilly's Irish-English Dictionary given as source. The same source is cited therein for 'poiliticeamhail'. Ó Dónaill gives 'polaitiúil' as the form of this headword, simply translated as 'political'.

TÉACS GAEILGE

Gach ábhar maoiné nádúrtha, mar aon leis an aer agus gach ábhar fuinnimh, dá bhfuil faoi dhlínse na Parlaiminte agus an Rialtais a bhunaítear leis an mBunreacht seo, maille le gach ríchíos agus díolúine dá bhfuil faoin dlínse sin, is leis an Stát iad uile, gan dochar do cibé eastáit agus leasanna is le haon duine nó le haon dream go dleathach in alt na huaire.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All potential natural wealth, along with the air and all potential energy, (of that) which is under the jurisdiction of the Parliament and the Government that is established by this Constitution, along with every royalty and exemption/franchise that is under that jurisdiction, they all belong to the State, without prejudice to whatever estates and interests that lawfully belong to any person or to any group at present.

ENGLISH TEXT

All natural resources, including the air and all forms of potential energy, within the jurisdiction of the Parliament and Government established by this Constitution and all royalties and franchises within that jurisdiction belong to the State subject to all estates and interests therein for the time being lawfully vested in any person or body.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Natural resources' is expressed as 'ábhar maoiné nádúrtha' ('potential natural wealth' or 'material of natural wealth') in the Irish text; 'acmhainní nádúrtha' is generally used today to express 'natural resources', 'ábhar maoiné' most likely being differently interpreted, 'ábhar' expressing 'potential' in this very section, in 'ábhar fuinnimh' ('potential energy').
- 2 'Lawfully vested in any person or body' is expressed as 'is le haon duine nó le haon dream go dleathach' ('which lawfully belong to any person or body') in the Irish text – i.e. the same construction as expresses 'belong to the State' earlier in the section; 'all estates and interests' is expressed as 'cibé eastáit agus leasanna' ('whatever estates and interests') in the Irish text.
- 3 The Irish term 'dream' might be considered a loose term expressing 'body', the Irish legal term for which is 'comhlacht'.
- 4 'Subject to (all estates and interests)' is expressed as 'gan dochar do' ('without prejudice to [all estates and interests]') in the Irish text.
- 5 'All forms of potential energy' is expressed simply as 'gach ábhar fuinnimh' ('all potential energy') in the Irish text.
- 6 'Including the air' is expressed as 'mar aon leis an aer' ('along with the air') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

All the lands and waters, mines and minerals, within the territory of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) hitherto vested in the State, or any department thereof, or held for the public use or benefit, and also all the natural resources of the same territory (including the air and all forms of potential energy), and also all royalties and franchises within that territory shall, from and after the date of the coming into operation of this Constitution, belong to the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann), subject to any trusts, grants, leases or concessions then existing in respect thereof, or any valid private interest therein .... Gach talamh agus uisce, gach mianach agus minearál, laistigh de chrich Shaorstáit Éireann dá raibh go dtí so i seilbh an Stáit, no i seilbh aon roinne dhe, no do bhí á chimeád chun úsáide no tairbhe puiblí, agus fós gach maoin nádúrtha den chrich chéanna (mar aon leis an aer agus le gach abhar gníomh-chomhachta), agus fós gach rí-chíos agus reacht-shaoirse laistigh den chrich sin, is le Saorstát Éireann iad ó dháta an Bhun-reachta so do theacht i bhfeidhm, gan dochar d'aon mhuinghin-eachas, bronntas, léas, ná cead 'na diaobh do bhí an uair sin ann, no d'aon cheart dlisteanach príobháideach 'na leith.

Commentary

ábhar maoiné nádúrtha 'Ábhar' is translated as 'matter; subject matter (i.e. of contract)' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill translates 'ábhar' ar (1) 'matter, material', citing 'ábhar tógála, building material' and 'ábhar tine, fuel'; (2) 'makings; potential qualities'; (3) 'cause, reason'; (4) 'subject, topic', citing 'ábhar léinn, scrúdaithe, educational, examination, subject'; (5) 'object', citing 'ábhar trua, déirce, an object of pity, of charity' ... Dinneen translates 'ábhar' as 'cause, reason; matter, stuff, material; subject matter to be shaped into form', with DIL translating the earlier form, 'adbar', as I(a) 'matter, material' and II (a) 'cause, ground, reason'.

Turning to the Acts, in s95(1)(b) of the Corporation Tax Act, 1976, '(má bhí) aon scaireanna den sórt sin ... ina n-ábhar déileála ar stocmargadh aitheanta' translates 'any such shares have ... been the subject of dealings on a recognised stock exchange', for example, and 'ábhar éisteachta agus ábhar féachana a taifeadadh' translates 'recorded aural and visual material' in s5 of the Broadcasting Authority (Amendment) Act, 1966.

'Maoin' is translated as 'property' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'maoin phearsanta' is translated as 'personal property', for example. 'Maoin' is translated as 'property, wealth' in Ó Dónaill, where 'maoin shaolta' is translated as 'worldly goods' – see Article 43.1.1° for this phrase. Dinneen translates 'maoin' as 'wealth, riches, property, means, substance; benefit, gift ...'. The primary sense of 'main', according to DIL, is 'a gift, a benefit'; 'main', in the secondary sense of 'a valuable article or possession, a treasure; in plural, treasures, possessions, wealth', was sometimes used of 'cattle, stock' in early Irish laws and was often used figuratively in general literature. See further the commentary on Article 43.1.1°.

'Nádúrtha' is translated as 'natural' in Ó Dónaill, citing 'an dlí nádúrtha, the natural law', in the sense of 'conforming to nature', and 'fás nádúrtha, natural growth', in the sense of 'normal'. Téarmaí Dlí cites 'athair nádúrtha, natural father' and 'grá agus gean nádúrtha, natural love and affection'. Dinneen translates 'nádúrtha' as 'natural, good-natured; kindly (of persons), also kindly (of a soil)'. The Passions and Homilies from the Leabhar Breac (some of which come from the second half of the eleventh century) provide the earliest of the few citations of 'nádúrtha' given in DIL ('bisech nádúrda', 'natural [i.e. legitimate] profit'), this collection also being the source of the earliest citation of the noun on which this adjective is based, that is, the Romance loanword 'nádúir', found only in late Middle and Modern Irish, the principal sense of which is given in DIL as 'nature, natural constitution or disposition'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú notes that 'nádúr' may originally have been a learned loanword from Latin, later influenced by Anglo-Norman, drawing attention to the change in gender from feminine to masculine, '-úir' > '-úr'. See further the commentary on Article 42.1.

Turning to the Acts, note how 'nádúrtha' is replaced by 'aiceanta' in s1 of Article IX of the Eighth Schedule to the Income Tax Act, 1967, which otherwise adheres to the present section of the Constitution, with 'in respect of ... other extraction of natural resources' being translated as 'i leith ábhar maoin aiceanta a bhaint ar shlí eile'. In s2(1) of the Continental Shelf Act, 1968, however, 'and exploiting their natural resources' is translated as 'agus a n-ábhar mhaoine nádúrtha a shaothrú'. We return to 'aiceanta' in 1969, with 'local natural resources' being translated as 'acmhainní aiceanta áitiúla' in s40(2)(a) of the Industrial Development Act, 1969. We find both 'nádúrtha' and 'aiceanta' in the Programme for a Partner- ship Government, 1993-'97, with 'our human and natural resources' being translated as 'ár n-acmhainní daonna agus nádúrtha' (p.1) but 'our natural resources' alone as 'ár n-acmhainní aiceanta'. 'Prudent and rational utilization of natural resources' is translated as 'acmhainní nádúrtha a úsáid go stuama réasúnach' in the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 58). See the commentary on Article 45.2ii where 'gustail shaolta' expresses 'material resources'.

Going back to earlier Acts, we find 'the exploitation of water, power and other natural resources of Saorstát Éireann for the generation of electricity' translated as 'comhacht uisce agus maoin nádúrtha eile i Saorstát Éireann d'úsáid chun leictreachas do gheiniúint' in s27 of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1927, 'resources' being translated as 'maoin' in Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution, cited above. In s23(2) of the Finance Act, 1940, however, 'property' (translated as 'maoin' in Téarmaí Dlí, for example) was used in association with 'resources', necessitating the introduction of the earlier form of 'acmhainn' – 'by any person who was at any time entitled to, or amongst whose resources, there was at any time included, any property derived from the deceased' is translated therein as 'ag duine ar bith do bhí uair ar bith i dteideal aon mhaoine, no gur chuid dá acfuinn uair ar bith aon mhaoin, do tháinig ón duine marbh'. In s17(b) of the Schedule to the Pier and Harbour Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 2) Act, 1940, 'as soon as the resources of the Commissioners will admit' is translated as 'chó luath agus is acfuinn do sna Coimisinéirí é'.

Regarding 'nature' itself, 'nature' in the sense of 'human nature' is translated as 'nádúir' in Téarmaí Staire, with 'nature' in the sense of 'external world' being translated as 'an dúlradh'; 'natural' is therein translated as 'aicionta' (as opposed to 'artificial', 'saordha'). The earlier form of 'aiceanta', 'aicnetae', in the sense of 'natural' (as opposed to 'artificial', 'contrived') is cited in DIL from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles (i.e. 'delb aicnete' ['a natural image']). This adjective is based on 'aicned', translated principally as 'inherent quality, essence, nature' in DIL, citing 'combad aicned nindib a nolc' ('that their evil is not natural in them'), which glosses Latin 'naturalis' in the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms. This is the same word which gives us Modern Irish 'aigne', 'mind' – DIL gives examples of the sense of 'mind, spirit, feeling' from In Cath Catharda onwards. 'Aigeanta' today has the sense of 'spirited, cheerful' rather than the earlier sense of 'natural' – see Ó Dónaill. Note, finally, that while 'natural' is translated as 'aicionta' in the first of the Department of Education's collections of terms, Foclóir Staire is Tír-eóluíochta (1928), with 'natural wealth' being therein translated as 'maoin (rachmus, ionnmhus, saidhbhreas) aicionta', in the Department's Tíreolaíocht agus Pleanáil (1981 [1972]), 'natural resource' is translated as 'acmhainn nádúrtha'.

Two headwords, 'aiceanta' and 'aigeanta', are given in Ó Dónaill, the first being translated as 'natural', following the abbreviation for 'Mathematics', with 'aigeanta' given as the standard form of the secondary sense; 'aigeanta' is translated as 'natural', following the abbreviation for 'literary use; literature', with 'spirited, cheerful' given as the secondary sense. The following note kindly written for this study by Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú finally elucidates the problem of these two headwords:

Aicionta, natural. Namhaid a., a natural enemy; such for example, as the wolf-dog was to the wolf.

This note, and the text which it may have accompanied in the Cork Weekly Examiner, are probably the source of our modern aiceanta "natural".

D. O'M., in the preface to his edition, assumed that the notes "will all help us to a better understanding of the living speech of the people". While this assumption is in general valid, it needs to be recognized that Peadar Ua Laoghaire did not restrict himself to the "speech of the people". For example, of a total of 87 forms presented by D. O'M. under the letter A, eleven were either no longer current in everyday speech, or were no longer used in the sense assigned to them, or, in the case of aicionta, its identity with a contemporary form had not been recognized:

aicionta, natural
airchinneach, manager of a piece of church property airfideacht, musical performance
amhra, remarkable amhas, mercenary anacal, quarter (in battle) teach aoidheadh, guest house
aragul, private apartment árdoireachtas, monster meeting argain, ravage with fire and sword

It may be noted, even from this small sample, that Peadar Ua Laoghaire mixed forms from different periods; thus we find modern oireachtas for earlier airechtas, but earlier airchinneach and airfideacht for modern oirchinneach and oirfideacht.<sup>2</sup> Peadar Ua Laoghaire did not have an exact knowledge of the historical development of the language, nor of its evolving orthographical conventions, and for this reason also he sometimes misread earlier spellings. Thus, in his translation of the Euclid,<sup>3</sup> he proposes froma as the term for "proof, demonstration", and this form is a misreading of the earlier spelling fromad for later fromha(dh). So, aicionta should in the modern spelling convention appear as aigeanta, and accordingly be recognized as a word which still has currency.<sup>4</sup>

It appears, therefore, that the modern aiceanta is an etymological doublet of aigeanta, derived from an earlier spelling and given currency by Peadar Ua Laoghaire in the specific sense of "natural" with reference to physical or intrinsic attributes, or as opposed to "artificial".

1 A selection of notes originally published in 1910-15 in the Cork Weekly Examiner, collected by Revd Richard Fleming, selected and edited by D. O'M. [=Domhnall Ó Mathghamhna (1872-1942), Beathaisnéis 5].

2 Ó Dónaill is not consistent here either.

3 See O'Rahilly (ed.), Papers on Irish idiom ([1922], 1929).

4 See Ó Dónaill.

ríchíos This headword is translated as 'royalty' in Téarmaí Dlí and in Ó Dónaill (which translation is preceded by 'of payment to patentee' in brackets). This compound of 'rí' with 'cíos' (rent/tax, tribute) does not appear to be given as a headword in Dinneen.

'Toncam ó ríchíosanna paitinne' translates 'income from patent royalties' in s170(1) of the Corporation Tax Act, 1976, for example, and 'Féadfaidh an Coiste Taighde Thionscail ... pé bónais nó ríchíos a is cuibhe leis an gCoiste sin a íoc' translates 'The Industrial Research Committee may ... pay ... such bonuses or royalties as the said Committee may think proper' in s19(4) of the Industrial Research and Standards Act, 1946.

'Royalties' is translated as 'rí-chíos' in Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution also. Looking at the earlier Acts in general, note that 'cáin údair' translates 'royalty' in s40(1)(b)(iii) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, 'reduce the royalties or other payments accruing to the patentee under any licence previously granted' being translated as 'na cánacha údair no na híocaíochtaí eile a thagann chun an phaitinní fé aon cheadúnas do deonadh roimhe sin do laigheadú' and again in s43(4)(a), 'to secure to the patentee the maximum royalty compatible with the licensee working the invention within Saorstát Éireann on a commercial scale and at a reasonable profit' being translated as 'i slí is go gcuirfar in áirithe don phaitinní an cháin údair mhaximum do bheith aige as an gceadúnaí d'oibriú na cumadóireachta laistigh de Shaorstát Éireann ar scála tráchtála agus le próifit réasúnta'.

diólúine This headword is translated as 'exemption', 'franchise' and 'immunity' in Téarmaí Dlí and as 'exemption, immunity; licence, liberty' in Ó Dónaill. 'Diolmhaine' is translated as 'non-liability; solvency; exemption (from taxation), grammatical or poetic licence' in Dinneen. DIL translates 'dilmaine' as (a) 'licence, liberty, freedom' and (b) 'freedom, detachment; exemption or immunity (from an obligation or impost)'. This headword is based on the adjective 'dilmain', which is formed from 'dí' + 'loman' ('leash'), the primary meaning appearing to be 'free from restraint (?), without attachment', according to DIL.

Turning to the Acts, in s48(h) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, 'copyright, franchises, rights and licences to use any copyright material' is translated as 'cóipcheart, diólúintí, cearta agus ceadúnais aon ábhar cóipchirt'. 'Franchise', in the context of the present Article, is commented on as follows in A Dictionary of Irish Law:

A liberty or privilege e.g. to hold fairs and markets. At common law a franchise was a royal privilege which not only authorised something to be done, but gave the owner the right to prevent others from interfering with the right.

'Franchise' is translated as 'reacht-shaoirse' in Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution and in s61(1) of the Electoral Act, 1923, where "The Franchise Resolutions adopted by the Provisional Parliament on the 19th day of September, 1922" is translated as 'na Rúin Reacht-shaoirse le n-ar ghlac an Pháirlimint Shealadach an 19ad lá de Mheadhon Fhogh-mhair, 1922', with 'The parent or guardian of a child shall not ... be deprived of any franchise, right, or privilege or be subjected to any disability' being translated as 'Ní chaillfidh tuismitheoir ná caomhnóir leibh aon reacht-shaoirse, ceart, ná príbhleíd ná ní cuirfear fé aon mhí-ábaltacht é' in s6 of the School Meals (Gaeltacht) Act, 1930.

'Franchise' is translated in Téarmaí Staire (1934) as (i) 'saoirse' and (ii) 'saoirsine, neimhtheas reachta' and 'ceart guthaidheachta'. 'Franchise' in this latter sense is expressed as 'toghchóras' in the Constitution: in Article 18.4.2°, 'Provision may be made by law for the election, on a franchise and in the manner to be provided by law' is expressed as 'Féadfar foráil a dhéanamh le dlí chun go dtoghfar de réir toghchórais, agus ar an modh, a shocrófar le dlí'. 'On a franchise' is similarly expressed as 'de réir toghchórais' in s6 of the same Article.

ábhar fuinnimh 'Fuinneamh' is translated as 'energy; force, vigour; pep, spirit' in Ó Dónaill, where 'fuinneamh adamhach' is translated as 'atomic energy'. Dinneen translates 'fuinneamh' as 'momentum, force, energy, vigour', and DIL also translates 'fuinnem' as 'momentum, vigour, force', citing relatively modern examples – an earlier example of what may be the same word has been translated as 'a twisting wheel'/'a winnowing sieve' (see DIL s.v. 'fuinnem').

Turning to 'energy' in the Acts, 'An Bord Fuinnimh Núicléigh' was established by the Nuclear Energy (An Bord Fuinnimh Núicléigh) Act, 1971, and 'the European Atomic Energy Community' is cited as '(ag) an gComhphobal Eorpach do Fhuinneamh Adamhach' in s92(1) of the Finance Act, 1973, for example. Looking at earlier translations, 'energy' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'fuinneamh' in Iris an Phoist 6/1/1926. 'Neart', however, translates 'energy' in the early Acts: in the Fourth Schedule to the Sligo Lighting and Electric Power Act, 1924, for example, 'the expression "unit" shall mean the energy contained in a current of one thousand amperes flowing under an electro motive force of one volt during one hour' is translated as 'ciallóidh an focal "aontán" an neart atá i sruth míle ampéir ag rith fé fhórsa leictre-thiomána volta in uair a' chluig' and in s5 thereof 'producing, generating, using, supplying and distributing electrical energy or power' is translated as 'neart no comhacht leictriúil do dhéanamh, do gheiniúint, d'úsáid, do sholáthar agus do roinnt'. 'An neart leictriúil' translates 'the electric energy' in s1 of the Dublin United Tramways (Lucan Electric Railways) Act, 1927, also.

'All forms of potential energy' is translated as 'gach abhar gníomh-chomhachta' in Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Potential energy' is translated as 'fuinneamh tualaing' in Tearmaí Eoluidheachta (1928) and we find the expression 'potentially dangerous building' translated as 'foirgint tualangtha baoil' in the 'Definitions' in s1(1) of the Fire Brigade Act, 1940. Note that in the Department of Education's 1994 edition of Foclóir Eolaíochta 'potential energy' is translated as 'fuinneamh poitéinsiúil'. 'Potential flour mill' is translated as 'abhar muilinn phlúir' in s95 of the Agricultural Produce (Cereals) Act, 1933.

Turning specifically to 'all forms of', see s7(1) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, where 'All forms of property shall be assets for the purposes of this Act whether situated in the State or not' is translated as 'Is sócmhainní chun críocha an Achta seo gach cineál maoiné, cibé acu is sa Stát don mhaoín sin nó nach ea'. 'The U.N. Convention on ending all Forms of Discrimination' is cited as '(ar) Choinbhinsiún na Náisiún Aontaithe maidir le Deireadh a chur le hIdirdhealú de gach Cineál' in the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97 (p. 35).

in alt na huairé This phrase expresses 'for the time being' also in Articles 25.5.3°, 41.3.3° and 46.2, expressing 'at the time' in Article 12.4.2°. 'In alt na huairé seo' is translated as 'at this juncture' in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen cites 'i n-alt na huairé sin, at that very time' and DIL cites 'ra halt na h-uairé sin' s.v. 'alt' III (a), 'juncture, point (of time, etc.)'. See the commentary on Article 12.4.2°.

'For the time being' is generally translated as 'de thuras na huairé' in the modern Acts – see, for example, s1 of the Local Government (Financial Provisions) Act, 1978, where 'the premises of a club for the time being registered under the Registration of Clubs (Ireland) Act, 1904' is translated as 'áitreabh club atá cláraithe de thuras na huairé faoin Registration of Clubs (Ireland) Act, 1904' and s4(3) of the Finance Act, 1971, where 'the amount for the time being of the said person's indebtedness to the lender' is translated as 'an méid a bheidh an duine sin i bhféichiúnas de thuras na huairé ag an iasachtóir'. See further the commentary on Articles 41.3.3° and 46.2.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that there are two separate senses involved in 'for the time being': (1) 'for the moment, for a while' ("go fóill") and (2) 'of the moment, during that time' ("le linn an ama sin"), citing 'it will do for the time being' as an example of the first sense and 'those who, for the time being, are responsible' as an example of the second. While 'de thuras na huairé' conveys the first sense, Máirtín Ó Murchú feels that the second sense is what is needed in the current Article and suggests 'le ham na huairé sin' (which phrase is found in Agallamh na Seanórach, for example), or 'le linn na huairé sin', as a more formal phrase to express that sense.

is leis an Stát The copula with the preposition 'le' expresses 'belongs to'; Ó Dónaill cites s.v. 'is', 'An leat an teach? Is liom, agus ba le m'athair romham é. Is the house yours? It is, and it was my father's before me'. Under 'le' 8(c), in the sense of 'property', Ó Dónaill cites 'tá leabhar leat agam, I have a book of yours', 'maráidh bó leis, a cow belonging to him was killed', 'an té ar leis an áit, the person who owns the place' and 'is liom féin é, it is my own'. Dinneen s.v. 'le', in the sense of 'ownership', cites 'b'fhéidir go bhfaighinn bó leat-sa i bpoll lá éigin, perhaps I will find a cow of yours in a hole some day (i.e. find you in a fix)', and the famous judgement in regard to Colm Cille, 'leis gach boin a boinín agus leis gach leabhar a mhaic-leabhar, to every cow belongs the calf, to every original its copy' (from Keating's seventeenth-century History of Ireland). DIL cites examples of the construction 'is la x y', 'x owns, possesses y, y belongs to x', from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards.

Turning to the Acts, 'measfar ... gur leis an dá chéile mar chomhúinéirí é' translates 'shall ... belong to the spouses as joint owners' in s21 of the Family Law (Maintenance of Spouses and Children) Act, 1976, and 'an chuid sin de na brabúis is leis na sealbhóirí polasaithe' translates 'such part of those profits as belongs to ... policy holders' in s35(1)(a) of the Corporation Tax Act, 1976. 'Belong' and 'vest' are cited together in s3(1) of the Mountjoy Square, Dublin, Act, 1938, where 'all property ... which immediately prior to the date of the passing of this Act is vested in or belongs to ... the commissioners ... shall ... become or be vested in or the property of ... the corporation' is translated as 'an mhaoín uile ... a bhí, díreach roimh dháta an Achta so do rith, dílsithe sna coimisinéirí no dá gcuid féin acu ... tiocfaid chun bheith no beid ... dílsithe sa bhárdas no dá gcuid féin acu'.

Regarding 'vested in' in modern Acts, see the commentary on Article 13.4. In Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution, 'vested in the state' is translated as 'i seilbh an stáit', and in Article 51 'vested in the King' is translated as 'sealbhuithe sa Rí'. In s2(4) of the District Justices (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'A District Justice shall ... have all the powers, authorities and duties which were immediately before the passing of this Act vested in or imposed on a Justice of the Peace' is translated as 'beidh ag Giúistís Dúithche gach comhacht, údarás agus dualgas a bhí, díreach roimh aimsir ríthe an Achta so, bronnta na curtha ar Ghiúistís Sióchána'. 'Bronn' also translates 'confer', however; both 'confer' and 'vest' are cited together in s7(2) of the Finance Act, 1923, where 'the Under-Sheriff shall (in addition to the rights, powers and duties conferred on him by this section) have all such rights, powers and duties as are for the time being vested in him by law' is translated as 'beidh ag an bhFo-Shirriamh (i dteanta na gceart, na gcomhacht agus na ndualgaisí a bronntar air leis an alt so) na ceartanna, na comhachtanna agus na dualgaisí uile sin a bheidh aige de thurus na huaire do réir dlí'. 'Dilsigh', the modern translation of 'vest', is also cited in the 1923 Acts; in s39 of the 'Tirconaill County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'As the ownership of Lifford Hospital appears to be vested in Trustees' is translated as 'Ó dheabhruíonn sé go bhfuil únaereacht Ospidéal Leithbhírr dílsithe in Iontaobhuithe' and in the Preamble to the Land Trust Powers Act, 1923, 'to vest in the Trust any land and other property which is under the said section to be transferred to the Trust' is translated as 'chun aon talamh agus maoin eile atá len' aistriú chun an Chóluchta fén alt san do dhílsíú sa Chólucht'. Finally, 'vesting orders' is translated as 'orduithé dílsíúcháin' in s24(1) of the Land Act, 1923.

go dleathach 'Dleathach' is translated as 'lawful' in Téarmaí Dlí and as 'lawful, legal' in Ó Dónaill. 'Lawful, legal, permissible' are among the senses of 'dleaghtach' in Dinneen. 'Dligthech' is used in Old Irish Glosses in the sense of 'accordant with reason or rule' (Latin 'rationabilis'), according to DIL, citing 'chech irnigde dongneid ... bed dlichthech' ('let every prayer that ye make ... be lawful [rationabile]') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. Hence, according to DIL, we find the senses 'regular, accordant with rule, right, lawful, law-abiding', citing 'ní dligthech don aigne cin fis na n-earnuile so aige' ('it is not lawful for the advocate not to know these tracts') from a commentary on an early Irish law-tract. 'Dligthech' is based on 'dliged', Modern Irish 'dlí' ('law'), which frequently glosses or translates Latin 'ratio' in the Old Irish Glosses. According to D.A. Binchy, in the 'Legal Glossary' to Críth Gablach (p. 84), the adjective 'dligthech' can mean either 'lawful' or 'law-abiding' (i.e. fulfilling one's legal duties) in early Irish law. See further the commentary on Articles 12.4.4°, 14.3, 17.2 and 40.3.3°.

Turning to the modern Acts, in s14 of the Fisheries (Consolidation) Act, 1959, 'All things which by this Act are directed to be done ... may be lawfully done by or with relation to an agent' is translated as 'Gach ní a ordaítear leis an Acht seo a dhéanamh ... féadfar é a dhéanamh go dleathach ag gníomhaire'.

mar aon leis an aer In earlier editions of the Stationery Office text, 'mar aon' is given as one word, the standard spelling of this today being 'mar aon' – see Ó Dónaill s.v. 'maraon': '= mar aon'. 'Mar aon le líonadh corríolúntas' expresses 'including the filling of casual vacancies' in Article 16.7. In Article 30.6, however, 'including the remuneration' is expressed as 'maile leis an tuarastal' while 'agus orthu sin tuairimí léirmheasa ar bheartas an Rialtais' expresses 'including criticism of Government policy' in Article 40.6.1°i. 'Including County Boroughs' is expressed as 'agus Contae-Bhuirgí a áireamh' in Article 12.4.2°ii and in Article 18.7.1°v 'including voluntary social activities' is expressed as 'agus obair chomhdhaonnach dheonach a áireamh'. In Article 18.7.1°iv, however, 'Industry and Commerce, including banking' is expressed as 'Tionscal is Tráchtáil ar a n-áirítear baincéireacht'.

Ó Dónaill translates 'mar aon le' as 'in addition to'. Dinneen translates 'mar aon le' as 'along with, together with, in addition to, beside'. DIL translates the earlier form 'immaróen (maróen) fri (re, la)' as 'along with, together with', citing examples from Leabhar na hUidhre (completed by 1106) onwards. See further the commentary on Article 16.7.

Turning to modern legislation, 'mar aon le sonraí ar an asbhaint sin' translates 'together with the particulars of such deduction' in s20 of the Finance Act, 1990, for example, and 'mar aon le cosúlacht gur fearr a oibreoidh an phróis choigeartúcháin san am le teacht' translates 'as well as the likelihood of a better working of the adjustment process in the future' in s1(b) of Article XXIV of the Schedule to the Bretton Woods Agreements (Amendment) Act, 1969. Turning to 'including', this is generally translated as 'lena n-áirítear' in the Acts today – see, for example s25(2) of the Dublin Cemeteries Committee Act, 1970, where 'Every debt and other liability (including unliquidated liabilities arising from torts or breaches of contract)' is translated as 'Gach fiach agus dliteanas eile (lena n-áirítear dliteanais neamhleachtaithe de dhroim tort nó sáraithe conartha)'. In s26(b) of the Value-Added Tax (Amendment) Act, 1978, 'sports and pleasure craft of all descriptions including yachts, cabin cruisers, dinghies, canoes, skiffs and racing boats' is translated as 'báid spóirt agus áineasa de gach cineál lena n-áirítear luamha, báid chábáin, báidíní calaithe, curaigh, coití agus báid rásaíochta'.

Turning to the earlier Acts, in s6 of the 'Roscommon County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'Athlone No. 2 (now including Ballinasloe No. 2)' is translated as 'Áth Luain, Uimh. 2 (maraon le Béal Átha na Slua, Uimh. 2)'. In s3(a) of the Second Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923, 'such particulars including date of birth as show that such person is qualified to be an elector in that University' is translated as 'pé mion-innste a thespeánfaidh an duine sin do bheith cáilíochtuithe chun bheith ina thoghthóir sa Phríomh-scoil sin agus orra san dáta a bheireatais'. In s15(2) of the National Health Insurance Act, 1923, 'Every mention or reference contained in the Acts (including Section 4 of the Act of 1918)' is translated as 'Gach luadh no tagairt atá sna hAchtanna (ar a n-áirítear Alt 4 d'Acht 1918)'. Similarly, in s34(6) of the Local Government Act, 1925, 'do all such acts and things (including entering on land) as may be necessary for that purpose' is translated as 'gach gníomh agus ní (ar a n-áirítear dul isteach ar thalamh) is gá chuige sin do dhéanamh'. Both 'ar a n-áirítear' and 'lena n-áirítear' are included in Foclóir Oifigiúil, the latter being the current favourite, both phrases being found in the Finance Act, 1990, and in Treaties establishing the European Union (1973), with only 'lena n-áirítear' being cited in the Treaty on European Union (1992).

maille le 'Riarachán maille le huacht' is translated as 'administration with will annexed' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Maille le' is translated as 'with, along with' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'maille le míle eile acu' as 'together with a thousand more of them'. DIL cites examples of 'immalle' with 'fri (re)' or 'la', in the sense of 'with, along with', from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards.

Turning to modern legislation, 'maille le' is sometimes used in translation to express 'and' – see, for example, Treaties on the European Union (1973, pp. 20 and 275 respectively) where 'ach amúchadh a lamháil mar is gá maille le gnáthdheis chun brabach a shaothrú as caipiteal infheistithe' translates 'while allowing necessary amortization and normal return on invested capital' and 'ciallaíonn "pá" an gnáthphá ... maille le haon chomaoin eile' translates "'pay" means the ordinary basic ... wage and any other consideration'. 'Maille le' is also used in the Acts to translate 'with' – see, for example, s2 of Table A of the First Schedule to the Companies Act, 1963, where 'any share in the company may be issued with such preferred, deferred or other special rights' is translated as 'féadfar scair ar bith sa chuideachta a eisiúint maille le cibé cearta tosaíochta nó iarchurtha nó cibé cearta speisialta eile'.

faoi dhlínse See the commentary on Article 3 regarding 'dlínse', 'jurisdiction'. Note regarding 'within the jurisdiction', that in the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 181), 'Disputes between the EMI, on the one hand, and its creditors ... on the other, shall fall within the jurisdiction of the competent national courts, save where jurisdiction has been conferred upon the Court of Justice' is translated as 'Is iad na cúirteanna náisiúnta inniúla a chinneadh díospóidí idir IEA, ar thaobh amháin, agus a creidiúnaithe ... ar an taobh eile, ach amháin nuair atá dlínse tugtha don Chúirt Bhreithiúnais'. In s12 of the Courts Act, 1981, 'the provisions of the order or direction would have been within the jurisdiction of that Court' is translated as '(go) mbeadh forálacha an ordaithe nó an ordacháin faoi réim dhlínse na Cúirte sin'. In s10(1) of the Maritime Jurisdiction Act, 1959, however, 'Every offence ... is an offence within the jurisdiction of the State' is translated as 'gach cion ... is cion laistigh de dhlínse an Stáit é' and 'in the area within the jurisdiction of the Corporation' is translated as 'sa liomatáiste laistigh de dhlighinse an Bhardais' in the Long Title of the Local Government (Galway) Act, 1937.

dream This headword is translated as 'body of people; group, tribe, set; some' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'dream daoine' as 'group of people; set, class, tribe of people' and 'duine nó dream anaithnid' as 'person or persons unknown'. Dinneen translates 'dream' as 'a portion, a section, an additional period; crowd, party, people, tribe, class, adherents, a following'. DIL translates 'drem(m)' as an 'indefinite number of people, band, company', citing examples from Fis Adamnáin (in the twelfth-century Leabhar na hUidhre) onwards. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú draws attention to the headword 'dramm' in DIL, stated therein to be a by-form of 'dremm'. According to Máirtín Ó Murchú, it is this by-form, i.e. /draum/, that is found in Munster Irish.

Turning to modern legislation, 'aon chomhlachas, eagrais nó dream eile' translates '(No) association, organisation or other combination' in s12(1) of the Restrictive Trade Practices (Building Materials) Order, 1955 (S.I. No. 187 of 1955). In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p 1383), 'a áirithiú gurb iad an dream dar dáileadh an luaidhe airgeadmhar ... a dhéanfaidh minghlanadh uirthi iarbhír' translates 'to ensure that the argentiferous lead thus imported is in fact refined by those to whom it is allocated'. In the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97 (p. 58), 'ní mór dúinn ... a nascadh le chéile ar bhealach níos feara ná mar a rinne aon dream againn cheana' translates 'we have to combine more successfully than any of us have done in the past'.

Turning specifically to 'body', 'body corporate' and 'public body' are translated respectively as 'comhlacht corpraithe' and 'comhlacht poiblí' in Téarmaí Dlí and 'body' is so translated as 'comhlacht' in the Acts in general. In s28 of the Finance Act, 1990, for example, 'any person who has been admitted a member of the body incorporated under the Companies Act, 1963' is translated as 'aon duine lenar glacadh mar chomhalta den chomhlacht a corpraíodh faoi Acht na gCuideachtaí, 1963'. In s14(3) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, 'the personal representatives shall for the purposes of this Act be treated as being a single and continuing body of persons' is translated as 'measfar chun críocha an Achta seo, gur comhlacht aonraic leanúnach daoine ... na hionadaithe pearsanta'.

Going back to earlier legislation, we find the Long Title of the Local Elections Postponement Act, 1942, 'An Act to postpone the elections to certain local bodies', translated as 'Acht chun na toghacháin chun cóluchtaí áitiúla áirithe ... do chur ar ath-ló'. In s47(2) of the Finance Act, 1925, 'the word "employer" includes any employer being a body of persons, corporate or unincorporate, as well as an employer who is an individual' is translated as 'foluáinn an focal "fostathóir" aon fhostathóir is cólucht daoine, ionchorpruithe no neamh-ionchorpruithe, chó maith le fostathóir is duine aonaránach'. We find 'dream' expressing 'body' (as it does in the present Article 10.1) in s33 of the Railways Act, 1924, where 'The amalgamated company or any representative body of traders' is translated as 'An chuideachta chó-nasctha no aon dream ionadathach de thrádálaithe'. See further the commentary on Article 37.1 where 'dream' expresses 'body of persons'. 'Dream' expresses 'group' in Article 19.

In general usage 'comhlacht' renders 'company' – Ó Dónaill translates this headword as 'body; company, firm'. Dinneen translates 'cómhlucht' as 'fellow-labourers; an associated band; a household; a company', citing 'cómhlucht oibre, labourers together, partners, associates, allies'. DIL has only two citations of this compound based on 'lucht', one from Eugene O'Curry's law transcripts ('comlucht denma uilc', translated by O'Curry as 'accomplices') and the other from Keating's seventeenth-century poetry ('gan na dhíol dídean dá chómhluacht', 'cómhlucht' therein being translated in DIL as 'companions'). The principal sense of 'lucht' in DIL is 'contents, charge', this word also having the sense of 'people, class of persons, category', nearly always with defining genitive or clause, the earliest meaning being, according to DIL, 'those occupying, inhabiting (and hence also) possessing', DIL citing 'luct Corint' ('the people of C.') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. 'Comhlacht' expresses 'body' in Article 13.8.2<sup>o</sup>.

gan dochar do cibé eastáit agus leasanna 'Gan dochar' is translated as 'without prejudice' in Téarmaí Dlí, where

'dibhim gan dochar' is translated as 'I dismiss without prejudice' – see the commentary on Article 3. See s38(2) of the Fisheries Act, 1980, as regards 'estates and interests', 'free from encumbrances and from all estates and interests therein' being translated as 'saor ó eirí agus ó gach eastát agus leas sa chéanna' and in s42(1) of the Agricultural Credit Act, 1978, 'the charge ... shall as against the land so charged be in priority to and shall override all estates and interests in ... the land' is translated as 'beidh tosaíocht agus sáraíocht, amhail i gcoinne na talún a bheidh muirearaithe amhlaidh, ag an muirear ... ar gach eastát agus leas sa talamh'.

ARTICLE 10.2 AIRTEAGAL 10.2

TÉACS GAEILGE

Gach talamh agus gach mianach, mianra, agus uisce ba le Saorstát Éireann díreach roimh theacht i ngníomh don Bhunreacht seo is leis an Stát iad uile sa mhéid go mba le Saorstát Éireann an uair sin iad.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Every land and every mine, mineral, and water which belonged to the Irish Free State immediately before the coming into operation of this Constitution (they) all belong to the State to the extent that they belonged to the Irish Free State at that time.

ENGLISH TEXT

All land and all mines, minerals and waters which belonged to Saorstát Éireann immediately before the coming into operation of this Constitution belong to the State to the same extent as they then belonged to Saorstát Éireann.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'To the same extent as they then belonged' is expressed as 'sa mhéid go mba le ... an uair sin iad' ('to the extent that / in so far as they belonged at that time') in the Irish text.

- 2 The expressions for 'mine', 'mineral' and 'water' are in the singular qualified by 'gach' in the Irish text; an assertion is then made about them collectively in the plural: 'every x, y, and z ... they all belong ...'.
- 3 Unlike 'minerals' in the English text, 'mianra' is followed by a comma, i.e. before 'agus', in the Irish text.

Note that Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

All the lands and waters, mines and minerals, within the territory of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) hitherto vested in the State ... shall, from and after the date of the coming into operation of this Constitution, belong to the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) .... Gach talamh agus uisce, gach mianach agus minearál, laistigh de chrich Shaorstáit Éireann dá raibh go dtí so i seilbh an Stáit ... is le Saorstát Éireann iad ó dháta an Bhun-reachta so do theacht i bhfeidhm.

Commentary

gach The singular of the noun follows 'gach' in Irish, translating 'each'/'every' and singular of the noun in English, or 'all' with plural of the noun – see Ó Dónaill, who translates this headword as 'every, each' and cites 'gach duine, rud, every person, thing', 'gach maith, every good thing; everything that is good', 'as gach aird, from all directions' and 'ar gach aon taobh, on all sides'. Dinneen translates 'gach' as 'each, every, any'. DIL translates the earlier forms 'cach'/'cech' as 'each, every, all'. Old Irish had a plural form as we see from 'cecha dethidnea domundi' ('all worldly cares') in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. We actually find the phrase 'secech talmáin' ('beyond every [=sech cech] land' – 'gach talamh' being found in the present Article) in the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms.

Turning to the Acts, 'cait agus gach cat-ainmhí eile' translates 'cats and all other feline animals' in the First Schedule to the Diseases of Animals Act, 1966, where 'gach ainmhí athchogantach eile' translates 'all other ruminating animals'. 'Gach ceist a thiocfaidh nó a éireoidh os comhair an bhoird' translates 'all questions coming or arising before the board' in s28 of the Second Schedule to the Health Act, 1970. Both 'go léir' and 'uile' are also used in the Acts to translate 'all' and have the advantage that they can readily qualify both singular and plural nouns. In s13(3) of the Continental Shelf Act, 1968, for example, 'A member of the Garda Síochána shall in a designated area have all the powers, protection and privileges which he has in the State' is translated as 'Beidh ag comhalta den Gharda Síochána i limistéar ainmnithe na cumhachtaí, an chosaint agus na pribhléidí go léir atá aige sa Stát'. In s16(5) of the Schedule to the Local Government Provisional Order Confirmation Act, 1979, "agricultural land" includes all land which is entered as land in the valuation lists' is translated as 'folaíonn "talamh talmhaíochta" an talamh go léir atá taifeadta mar thalamh sna liostaí luachála'. Turning to 'uile', 'in respect of all salaries' is translated as 'i leith na mbrabús uile' in s19(a) of the Finance Act, 1990, for example.

mianach This headword is translated as ‘mine’ in Téarmaí Dlí, as 1(a) ‘ore’, (b) ‘mine’ in Ó Dónaill, and as ‘an ore or mineral, a mineral vein, a mine’ in Dinneen, who cites ‘mianach óir, a gold mine’. DIL translates ‘mianach’ as ‘ore, a vein of ore, a mine’, this word developing the figurative sense of ‘nature, disposition’ – Ó Dónaill gives the secondary sense of ‘stuff, material, substance, quality’ s.v. ‘mianach’, translating ‘mianach duine’ as ‘the inherent quality of a person’, and citing ‘tá mianach an léinn ann, he has an aptitude for learning’ and ‘fear dá mhianach, an man of his calibre’. ‘Mianach’ is based on ‘méin’, translated as ‘mineral, ore; metal (?)’ in DIL, where ‘claide mianna’ (‘delving mines’) is cited from an early Irish law-tract. ‘Méin’ also developed the sense of ‘bent, disposition, temperament; nature, quality’ – Modern Irish ‘méin’ is translated as (1) ‘mind, disposition’ by Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘méin mhaith a bheith agat do dhuine, to be well-disposed towards someone’ and ‘an bhean is fearr méin, the best natured woman’, and (2) ‘mien, bearing’, citing ‘méin mhaorga, noble mien’.

Turning to modern legislation in relation to the primary sense of ‘mianach’, in s53(1)(b)(ii) of the Income Tax Act, 1967, ‘mines of coal, tin, lead, copper, pyrites, iron and other mines’ is translated as ‘mianaigh ghuail, stáin, luaidhe, chopair, pírit, iarainn agus mianaigh eile’. ‘Mianach’ translates ‘mine’ in Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution and ‘but without the mines and minerals therein’ is translated as ‘ach d’éamais na mianach agus na minearál atá sa chéanna’ in s1(1)(a) of the State Land Act, 1924.

‘Mine’ is translated as ‘mianach’ in Foclóir Staire is Tír-eóluíochta (1928) with ‘mianadóir and ‘mianadóireacht’ respectively translating ‘miner’ and ‘mining’, ‘coal mine’ being translated as ‘mianach guail’ – incidentally, ‘silver mine’ is therein translated as ‘airgeadlach’. Note finally that ‘land mines’ is translated as ‘pléascáin talmhan’ in s8(3)(c) of the Public Safety (Emergency Powers) Act, 1923; this is currently expressed as ‘mianach talún’.

mianra This headword is translated as ‘mineral’ in Téarmaí Dlí and in Ó Dónaill. ‘Mianradh’ is the form found in the enrolled edition; neither form appears to be given as a headword in Dinneen, ‘mian’, upon which ‘mianra’ is based, being therein translated as ‘ore, a mine’. ‘Minerals’ (collective) is translated as ‘méinreadh’ in Foclóir Staire is Tír-eóluíochta (1928), with ‘mineral substance’ being translated as ‘mianrach’. ‘Mineral water’ is translated as ‘uisge mianraidhe’ in Téarmaí Eoluidheachta (c. 1940). L. Mc Cionnaith cites ‘Terms published by the Department of Education’ (such as Foclóir Staire is Tír-eóluíochta and Téarmaí Eoluidheachta above) as his source for ‘mianradh’ translating ‘mineral’.

Turning to early legislation, we find ‘minearál’ in Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution, and in s45(5) of the Land Act, 1923, ‘the ... right of mining and taking minerals and digging and searching for minerals on or under that land, including such mineral rights ...’ is translated as ‘an ceart chun mianadóireachta agus chun minearáil do thógaint agus chun tochailt agus cuardach do dhéanamh chun minearáil d’fháil ar an talamh san no fé, maraon le pé cirt minearáil ...’. In the Schedule to the Finance Act, 1923, ‘Mineral Rights Duty’ is translated as ‘Diúit Cearta Minearálta’. ‘Tidil mhianaigh’, however, is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating ‘mineral rights’ in Iris Oifigiúil, No. 5 of 1924, and ‘uisce mianaigh’ translates ‘mineral waters’ in the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925 (p. 125). ‘The Mines and Minerals Act, 1931’ is cited in Irish as ‘Acht na Mianach agus na Minearál, 1931’. As an example of the modern translation of ‘mineral’ see s39 of the Finance Act, 1990, where “exploring for scheduled minerals” means searching in the State for deposits of scheduled minerals’ is translated as ‘ciallaíonn “taiscéaladh mianraí sceidealta” cuardach a dhéanamh sa Stát ar lorg foslach mianraí sceidealta’.

sa mhéid go This phrase is translated as ‘inasmuch, in so far, as’ in Ó Dónaill, who translates ‘méid’ as ‘amount, quantity, extent, degree, number’. In Old Irish ‘méit’, translated as ‘greatness, magnitude’ in DIL, as a relative adverb introducing a subordinate clause, had the sense of ‘as much as, as far as, to the extent that’ – see DIL s.v. ‘méit’ III(c), where ‘in mét beta firién in doini, is in méit sin is téchtae doib dilgadche’ (‘in proportion as men are righteous, forgiveness is fitting for them’) is cited from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms.

Turning to the Acts, ‘Na rialacháin uile atá ann fé láthair ... leanfid i bhfeidhm sa mhéid go leanfaidís agus leis an éifeacht a bheadh acu dá mba fén Acht so a déanfi iad’ translates ‘All existing regulations ... shall ... continue in force to the same extent and with the same effect as if they had been made under this Act’ in s7(2) of the Public Safety (Powers of Arrest and Detention) Temporary Act, 1924. In s55 of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, ‘ach amháin sa mhéid go gcomhaontóidh sé féin agus na hiarrthóirí ar a mhalairt’ translates ‘except so far as he and the candidates otherwise agree’. ‘Forbairtí i gcoinníollacha iomaíochta ... sa mhéid go dtugann siad feabhsú ar chumas iomaíochta gnóthas’ translates ‘developments in conditions of competition ... in so far as they lead to an improvement in the competitive capacity of undertakings’ in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 200).

Turning specifically to ‘to the same extent’, in s21(1) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, ‘(that) the gain shall be exempt from being a chargeable gain to the same extent only as income derived from the assets would be exempt’ is translated as ‘nach mbeidh an gnóchan díolmhaithe ó bheith ina ghnóchan inmhuirearaithe ach amháin a mhéid a bheadh ioncam as na sócmhainní díolmhaithe’. In the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 170), ‘The central bank ... shall pay up its subscribed share ... to the same extent as the central banks of other Member States’ is translated as ‘Déanfaidh an banc ceannais ... a scair shuibscríofa ... a íoc go feadh an méid a bheidh íochta ag bainc cheannais eile’. Note that in s200 of the Income Tax Act, 1967, ‘A person not resident in the State ... shall be assessable and chargeable ... in like manner and to the like amount as such non-resident person’ is translated as ‘Beidh duine nach gcónaíonn sa Stát ... inmheasúnaithe agus inmhuirir ... sa tslí chéanna agus go feadh an méid chéanna ina ndéanfaí an duine neamhchónaitheach sin a mheasúnú agus a mhuirearú’.

Returning to ‘to the same extent’, in s310 of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, ‘provided that the provisions of the repealed enactments shall continue to apply to benefit ... to the same extent that they would have applied thereto if this Act had not been passed’ is translated as ‘ar choinníoll go leanfaidh forálacha na n-achtachán aisghairthe d'fheidhm a bheith acu maidir le sochar ... amhail mar a bheadh feidhm acu maidir leis na nithe sin dá mba rud é nár ritheadh an tAcht seo'. In s554(1) of the Income Tax Act, 1967, '(provided that) the provisions of the repealed enactments shall continue to apply to income tax and sur-tax for any such year to the same extent that they would have applied thereto if this Act had not been passed' is translated as 'go leanfaidh forálacha na n-achtachán aisghairthe d'fheidhm a bheith acu maidir le cáin ioncaim agus forcháin d'aon bhliain den sórt sin an méid céanna a bheadh feidhm acu maidir leo dá mba nár ritheadh an tAcht seo'. In s13(3) 'those regulations shall ... be the regulations of the company in the same manner and to the same extent as if they were contained in duly registered articles' is translated as 'is iad na rialacháin sin ... rialacháin na cuideachta sa dóigh chéanna agus sa mhéid céanna is dá mbeidís in airteagail a cláraíodh go cuí' while in s25(1) thereof 'bind the company and the members thereof to the same extent as if they respectively had been signed and sealed by each member' is translated as 'ina gceangal ar an gcuideachta agus ar a comhaltaí ionann is dá mbeidís faoi seach sínithe agus séalaithe ag gach comhalta'. ### ENGLISH TEXT

Provision may be made by law for the management of the property which belongs to the State by virtue of this Article and for the control of the alienation, whether temporary or permanent, of that property.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Alienation' is expressed as 'sannadh' ('assignment') in the Irish text, the Modern Irish legal term for 'alienation' being 'coimhthíú', 'sannadh' expressing 'alienation' in early Irish law-tracts, however.
- 2 'Management' is expressed as 'bainistí', which also has the sense of 'thrif'; similarly, as we have seen in Article 10.1, 'maoin' expresses both 'wealth' and 'property'.
- 3 'For the control of the alienation, whether temporary or permanent, of that property' is expressed as 'chun sannadh buan nó sannadh sealadach na maoin sin a rialú', 'for the control of the permanent alienation or the temporary alienation of that property', in the Irish text, the form which expresses 'control' ('a rialú') generally expressing 'regulate' in the Constitution, though it is the Irish legal term for 'control' (and 'rule').

Commentary

sannadh This headword is translated as 'assignment' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'sannaim' is translated as 'I assign', following the first, fourth, fifth and eighth Irish Legal Terms Orders. Ó Dónaill translates 'sannadh' as 'assignment, assignation' and cites 'maoin a shannadh, to assign property' s.v. 'sann' ('assign'). This verbal noun does not seem to be given as a headword in Dinneen but the verb 'sannaí' is given in DIL, where the entry reads as follows: 'Legal separates, alienates (land)'. 'Is mesiuich cach fear fine cunai a fintuid; naid inrean, naide sanna' (... he is not to sell it, or alienate it' – i.e. land belonging to the family) is cited in DIL from an early Irish law-tract. The verbal noun 'sannud' is also cited from early Irish law-tracts, 'ni tualaing roda selba sannad' from one such tract being translated as 'one who owns it (land) cannot alienate it', but perhaps reads as 'one cannot alienate possessions' – see DIL s.v. 'sannaí' and 'selb'.

Section 2(2)(c) of the Third Schedule to the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, illustrates the usage of 'sannadh'/'assignment' in modern Irish legislation:

Sa mhír seo foláíonn 'sannadh' tiolacadh, aistriú, nó idirbheart eile d'aon chineál trína scarann duine le húinéireacht nó seilbh maoin. In this paragraph 'assignment' includes any form of conveyance, transfer or other transaction by which a person parts with the ownership or possession of property.

'Is sannadh ar mhaoin arb é atá inti feirm thalún' translates 'which is an assignment of property consisting of a farm of land' in s2(a)(i) therein.

According to Téarmaí Dlí, following the first Irish Legal Terms Order (Statutory Rules and Orders No. 249 of 1947 – Terms relating to Landlord and Tenant Law, Conveyancing and the Law of Property), 'I alienate' is translated as 'coimhthím' and 'alienation' is translated as 'coimhthíú', with 'licence to alienate' and 'covenant against alienation' translated as 'ceadúnas coimhthithe' and 'cúnant i gcoinne coimhthiú' respectively. In A Dictionary of Irish Law 'alienate' is defined as 'to exercise the power of disposing of or transferring property' whereas 'assign' is defined simply as 'to transfer property'.

Turning specifically to 'alienation' in the Acts, while the Margin Title of s56(1) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1931, 'Covenants against alienation', is translated as 'Cumhnanta i gcoinnibh aistrithe', the same English Margin Title of s66 of the Landlord and Tenant (Amendment) Act, 1980, is translated as 'Cúnaint i gcoinne coimhthiú', 'A covenant in a lease ... of a tenement absolutely prohibiting or restricting the alienation of the tenement' in subsection 1 of that section being translated as 'Aon chúnant i léas tionóntáin ... a chuireann toirmeasc nó srian go hiomlán le coimhthiú an tionóntáin'. 'Aistrigh' generally translates 'transfer' rather than 'alienate' (as above) and we find both terms together in s11(2) of the Fóir Teoranta Act, 1972, where 'a member of the Company ... shall not transfer or alienate his share in the Company' is translated as 'ní dhéanfaidh comhalta den Chuideachta ... a scair sa Chuideachta a aistriú ná a choimhthiú'. See the commentary on Article 1 for translations of 'alienate' in earlier Acts as 'aistrigh', 'a seilbh d'aistriú' and 'scarúint (le)'. 'The Pension Books (Prohibition of Alienation) Act, 1932' is cited in Irish as 'Acht na Leabhar Pinsean (Toirmeasc ar Aistriú), 1932', for example. We find 'coimhthigh' in the Sinn Féin Funds Act, 1947, s13(2) of which reads as follows:

Any moneys paid by the Board ... shall not be capable of being taken in execution or otherwise alienated by process of law for the payment of any liability or debts of that person. Aon airgead a iocfas an Bord ... ní féadfar é a thógaint i bhforghníomhú ná é a choimhthiú ar shlí eile trí phróis dlí chun íoctha aon dliteanais nó fiacha a bheas ar an duine sin.

bainistí 'Stiúrthóir bainistí' is translated as 'managing director' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Bainistí' is translated as 'thriff' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'bainistí a dhéanamh ar rud' as 'to economise on something'. Ó Dónaill cites 'stiúrthóir bainisteoireachta, managing director', 'bainisteoireacht' being translated as '(act of) managing, management; managership'. Dinneen, who does not include 'bainisteoireacht' as a headword, translates 'bainistighe' (the form in the enrolled edition) as 'management, good management, economy, thrift', citing 'is minic síos droich-bhean tighle le droch-bhainistighe, often a bad housekeeper fails through mismanagement' and 'dein bainistighe leis sin, economise that'. In his entry s.v. 'bainisteoir', Dinneen gives the abbreviation for 'Anglo-Irish' ('implying that the word is borrowed from English') after the meaning 'a manager', also giving the meaning 'a good economist'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú gives the origin of 'bainistí' as a compound of 'banas' and 'tighle' – Jim O'Donnell points out that 'economy' derives from Greek 'oikos', 'house'. 'Banas', based on 'ben', is translated in DIL as 'the condition of a woman; womanliness; woman's activities', citing the following 'Triads':

Tri fostai dagbanais: fosta thengad <sub>7</sub> gensa <sub>7</sub> airnberntais.
Tri fóindil drochbanais: fóindil scél <sub>7</sub> ataid <sub>7</sub> airberntais.
(Three steadinesses of good womanhood: keeping a steady tongue, a steady chastity, and a steady housewifery. Three strayings of bad womanhood: letting her tongue, and ... and her housewifery go astray.)

The compound 'banas' and 'tighle' originally had the sense of 'that which relates to the woman of the house', this developing to 'the management of the house' and later to 'management', according to Máirtín Ó Murchú, who contrasts this with the development of 'fearas tighle', which gave us Modern Irish 'fearaistí', 'implements, appliances'. 'Fearas' itself now has the sense of 'fearaistí', having the original sense of 'the condition of a man, hence conduct, activity, office' according to DIL. The following 'Triad' is cited there s.v. 'feras':

'Tréde faillsiges each ndagferas: dán, gaisced, crésine'.
(Three things that show every good man: a special gift, valour, piety.)

Modern Irish 'fearas' is translated in Ó Dónaill as 'husbandry (which, as Máirtín Ó Murchú again points out, is related to 'house'), management, economy', with 'fearas tí' being translated as 'housekeeping' and 'fearaistí' being relegated to the position of 'variant' plural of 'fearas'. Finally, note that, while both 'bainistí' and 'bainis' are based on 'ben' ('woman'), 'bainistí' is not directly related to 'bainis' ('wedding'), the earlier form of which, 'banais' (translated as 'marriage-feast, wedding' and 'feast, banquet in general' in DIL), is a compound of 'ben' and 'feis' (originally 'spending the night, sleeping with', hence 'spousal', according to DIL).

We find both 'bainistí' and 'bainisteoireacht' in modern legislation translating 'management'. In s71 of the Fisheries Act, 1980, for example, 'a cheangal ar dhuine atá ag áitiú na talún sin ... nó a bhfuil páirt aige ina bainistí' translates 'require a person who is in occupation or is concerned in the management of such land'. In s41(4) of the Finance Act, 1968, 'The Minister may make provision ... generally for the management of the said special account' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an tAire socrú a dhéanamh ..., i gcoitinne, le haghaidh bainistí an chuntais speisialta sin' and 'regulations for the management of the bank' is translated as 'rialacháin chun an banc a bhainistí' in s2 of the Trustees Savings Bank Act, 1965. In s79(3)(c) of the Corporation Tax Act, 1976, on the other hand, 'and directs ... the management of (any public utility company)' is translated as 'agus a stiúran bainistíocht na cuideachta sin'. In the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97 (p. 37), 'beidh ... ina chloch coirnéil ar an gcaoi a ndireoidimid ar bhainistí gheilleagar na hÉireann' translates 'will be a cornerstone of our approach to the management of the Irish economy', while in the Treaty on the European Union (1992, p. 160), 'an examination of the operational efficiency of the management of the ECB' is translated as 'scrúdú maidir le héifeachtúlacht oibriochtúil bhainistíocht BCE'.

Both terms are also found in the earlier Acts – 'bainisteoireacht' translates 'management' in Article 8 of the 1922 Constitution, where 'schools under the management of different religious denominations' is translated as 'scoileanna atá fe bhainisteoireacht lucht chreidimh dheifriúla', while in s3 of the National Health Insurance Act, 1923, 'the central body of the British Society may continue ... to exercise the like powers of control and management' is translated as 'féadfaidh príomh-chólucht an Chumainn Bhriotáinigh leanúint ... ag feidhmiú comhachtanna Smachta agus Bainistí'. 'A bhainistíú' has today replaced 'a bhainistí', however, in the Acts, the Long Title of the Courts Service Act, 1998, 'An Act to establish a

a rialú 'Rialú' is the verbal noun of 'rialaiú', 'rialaim' being translated as 'I control, I rule' in Téarmaí Dlí. This verbal noun expresses 'for the control' in the next section also, and 'to control' in Articles 33.1, 40.4.6° and 40.6.1°iii, while 'rialú a dhéanamh an thionóil' expresses 'control meetings' in 40.6.1°ii. 'Urlámhas' also expresses 'control' in the Constitution: in Article 45.2.ii 'the ownership and control of the material resources of the community' is expressed as 'dilse agus urlámhas gustail shaolta an phobail'; in iii, 'the ownership or control of essential commodities' is expressed as 'an dilse nó an t-urlámhas ar earraí riachtanacha' and, in iv, 'in what pertains to the control of credit' is expressed as 'ina mbaineann le hurlámhas creidmheasa'.

'Rialaiú' is generally used to express 'regulate' in the Constitution, this being translated as 'rialáil' in the Acts today. In Article 22.1.1°, for example, 'the ... alternation or regulation of taxation' is expressed as 'cánachas ... a athrú nó a rialú'. 'To be regulated by the principles of social justice' is expressed as 'a rialú de réir bunrialacha an chirt chomhdhaonnaigh' in Article 43.2.1°. In Article 12.5, 'is le dlí a rialófar toghcháin' expresses 'elections shall be regulated by law', 'is le dlí a rialófar' expressing 'shall be regulated by law' also in Articles 13.5.1° and 47.4, with 'is de réir dlí a rialófar' expressing 'shall be regulated in accordance with law' in Articles 16.7, 28.12 and Article 36, and 'shall be regulated by law' in Articles 18.10.1° and 30.6.

Turning to 'a rialú' in the Acts, in s65 of the Health Act, 1947, 'the Minister may make regulations for the control of the advertisement or sale of medical preparations' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an t-Aire rialacháin a dhéanamh do rialú fógraíochta nó díola ullmhóidí leighis' and in s78(1) of the Health Act, 1970, 'The Minister may make regulations for the control of the possession of a substance to which this section applies' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an tAire rialacháin a dhéanamh chun seilbh substainte lena mbaineann an t-alt seo a rialú'. Note, however, that in s27(4) of the Fire Services Act, 1981, 'The Minister may by regulations provide ... for the control of any operations of a fire authority under section 25' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an tAire le rialacháin socrú a dhéanamh ... maidir le ceannas aon oibríochtaí de chuid údaráis dóiteáin faoi alt 25' and that the Long Title of the Local Government (Water Pollution) Act, 1977, 'An Act to provide for the control of water pollution', is translated as 'Acht do dhéanamh socrú chun truailliú a shrianadh'. See also the commentary on Articles 40.6.1°iii and 45.2.ii where 'stiúir' and 'urlámhas' respectively express 'control'.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Acquired by the State' is expressed as 'a thioctas i seilbh an Stáit' ('which will come into the possession of the State') in the Irish text, the English text seeming to permit the State a more active role in the process than does the Irish text.
- 2 As in the previous section, 'alienation' is expressed in the Irish text by the legal term for 'assignment' – which term, however, expresses 'alienation' in early Irish law-tracts – with 'alienation, whether temporary or permanent' being expressed as 'sannadh buan nó sannadh sealadach' ('the permanent alienation or the temporary alienation'), the term expressing 'control' ('rialaiú') generally expressing 'regulate' in the Constitution, though it is the Irish legal term for 'control' (and 'rule').

Commentary

a thioctas i seilbh ... a thioctas ina sheilbh For the special form of the relative, see the commentary on Article 6.1 – note that no relative particle precedes the initial 'thioctas' in the enrolled text.

'Seilbh' is translated as 'possession' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill translates 'seilbh' as 'occupancy, possession', translating 'teacht i seilbh ruda' as 'to come into possession of something' and citing 'Cé atá i seilbh na feirme anois?'

Who occupies the farm now? Dinneen translates 'i seilbh' as 'in possession of, in a position to', citing 'cuirim mo chuid i seilbh mo chlainne, I transfer my property to my children' and 'téighim i seilbh arm an tigh, I obtain possession of the arms in the house'. 'I seilbh x' had the senses of 'in the possession of x' / 'in possession of x', along with 'under the protection of x' / 'protecting or watching over x', according to DIL, where 'críoch Bhanbha id sheilbh fa shéula' (i.e. Ireland sealed/assured in your possession) is cited from Leabhar Cloinne Aodha Buidhe.

Turning to the Acts, 'an duine a bheidh i bhfeighil nó i seilbh na maoin sin' translates 'the person having custody or possession of that property' in s27(2) of the Wealth Tax Act, 1975, and 'gach uile shonra ... a bhainfidh le ceannach agus diol earraí ag an gcuideachta agus a bheidh faoi rialú agus i seilbh an duine sin agus ar fáil aige' translates 'all such invoices ... whatsoever relating to purchase and sale of goods by the company as may be in such person's power, possession and procurement' in s413(1) of the Income Tax Act, 1967.

In Téarmaí Dlí s.v. 'acquire', 'after-acquired property' is translated as 'maoin iarfhaithe', the verb 'faigh' being translated principally as 'obtain, procure, acquire, gain, win' in Ó Dónaill and in the Acts in general. In s3(2) of the Capital Gains Tax (Amendment) Act, 1978, for example, 'it shall be assumed that an asset held by a person ... was sold and immediately re-acquired by him' is translated as 'toimhdeofar maidir le sócmhainn a bhí ar teachtadh ag duine ... gur dhíol an duine sin i agus go bhfuair sé ar ais láithreach í'. In s11 of the Finance Act, 1990, 'restriction of relief to individuals on loans applied in acquiring shares in companies' is translated as 'srian le faoiseamh do phearsana aonair i leith iasachtaí a caitheadh ag fáil scaireanna i gcuideachtaí'. In s7(1)(c) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, 'any form of property created by the person disposing of it, or otherwise becoming owned without being acquired' is translated as 'aon chineál maoin a bhunaigh duine a díscartha nó a tháinig ar úinéireacht ar shlí eile gan í a fháil'. Finally, in s5(2)(b)(v)II of the Fisheries Act, 1980, 'the owner of the fisheries or land acquired by that order' is translated as 'úinéir an iascaigh nó na talún a fuarthas leis an ordú sin'.

Looking at the earlier Acts, in Article 3 of the 1922 Constitution, 'the conditions governing the acquisition of citizenship' is translated as 'na coinníollacha a rialóidh saoránacht d'fháil'. 'To enable the said Trust to acquire and to hold land' is translated as 'chun a chur ar chumas an Chóluchta san talamh do sholáthar agus do shealbhú' in the Preamble to the Land Trust Powers Act, 1923. The Margin Title of s1 of the Civil Guard (Acquisition of Premises) Act, 1923, 'Power to Commissioners to examine and acquire premises', is translated as 'Comhacht dosna Coimisinéirí chun áitreabh do scrúdú agus do thógaint', even though the Act is cited in Irish as 'An tAcht Ghárda Síochána (Áitribh do Sholáthar), 1923'. 'Immediately upon the service on the former undertaker of the notice of acquisition' is translated as 'Direach ar sheirbheáil an fhógra thógaint ar an seana-ghnóthaire' in s39(5) of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1927.

d'éis 'D'éis' is also found in Articles 18.8, 18.9, 22.2.4°, 33.5.3° and 35.4.3°, 'tar éis' being cited much more often, however – see Article 12.3.3°, for example, where 'within sixty days after such event' is expressed as 'taobh istigh de sheasca lá tar éis an ní sin a tharlú'. Both 'd'éis' and 'tar éis' are given s.v. 'éis', translated as 'after', in the Glossary accompanying An Caighdeán Oifigiúil and both are cited in Ó Dónaill s.v. 'éis'. As regards the earlier history of these prepositional phrases, see Rudolf Thurneysen, A Grammar of Old Irish (1946), p. 537:

éis, 'track': do, di éis '(to remain on) after (someone)', tar (dar) és(s)i (acc. sg.) 'for, in place of'.

'Tar éis' is the form usually found in the Acts today and in official documents in general. We find 'd'éis' in s39(1)(c)(iii) of the Agricultural Credit Act, 1947, for example, where 'for an estate or estates in remainder or in expectancy after or in defeasance of the estate of such first-mentioned person' is translated as 'le haghaidh eastáit nó eastát fuill nó súilíochta d'éis nó do threascáirt eastáit an duine sin a céadluaitear', as against s47(b) of the Finance Act, 1990, where 'for the earliest accounting period which ends on or after a day which is twelve months after the end of the first-mentioned accounting period' is translated as 'don tréimhse chuntasaíochta is luaithe dar críoch lá, nó i ndiaidh lae, atá dhá mhí dhéag tar éis dheireadh na tréimhse cuntasaíochta céadluaithe'. 'Dá éis' is used particularly in the following construction in the Acts: 'and ends on or after that day', 'agus dar críoch an lá sin nó dá éis', from s44(2) of the Finance Act, 1990, for example.

fairis sin The preposition 'fara' is translated as 'along with' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'is beag an mhaith fairis sin é, it is little good otherwise'. Dinneen translates 'fairis' as 'with him, besides' and 'fairis sin' as 'in addition to or besides that, also'. DIL s.v. 'fare', translates 'fairis sin' in the citation from a late text therein ('céd cuach ... céd bruihne do dherg-ór farris sin anuas') as 'in addition to that'.

Turning to modern legislation, 'Fairis sin, thug na Lánchumhachtaigh agus an Chomhairle dá n-aire an Dearbhú seo a leanas' translates 'The Plenipotentiaries and the Council have also taken note of the following Declaration' in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 1466), with 'chun críocha an Chonartha seo ... agus, fairis sin, chun críocha Airteagail 65 agus 66' translating 'For the purposes of this Treaty ... and also, for the purposes of Articles 65 and 66' (p. 92). 'In addition, with regard to workers not covered by paragraph 2, they shall ...' is translated as 'Fairis sin maidir leis na cineálacha oibríthe nach mbaineann mír 2 leo, déanfaidh siad' (ibid, p. 73), 'These equalisation payments may, moreover, be instituted as provided in Article 53' being translated as 'Féadfar, fairis sin, na híocaíochtaí cothromaíochta sin a thionscnamh mar a fhoráiltear in Airteagal 53' (p. 60) and 'Furthermore, if the parties concerned do not fulfil their obligations, the High Authority shall itself take steps ...' as 'Fairis sin, mura gcomhlionfaidh na páirtithe lena mbaineann a n-oibleagáidí, glacfaidh an tArd-Údarás é féin bearta' (p. 67). Finally, in the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97 (p. 34), 'to make discrimination unlawful not only in the work place, but also in education' is translated as 'an t-idirdhealú a dhéanamh neamhdhleathach, ní amháin san ionad oibre, ach fairis sin, san oideachas'.

'Freisin' generally translates 'also' in the Acts – see, s7 of the Regulation of Banks (Remuneration and Conditions of Employment) (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1973, for example, where ‘that person shall also be deemed to have committed the offence’ is translated as ‘measfar go ndearna an duine sin freisin an cion’ and in the Preamble to the Fourth Schedule to the Radiological Protection Act, 1991, ‘Stressing also the importance of’ is translated as ‘Á chur i bhfios dóibh freisin an tábhacht a bhaineann le’.

Dinneen translates ‘freisin’ as ‘along with that, as well’, citing ‘bhí mise ann freisin, I was there also’ from Connacht. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that the ‘fr’ at the beginning of ‘freisin’ in Connacht is a broad ‘fr’ and that ‘froisin’ would be a more correct spelling. It is a version of the phrase ‘fa ris sin’, according to Máirtín Ó Murchú, who refers to Thomas F. O’Rahilly’s note on ‘fá ré’ (‘along with’) in the introduction to Desiderius (1941, p. xxxvi):

In Munster the first element of fá ré (fa re) has been stressed, resulting in fara; in Connacht the second, resulting in frae.

DIL gives two seventeenth-century citations of the adverb ‘fris sin’ (the preposition ‘fri’ [Modern Irish ‘le’, ‘with’] plus ‘sin’), translated there as ‘moreover, besides’. According to Máirtín Ó Murchú, this ‘fris (sin)’ is an earlier version of the ‘leis’ in Munster in the sense of ‘also’. ‘Fairis sin’ in Article 10.4 is a more literary form than ‘freisin’, according to Professor Ó Murchú.

rialú See the commentary on the previous section, this term regularly expressing ‘regulate’ in the Constitution, though ‘rialaim’ is translated as ‘I control, I rule’ in Téarmaí Dlí.

bainistí ‘Management’ is today generally translated as ‘bainistíocht’ or ‘bainistiú’ rather than ‘bainsití’ above, as we saw in the previous section.

sannadh See the commentary on the previous section.

teacht i ngníomh See the commentary on Article 9.1.1<sup>o</sup>.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Ní foláir cíos uile an Stáit cibé bunadh atá leis, ach amháin an chuid sin de ar a ndéantar eisceacht le dlí, a chur in aon chiste amháin agus é a leithghabháil chun na gcricíocha agus ar an modh, a chinntear le dlí agus faoi chuimsiú na muirear agus na bhféichiúnas a ghearttar le dlí.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All the rent of the State whatever its origin, except that part of it of which an exception is made by law, must be put into one single fund and appropriated for the purposes and in the manner, that is decided by law and within the scope/constraint of the charges/burdens and the liabilities that are levied by law.

ENGLISH TEXT

All revenues of the State from whatever source arising shall, subject to such exception as may be provided by law, form one fund, and shall be appropriated for the purposes and in the manner and subject to the charges and liabilities determined and imposed by law.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The Irish word expressing ‘revenue’, ‘cíos’, generally expresses ‘rent’ and is also the Irish legal term for ‘rent’; this term replaced ‘fagháltas’ following the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941.
- 2 ‘Subject to such exception as may be provided by law’ is expressed as ‘ach amháin an chuid sin de ar a ndéantar eisceacht le dlí’ (‘except that part of it which is made an exception of by law’) and ‘subject to the charges ... determined and imposed by law’ is expressed as ‘faoi chuimsiú na muirear agus ... a ghearttar le dlí’ (‘within the scope/constraint of the charges ... that are levied by law’) in the Irish text, ‘faoi chuimsiú’ expressing ‘subject to’ in many more Articles, as we shall see, this phrase being translated as ‘faoi réir’ in Téarmaí Dlí.
- 3 ‘Shall’ is expressed as ‘ní foláir’ (‘must’) in the Irish text, as we shall see in many more Articles.
- 4 The comma after ‘ar an modh’ interrupts the flow of the Irish text; in order to correspond exactly to this the English text would read as follows: ‘... shall be appropriated for the purposes and in the manner, determined by law and subject to the changes and liabilities imposed by law’. Note that a comma precedes the phrase ‘agus ar an modh’ in the enrolled text, giving sense to the comma following that phrase. Also note that a comma follows ‘in aon chiste amháin’ in the enrolled text, which is not found in the Stationery Office text.
- 5 While ‘féichiúnas’ is translated as ‘liability’ in Ó Dónaill, the Irish legal term for ‘liability’ is ‘dliteanas’.

- 6 'Form one fund' is expressed as 'a chur in aon chiste amháin' ('be put into one fund') in the Irish text.
- 7 'Determined by laws' qualifies 'for the purposes and in the manner' in the Irish text, with 'imposed by law' qualifying 'the charges and the liabilities'; the English text on the other hand reads 'for the purposes and in the manner and subject to the charges and liabilities determined and imposed by law'.

Note that Article 61 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

All revenues of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) from whatever source arising, shall, subject to such exception as may be provided by law, form one fund, and shall be appropriated for the purposes of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) in the manner and subject to the charges and liabilities imposed by law. Déanfaidh ciste amháin d'fháltas uile Shaorstáit Éireann pé as é, gan dochar do pé eisceacht a socrófar le dlí, agus cuirfear i leithreas é chun úsáide Shaorstáit Éireann ar an gcuma agus fé sna muirir agus na fiachaisí ordófar le dlí.

Commentary

cíos 'Revenue' is expressed as 'stáitchíos' in Article 17.2. The substitution of 'cíos' for 'fagháltas' was the very first emendation in the 1941 Amendment of the Constitution, no corresponding amendment being made to the English text. As we see above, 'revenue' is translated as 'fáltas' in Article 61 of the 1922 Constitution, 'fáltais' translating 'proceeds' and 'incomings' in Tearmaí Dlí and in the Acts in general today. Note that the title of the 23rd Occasional Paper of the National Prices Commission, 'Radio Telefís Éireann. Costs and Revenue', is cited in Irish as 'Radio Telefís Éireann. Costais agus Fáltais'. 'Fáltaisí ioncuim' translates 'revenue receipts' in Imtheachta na Dála, 1928, p. 3 (reference in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms; 'reibhniú' is cited therein as translating 'revenue' in Iris an Phuist, 1923, p. 242). 'For the salaries and expenses of the Inland Revenue Service' is translated as 'Chun tuarastail agus costaisí Seirbhís an Ioncaim Dhúchais' in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922. See the commentary on Article 17.1.1<sup>o</sup>, 'fáltas' expressing 'receipts' in that Article.

'Cíos' is translated as 'rent' in Tearmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill translates this headword as (1) 'rent', (2) (History; historical) 'tax, tribute' and (3) 'price'. Dinneen translates 'cíos' as 'rent, tax, tribute; reward, payment' and DIL translates 'cis' as 'tax, tribute, cess, rent', citing 'ni rig ... do na tabar chis flatha' ('he is not a king ... to whom the rent of a king is not given') from an early Irish law-tract, as well as 'cíos is cáin Éireann' and the compound 'cischáin' ('tax and tribute'/'tribute-rent'), translated in Dinneen as 'a tax, cess; tribute' and as 'tribute' in Ó Dónaill.

'Ioncam', which is translated simply as 'income' in Tearmaí Dlí, generally translates 'revenue' in the Acts and is found in the title 'Na Coimisinéirí Ioncaim' ('the Revenue Commissioners'), so cited in the Finance Act, 1924, for example. In s51 of the Income Tax Act, 1967, 'the public revenue of the State' is translated as 'ioncam poiblí an Stáit' and in s34 of the State Property Act, 1954, 'the Woods, Forests and Land Revenues Account' is translated as '(do) Chuntas Ioncaim na gCoillte, na bhForaoiseacha agus na dTailte'. Note how 'fagháltas' is replaced by 'ioncam' rather than 'cíos' in s6(1) of the Constitution (Consequential Provisions) Act, 1937, which refers directly to this Article:

The fund mentioned in Article 11 of the Constitution as the one fund to be formed by the revenues of the State shall be called and known as the Central Fund ... An ciste go luaidhítear in Airteagal 11 den Bhunreacht gurb é an t-aon chiste amháin é ina gcuirfear ioncum an Stáit bhéarfear an Prímh-Chiste mar ainm agus mar theideal air.

Looking at earlier Acts, we find 'ioncum' in s5(2) of the Local Government (Dublin) Act, 1930, for example, where 'Every debt ... which is ... charged on a rate leviable by or on the revenues ... of any of the abolished bodies' is translated as 'Na fiacha go léir ... a bheidh ... ina muirear ar ráta is inghearrtha ag aon cheann de sna cóluchtaí díochurtha no ar ioncum ... an chéanna'. 'The public revenues of Saorstát Éireann' is translated as '(ar) ioncum phuiblí Shaorstáit Éireann' in s6 of the Schedule to the Tariff Commission Act, 1926, and 'cáin ioncuim' translates 'income tax' in Article 74 of the 1922 Constitution.

Note incidentally that 'ioncás', 'business, source of income', is given as a headword in Ó Dónaill and in Dinneen, the latter citing 'tá ioncás beag aice, she has a small business of her own', which he attributes to the Ballyvourney District of Cork.

An unusually lengthy debate took place in the Seanad on the Committee Stage of this Amendment of the Constitution on 21 May 1941, with An Taoiseach Éamon de Valéra debating this substitution of 'cíos' for 'fagháltas' very fully with the Senators. The complete text of the debate from the Proceedings of Seanad Éireann, 1941, cols. 1197-1206, is given below as an illustration of the considerations involved in the choice of a specific term, particularly as regards consistency within the text of the Constitution:

Micheál Ó h-Aodha: Cad ina thaobh go bhfuil 'cíos' á chur isteach in áit 'fagháltas'? Nach ceart 'fagháltas' do chur isteach mar revenue? [Why is 'cíos' being substituted for 'fagháltas'. Shouldn't 'fagháltas' be put in as revenue?]

An Taoiseach: Ceapann siad go bhfuil ciall an fhocail 'fagháltas' go ró-leathan. [They think that the meaning of the word 'fagháltas' is too broad.]

Micheál Ó h-Aodha: Ach nach bhfuil 'revenue' arís in uimhir 17? [But isn't 'revenue' again in number 17?]

An Taoiseach: Níl fhios agam an bhfuil sé. Cén uimhir? [I don't know if it is. What number?]

Micheál Ó h-Aodha: Uimhir 17. [Number 17.]

An Taoiseach: Den Bhunreacht? [Of the Constitution?]

Micheál Ó h-Aodha: 'Seadh. Sub-section (2):

Dáil Éireann shall not pass any Vote or Resolution, and no law shall be enacted, for the appropriation of revenue or other public moneys ...

Tá 'stáitchíos' annsan. Tá 'fagháltas' annseo. Sin 'receipts'. ['Stáitchíos' is there. 'Fagháltas' is here. That's 'receipts.']

An Taoiseach: Ceapann siad gur fearr 'cíos' do chur isteach, go bhfuil 'fagháltas' ró-leathan ar fad, os rud é go mbaineann sé le Appropriation-in-Aid agus chuile shórt mar sin. [They think that it is better to insert 'cíos', that 'fagháltas' is much too broad, since it relates to Appropriation-in-Aid and everything like that.]

Micheál Ó h-Aodha: Nach ceart é bheith sa Bhéarla? [Shouldn't it be in the English?]

An Taoiseach: Ceapann siad go bhfuil sé níos goire don rud atá ins na háiteacha eile. 'Stáitchíos' atá ins na háiteacha eile sin. [They think that it is closer to what is in the other places. It is 'stáitchíos' that is in those other places.]

Mr M. Hayes: What we had here is the substitution in the Constitution for an Irish word of another word of narrower meaning. The word is 'revenue' in English, and in Article 17 it appears to mean tax-revenue. I thought here it meant all kinds of revenue, but the Irish text certainly gives it a meaning which is narrower. The word 'stáitchíos' would appear to mean taxes.

The Taoiseach: The position is that there is a general principle that the revenue should be put into the Central Fund. However, there may be exceptions to that. The revenues are sent in to the Central Fund, but we have, for instance, as an example, the fees of the Veterinary College. These fees do not come in directly. They are treated as Appropriations-in-Aid, I think. The general principle is that the tax revenue goes into the Central Fund, but there are certain proceeds which come in from the activities of a number of Departments, and they are put in as a set-off to that Department before they go to the Central Fund. There is an example in the case of the Department of Agriculture. There is a sum voted for the Veterinary College, and there are set off against it the fees for students. There is another case in which all the revenue that comes in is not sent to the Central Fund. On the other hand, there are the fees from the Passport Office. That is not treated as an Appropriation-in-Aid to the Department of External Affairs, but as extra Exchequer receipts, and is sent in directly.

For example, suppose you have in one of the schools of the Department of Agriculture a certain amount of produce, which would be exhibited at some exhibition, and a certain sum of money might be secured for it. That sum of money does not, in practice, go directly to the Exchequer. It is used as an Appropriation-in-Aid for the use of the Department. The feeling is that the word 'fagháltas' has a wider meaning than the interpretation which has been given to the other. In practice, what happens is that the proceeds of customs and excise and taxes of that sort go into the Central Fund, but not every receipt goes in directly to the Central Fund. Portion of it is set off against Departmental expenditure, and in the Estimate it appears as an Appropriation-in-Aid. That is the only case where it really does not go into the Central Fund; in the other case it goes in as an extra Exchequer receipt. For example, the whole of the expenses of the Passport Office are borne by the Department, and then the fees from the Passport Office are treated as extra Exchequer receipts. The real intention here was to use a word that would be of narrow interpretation similar to the word 'revenue' in English. In the other cases, where the word 'stáitchíos' is used, it was felt to be better to give the narrower sense. I think, on the whole, it gives a word in Irish, which corresponds to the more or less restricted meaning we have used it for elsewhere.

Mr Fitzgerald: I wish to raise a question with regard to Article 17, sub-section (2). The entity referred to seems to be the same. I may have taken the thing wrongly. I presume that moneys coming in from the Veterinary College are covered by the form of words 'appropriation of revenue or other income'. It says 'all revenues of the State from whatever source arising'. Is it a fact that Article 11 and Article 17, sub-section (2) relate to the same thing?

The Taoiseach: I do not know that we would be able to get complete agreement, because you have a general principle more or less with certain exceptions. The general principle is that the revenue of the State should be put into the Central Fund. The question is, are you to do that and insist that there should be no subtraction? It is really a question of book-keeping. If you want to insist on the principle that all moneys must come into the Central Fund you would have no such thing as Appropriations-in-Aid.

Mr M. Hayes: You would alter the system.

The Taoiseach: You can work on that system. That is the general system, but there are certain expenses which have in practice been treated as Appropriations-in-Aid. I think they have the same system in Britain, but I do not know very much about the system there. It is a matter of convenience in practice that some of these should be regarded as Departmental receipts, and that you should subtract these. It is a case of lessening the current amount of the Departmental expenses. For instance, take the case of an agricultural college. Say £10,000 came in and there was some £100,000 total expenses. There was £10,000 coming in as receipts. You have two ways in which that could be dealt with. You can get the £100,000 to appear in the Estimate as the expenses of the college and there would be no question of the receipts that come in. They would go into the Central Fund, but it would appear that the expenses of the college were £100,000, whereas if £10,000 came from the produce of the farm or something like that, they subtract that as an Appropriation-in-Aid, and you see only £90,000 appearing as the expenses of the college. Which is the better way of presenting it to the public in order to present a clear picture of the expenses? That is what we are dealing with. If we want to see the cost of the Department of External Affairs to the country we can subtract from the apparent expenses, salaries, etc., anything the Department gets in as a result of its activities such as passport fees, etc. That can be done, but it is not done.

The practice is to put down the expenses of the Department of External Affairs as so much and then you may see in some note that there is an anticipation that a certain amount will be received in passport fees. It is not there and then subtracted. It does not really matter which of the two methods is adopted, but a practice has grown up which has been found satisfactory and we do not propose to alter it. The only question is what words you will use. Take the word 'revenue' which has been used. The word 'revenue', if used in the broad sense, means everything that comes into the State, whether it be fees or the proceeds of a sale of agricultural produce. Are you going to take that as revenue? Apparently a narrower sense has been given to the word 'revenue', in some instances. In one case it means all that comes in and in the other case it means the net sum that comes in. This is necessary to make it accord with practice. It is merely an effort to make the English and the Irish meaning accord.

Mr Fitzgerald: I quite agree that if we take it that some things are subtracted, then the word 'revenue' normally refers only to the normal revenue of the State and does not include moneys received for lands or buildings. The word 'revenue' is used at two points in the Constitution. At one point the Article says: 'All revenues of the State from whatever source arising'. If you are going to give a narrower meaning to the word 'revenues' – this is in the form of a query – it means money from whatever source arising, whether from income-tax or a tax on silk stockings. The Taoiseach has explained that as used in Article 11, the phrase, although it says: 'all revenues of the State from whatever source arising' excludes such things as money received from passport fees. In the other Article we have the phrase: 'The appropriation of revenue or other public money'. I understand the whole method of accounting in the Government, but if I take what the Taoiseach said then I shall read the English phrase 'Appropriation of revenues or other public moneys' to mean any money whatever coming into the State. If I take the Taoiseach's interpretation then 'all revenues of the State from whatever source arising' does not include a whole series of sums of money that come into the State. That is how I read the English. As to the meaning of 'fagháltas' and 'stát-chíos', I can see there is a difference. It may well be that the Taoiseach has indicated the difference in the Irish which is not indicated in English. If what he says is correct then I presume I am right in saying that as far as Article 11 is concerned, it only refers to what in the narrow sense can be described as revenue, or does it refer to something which in quantity, source and variety, would be different to what is referred to in Article 17?

The Taoiseach: I think the intention is the same in both.

Mr Fitzgerald: In that case I cannot agree with him.

The Taoiseach: I shall have to read both Articles again. This is going to be a slow business.

Mr Hayes: Perhaps I could convince Senator Fitzgerald if the Taoiseach will allow me.

The Taoiseach: Article 11 says: 'All revenues of the State from whatever source arising'. At first sight, you have the word 'revenue' corresponding to the Irish 'fagháltas'. Take revenue in the narrow sense. You can have revenues in the narrow sense from whatever source arising. There is no doubt you can use 'revenue' in Article 11 in the narrow sense. You then go on to Article 17, Section 2. Before I pass from Article 11, perhaps I should point out that there is the qualification 'subject to such exceptions as may be provided by law' so that it is quite clear you are not bound in the Constitution. You can by legislation change that. In Article 17, Section 2, it is set out: 'Dáil Éireann shall not pass any vote or resolution, and no law shall be enacted for the appropriation of revenue or other public moneys unless the purpose of the appropriation shall have been recommended to Dáil Éireann by a message from the Government signed by the Taoiseach'. Here it is 'appropriation of revenue or other public moneys'.

Mr Fitzgerald: It is distinguished there, but the form of words englobes two things. Suppose by what is meant in the narrow sense, revenue, we get £10,000,000 a year, and suppose from these other heterogeneous sums, we get another £2,000,000 or a total of £12,000,000, what I want to know is, does Article 11 refer only to the £10,000,000 and does Article 17 refer to the £12,000,000?

The Taoiseach: It seems to me it refers in both cases to the narrow sense. It is a question of the kind of accounting carried out in the Department of Finance. I see no difficulty at all here in saying: 'Dáil Éireann shall not pass any vote or resolution for the appropriation of revenue or other public moneys'. That means the net amount that comes in, revenue in the narrow sense.

Mr Fitzgerald: If you carry on with the quotation you will see my point: 'the appropriation of revenue or other public moneys'.

The Taoiseach: The Senator's point is that if the word 'revenue' is consistent with public moneys, there is no use in bringing in the latter phrase. If we were using revenue in the broad sense, there would be no meaning in 'or other public moneys', because revenue would be the complete receipts of every kind.

Mr Fitzgerald: I am entirely at one with the Taoiseach, but if you go back to Article 11 it says: 'All revenue of the State from whatever source arising'. If the word 'revenue' only refers to moneys that come in in a certain way, to the whole of the £10,000,000 to which I have already referred, then that Article 11 cannot englobe, incorporate or relate to the extra £2,000,000 received from heterogeneous sources. The other Article says: 'the appropriation of revenue or other public moneys'.

That phrase adverts to other public moneys as well as revenue. Article 11 says 'revenue' and if it means revenue in the narrow sense, well and good. That only refers to the difference of source as between a tax on tea and income-tax or death duties. But if Article 11 is intended, by enlarging words 'of from whatever source arising', to refer to the total sum that I previously indicated as £12,000,000, then I think that the word 'revenue', as used in one Article, is in one sense and, as used in another, is in another sense. Does the total sum in any given year referred to in Article 11 amount to a different sum from that referred to in Article 17? If it does, then the thing is quite clear: if not, it is misleading.

The Taoiseach: It would seem that we are using the word 'narrow' for convenience.

Mr Fitzgerald: And also for convenience I use the two figures £12,000,000 and £10,000,000.

The Taoiseach: It seems to me that there is no confusion at all. In fact, by 17 (2) it seems to me that it was clearly borne in mind that 'revenue' was used in the narrow sense.

Mr Fitzgerald: I quite agree.

The Taoiseach: I am not going to say what the original intention was, but it is a fact now that they fit in quite clearly in the narrow sense. The only thing is that, in Article 11, the original intention was that it should be as broad as 'fagháltas' in Irish, but it brings the English words into closer contact and gives the same significance to the word in Article 11 and Article 17. If we use it in the narrow sense, therefore in Irish we should use it in the narrow sense. Therefore there is no confusion.

Mr Fitzgerald: I quite agree, but if the word 'revenue' in both cases refers to the narrow meaning, it is not enlarged and made a greater sum by those additional words 'from whatever source arising'. If revenue means the narrow thing, then no matter what source it arises from, it merely means the totality of that sum; it does not include the additional sums from the heterogeneous sources.

The Taoiseach: Yes, I find it very difficult to go back to the original but it is quite clear. When you read this first, it is quite possible for a person who does not know the accounting system in the State to read this Article 11 and think that every single sum of money in any way owed to the State, or which becomes the property of the State, would be put into the Central Fund. But in fact that is not done, and, therefore, you cannot make this correspond with the practice if you use that wide meaning. But you can have a variety of revenues in the narrow sense too, and it means that these net sums that come into the Central Fund, no matter where they come from, will have to be appropriated by law so as to prevent the Executive from playing round with the sums they receive, or using them for purposes not already sanctioned by Parliament. I am not saying what was the original meaning, because I would have to admit that if I read it at first sight without knowing the accounting system of the State I would be inclined to use 'revenue' in the broad sense. 'From whatever source arising' gave the impression of a broad sense, whereas, we find in practice, the phrases are quite consistent, but there was one flaw, the word 'fagháltas' in Irish suggested the wider meaning of revenue, whereas, in fact, to be consistent, we would have to use the narrow word.

Mr Fitzgerald: Yes, providing it is recognised that Article 11 will be interpreted to refer to a different sum from Article 17.

Mr M. Hayes: The position is quite plain now, State revenue and State receipts are two different things. In this Constitution the word 'receipts' is translated 'fagháltas' and the translators availed of the amending Bill to keep the word 'fagháltas', including tax revenue, fees paid in veterinary colleges, and such things as money paid for State produce at shows, and they are using the word 'cíos' or 'stáitchíos' in the narrow meaning of revenue. I think it is a good idea.

As we see below, terms other than 'fagháltas'/'cíos' in this Article were the subject of comment in the courts as regards consistency.

muirear This headword is translated as 'charge' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill translates 'muirear' as (1) 'charge; encumbrance', (2) 'family' and (3) 'burden, load' and Dinneen as 'an encumbrance, a load, weight, burden; a troop, a throng; a household, a family'. DIL translates 'muirear' as (a) 'a burden, charge, always of the care (of providing for) or maintenance of a number of individuals (family, household, company, troop, etc.)' and (b) 'a number of individuals forming collectively a charge to be maintained; a family, household, company, retinue' and (c) 'rarely in physical sense "a burden, load"'. See further the commentary on Article 22.1.1°.

In s43 of the Finance Act, 1990, for example, 'allowance of charges on income' is translated as 'muirir ar ioncam a lamháil'. As we see above, 'muirir' translates 'charges' in the 1922 Constitution also. In s8(1)(b) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restriction) Act, 1923, 'in respect of the rates chargeable ... on the occupier' is translated as 'mar gheall ar na rátaí atá ionchurtha mar mhuirear ar an sealbhóir'.

'Muirear' expresses 'charge' in Article 22.1.1° also, 'the imposition for the payment of debt or other financial purposes of charges on public moneys or the variation or repeal of any such charges' being expressed as 'muirir a leagan ar airgidí poiblí chun fiacha a íoc nó chun cuspóirí eile airgeadais, nó a leithéidí sin de mhuirir a athrú nó a aisghairm'. In Article 29.5.2°, however, 'costas', literally 'cost', expresses 'charge', with 'The State shall not be bound by any international agreement involving a charge upon public funds unless the terms of the agreement shall have been approved by Dáil Éireann' being expressed as 'Aon chonradh idirnáisiúnta a chuirfeadh costas ar an gciste poiblí ní bheidh sé ina cheangal ar an Stát mura dtoilí Dáil Éireann le téarmaí an chonartha'. This term was the subject of comment in the courts, as was 'ciste' ('fund'), which term is found in both Articles 11 and 29.5.2°, as J.M. Kelly, op. cit., p. 205, reports:

In The State (Gilliland) v Governor of Mountjoy Prison ([1987] IR 201) Barrington J said that the 'one fund' or 'ciste' referred to [in] Article 11 was the same as the 'public funds' or 'ciste poiblí' referred to in Article 29.5.2. In The State (McCaud) v Governor of Mountjoy Prison ([1985] IR 68) Egan J said that there was 'some merit' in the applicant's suggestion that the word 'costas' (unlike the corresponding English expression 'charge') included expenses incurred in the incidental administration of an international agreement. Barrington J encountered the same problem in Gilliland's case, where he said that while the term 'costas' undoubtedly has the meaning 'expense', it is wide enough to include the meaning 'charge'. The phrase 'a charge upon public funds' is rendered in the Irish text as 'costas ar an gciste poiblí'. Literally this appears to mean 'a charge on (or a cost or expense to) the public fund'.

ní foláir This phrase, which occurs right throughout the Constitution, being one of the ways in which 'shall' of the English text is expressed, would generally be translated as 'must' and does in fact express 'must' in a few Articles. In Article 28.7.1° 'Ní foláir an Taoiseach agus an Tánaiste agus an comhalta sin den Rialtas a bheas i mbun an Roinn Airgeadais a bheith ina gcomhaltai de Dháil Éireann' expresses 'The Taoiseach, the Tánaiste and the member of the Government who is in charge of the Department of Finance must be members of Dáil Éireann', 'Ní foláir na comhaltai eile den Rialtas a bheith ina gcomhaltai ...' expressing 'The other members of the Government must be members ...' in the following subsection. In Article 13.7.3° 'ní foláir an Rialtas a bheith sásta roimh ré leis an teachtaireacht' expresses 'Every such message ... must ... have received the approval of the Government' and 'ní foláir é a bheith inghlactha ar chomhaltas Dháil Éireann' expresses '... must be eligible to become a member of Dáil Éireann' in Article 18.2. Finally, note that 'ní foláir lámh an Uachtaráin a bheith leis' expresses 'shall require the signature of the President' in Article 13.3.1°.

On the other hand, 'ní foláir ... a', followed by a verbal noun, expresses 'shall be' in Articles 12.3.3°, 14.5.2°, 16.2.3°, 16.3.1°, 16.6, 17.1.2°, 20.1, 20.2.1°, 21.1.2°, 21.2.1°, 24.1, 25.4.4°, 25.4.5°, 25.5.2°, 26.1.2°, 26.3.2°, 27.2, 27.3, 27.5.2°, 28.3.2°, 29.5.1° and 46.2, where, for example, 'Gach togra chun an Bunreacht seo a leasú ní foláir é a thionscnamh i nDáil Éireann ina Bhille' expresses 'Every proposal for an amendment of this Constitution shall be initiated in Dáil Éireann as a Bill'. 'Ní foláir do x' expresses 'x shall' in Articles 12.1, 12.7, 12.10.5°, 13.1.3°, 13.3.2°, 15.7, 16.2.4°, 16.4.1°, 17.1.1°, 20.1, 22.2.1°, 22.2.3°, 22.2.4°, 25.1, 26.2.1°, 26.3.1°, 26.3.3°, 27.4.1°, 27.5.1°, 27.5.2°, 27.6, 28.4.4°, 28.5.2°, 28.6.1°, 28.6.2°, 28.9.3°, 28.10, 30.1, 30.5.4°, 31.4, 33.4, 33.5.2°, 33.5.3°, 34.5.1°, 34.5.2°, 35.4.2°, 35.4.3°, 40.4.2°, 40.4.3°, 40.4.5°, 42.3.2°, 42.4 and 42.5 where, for example, 'ní foláir don Stát ... iarracht a dhéanamh le beart oiriúnach chun ionad na dtuistí a ghlacadh' expresses 'the State ... by appropriate means shall endeavour to supply the place of the parents'.

Ó Dónaill translates 'ní foláir' as 'it is necessary', citing 'ní foláir rud éigin a dhéanamh, something must be done' and 'ní foláir dom imeacht, I must go'. 'Ní foláir do' is translated as 'it is not superfluous for a person, it is necessary, one must, ought' in Dinneen, who translates 'ní foláir', without preposition, as 'it must'. 'Foláir' itself comes from 'foróil', which means 'abundance', 'excess', 'advantage'; in Middle Irish 'foróil' gives way to 'foráil' which in turn becomes 'furáil', by metathesis 'fuláir' – see DIL s.v. 'foróil'. 'Ní furáil (fuláir)' is translated therein as 'is necessary, incumbent', 'ní foróil dom' being translated as 'it is not too much for me; I need, have a right to; (with verbal noun) I may as well, I ought', and examples of this phrase are cited from the twelfth-century Book of Leinster onwards.

As stated in the commentary on 'ní cead' in Article 9.1.3<sup>o</sup>, in his monograph Dúchas na Gaeilge (pp. 213ff.), Maolmhaoldhóg Ó Ruairc highlights the various ways in which 'may' and 'shall' are 'translated' in the Constitution, and states that there are over 20 cases in which 'is cead / ní cead' (lit. it is / is not permitted) is used to translate 'shall' / 'shall not', with 'ní foláir' being used in 19 Articles and 'ní dleathach' (lit. it is not / shall not be lawful) in two. As stated in that commentary, in translating the Acts today, the simple future of the verbs themselves is very frequently used. Note how 'Ní foláir ... a chur in aon chiste amháin' is expressed as 'Déanfaidh ciste amháin (de)' in the 1922 Constitution. While 'déan' therein is not followed by a verbal noun (as regards this impersonal use of 'déan' see the commentary on Articles 15.14 and 25.4.1<sup>o</sup>), it is noteworthy how often the verb 'déan' followed by a verbal noun is invoked in the direct translations in this study, following the practice in the Acts, to replace 'ní foláir' and 'is cead' in rendering 'shall' in the Constitution, rather than the simple future tense of the verb concerned. Both 'déan' and 'ní foláir' allow the inclusion before the verb of a clause (or clauses) which relate to the verb and also allow the use of the simple verbal noun of the verb concerned rather than inflecting the verb in the future tense, for example. Ó Dónaill cites 'rinne sé an capall a cheansú, he controlled the horse' and 'is beag nach ndearna siad mé a mharú, they nearly killed, nearly went so far as to kill, me' as examples of 'déan' used periphrastically with a verbal noun. Dinneen cites 'rinne sé é féin do nigh, he washed himself' and 'ar dheinis na ba do chrúdh? did you milk the cows' as examples of the earlier form of 'déan', 'do-ghní', used as an auxiliary verb. As an example of 'do-gní' with a verbal noun or equivalent, 'as periphrasis for finite tense of verb', DIL cites 'Doberim dom bréthir ris ... nach dingnum comól cairdeamail choidhchi misi 7 Find' ('I pledge my word ... that I and Finn shall never again drink together in friendship') from the early fourteenth-century 'Chase of Slieve na mBan', examples of such usage being cited from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles onwards. We find 'déan' followed by verbal noun in amendments to the Constitution and very frequently in the Acts.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú points out that, while 'déan' is a flexible syntactical device, it hardly deals with the problem related to translating the English modals to Irish. As a translation of 'The State shall provide for free primary education', which is expressed as 'Ní foláir don Stát socrú a dhéanamh chun bunoidéachas a bheith ar fáil in aisce' in Article 42.4, 'Déanfaidh an Stát socrú chun bunoidéachas a bheith ar fáil saor in aisce' would be deficient, according to Professor Ó Murchú, without an adverbial qualification such as 'feasta' or 'i gcónaí' following 'socrú' – that is, it would be a future the accomplishment of which is unknown. 'Shall' is a declaration or affirmation in the present and Máirtín Ó Murchú notes in this context that the Irish version of the Constitution regularly has present tense forms – e.g. 'ní cead', 'ní foláir' – corresponding to 'shall' in the English version. See further the commentary on Article 15.1.2<sup>o</sup>.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú also remarks that 'shall' was rendered by the imperative in the seventeenth-century translation of the Commandments. It is interesting in that regard that An tAthair Peadar Ua Laoghaire cites the following as examples of idiomatic uses of 'déan':

Ná déin guid, Thou shalt not steel.

(Thomas F. O'Rahilly, op. cit., p. 27)

Turning to 'ní foláir' in the Acts, 'Ní foláir tarscaoileadh a bheith sainráite i gcónaí' translates 'Waiver must always be express' in s2 of Article 32 of the First Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, for example. 'Ní foláir ceadú an Aire ... a fháil le haon rialacha den sórt sin' translates 'Any such rules ... shall require the approval of the Minister' in s10(6)(b) of the Educational Exchange (Ireland and the United States of America) Act, 1991. 'Ní foláir' sometimes translates 'shall' in the Acts, also – in s140(1) of the Electoral Act, 1992, for example, 'Ní foláir ainm agus seoladh an chlóidóra ... a bheith ar éadan gach fógra' translates 'Every notice ... shall bear upon its face the name and address of the printer and the publisher thereof'. 'Caithfidh' is regularly used in the Acts to express 'must' – see Article 8 of the Schedule to the Air Navigation and Transport Act, 1965, for example, where 'Aon chaineán ar dhamáistí ... caithfeá i a thionscnamh ... os comhair cúirte' translates 'Any action for damages ... must be brought ... before a court'.

bunadh 'Bunadh' is translated in Ó Dónaill as (1) 'origin', based on examples from earlier literature, (2) 'stock, kind', (3) 'native inhabitants' and (4) '(genitive singular as attributive adjective) original, fundamental, basic, basal'. The genitive form of this noun as attributive adjective is found in 'dlínse bhunaidh' and '(doiciméad, etc.) bunaidh' in Téarmaí Dlí, translated respectively as 'original jurisdiction' and 'original (document etc.)'. Dinneen translates 'bunadh' as 'origin, stock, root, foundation; the stock of a farm; a family, people; the native population, the natural inhabitants of a place, a caste, etc.', translating 'bunadh re' as 'authority for'. DIL cites examples of 'bunad' in the senses of (a) 'origin, basis, source' and (b) 'Of families, etc., origin, stock, race', from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards, including 'do bhéar bunadh ris' ('I shall give authority for it') from the seventeenth-century 'Contention of the Bards'.

Turning to the Acts, in s11(2) of Part 1 of the Finance Act, 1976, 'the amount of income arising to her from each and every source' is translated as 'an méid ioncaim a d'eascair chuici ó gach uile bhunadh' and in s19(1)(a) of the Finance Act, 1983, 'the source from which those profits or gains arose' is translated as 'an bunadh ónar eascair na brabúis nó na gnóchain'. 'Foinse' is cited in some Acts – see, for example, s18(5)(b) of the Capital Acquisitions Tax Act, 1976, where 'in so far as the donee ... has a right of reimbursement from any source' is translated as 'a mhéid atá ceart aisíoca ó aon fhoinsé ag an deontai'.

'Taobh' translates 'source' in early official translations. In s21 of the 'Clare County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, for example, 'or whether they are in receipt of a pension from any source' is translated as 'agus a bhfaghann sé pinsean ó aon taobh'. 'Labels obtained from a prescribed source' is translated as '(fé) dhuillíní ... a fuarthas ó áit orduithe' in s37(b) of the Dairy Produce Act, 1924. 'Bailiú agus caitheamh ioncumaí Shaorstáit Éireann pé as iad' translates 'the collection and expenditure of the revenues of Saorstát Éireann from whatever source arising' in s1 (ii) of the Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1924. In s10(i) of the Finance Act, 1929, 'income or profits chargeable under Case III ... shall, for all the purposes of ascertaining liability to income tax, be deemed to issue from a single source' is translated as 'tuigfar, chun na gcrícheanna uile a bhaineann le fiachas i gcáin ioncuim do dhéanamh amach, ioncum no proifití is ionchurtha fé cháin fé Chás III ... do theacht as bun aonair'.

Regarding 'arising' in early Acts, see s15(4) of the Land Act, 1923, where 'The dividends and income arising from the investments so transferred' is translated as 'Na dividenda agus an t-ioncum a thioctidh as na súncála a haistreofar amhlaidh'. 'Maidir le maoin atá suidhte agus le profit no le sochar ag eirge sa Bhreatain Mhóir no i dTuaisceart Éireann' translates 'In respect of property situate and profits or gains arising in Great Britain or Northern Ireland' in s1 of Part II of the First Schedule to the Finance Act, 1926.

eisceacht This headword is translated as 'exception' in Téarmaí Dlí, in Dinneen and in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'eisceacht a dhéanamh (de rud)' as 'to make an exception (of something)'. Note that De Bhaldraithe also gives 'déanam eisceacht de' s.v. 'except'. Exception seems to have been taken to 'eisceacht' in DIL, for s.v. 'escecht' the reader is referred to 'uisgecht' and s.v. 'uisgecht' the reader is informed that this is a later form of 'escecht' ('exception, act of excepting'), four examples being cited from Keating's seventeenth-century Three Shafts of Death and the reader being informed that the first edition has 'eisceacht' in the four passages cited!

'Subject to such exception as may be allowed in pursuance of this Act' is translated as 'Ach amháin mar a ceadófar do réir an Achta so' in s8(1) of the Prevention of Electoral Abuses Act, 1923, as 'Ach amháin mar a ceadúitear do réir an Achta so' in s18(2) of the same Act and as 'lasmuich d'aon eisceacht a ceadófar do réir an Achta so' in s34(4), this latter clause occurring within the section itself rather than at the commencement of a section as in the two former cases.

a ghearrtar le dlí Ó Dónaill gives 'levy' as one of the senses of the verb 'gearr', literally 'cut', and cites 'cáin, fineáil, a ghearradh ar dhuine, to levy a tax, a fine, on someone' and 'gearradh punt orm, I was fined a pound'. Dinneen includes 'I tax, levy, charge, fine' among the senses of 'gearraim' and cites 'gearraim an méid seo ort, I fine or tax you to this amount'. DIL gives three examples of the earlier 'gearrad' in the sense of 'a tax, a tribute' but no example of the verb 'gerraid' in this sense.

Turning to the Acts, in s23(2)(b) of the Finance Act, 1983, 'upon whom a fine or other penalty was otherwise imposed by a court' is translated as 'ar ar ghearr cúirt fineáil nó pionós eile thairis sin'. 'Forchuir' generally translates 'impose' in the modern Acts. In s9(1)(e) of the Fourth Schedule to the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, for example, 'notwithstanding the obligation as to secrecy imposed by the Income Tax Acts or any other Act' is translated as 'd'ainneoin na hoibleagáide maidir le rún a fhorchuirtear leis na hAchtanna Cánach Ioncaim nó le haon Acht eile'.

Looking at early Acts, in the Long Title of the Finance Act, 1923, 'An Act to Charge and Impose Certain Duties of Customs and Inland Revenue' is translated as 'Acht chun Diúitithe Áirithe Custum agus Ioncuim Dhúithche ... d'Éileamh agus do Ghearra'. In s14(1) of the Finance Act, 1924, however, 'The additional duties on dried fruits which were first imposed by section 8' is translated as 'Na diúitithe breise ar thorthaí tiormuithe a forchuireadh ar dtús le halt 8'. In s51(1) of the Court Offices Act, 1926, 'all fines, amerciements, penalties and forfeited recognisances imposed or levied by any court' is translated as 'gach fineáil, meirse agus pionós, agus gach banna geallbhruidte, a forchuirfar na a gearrfar ag aon chúirt'. See further the commentary on Article 22.1.1°.

féichiúnas Ó Dónaill translates 'féichiúnas' as 'indebtedness, liability' – 'féichiúnaí' is translated as 'debtor' in Téarmaí Dlí. Dinneen translates 'féicheamhnas' as 'liability; recrimination' and DIL translates 'féchemnas' as 'advocacy, pleading', citing examples from early Irish law-tracts. This abstract noun is based on 'féchem', 'one who possesses claims on or is under claims or obligations to another', hence 'a claimant, creditor or debtor'. 'Féchem' is related to 'fiach', 'an obligation, a payment due, debt', also 'legal due, fine, penalty' according to DIL. See further the commentary on Article 49.3.

Turning to the Acts, 'beidh méid iomlán an airgid atá ... ina lámha aige mar a dúradh de theorainn lena fhéichiúnas' translates 'his liability shall be limited to the total amount of the money which he has ... in his hands as aforesaid' in s7(1)(c) of the Housing Act, 1969. 'Féichiúnas' translates 'debt' in s20(4)(a) of the Finance Act, 1970, and 'indebtedness' in s5 of the Agricultural Produce (Meat) (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1978, where 'certificate of indebtedness' is translated as 'deimhniú féichiúnais'. 'Liability' is translated as 'dliteanas' in Téarmaí Dlí and in the Acts in general – see, for example, s79(5)(a)(ii) of the Corporation Tax Act, 1976, where 'after the satisfaction of all the debts and liabilities of the company' is translated as 'tar éis fiacha agus dliteanais uile na cuideachta a ghlanadh'. As we see above, 'fiachas' translates 'liability' in Article 61 of the 1922 Constitution. 'For the purpose of defraying any liability incurred by such council' is translated as 'chun íoc do dhéanamh in aon fhiachas fé n-ar chuaidh an chomhairle sin' in s6(1)(b) of the Seed Supply Act, 1924.

a chur Literally 'to put'. As regards 'form', see s8(6) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, for example, where 'the full amount of the liability ... shall form part of the consideration' is translated as 'beidh méid iomlán an dliteanais ... ina chuid den chomaoin'. In Article 1 of the 1922 Constitution, 'The Irish Free State ... is a co-equal member of the Community of Nations forming the British Commonwealth of Nations' is translated as 'Ball có-ionann iseadh Saorstát Éireann den Chuideachta Náisiún a dhineann suas an Có-chiníochas Briotáineach'.

leithghabháil Verbal noun of the verb 'leithghabh', translated as 'appropriate' in Ó Dónaill, 'leithghabháil' itself being translated as 'appropriation'. 'Appropriation ... of public money' is translated as 'airgead puiblí do chur i leithreas' in Article 35 of the 1922 Constitution. In s110(5) of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925, 'If the Commissioners acquire or appropriate any house or houses for the purposes of this Act' is translated as 'Má thógann na Coimisinéirí aon tigh nó títhe chúcha féin no má dhinid a gcuid féin den chéanna chun crícheanna an Achta so'. Note that 'I appropriate' is translated as 'dilsím chugam' in Téarmaí Dlí. See the commentary on Article 17.2 regarding 'leithreas' and 'leithghabháil'.

faoi chuimsiú This prepositional phrase is translated as 'within the scope of' in the Glossary appended to An Caighdeán Oifigiúil. 'Subject to', on the other hand, is translated as 'faoi réir' in Téarmaí Dlí. See the commentary on Articles 12.5 and 40.3.3°.

chun na gcríocha According to the official standard one would have the genitive plural of 'críocha', i.e. 'chun na gcríoch', here – see, for example, s17 of the Finance Act, 1990, where 'for all purposes of ascertaining liability to income tax' is translated as 'chun na gcríoch uile a bhaineann le dliteanas i leith cánach ioncaim a fhionnadh'. See the commentary on Article 13.8.2° regarding 'críoch', 'purpose'.

ciste See the commentary on Article 29.5.2°.

Standardised Irish text

Ní foláir cíos uile an Stáit cibé bunadh atá leis, ach amháin an chuid sin de ar a ndéantar eisceacht le dlí, a chur in aon chiste amháin agus é a leithghabháil chun na gcríoch agus ar an modh, a chinntear le dlí agus faoi chuimsiú na muirear agus na bhféichiúnas a ghearrtar le dlí.

THE PRESIDENT AN tUACHTARÁN

TÉACS GAELGE

Beidh Uachtarán ar Éirinn (i. Uachtarán na hÉireann), ar a dtugtar an tUachtarán sa Bhunreacht seo feasta; beidh tosach aige ar gach uile dhuine sa Stát, agus ní foláir dó na cumhachtaí agus na feidhmeanna a bheirtear don Uachtarán leis an mBunreacht seo agus le dlí a oibriú agus a chomhlíonadh.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Ireland will have a President / There will be a President of Ireland (i.e. the President of Ireland), who is called the President henceforth in this Constitution; he will have precedence over everybody in the State, and he must operate/exercise and perform the powers and the functions that are given to the President by this Constitution and by law.

ENGLISH TEXT

There shall be a President of Ireland (Uachtarán na hÉireann), hereinafter called the President, who shall take precedence over all other persons in the State and who shall exercise and perform the powers and functions conferred on the President by this Constitution and by law.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The fact that Ireland will have a President is a statement in itself in the Irish version – note the semi-colon after this statement in the Irish text alone. As J.M. Kelly (op. cit., p. 83) notes, ‘The creation of the office of President is one of the most conspicuous innovations of the 1937 Constitution by comparison with that of 1922’. In the English version emphasis is more on the attributes of the President, i.e. a President ‘who shall take precedence over all other persons in the State’ and ‘who shall exercise and perform the powers and functions ...’, rather than on the fact that Ireland will have a President.
- 2 Whereas the English version states that the President will take precedence over all other persons in the State, the Irish version states that the President will have/take precedence (‘beidh tosach aige’) over everybody (‘ar gach uile dhuine’) in the State.
- 3 ‘Shall’ is expressed as ‘ní foláir’ (‘must’) in the Irish text, as we have seen in the previous Article, and ‘exercise’ is expressed by the Irish legal term for ‘operate’ (‘oibrigh’), as we saw in Article 3.
- 4 ‘Hereinafter’ is expressed as ‘sa Bhunreacht seo feasta’ (‘henceforth/hereinafter in this Constitution’) in the Irish text.

Commentary

a bheirtear do This expression is also found in Articles 13.9, 15.1.1°, 28.5.1° and 40.4.2°. In the Amendment to the Constitution contained in Article 29.7.2°, however, ‘conferred’ is rendered as ‘a thugtar’, the official standard Irish form of ‘a bheirtear’, and we also find ‘tugtar’, rather than ‘bheirtear’, later on in the very same sentence:

Any institution established by or under the Agreement may exercise the powers and functions thereby conferred on it in respect of all or any part of the island of Ireland notwithstanding any other provision of this Constitution conferring a like power or function on any person or any organ of State ... . Tig le haon institiúid a bhunófar leis an gComhaontú nó faoin gComhaontú na cumhachtaí agus na feidhmeanna a fheidhmiú a thugtar di dá chionn sin i leith oileán na hÉireann ar fad nó i leith aon chuid de d’ainneoin aon fhorála eile den Bhunreacht seo lena dtugtar cumhacht nó feidhm dá samhail d’aon duine ....

‘A bheireann’ occurs in Articles 13.6, 13.8.1°, 22.2.5°, 26.2.2°, 27.5.1° and 28.1, with ‘a bhéarfaidh’ occurring in Article 16.1.2°, ‘bheirtear’ in Articles 12.8 and 15.1.1° and ‘bhéarfaidh’ in Article 44.1. According to the official standard these would be written respectively as ‘a thugann’, ‘a thabharfaidh’, ‘tugtar’ and ‘tabharfaidh’. Note that we find ‘tugtar’ in the second clause of the above Article 12.1.

The verb involved in the various forms above is not the simple verb ‘beir’ (‘bear, take, bring, carry’) but the compound verb ‘do-bheir’, or ‘do-beir’ in Old-Irish, prototonic form ‘tabair’, which gives us Modern Irish ‘tabhair’ (‘give’). ‘Do-bheirim’ (‘I give’) is the form of the first person singular, present indicative, of the verb in Dinneen, who states that ‘bheirim’ became the general form of ‘do-bheirim’ and was often replaced by ‘tugaim’ – ‘tuc’ was the form of the imperative and perfect of ‘do-beir’ and from this a new present, etc. was formed. While ‘bheirim’ and ‘bheir sé’, along with the present passive ‘bhe(i)rt(e)ar’, are the forms of the present tense in Ulster Irish (see Art Hughes in Kim McCone et al., Stair na Gaeilge [1994], p. 648), the stem ‘tug’ is the usual stem in the present tense in Connacht (although the form ‘bheireann’ is heard in phrases such as ‘bheirim do shláinte’ – see Ruairí Ó hUiginn, ibid., p. 592). According to Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú, ‘tugaim’, ‘tugann’ are the usual forms in Kerry, with ‘bheirim’ being found in phrases such as ‘bheirim don diabhal’ (Dinneen translates ‘do-bheirim don diabhal thú’ as ‘I wish you to the dickens!’) and ‘bheirim m’fhocal’ (‘I give my word’) – see Seán Ua Súilleabháin (ibid., p. 532), from whom one might understand that ‘bheireann’ was the usual form of ‘tugann’ in Munster and note that ‘tugann’ is the form of the verb given in Diarmuid Ó Sé, An Teanga Bheo – Corca Dhuibhne (1995).

'Tug', as stated above, is also the official standard Irish form and 'a bheirtear do' would be written as 'a thugtar do' in standard Irish. We thus find, for example, 'The powers conferred ... on a presiding officer', in s42(2) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, translated as 'Na cumhachtaí a thugtar ... d'oiúigeach ceannais'. See further the commentary on Article 26.2.2° and see the commentary on Article 13.6 regarding 'confer'.

tosach ar Dinneen cites 'gabhaim an tosach ar, I take precedence over'. In s28 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924, 'pé ball dá mbeidh i láthair agus teideal aige chun tosach a bheith aige ar na baill eile isé bheidh ina Uachtarán ar an gcúirt' translates 'the President of the court shall be such member present as shall be entitled to precedence over the other members'. In s9 of that same Act, 'The precedence between the judges shall be as follows' is translated as 'Mar leanas a bheidh tosaíocht na mbreithiún'. 'Beidh tosach aige ar gach Breitheamh Cuarda eile' translates 'shall take precedence over all other Circuit Judges' in s9(3) of the Courts of Justice Act, 1947. In s12(2) of the Courts-Martial Appeals Act, 1983, however, 'The President of the Court shall be such member present as shall be entitled to precedence over the other members' is translated as 'Is é a bheidh ina Uachtarán ar an gcúirt cibé comhalta a bheidh i láthair agus i dteideal tosaíocht a bheith aige ar na comhaltaí eile' and 'nothing in the lease ... concerned shall in any way invalidate or take precedence over any provision of this Act' is translated as 'ní chuirfidh aon ní a bheidh sa léas ... áirithe aon fhoráil den Acht seo ó bhail ar aon slí ná ní bheidh tosaíocht ag aon ní den sórt sin ar aon fhoráil den sórt sin' in s19(2) of the Abattoirs Act, 1988. 'Tosach' translates 'commencement' in Téarmaí Dlí and 'tosaíocht' would today generally be used in preference to 'tosach' to translate 'precedence' – see, for example, Article 14.2 of the First Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, where 'Except as concerns precedence and etiquette, there shall be no differentiation between heads of mission by reason of their class' is translated as 'Ach amháin a mhéid a bhaineann le tosaíocht agus nósmaireacht, ní dhéanfar aon idirdhealú idir cinn mhisiún mar gheall ar a n-aicme'.

a chomhlíonadh 'I perform' is translated as 'comhlíonaim' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'comhlíonaim' is translated as 'I comply with', 'I conform with' and 'I perform'. Dinneen includes 'I perform (a duty)' among the senses of 'cóimhlíonaim', with Ó Dónaill translating 'comhlíon' basically as 'fulfil', with the principal sense of 'perform, observe'. DIL translates 'comlínáid' as 'fills up, completes, fulfils', this verb being based on the compound 'comlín', which is translated literally and principally as 'equal number, as many' in DIL, where 'i n-irgail chuimlin' ('in a fight of equal numbers') is cited from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Psalms. See the commentary on Article 3 s.v. 'oibriú', for other references to 'a chomhlíonadh' in the Constitution, this verb being cited in Articles 13.8.1°, 13.9, 13.11, 14.1, 14.4, 14.5.1°, 14.5.2°, 30.1, 31.1 and 32.

Turning to the early Acts, in s6(1) of the Adaptation of Enactments Act, 1922, 'Every, power, authority and duty conferred or imposed by any British Statute on a Justice or on two or more Justices acting together shall as from the passing of this Act cease to be exercisable or to be performed by such Justice or Justices' is translated as 'Gach comhacht, údarás agus dualgas do bronnadh no do cuireadh le haon Reacht Briotáineach ar Ghiúistís no ar bheirt no níos mó Giúistísí ag gníomhú le chéile ní dhéanfaidh an Giúistís ná na Giúistísí sin iad d'fheidhmiú ná do chó-líona tar éis riththe an Achta so'. In s107 of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1927, 'The Minister may by order confer and impose on the Board and upon such order being made the Board shall exercise and perform the powers, functions and duties relating to metres' is translated as 'Na comhachta, na feidhmeanna agus na dualgaisí a bhaineann le méadair ... féadfidh an tAire le hordú iad do bhronna agus do chur ar an mBord agus ar bheith déanta don ordú san feidhmeoidh agus cólionfidh an Bord iad'. Finally, taking a more modern Act, 'chun cumhachtaí agus dualgais bhainisteora a fheidhmiú agus a chomhlíonadh' translates 'to exercise and perform the powers and duties of a manager' in s31 of the Mines and Quarries Act, 1965. See further the commentary on Article 28.12.

Uachtarán Examples of 'úachtarán' in the sense of 'a head, a leader, a chief' are cited in DIL from the twelfth-century Book of Leinster onwards. 'Baio U. ... ós cionn Tire A ..., mar uachtarán' ('as a president') is cited from O'Donovan's Genealogies, Tribes and Customs of Hy-Fiachrach as an example of the later sense of 'a president or governor'. DIL also gives examples of 'úachtarán' in the sense of 'a religious superior'. Dinneen translates 'uachtarán' as 'a superior, a president, a leader', citing 'Uachtarán an Chonnartha Talmhan, President of the Land League'. Ó Dónaill translates this headword principally as 'president; head, superior', citing 'uachtarán tíre, the president of a country' and 'Uachtarán na hÉireann, the President of Ireland'. This noun is based on 'uachtar', Old Irish 'óchtar', 'the upper part, top' – 'uachtar' also having the sense of 'cream' in Modern Irish. Note incidentally that 'uachtar na hÉireann' renders 'the south of Ireland' rather than the north of Ireland.

gach uile dhuine In order to translate 'all other persons' literally, one would need to add 'eile' to 'gach uile dhuine' – see Article 35.1, for example: 'The judges of the Supreme Court, the High Court and all other Courts', 'breithiúna na Cúirte Uachtaraí, na hArd-Chúirte agus an uile Chúirte eile'. See further the commentary on Article 16.1.2°.

ar Éirinn See Ó Dónaill s.v. ar<sup>2</sup> II 5(a), 'Bhí rí ar Éirinn, there was a king of Ireland', 'Fadó, fadó, nuair a bhí rí ar Éirinn' being the opening phrase of many an Irish tale.

a oibriú See the commentary on Article 3. 'Exercise and perform' are combined in Articles 14, 30 and 32, where they are consistently expressed as in this Article.

.i. We would expect to find 'i.e.' or 'namely' in the English version corresponding to this traditional Irish form of 'id est' – see the commentary on Article 7.

Ní foláir dó See the commentary on Article 11.

ENGLISH TEXT

The President shall be elected by direct vote of the people.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The word 'direct' is intensified in the Irish text: it is not just 'vóta díreach' but 'vóta lomdíreach'.

Commentary

lomdíreach We also find 'go lomdíreach' in Article 19. In the enrolled version a hyphen is inserted between 'lom' and 'díreach'. These two adjectives are not given as a compound, either in Ó Dónaill or in Dinneen, however. One would expect the 'd' of 'díreach' to be lenited if compounded with 'lom', as one finds, for example, in 'lomchaite' ('threadbare') and 'lomtharnocht' ('stark naked'). The basic meaning of 'lom' is 'bare' but, as Ó Dónaill states s.v. lom<sup>2</sup> 4, it is 'used intensively with other adjective or adverb', Ó Dónaill citing 'bheith lom dáiríre, to be in dead earnest'. The phrase 'lom díreach' is translated by Ó Dónaill as 'straight, direct; right away'. In current parliamentary usage 'direct' is translated simply as 'díreach' – 'direct elections' is translated as 'toghcháin dhíreacha', for example, in the Dáil Order Papers of 5/7/1977 and 7/3/1978. 'Dírhofa' translates 'directly elected' in subsection 2 of the Twentieth Amendment of the Constitution (No. 2) Bill, 1999.

pobal This word carries the sense of community – see Ó Dónaill s.v. 'pobal': 'Collective: People; community; pobal Dé, the people of God, the faithful. Pobal Eabhrach, Hebrew people; worshippers. An pobal i gcoitinne, the general public'. The word 'pobal' comes from the Latin 'populus' and we have examples of this word in Irish from the Würzburg Glosses of the eighth century, where we find 'popuil gente' ('of the people of the Gentiles'), onwards – see DIL s.v. 'popul', translated as 'a people, tribe, nation, the inhabitants of a country (district, town) taken collectively'.

'Pobal' is used throughout the Constitution to express 'people', but 'muintir na hÉireann' expresses 'the people of Éire' in the Preamble and 'the people of Ireland' (should this read 'the people of Éire?') in the President's declaration in Article 12.8. Like 'pobal' the word 'muintir' also carries the sense of community; Ó Dónaill gives the senses of 'household, community, family; associates, adherents, followers; party, retinue' based on citations of the literary use of this word. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that 'pobal' suggests organisation and therefore 'society', with 'muintir' suggesting a collectivity and, therefore, 'household, population', etc. 'Muintir' is a word of disputed derivation: according to one scholar it comes from Latin 'monasterium', while another suggests a native origin – see DIL s.v. 'muintir'.

'Daoine', the usual translation of 'people' in Irish, normally expresses 'persons' in the Constitution, with 'duine' normally expressing 'person'.

Le vóta The copula 'is', which we find at the beginning of subsection 3, is understood. 'Bhóta' is the form given in the enrolled text. Dinneen gives 'bóta' as the form of the headword, also citing 'bhóta', and concludes the entry with the abbreviation for 'Anglo-Irish' (implying that the word is borrowed from the English). The form 'vóta' is found in Article 22 of the 1922 Constitution, for example, 'vótanna' being given there as the plural form. 'If the votes credited to an elected candidate consist of original and transferred votes' is translated as 'Más bun-vótanna agus vótanna aistriithe ... na vótanna a cuireadh i leith iarthóra thofa' in s2(b) of the Third Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923.

While 'vóta' ('bhóta') and 'vótáil' ('bhótáil') are found in other Articles of the current Constitution, the phrase 'by means of the single transferable vote' is expressed as 'ar mhodh an aonghutha inaistrithe' in Articles 12.2.3<sup>o</sup>, 16.2.5<sup>o</sup> and 18.5 – see the commentary on Article 12.2.3<sup>o</sup>. De Bhaldráithe translates '(individual) vote' as 'guth, vóta', citing 'popular vote, guth an phobail and translating 'vote' principally as 'vótáil, guthaíocht'. Edmund E. Fournier d'Albe, in his English-Irish Dictionary (1912) gives 'togha' along with 'guth' s.v. 'vote', Daniel Foley (1855) giving 'guth, aontughadh, toghadh, meas'. 'Guthóirí' was a common term in Fáinne an Lae (1898-1900), where 'toilidheacht' expresses 'voting' (see Caoilfhionn Nic Pháidín, Fáinne an Lae [1898-1900], p. 102f.) – 'toilidheacht', based on 'toil' ('will'), is translated as 'willingness, consent, acquiescence' in Dinneen. L. Mc Cionnaith cites 'toilidheacht ós íseal, ós ard' from Munster s.v. 'voting', 'put it to the vote of the meeting, cuir fá thoil an tionóla é being cited there, also from Munster. Finally, L. Mc Cionnaith cites 'guth, ceart an ghotha, do thabhairt do na mnáibh' (i.e. to give a vote, the right to vote, to women) from the same province.

a thoghfár 'Elect' is the secondary sense of 'togh' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'toghadh ina uachtarán é, he was elected president', 'choose, select' being the principal sense therein. Dinneen translates 'toghaim' as 'I choose, select, elect, pick', citing 'thoghas dul abhaile, I elected to go home'. The simple verb 'togaid' is a later form of the compound verb 'do-goa', translated as 'chooses, elects, selects' in DIL, where examples are cited from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards, including 'ciade dogega' ('which of them I shall choose') from the Würzburg Glosses. 'Rogha' ('choice'), Old Irish 'rogu'/'roga', is also based on the same stem as 'do-goa'. We find the verb 'togh' in the Electoral Act, 1923, for example, 'tuigfear an t-iarrthóir sin do bheith tofa' translating 'that candidate shall be deemed to be elected' in s5 of the Third Schedule thereto. 'Toghchán' ('election') is a further development of 'togh', 'toghachán' being found in Article 14 of the 1922 Constitution. This word is not given as a headword in Dinneen, for example, who gives 'an election' as one of the senses of 'toghadh', citing 'an toghadh mór, the general election' – this is currently generally expressed in Irish as 'olltoghchán'. Finally, 'choice, election (= togha') are given as senses of 'forgla' in Dinneen, who cites 'forgla fear Éireann, the flower of the men of Ireland'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú notes that this term developed in sense from 'the best part' to 'the greater part', citing 'an dán do bhí dénta le forgla chéd bliadhna roimhe sin' – see DIL s.v. 'forglu'.

As regards 'togh le', in s6 of Schedule E to the Bretton Woods Agreements (Amendment) Act, 1977, 'the fifteenth may be elected by a simple majority of the remaining votes and shall be deemed to have been elected by all such votes' is translated as 'féadfar an cúigiú duine déag a thoghadh trí ghnáth-thromlach na vótaí a bheidh fágtha agus measfar é a bheith tofa leis na vótaí sin go léir'. In s7(6) of the Fourth Schedule to the Foyle Fisheries Act, 1952, 'one of those persons shall be elected by lot' is translated as 'toghfar duine de na daoine sin trí chrannchur'. Finally, 'that a majority of the members of the Council shall consist of representatives elected by the votes of persons resident in the State' is translated as 'go mbeidh tromlach comhaltaí na Comhairle ina n-ionadaithe a bheas tofa le vótaí daoine cláraithe a chónaíos sa Stát' in s5(4) of the Veterinary Surgeons Act, 1952.

ENGLISH TEXT

Every citizen who has the right to vote at an election for members of Dáil Éireann shall have the right to vote at an election for President.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 While 'ceart vótála' can be translated as 'the right to vote' – and 'the right to vote' is sometimes so translated – literally it translates 'a right to vote'.

Note that Article 47.3 reads as follows:

Every citizen who has the right to vote at an election for members of Dáil Éireann shall have the right to vote at a Referendum. Gach saoránach ag a bhfuil sé de cheart vótáil i dtoghchán do chomhaltaí de Dháil Éireann tá sé de cheart aige vótáil i Reifreann.

Commentary

ceart vótála This phrase, which we find twice in this subsection and again in Article 16.1.2<sup>o</sup>, expresses 'the right to vote'. The definite article, however, is not specifically included in the Irish phrase and might be translated more literally today as 'an ceart chun vótála' – we find both 'ceart vótála' and 'an ceart chun vótála' translating 'the right to vote' in the Treaty on European Union (1992, pp. 152 and 15 respectively), for example. 'Ach ní bheidh ceart vótála aige' translates 'but shall not have the right to vote' in s9 of the Second Schedule to the Industrial Relations Act, 1946, and 'ach ní bheidh ceart vótála aige ag aon chruinniú den tsórt sin' translates 'but he shall not have the right to vote at any such meeting' in s16 of the Industrial Research and Standards Act, 1946. Note that 'Not less than ten members having the right to vote at the meeting' is translated as 'líon comhaltaí nach lú ná deichniúr a bhfuil ceart vótáil acu ag an gcruinniú' in s55(1)(b) of the Building Societies Act, 1976.

We find 'ceart chun' in Article 40.6.1<sup>o</sup> (which deals with Personal Rights): 40.6.1<sup>o</sup>, ii and iii begin with 'Ceart na saoránach chun ...', expressing 'The right of the citizens to ...'. 'Without prejudice to the right to vote by proxy' is translated as 'gan dochar don cheart chun vótála trí leas-vótálaí' in s80(g) of the Pigs and Bacon Act, 1935.

In the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann we find 'de cheart' in place of 'an ceart' – see, for example, s26(2): 'The Taoiseach shall have the right to determine the order in which Government business shall appear on the Order Paper', 'Beidh de cheart ag an Taoiseach a shocrú cad é an t-ord ina mbeidh gnó Rialtais ar Riar na hOibre'. 'He has the right to ...' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'tá sé de cheart aige ...' in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, 1926, p. 19. This construction is found also in the 1922 Constitution, in Article 14 of which 'All citizens of the Irish Free State ... shall have the right to vote for members of Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'Beidh de cheart ag gach saoránach de Shaorstát Éireann ... vótáil le teachtaí de Dháil Éireann'. See above for an example from the current Constitution.

'Ceart' is the Irish legal term for 'right', 'aiseag chearta an phósta' translating 'restitution of conjugal rights' in Téarmaí Dlí, for example. Old Irish 'cert' comes from Latin 'certus', examples of the adjective 'cert', in the sense of 'correct, right, proper, fitting', being cited in DIL from the ninth-century Milan Glosses onwards. As a noun, 'cert' also had the quasi-legal sense of 'right, claim, entitlement', Lebor na Cert (i.e. 'The Book of Rights') being the title of an early Irish tract on the rights and privileges of kings. See further the commentary on Article 43.2.1°, 'ceart' also expressing 'justice' in the Constitution.

comhalta We find the old dative plural ending, 'do chomhaltaibh', in the enrolled version. The primary sense of 'comhalta' in Ó Dónaill is 'foster-brother, foster-sister', with 'fellow, member' as secondary sense, Ó Dónaill citing 'comhalta d'ollscoil, fellow of university' and 'comhalta cumainn, member of a society'. Dinneen also includes 'a member (of a society, etc.)' s.v. 'cómhalta'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that Modern Irish 'comhalta' in the sense of 'member (of organization, etc.)' represents a merger of two earlier words, both to varying degrees connected with the early Irish custom of fosterage: 'comhalta', 'fosterchild', from the verb 'con-aíl', 'rears together', and 'comhdhalta', 'foster-brother/sister' > 'fellow pupil', a compound of 'com' and 'dalta'. As regards fosterage in early Irish society, see Fergus Kelly, A Guide to Early Irish Law (1988, p. 86), who states that, unlike most Indo-European languages where the word for 'father' and 'mother' have intimate forms, used particularly in childhood, in Old Irish the intimate forms have been transferred to the fosterparents. One early Irish law text refers to 'a fosterbrother reared in the same cradle' ('comalta óencléib', ibid., p. 86, n. 147). The wider connotation of 'comhalta' has a long history in the language: Christ is referred to as king Conchobur mac Nessa's 'comhalta' in one text, they both having been born on the same night according to Irish literary tradition.

'Members of Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'teachtaí de Dháil Éireann' in the 1922 Constitution, corresponding, of course, to the term 'Teachta Dála'. 'Teachta' comes from 'techt' (originally the same word as 'techt' meaning (1) 'act of going', (2) 'act of coming' [DIL]), translated as 'messenger, envoy, courier' in DIL, and we find an example of this word as early as the Milan Glosses of the ninth century on a Latin commentary on the Psalms, where it glosses 'nuntiorum'. 'Comhalta' may have been called on to satisfy a perceived need for a single term to refer to a member whether it be of the Dáil or the Seanad. Members of Seanad Éireann are referred to as 'baill de Sheanad Éireann' in Article 14 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Ball', literally 'limb, member, organ' of the body, is also found in the current Constitution; 'the Member States of the Communities' is rendered as 'Ballstáit na gComhphobal' in Article 29.4.6°, this being the current standard translation.

Finally, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that 'comhaltaí de Dháil Éireann' expresses 'members of Dáil Éireann' after their election as such members but, as they are as yet to be elected in the present context, they might be referred to as 'comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann'. See 'toghchán do' below.

toghchán do We have both 'toghchán do chomhaltaí de Dháil Éireann' and 'toghchán don Uachtarán' in this subsection. 'Do(n)' seems a very literal expression of 'for' in 'election for', which can perhaps alternatively be expressed by having the noun following 'election' in the genitive case, i.e. 'toghchán comhaltaí de Dháil Éireann' and 'toghchán an Uachtaráin'. See Article 16.1.2° where we find 'the law relating to the election of members of Dáil Éireann' expressed as 'an dlí i dtaobh toghcháin comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann', following the ninth Amendment of the Constitution, 1984, 'ta ceart bhótála aige i dtoghchán comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann' expressing 'shall have the right to vote at an election for members of Dáil Éireann' in the original Article 16.1.2°.

Turning to the Acts, 'díreach roimh a mbliain a chuirfear an toghchán don oifig sin ar siúl' translates 'Immediately preceding the year in which the election for such office takes place' in s5 of the Fisheries Amendment Act, 1962. In s4(3)(a) of the Age of Majority Act, 1985, however, 'The date on which a person attains the age of eighteen years shall ... be calculated for the purpose of determining whether a person has the right to vote at an election for members of Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'Déanfar an dáta a slánóidh duine ocht mbliana déag d'aois a ríomh ... ar an modh céanna a ríomhtar é d'fhonn a chinneadh an bhfuil ceart ag duine vótáil i dtoghchán comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann'. Finally, looking at earlier Acts, in s6(3)(c) of the Prevention of Electoral Abuses Act, 1923, 'voting at an election for any public office' is translated as 'vótáil i dtoghchán i gcóir aon oifige puiblí'. See further the commentary on Article 12.5.

saoránach This is the word currently used to express 'citizen' in Irish. It is a relatively modern term in Irish, simply translated as 'citizen' in Ó Dónaill, who gives no example of its usage. In Dinneen it is translated as 'a freeman', i.e. its literal sense. 'Saoránach ... de Shaorstát Éireann iseadh gach duine' translates 'Every person ... is a citizen of the Irish Free State' in Article 3 of the 1922 Constitution, 'saoránacht' translating 'citizenship' therein. 'Fórsa Cosanta na Saoránach' translates 'the Citizens' Defence Force' in s4(5) of the Superannuation and Pensions Act, 1923. 'The Irish Citizen Army', however, is translated as 'Arm Cathránach na hÉireann' in the Long Title of the Army Pensions Act, 1923 – note that De Bhaldraithe translates 'The Irish Citizen Army' as 'An tArm Cathartha'. 'Catharda', as a noun, is translated as 'citizen' in DIL, where examples are given of this usage of the word over centuries – 'athair na catharda' glosses Latin 'pater civium', which itself glosses 'Patricius', in a copy of 'Fiacc's Hymn' for St Patrick, for example. DIL also gives examples of the forms 'caithreóir' and 'cathraigtheóir', also expressing 'citizen', along with the form 'cathrar', which apparently comes from 'cathair' and 'fer'. 'Cathróir' was De Bhaldraithe's first preference, in 1959, followed by 'saoránach'.

It is by secret ballot and in accordance with proportional representation and by the method of the single transferable vote that the voting will be done.

ENGLISH TEXT

The voting shall be by secret ballot and on the system of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 Whereas 'by means of the single transferable vote' qualifies 'the system of proportional representation' in the English text, the Irish version links this directly to the way the voting will be done; it is given as a third separate feature of the voting, the English version specifying only two features.
- 2 'System' is not specifically expressed in the Irish text, 'on the system of' being expressed as 'de réir' ('in accordance with').

ar mhodh an aonghutha inaistrithe This phrase expresses 'by means of the single transferable vote' in Articles 16.2.5<sup>o</sup> and 18.5 also.

In the development of the sense of a 'vote', we see a progression of the basic sense of 'guth', 'voice'. We find this secondary sense in Dinneen, who cites 'guth na ndaoine, vox populi'. Ó Dónaill gives the secondary meanings 'expressed opinion' (citing 'guth an phobail, the voice of the people'); 'guth a thabhairt ar son, in aghaidh ruda, to voice an opinion in favour of, against, something') and 'voice, vote' (citing 'guth a thabhairt do dhuine i rud, to give someone a voice in something' and 'do ghuth a thabhairt, to vote'). 'Vote' is given as a secondary sense of 'guthaíocht' also. 'Vote' would currently be translated directly as 'vóta' in the Acts and is so translated in Téarmaí Dlí, following the ninth Irish Legal Terms Order (S.I. No. 291 of 1950 – Terms relating to Company Law). 'Vóta' is found in the first subsection of this section and in other Articles – see the commentary on Article 12.2.1<sup>o</sup>.

'Aonghuth' is a concise way of expressing 'single vote'. Note, however, that 'd'aonghuth' means 'with one voice, unanimously' – 'unanimous vote' is translated as 'vóta d'aonghuth' in s17(3)(a) of the Credit Union Act, 1966, for example. 'Single' is usually translated as 'aon ... amháin',

'aonraic' or 'aonair' (which comes from 'aon' + 'fear') – the Single European Act, for example, is cited in Irish as 'An Ionstraim Eorpach Aonair' ('Ionstraim' following the French here).

Looking at the Acts as regards the phrase 'single transferable vote', in s37(2)(d) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1937, which Act is directly related to the 1937 Constitution, we find 'aon-vóta' replacing 'aon-ghuth':

... the electors shall be elected by the members of such council present at the said meeting ... voting by secret ballot on the system of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote ... toghfár na toghthóirí ag na comhaltaí den chomhairle sin a bheidh ar an gcruinniú san ... agus iad ag vótáil tré rún-bhallóid do réir na hionadaíochta cionmhaire agus ar mhodh an aon-vóta ionaistrithe.

In s11 of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1954, 'aon-vóta' becomes 'aon-ghuth', as in the Constitution, with 'voting on the system of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote' being translated as 'ag vótáil do réir na hionadaíochta cionúire agus ar mhodh an aon-ghutha inaistrithe'. In the Appendix to the Referendum (Amendment) Act, 1959, 'members of Dáil Éireann are elected on a system of proportional representation for constituencies returning at least three members, each voter having a single transferable vote' is translated as 'déantar comhaltaí Dháil Éireann a thoghadh de réir na hionadaíochta cionúire do dháilcheantair a dtoghann gach dáilcheantar ar leith díobh triúr Teachta Dála ar a laghad, agus bíonn vóta inaistrithe amháin ag gach vótálaí'. This is followed by:

It is proposed in the Bill to abolish the system of proportional representation ... each voter having a single non-transferable vote. Tá sé beartaithe sa Bhille deireadh a chur le córas na hionadaíochta cionúire ... agus vóta amháin nach mbeidh inaistrithe a bheith ag gach vótálaí.

Whereas the wording of the Constitution was followed in s28(2) of the Údarás na Gaeltachta Act, 1979 – 'the poll shall be taken by secret ballot and on the principle of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote' being translated as 'is le rúnbhallóid agus ar phrionsabal na hionadaíochta cionúire agus ar mhodh an aonghutha inaistrithe a thógfar an vótaíocht' – in s2(3) of the First Schedule to the Postal and Telecommunications Service Act, 1983, the official standard translation is found: 'Voting shall be by secret ballot and on the basis of proportional representation by means of a single transferable vote' is translated as 'Is le rúnbhallóid, agus ar bhonn na hionadaíochta cionúire trí vóta inaistrithe amháin, a dhéanfar an vótáil'. Finally, looking at earlier Acts, s35(3)(b) and (c) of the Local Government (Dublin) Act, 1930, reads as follows:

- (b) the voting shall be by secret ballot;
- (c) the voting shall be according to the principle of proportional representation and, in the case of voters having one vote only, every vote shall be a single transferable vote ...
- (b) is le ballóid sheicréideach a déanfar an vótáil;
- (c) is do réir phrinsiobail na hionadaíochta cothromúla a déanfar an vótáil agus, i gcás vótálaithe go n-aon vóta amháin, beidh gach vóta ina aon vóta amháin ionaistrithe.

'Ar mhodh' is translated as 'after or in the manner of' in Dinneen. 'Modh' is translated principally as 'mode, manner' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'ar mhodh, i modh, nathrach, in the manner of a serpent'. 'Procedure, method' is given as a secondary sense, Ó Dónaill citing 'modh iocaiochta, method of payment'. This word comes from Old Irish 'mod', which comes from Latin 'modus', which word it glosses. 'By means of' is usually translated as 'trí bhithin' ('by means of, fit for, fit to be' and examples cited there include 'indéanta' ('practicable') and 'inléite' ('legible'). Both of these are also given as separate headwords, as is 'inaistrithe', which is translated as 'movable, removable, transferable; transposable; translatable'. 'Inaistritheacht' is also given as a headword and translated as 'transferability, translatability'. 'I transfer' is translated as 'aistrím' in Téarmaí Dlí, following the first Irish Legal Terms Order (R. & S.R., No. 249 of 1947).

Finally, regarding 'inaistrithe', this form is made up of the prefix 'in-' with the past participle of 'aistrigh', 'move, transfer, translate'. The prefix 'in-' is translated in Ó Dónaill as 'capable of, fit for, fit to be' and examples cited there include 'indéanta' ('practicable') and 'inléite' ('legible'). Both of these are also given as separate headwords, as is 'inaistrithe', which is translated as 'movable, removable, transferable; transposable; translatable'. 'Inaistritheacht' is also given as a headword and translated as 'transferability, translatability'. 'I transfer' is translated as 'aistrím' in Téarmaí Dlí, following the first Irish Legal Terms Order (R. & S.R., No. 249 of 1947).

de réir na hionadaíochta cionúire This phrase expresses 'on the system of proportional representation' in Articles 16.2.5° and 18.5 also. 'Ionadaíocht chionúire' is the current Irish term for 'proportional representation' – see, for example, s2(1) of the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, where 'tógfar an vótaíocht de réir phrionsabal na hionadaíochta cionúire, agus beidh vóta inaistrithe amháin ag gach toghthóir' translates 'the poll shall be taken according to the principle of proportional representation, each elector having one transferable vote', referring to Assembly elections. See translations of 'proportional representation' in various Acts in the note above on 'ar mhodh an aonghutha inaistrithe'.

'Do réir na hionadaidheachta cionmhaire' is the form of this phrase in the original text. 'Cionmhar' is the form of the headword in Ó Dónaill and the genitive singular form 'cionmhaire' rather than 'cionúire' would seem to comply with the rules laid down in Rannóg an Aistriúcháin's Gramadach na Gaeilge agus Litríú na Gaeilge: An Caighdeán Oifigiúil. According to the first spelling 'Rule' therein, '(a)mha' > 'ú' (e.g. 'fearamhail' > 'fearúil' and 'geanamhail' > 'geanúil'); this rule does not apply to 'mh' in the suffix '-mhar' however – 'griannmhar' and 'líonmhar' remain unaltered, for example. The genitive form 'cionúire' above may have developed through the noun 'cionmhair', translated as 'share, portion, dividend, an elemental portion, an atom' in Dinneen, who continues s.v. 'cionmhair': 'also cionmhaireacht (pronounced cionúireacht); ceannmhaireacht, id.' We find the headword 'cionúireacht', translated as 'proportion, portion', in the Glossary appended to An Caighdeán Oifigiúil. Ó Dónaill also contains this word as a headword and gives the form 'cionmhaire' as a variant. 'Cionmhar' is simply translated as 'proportional' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'ionadaíocht chionmhar' ('proportional representation') s.v. 'ionadaíocht' ('representation'). 'Cionmhar' is based on the noun 'cion' ('share, amount').

In Articles 26 and 32 of the 1922 Constitution, 'proportional representation' is translated as 'ionaduíocht chothromúil', literally 'level/even representation' –

'cothrom' (which translates 'proportion' in the 1922 Constitution) being formed from 'comh' and 'trom', literally 'of the same weight'. 'Ionadaíocht' is based on 'ionadaí' (translated as 'representative; substitute, deputy, locum tenens' in Ó Dónaill), which in turn is based on 'ionad' ('place'). 'Ionad duine a dhéanamh' is translated as 'to take the place of someone' in Ó Dónaill, where we find 'ionadaíocht a dhéanamh do dhuine' translated 'to act in place of someone'. Ó Dónaill cites 'tá ionad sa Dáil aige, he has a seat in the Dáil'.

Note that the Irish phrase above does not specifically include the word 'system'. The sense of the English is conveyed by the use of the definite article with the abstract noun (the standard practice in Irish, 'an pholaitíocht' expressing 'politics' for example) and 'de réir', 'in accordance with', being stronger than the English 'on the' in 'on the system of'. Similarly Article 26 of the 1922 Constitution does not translate 'principles': 'The members shall be elected upon principles of Proportional Representation' is translated simply as 'Is do réir Ionaduíochta Cothromúla a toghfar na teachtaí'. As we see above, however, in the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, 'according to the principle of proportional representation' is translated as 'de réir phrionsabal na hionadaíochta cionúire'. See above for 'de réir córais ionadaíochta cionúire' translating 'on a system of proportional representation' in s11(1) of the Dentists Act, 1985.

rúnbhallóid This is a compound of 'rún' and 'ballóid' on the lines of 'rúnseirbhís', 'secret service', for example. Unlike the latter, however, 'rúnbhallóid' is not recognized as a headword in Ó Dónaill. This compound could equally be covered by 'ballóid rúnda' – De Bhaldraithe, for example, translates the verb 'ballot' as 'vótáilim (le ballóid rúnda)'. In Parliamentary usage, 'rún' translates 'resolution'. Nevertheless, the Constitution is followed in s2(3) of the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, for example, where 'Voting at an Assembly election shall be by secret ballot' is translated as 'Is le rúnbhallóid a dhéanfar vótáil i dtoghchán Tionóil'.

'The Ballot Act, 1872' is cited in Irish as 'Acht na Ballóide, 1872' in the Tenth Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923. In Article 14 of the 1922 Constitution, 'the voting shall be by secret ballot' (in relation to elections for members of Dáil Éireann and Seanad Éireann) is translated as 'is le ballóid shicréideach a déanfar an vótáil'. The official translation of the 'Secret Service' is in fact 'An tSeirbhís Sicréideach'. Two examples of 'sicréideach' from earlier literature are cited in L. Mc Cionnaith.

'Ballóid' is formed directly from 'ballot' and is given in De Bhaldraithe, who also gives 'crannchur' (following the abbreviation for 'Parliament') – this basically means 'casting of lots'. He gives 'cuirim ar chrainn' as a secondary translation of the verb 'ballot'. 'Ballot-paper' is therein translated as 'páipéar ballóide' and 'páipéar guthaíochta' – see the commentary on 'guth' above, regarding 'guthaíocht', along with the commentary on Article 12.2.1°.

The President will hold office for seven years from the day (he) enters into (the responsibility of) / takes up (the duty of) his office unless it happens before the end of that term that (he) dies or (that he) relinquishes office or that he is put out of office, or that permanent disablement/derangement/misguidance seizes him and that (that) is established to the satisfaction of the Supreme Court while/being composed of at least five judges.

ENGLISH TEXT

The President shall hold office for seven years from the date upon which he enters upon his office, unless before the expiration of that period he dies, or resigns, or is removed from office, or becomes permanently incapacitated, such incapacity being established to the satisfaction of the Supreme Court consisting of not less than five judges.

- 1 The principal sense today of the Irish term 'míthreoir' (which expresses 'incapacity' above) is 'misguidance, derangement, mental distraction', although Dinneen places 'incapacity' first in his list of definitions; 'míthreoraím' is translated as 'I misdirect' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'éagumasáim' translating 'I incapacitate' and 'permanent incapacity' being translated as 'éagumas buan'.
- 2 'Such incapacity being established' is expressed as 'agus go suifear sin' ('and that that is established') in the Irish text, not specifically linking the phrase to 'incapacity'.
- 3 'From the date' is expressed as 'ón lá' ('from the day') in the Irish text – as in many other Articles, as we shall see – though it could hardly be argued from the use of 'day' as against 'date' that the President would have to enter office in daylight.
- 4 'Enters upon his office' is expressed as 'rachaidh i gcúram a oifige' ('enters into the responsibility / takes up the duty of his office') in the Irish text.
- 5 'Period' is expressed as 'téarma' ('term') in the Irish text.

Commentary

míthreoir This term consistently expresses 'incapacity' in the Constitution. 'Incapacity' in relation to the President is referred to again in Articles 12.3.3<sup>o</sup> ('permanent incapacity', 'míthreoir bhuan ... dá ghabháil'), 12.7 ('permanent incapacity', 'go ngabhfaidh míthreoir bhuan é') and 14.1 ('his temporary incapacity, or his permanent incapacity', 'ar míthreoir go sealadach ... ar míthreoir go buan'). It is referred to in relation to the Taoiseach in Article 28.6.2<sup>o</sup> ('become permanently incapacitated', 'má ghabhann míthreoir bhuan é'), in relation to members of the Government in Article 28.12 ('incapacity', 'ar míthreoir'), in relation to members of the Council of State in Article 31.5 ('becomes permanently incapacitated', 'go ngeobhaidh míthreoir bhuan é'), in relation to the Comptroller and Auditor General in Article 33.5.1<sup>o</sup> ('for stated misbehaviour or incapacity', 'de dheasca mí-iompair nó míthreora a luafar') and, finally, in relation to judges of the Supreme Court or the High Court in Article 35.4.1<sup>o</sup> ('for stated misbehaviour or incapacity', 'de dheasca mí-iompair nó míthreora a luafar'). See further the commentary on Article 31.5.

'Míthreoir' is translated as 'incapacity' in Dinneen whose entry s.v. 'mí-threoir' is as follows:

Mí-threoir, incapacity, of body or mind, legal disability, etc., state of going wrong, want, weakness, faintness; mí-threoir ort! faintness seize you! ar mí-threoir, disabled from any cause, as lameness, drink, etc.; (adjective) mí-threorach, feeble, vigourless, gone wrong or astray.

'Míthreoir' is translated as 'weakness' in Edward O'Reilly, Irish English Dictionary (1821). 'Míthreorach' is translated as 'weak, inefficient' in DIL, 'míthreoir' not being given as a headword there. Ó Dónaill's entry s.v. 'míthreoir' would reflect the current understanding of the word:

Míthreoir: Misguidance; upset, confusion, shiftlessness, feebleness. Bheith ar míthreoir, to be confused; to be helpless, enfeebled. Míthreorach. 1. Bewildered, confused. 2. Helpless, feeble, puny. 3. Misleading.

This translation directly reflects the etymology of 'míthreoir': the pejorative prefix 'mí-' (translated as 'bad, ill, evil, dis-, mis-, un-' in Ó Dónaill), and 'treoir', translated as 'guidance, direction'. In s87 of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, for example, 'a statement which is likely to mislead voters' is translated as 'ráiteas ar dóigh dó vótálaithe a chur ar míthreoir'. 'Míthreoraím' is translated as 'I misdirect', and 'míthreorú' as 'misdirection', in Téarmaí Dlí, following the fourth Irish Legal Terms Order (S.I. 68 of 1949, Terms relating to Practice, Evidence and Procedure).

'Míthreoir' translates 'disablement' in some Acts. In s1(1) of the Social Welfare (Occupational Injuries) Act, 1966, and in s36(1) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example, 'disablement gratuity' and 'disablement pension' are translated respectively as 'aisce mhíthreorach' and 'pinsean míthreorach', 'míthreorach' there being the genitive singular of 'míthreoir'. 'Disablement' is translated as 'míchumas' in Téarmaí Dlí, however, 'disablement benefit' being translated as 'sochar míchumais' – in s1(1) of the Social Welfare (Occupational Injuries) Act, 1966, however, we find 'sochar míthreorach' translating 'disablement benefit'. If one consults L. Mc Cionnaith's English-

Irish Dictionary – as no doubt the drafters of the Irish version of the Constitution did, that dictionary having just been published at the time (1935) – while ‘incapacity’ is given as ‘mí-ábaltacht’ (literally ‘dis-ability’) and ‘disablement benefit’ as ‘sochar dinirt’ (literally ‘lack of strength benefit’), s.v. ‘Incapacitate’ we get merely ‘v. disable’. In the entry s.v. ‘disable, -ment’, we read:

Disable, knock out, &c. Do chuir an buille sin an fear, do cuireadh an fear, 7c. dá threoir [Munster, Connacht], ar mithreoir [Munster]; tá sé ar mithreoir [Munster].

Significantly, the Irish version of the 1937 Constitution differs from the 1922 Constitution in its expression of ‘incapacity’, the term in the latter being ‘míchumas’. Article 53 of the 1922 Constitution deals with the President of the Executive Council and corresponds to Article 28.6.2° of the 1937 Constitution to the extent that it outlines the occasions when the Vice-President is to act in place of the President. In Article 53 of the 1922 Constitution ‘if the President shall die, resign, or be permanently incapacitated ...’ is translated as ‘ar an Uachtarán d’fháil bháis, do thabhairt suas no do thuiteam fé mhí-chumas bhuan’. Article 28.6.2° of the 1937 Constitution expresses ‘if the Taoiseach should die, or become permanently incapacitated’ as ‘Má éagann an Taoiseach nó má ghabhann mithreoir bhuan é’. In Articles 63 and 68 of the 1922 Constitution, which Articles deal respectively with the Comptroller and Auditor General and judges of the Supreme Court, the High Court and all other courts, ‘for stated misbehaviour or incapacity’ is translated as ‘mar gheall ar dhroch-iompar no mí-chumas a luadhfar’ and ‘mar gheall ar mhí-iompar no mhí-chumas a luadhfar’ respectively. As we have already seen, the same English phrase in relation to the Comptroller and Auditor General and the judges is expressed as ‘de dheasca mí-iompair nó mithreora a luafar’ and ‘de dheasca mí-iompair nó mithreorach a luafar’ in Articles 33.5.1° and 35.4.1° respectively of the current Constitution.

Why did the drafters of the Irish version of the 1937 Constitution depart from ‘mí-chumas’ and take on ‘mithreoir’ to express ‘incapacity’? The answer may lie in Article 15 of the 1922 Constitution and the corresponding Article 16.1.1° of the current Constitution, where the terms ‘disability’ and ‘incapacity’ are found in association. Article 15 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows (we shall be returning to this in the commentary on Article 12.4.1°): ‘Every citizen ... who is not placed under disability or incapacity by the Constitution or by law shall be eligible to become a member of Dáil Éireann’. This is translated as: ‘Gach saoránach ... ná beidh curtha fé mhí-ábaltacht ná fé mhí-chumas ag an mBunreacht ná ag an ndlí beidh sé intoghtha chun bheith ‘na theachta de Dháil Éireann’. The drafters of the Irish version of Article 16.1.1° of the 1937 Constitution used ‘míchumas’, in place of 1922’s ‘mí-ábaltacht’, to express ‘disability’ and called in ‘mithreoir’ to express ‘incapacity’: ‘Every citizen ... who is not placed under disability or incapacity by this Constitution or by law, shall be eligible for membership of Dáil Éireann’ is expressed as ‘Gach saoránach ... nach gcuirtear faoi mhíchumas nó faoi mhithreoir leis an mBunreacht seo ná le dlí, tá sé intofa ar chomhaltas Dháil Éireann’. The two terms are combined again in Article 16.1.3°:

No law shall be enacted placing any citizen under disability or incapacity for membership of Dáil Éireann on the ground of sex .... Ní cead aon dlí a achtú a chuirfeadh saoránach ar bith, toisc gur fear nó toisc gur bean an saoránach sin, faoi mhíchumas nó faoi mhithreoir maidir lena bheith ina chomhalta de Dháil Éireann.

Irish translators in the first half of the twentieth century seem to have had a real difficulty translating ‘disability’/ ‘disablement’ as we see if we follow its trail in the Army Pensions Acts. In s16 of the Army Pensions Act, 1923, ‘disablement’ is translated as ‘dith’ (basically ‘loss; deprivation; destruction’) but in the First Schedule to that Act, ‘Wounds of ... internal organs ... involving total permanent disablement’ is translated as ‘Créachta in orgáin inmheánacha ... a fhágann duine ina bhuan-mhairtíreach ar fad’ (‘mairtíreach’ being a development based on the Latin loanword ‘martyr(ium)’). ‘Wound pensions’ (translated as ‘pinsin chréachta’) in that Act (No. 26 of 1923), becomes ‘disability pensions’ in s9 of the Army Pensions Act, 1927, which, corresponding to the 1922 Constitution, is translated as ‘pinsin mhí-ábaltachta’. In the First Schedule to the Army Pensions Act, 1932, ‘Disablement Pension’ is translated as ‘Pinsean Dithe’, with ‘temporary incapacity of’ being translated as ‘fé mhí-chumas sealadach’ in s7 of the same Act. We return to ‘pinsean mí-ábaltachta’ translating ‘disability pension’ in the Army Pensions Acts, 1937, 1941 and 1943. In the Second Schedule to the Army Pensions Act, 1946, however, ‘Degree of Disablement’ is translated as ‘An Grád Éagumais’, while in the First Schedule to the Army Pensions Act, 1949, this phrase is translated as ‘An Grád Míchumais’. Finally, in s6 of the Army Pensions (Increase) Act, 1949, ‘pinsean mithreora’ translates ‘disability pension’.

The ‘disability’ involved in those examples above from various Army Pensions Acts is, of course, a physical disability. While Dinneen includes ‘legal disability’ in his entry s.v. ‘mí-threoir’, as we have seen, we also have seen from the examples given by L. Mc Cionnaith in 1935 that he understood it to mean a physical disability. The occurrences of ‘disability’ in the Constitution involve not a physical but a legal disqualification. In Henry Murdoch’s Dictionary of Irish Law (revised second edition, 1993), we find the following entry s.v. ‘disability’:

disability, person under. A person who lacks legal capacity e.g. a minor or a person of unsound mind.

The entry s.v. ‘incapacity’ is very similar to this:

incapacity. Lack of legal power or competence e.g. due to being a minor or being of unsound mind.

The Shorter Oxford Dictionary has as its secondary meaning of ‘incapacity’, ‘legal disqualification, disability’ and states, ‘an instance of this from 1648’.

Looking at the earlier Acts, in s4(3) of the Garda Síochána (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, ‘If and whenever the Commissioner is incapacitated by illness from performing his duties ... during such incapacity’ is translated as ‘Má bhíonn agus nuair a bheidh an Coimisinéir gan bheith in án a dhualgaisí do chó-líona toisc é do bheith breoite ... faid a leanfidh an mí-chumas ... san’ and in s17(3) of the Railways Act, 1924, ‘if any standing member of the railway tribunal is incapacitated by prolonged illness ... from attending meetings of the tribunal’ is translated as ‘má bhíonn aon bhall seasmhach den bhinse bhóthair iarainn, tré bhreiteacht fhada ...

gan bheith ábalta ar theacht go dtí cruinnithe den bhinse'. In s18 of the Agricultural Wages Act, 1936, '... is so affected by any physical injury ... that he is incapacitated from earning the minimum rate' is translated as '(go bhfuil an duine sin) de dheascaibh aon díobhála cuirp ... gan bheith inniúil ar an ráta minimum san do thuilleamh'. 'Beidh ag Leas-Bhainisteoir Ginearálta a bheas ceaptha faoin alt seo, faid a leanfas an tsaoire nó an t-éagumas ar dá dheascaibh a ceapadh é nó go dtí go dtarláí roimhe sin é a chur as oifig nó é d'éag nó d'éirí as oifig, cumhachta uile an Bhainisteora Ghinearálta' translates 'A Deputy General Manager appointed under this section shall, during the continuance of the vacation or incapacity on account of which he is appointed or until he is sooner removed or dies or resigns, have all the powers ... of the General Manager' in s40(3) of the Harbours Act, 1946.

In Téarmaí Dlí, following the third Irish Legal Terms Order (S.I. No. 47 of 1948, Terms relating to Compensation for Workers), 'incapacity' is translated as 'éagumas', 'permanent incapacity' as 'éagumas buan' and 'I incapacitate' as 'éagumasaim'. 'Cumas' means 'capability, power' according to Ó Dónaill and 'éagumas' would literally mean 'without capability' or 'without power'. 'Éagumas' would therefore cover both physical disability and legal disqualification. In s4 of the Finance Act, 1990, we find 'he was totally incapacitated by physical or mental infirmity' translated as 'go raibh sé ... faoi éagumas iomlán le héiglíocht choirp nó mheabhrach'. 'Incapacity' in a context similar to that of the Constitution is found in s7(3)(a) of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1969, in relation to the manager of a county borough, where 'a person duly appointed either as deputy for such manager or to act in the place of such manager during his absence or incapacity' is translated as 'duine arna cheapadh go cuí mar ionadaí don bhainisteoir sin nó chun gníomhú in áit an bhainisteora sin le linn é a bheith as láthair nó faoi éagumas'. Similarly, referring to Boards of Conservators in s33(1) of the Fisheries (Consolidation) Act, 1959, 'the seat of any elected member of the board becomes vacant by death, resignation, incapacity, or disqualification' is translated as 'ionad aon chomhalta thofa den bhord a bheith folamh trí bhás, éirí as oifig, éagumas nó dícháiliú'.

Looking at '(permanently) incapacitated' in the modern Acts, in s4 of the Finance Act, 1990, 'that ... he was totally incapacitated by physical or mental infirmity' is translated as 'go raibh sé faoi éagumas iomlán le héiglíocht choirp nó mheabhrach'. In Article 4(c) of Annex II to the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency Act, 1988, 'In case any arbitrator ... shall resign, die, or become incapacitated' is translated as 'I gcás aon eadránaí ... d'éirí as, d'fháil bháis nó d'éirí éagumasaithe'. On the other hand, 'who ... is permanently incapacitated by reason of mental or physical infirmity from maintaining himself and had become so permanently incapacitated before he had attained the age of 21 years' is translated as 'atá ... buanéagumasaithe, mar gheall ar éiglíocht meabhrach nó coirp, ar é féin a chothabháil agus gur tháinig sé chun bheith buanéagumasaithe amhlaidh sula raibh 21 bliain d'aois slán aige' in s4 of the Finance Act, 1986. 'Má fhaigheann comhréiteoir nó eadránaí bás, nó má éiríonn sé míchumasach, nó má éiríonn sé as oifig' translates 'if a conciliator or an arbitrator should die, become incapacitated, or resign' in s1 of Article 56 of the Second Schedule to the Arbitration Act, 1980. In s33 of the Finance Act, 1979, 'a child ... who is permanently incapacitated by reason of mental or physical infirmity' is translated as 'leanbh ... atá éagumasaithe go buan de bhíthin éiglíocht coirp nó meabhrach' while in s10 of the Finance Act, 1969, 'a child ... who ... is permanently incapacitated by reason of mental or physical infirmity from maintaining himself and had become so permanently incapacitated before he had attained the age of 21 years' is translated as 'aon leanbh leis ... atá faoi bhuan-éagumas mar gheall ar éiglíocht mheabhrach nó choirp chun é féin a chothabháil agus gur tháinig an buan-éagumas sin air sula raibh 21 bliain d'aois slán aige'.

Finally, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú suggests expressing 'or becomes permanently incapacitated, such incapacity being established to the satisfaction of the Supreme Court' simply as 'go dtarlóidh faoi bhuan-éagumas a shuífeair chun sástacht na Cúirte Uachtaraí'.

i seilbh oifige Literally 'in possession of office'. This is a standard translation of 'holds office' in the Acts. In s2(1) of the Censorship of Films Act, 1923, 'who shall hold office for such time and on such terms as the Minister shall ... appoint' is translated as 'a bheidh i seilbh oifige ar feadh pé aimsir agus ar pé téarmaí a cheapfidh an t-Aire'. In s55(2) of the Forestry Act, 1946, 'every such member shall hold office for five years from the date of his appointment but shall be eligible for re-appointment at the expiration of his term of office' is translated as 'beidh gach comhalta den tsórt sin i seilbh oifige go ceann cúig bliana ó dháta a cheaptha ach beidh sé inathcheaptha ar a théarma oifige a bheith caite'. 'A member of the Commission shall hold office on such terms and conditions as may be fixed' is translated as 'Beidh comhalta den Choimisiún i seilbh oifige ar cibé téarmaí agus coinníollacha a socraíodh' in s4(10) of the Imposition of Duties (Dumping and Subsidies) Act, 1968. Finally, in s10 of the Schedule to the Employment Equality Act, 1977, '(Each ordinary member) ... shall hold office for five years' is translated as 'sealbhóidh sé oifig go ceann cúig bliana'.

'Seilbh' is translated as 'possession' in Téarmaí Dlí and as 'occupancy, possession' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'Cé atá i seilbh na feirme anois? Who occupies the farm now?' and 'an té atá sa tseilbh, the person in possession'. Dinneen translates 'i seilbh' as 'in possession of, in a position to', citing 'cuirim mo chuid i seilbh mo chlainne, I transfer my property to my children', 'é bheith i seilbh coiméadta do dhéanamh dóibh, it being in his power to keep guard for them' and 'táim-se i seilbh na cainnte, I am speaking, "have the floor"'. 'Seilbh' is the dative singular of 'sealbh', which is translated by Dinneen principally as 'possession, heritage, portion, property', 'sealbh Chonnla' expressing 'the Promised Land'. 'Selb', in concrete sense, is translated principally as 'property, appurtenance, domain, possessions' and as 'possession, ownership', in abstract sense, in DIL. 'I seilb x' is translated therein as 'in (the) possession of x' and 'under the protection of x' or 'protecting x', 'co mbeth in sruth 'na sáer-s(h)eilb' ('that the river should be her freehold') being cited from the twelfth-century Book of Leinster, for example. See further the commentary on Article 30.6.

ón lá Literally 'from the day'. 'From the date' is again expressed as 'ón lá' in Article 27.5.1<sup>o</sup>, 'after the date' being expressed as 'tar éis an lae' in Articles 25.2.1<sup>o</sup> and 26.3.3<sup>o</sup>.

In Article 48, 'prior to the date of the coming into operation of this Constitution' and 'as on and from that date' are expressed respectively as 'roimh lá an Bunreacht seo a theacht i ngníomh' and 'an lá sin agus as sin amach', the former phrase being similarly expressed in Article 50.1. 'Ó lá a céad-tionóil' expresses 'from the date of its first meeting' in Article 16.5 and 'at the date of a dissolution of Dáil Éireann' is expressed as 'lá lánscotha Dháil Éireann' in Article 28.11.2°.

'Dáta' expresses 'date' when both 'day' and 'date' are found in association in the same sentence. 'Ninety days from the date of its enactment' is expressed as 'nócha lá ó dháta a achtaithe' in Article 24.3; 'on a date which is earlier than the fifth day after such date as aforesaid' is expressed as 'níos luaithe ná an cúigiú lá tar éis an dáta réamhráite' in Article 25.2.2°; 'lá nach déanaí ná ceithre lá tar éis an dáta' expresses 'not later than four days after the date' in Article 27.3 and 'lá nach déanaí ná deich lá tar éis an lae' expressing 'not later than ten days after the date' in Article 27.4.1°, with 'lá nach déanaí ná aon lá dhéag tar éis an lae' expressing 'not later than eleven days after the date' in Article 27.6. 'Not later than ten days after the date of his appointment or such later date ...' is expressed as 'ar dháta nach déanaí ná deich lá tar éis lae a cheaptha, nó dáta is déanaí ná sin' in Article 34.5.3°. In Article 12.3.3° 'not later than, and not earlier than the sixtieth day before, the date of the expiration of the term of office of every President' is expressed as 'lá nach déanaí ná dáta dheireadh théarma oifige gach Uachtarán ar leith agus nach luaithe ná an seascaidh lá roimh an dáta sin', 'lá nach déanaí ná an seachtú lá tar éis an dáta' expressing 'not later than the seventh day after the date' in Article 26.1.2° and 'lá nach déanaí ná seasca lá tar éis an cheist a chur faoina breith' expressing 'not later than sixty days after the date of such reference' in Article 26.2.1°. Finally, note that 'at the earliest practicable date' is expressed as 'chomh luath agus is féidir é' in Article 28.3.2° and 'at the date of their commission' is expressed as 'le linn a ndéanta' in Article 15.5.

'Date' is rendered literally, as 'dáta', in Amendments to the Constitution. Unlike the examples above, 'at the date of such enrolment' is rendered as 'ar dháta an chóip sin a chur isteach ina hiris amhlaidh' in Article 25.5.3°, which subsection was inserted by the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941. In the Amendment contained in Article 41.3.2°, 'ar dháta thionscnamh na n-imeachtaí' renders 'at the date of the institution of the proceedings'. Finally, in s3 of the new Article 28A proposed in the Twentieth Amendment of the Constitution (No. 2) Bill, 1999, 'not later than the end of the fifth year' is rendered as 'tráth nach déanaí ná deireadh an cúigiú bliain'.

The phrase 'from the date' is translated literally as 'ón dáta' in the modern Acts and in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann. 'Lá', however, while meaning 'daytime' and 'daylight', also has the sense of a 'twenty-four hour period' – see Ó Dónaill s.v. 'lá' 1(c). De Bhaldraithe translates 'at some later date' as 'lá is faide anonn', for example, and 'latest date' as both 'an dáta is déanaí' and 'an lá deireanach'.

Turning to the Acts, in s105(1) of the Finance Act, 1983, 'Simple interest ... shall be payable on tax from the date upon which it became due' is translated as 'Beidh ús simplí ... iníochta ar cháin ón dáta a mbeidh sí dlite'. 'Ar an dáta agus ón dáta ar a dtiocfaid chun bheith ina maoin den tsórt san' translates 'as on and from the date upon which they become such property' in s5(b) of the Minerals Development Act, 1940. In s8(5) of the Housing (Building Facilities) Act, 1924, 'within a fortnight from the date of the passing of this Act' is translated as 'laistigh de choicíos o dháta rithite an Achta so'. Note that in s5 of the Schedule to the Pilotage Order Confirmation Act, 1927, 'lodged with the Secretary to the Authority not later than the day preceding the day of the meeting' is translated as 'do lóisteáil le Rúnaí an Údaráis an lá roimh lá an chruinnithe an tráth is déanaí dhe'. 'Not later than' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'ar ... an tráth is déanaí dhe' and as 'ar thráth nach déanaí ná ...' respectively in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 1927, p. 248 and 1928, p. 316.

a rachaidh i gcúram oifige Note that the enrolled text has no relative particle, i.e. 'ón lá rachaidh' as against 'ón lá a rachaidh' in the popular edition. 'Enters into the care/responsibility of office' or 'takes charge / takes up the duty of office' fully expresses 'enter into office'. 'Cúram' is translated as 'care, responsibility' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'dul i gcúram ruda, to take charge of something'. Like English 'charge', 'cúram' has the secondary sense of 'family'. Dinneen translates 'cúram' as 'care, thought, charge, provision, office, employment; concern, interest, business, responsibility', citing the phrase 'seacht gcúramaí an tsléibhe', literally 'the seven concerns of the mountain', translated by Dinneen as 'multifarious (unnecessary) responsibilities'. No early examples of this word are cited in DIL, where it is reported to have perhaps come from Latin 'curam'.

Looking at the Acts, in s5(3) of the Defence Forces Act, 1937, 'Until the first President enters upon his office' is translated as 'Go dtí go raghaidh an chéad Uachtarán i seilbh a oifige'. In s3(1) of the Presidential Seal Act, 1937, however, in accordance with the wording of the present Article, that same clause is translated as 'Go dtí go raghaidh an chéad Uachtarán i gcúram a oifige'. 'The head of a consular post shall not enter upon his duties until ...' is translated as 'ní rachaidh ceann poist chonsalachta i mbun a dhualgas go dtí go ...' in s3 of Article 12 of the Second Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967. Regarding 'into office', in s3(e) of the Local Government (Dissolved Authorities) Act, 1935, 'the newly elected members of such local authority shall come into office on the day on which they would by law have come into office' is translated as 'tiocfaidh baill nua-thoghtha an údaráis áitiúla san in oifig an lá thiochfaidís in oifig do réir dli' and 'na dátaí ar a dtiocfaidh baill in oifig tar éis toghacháin chinn trí mbliain' translates 'the dates of the coming into office after a triennial election' in s45(4)(a) of the Local Government Act, 1941. In s16(a) of the Local Elections (Petitions and Disqualifications) Act, 1974, 'the persons elected at such election shall be deemed not to have come into office' is translated as 'measfar nár tháinig na daoine a toghadh sa toghchán sin in oifig'.

mura dtarlaí This is the present subjunctive of 'tarlaigh', 'happen, occur'. 'Muna dtárluighidh' is the form in the enrolled text. The third person singular, masculine, pronoun 'sé' is understood here, as it is after 'go n-éagfaidh' and 'go n-éireoidh' in 'go n-éagfaidh nó go n-éireoidh as oifig'.

The subjunctive is used in Classical Modern Irish in a conditional clause after the negative conjunctive particle

'muna' ('mura' being the standard Modern Irish form) – see Damian McManus in Kim McCone et al., op. cit., p. 421. An Caighdeán Oifigiúil allows the future tense to be used instead of the present subjunctive where it does not have an optative function. 'Go dté' (featuring as optative in the phrase 'go dté tú slán' ['safe home']) and 'mura dtarlaí' in 'nó go dté comharba an Uachtaráin a cheap é i gcúram a oifige, is é sin mura dtarlaí roimhe sin go n-éagfaidh an comhalta sin' ('until the successor of the President by whom he was appointed shall have entered upon his office ... unless he previously dies'), for example, in Article 31.5, would generally be written today as 'go rachaidh' and 'mura dtarlóidh'. The following other examples of the present subjunctive are found in the Constitution, with the corresponding future forms in the column on the right:

Article	Subjunctive	Future
12.3.1 <sup>o</sup>	mura dtarlaí	mura dtarlóidh
18.9	mura n-éaga nó mura n-éirí as	mura n-éagfaidh nó mura n-éireoidh as
18.9	mura ndícháilítear é	mura ndícháileofar é
22.2.6 <sup>o</sup>	mura gcuire an Coiste	mura gcuirfidh an Coiste
22.4.2 <sup>o</sup>	mura ndéana	mura ndéanfaidh
28.9.4 <sup>o</sup>	mura ndéana	mura ndéanfaidh
29.5.2 <sup>o</sup>	mura dtoilí	mura dtoileoidh
30.5.3 <sup>o</sup>	Mura ndéana	Mura ndéanfaidh
31.5	go dté ... mura dtarlaí	go rachaidh ... mura dtarlóidh
32	mura gcomóra	mura gcomórfaidh
33.5.1 <sup>o</sup>	mura rithid Dáil Éireann agus Seanad Éireann	mura rithfidh Dáil Éireann agus Seanad Éireann
34.5.3 <sup>o</sup>	sula dté	sula rachaidh
35.4.1 <sup>o</sup>	mura rithid Dáil Éireann agus Seanad Éireann	mura rithfidh Dáil Éireann agus Seanad Éireann
47.2.2 <sup>o</sup>	mura ndiúltaid dó	mura ndiúltóidh siad dó
50.2	mura n-achtaí	mura n-achtóidh

Looking at the Acts for similar constructions to that of Article 12.3.1<sup>o</sup>, 'Gach crónéir a cheapfar tar éis tosach feidhme an Achta seo, beidh sé, mura dtarlóidh roimhe sin go n-éagfaidh sé, go n-éireoidh sé as oifig nó go gcuirfear as oifig é, i seilbh oifige nó go slánóidh sé seachtó bliain d'aois' translates 'Every coroner appointed after the commencement of this Act shall, unless he sooner dies, resigns or is removed from office, hold office until he reaches the age of seventy years' in s11(1) of the Coroners Act, 1962. In s2 of the First Schedule to the Údarás na Gaeltachta Act, 1979, 'A member of an tÚdarás shall, unless he sooner dies, resigns becomes disqualified or is removed from office, hold office' is translated as 'Beidh comhalta den Údarás i seilbh oifige, mura tuisce a éagfaidh sé, a éireoidh sé as oifig, a thiocfaidh sé faoi dhícháilíocht nó a chuirfear as oifig é', while in s13(4)(a) of the Arts Act, 1973, 'every member appointed under subparagraph (i) of this paragraph shall, unless he sooner dies or resigns hold office' is translated as 'beidh gach comhalta a cheapfar faoi fhomhír (1) den mhír seo, mura n-éagfaidh sé nó mura n-éireoidh sé as oifig roimhe sin, i seilbh oifige' and in s5 of the Broadcasting Authority (Amendment) Act, 1976, 'An adviser under this section shall, unless he previously dies or resigns, continue as adviser' is translated as 'Leanfaidh comhairleoir faoin alt seo de bheith ina chomhairleoir ... mura n-éagfaidh sé nó mura n-éireoidh sé as oifig roimhe sin'. 'The chairman appointed before the appointed day shall unless he sooner dies, resigns, becomes disqualified or is removed from office, hold office for a period of one year' is translated as 'Murab éag, éirí as, teacht faoi dhícháilíocht nó cur as oifig roimhe sin dó, beidh Cathaoirleach a bheidh arna cheapadh roimh an lá ceaptha i seilbh oifige go ceann tréimhse bliana' in s8 of the Pigs and Bacon (Amendment) Act, 1961.

Looking at earlier Acts, in s4(1) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1927, 'every member of the Council shall, unless he sooner dies, resigns, or becomes disqualified, hold his office as such member for the term of five years' is translated as 'marab éag, eirghe as, no teacht fé dhícháilíocht roimhe sin do beidh gach ball den Chomhairle i seilbh a oifige mar bhall den tsórt san ar feadh téarma cúig mbliain' and in s14(1) of the Milk (Regulation of Supply and Price) Act, 1936, 'Every ordinary member ... of a board shall, unless he sooner dies, resigns or becomes disqualified, hold office' is translated as 'Marab éag no eirghe as no teacht fé dhícháilíocht roimhe sin dó, beidh gach gnáth-bhall de bhord ... i seilbh oifige'.

'Mura rud é' performs the role of 'tarlaigh' in s13(3) of the Local Government (Planning and Development) Act, 1990, where 'A notice under subsection (1) shall continue in force ... unless before the expiration of that period ...' is translated as 'Fanfaidh fógra faoi fho-alt (1) i bhfeidhm ... mura rud é, sula mbeidh an tréimhse sin caite ...'. Similarly in s4(3) of the Air Navigation and Transport Act, 1975, 'scaoilfear ansin é mura rud é roimh dheireadh na tréimhse sin go gcúiseofar é' translates 'shall then be released unless before the expiration of that period ... he is charged'.

deireadh an téarma Literally 'the end of the term'. In the Acts we find 'upon the expiration of (that) period' translated as 'ar éag don tréimhse sin', 'ar dhul in éag don tréimhse', 'ar bheith caite don tréimhse sin', 'ar thréimhse ... a bheith caite', etc. In Téarmaí Dí 'ar éag don léas' translates 'on the expiration of the lease'. In s23(3) of the Housing (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1931, 'within six weeks after the expiration of that period' is translated as 'laistigh de shé sheachtaine tar éis deireadh na tréimhse sin', with 'the owner or owners of any building ... shall demolish that building ... before the expiration of six weeks from the date ...', in s8(1) of the same Act, being translated as 'déanfaidh únaer no únaerí aon fhoirginte ... an fhoirgint sin do leagadh ... fé cheann sé seachtaine ón dáta ...'. 'Roimh dheireadh na tréimhse sin' translates 'before the expiration of that period' in s11(4) of the Factories Act, 1955, in s29(1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1961, in s58(1)(b) of the Mines and Quarries Act, 1965 and in s19(a) of the Road Traffic Act, 1968, with 'sula mbeidh an tréimhse sin caite' translating this clause in s7(4) of the Solicitors (Amendment) Act, 1960. In s47(1)(b)(ii) of the Sale of Goods and Supply of Services Act, 1980, however, we find a more literal translation in 'gur thug an faighteoir fógra don seoltóir 30 lá ar a laghad roimh dhul in éag don tréimhse sin', which translates 'not less than 30 days before the expiration of that period the recipient gave notice to the sender'. 'The term of office ... shall ... terminate on the expiration of the period', in s34(3) of the Postal and Telecommunications Services Act, 1983, is translated as 'Críochnóidh téarma oifige ... ar dheireadh a bheith leis an tréimhse'.

Note, finally, that ‘i gceann tréimhse’ expresses ‘at the end of a period’ in Article 21.2.1<sup>o</sup>.

go n-éagfaidh ‘Éag’ is translated as ‘expiration’ in Téarmaí Dlí, where ‘ar éag don léas’ is translated as ‘on the expiration of the lease’, as we saw above. On the other hand, ‘dearbú i mbéal báis’ and ‘dleachtanna báis’ are translated as ‘dying declaration’ and ‘death duties’ respectively therein. The verb ‘éag’ is translated as ‘die, expire, die out, become extinct’ in Ó Dónaill. ‘Éag’ would today be regarded as a more poetic and older term for death than ‘bás’, even though we have many more earlier examples of ‘bás’, verbal noun of ‘báid’, than of ‘éc’, which is translated basically as ‘death’ in DIL. Note how ‘Is ionann an bás an t-éag is an bás’ is translated as ‘it is six of one and half a dozen of the other’ in Ó Dónaill. Note, however, how ‘d’fháil bháis’ replaces ‘d’éag’ of earlier Acts in the citation from the Multilateral Investment Act, 1988, above. See further the commentary on Article 28.6.2<sup>o</sup>.

go ngabhfaidh ‘Go ngeobhaidh’ is the form in the enrolled text, and we find this form in Article 31.5 of the popular edition. ‘Gabh’ in this context is translated as ‘be effected by’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘Ghabh tinneas, fiabhras, mé, I took sick, a fever. Ghabh tart, ocras, é, he got thirsty, hungry. Má ghabhann tionóisc sibh, if you meet with an accident’. Dinneen cites ‘ghabhann truaighe, fearg, scannradh, tinneas, confadh catha, me, pity, anger, terror, illness, the rage of battle seizes me’. See further the commentary on Article 31.5.

go sásamh ‘To the satisfaction of’ would today be translated in the Acts as ‘chun sástacht’ – ‘Where ... it is shown to the satisfaction of the court’, in s169(9) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example, is translated as ‘Más rud é ... go suítear chun sástacht na cúirte’. Both ‘sásamh’ and ‘sástacht’ are translated as ‘satisfaction’ in Ó Dónaill, for example; the different shades of meaning can be seen in Dinneen whose entry s.v. ‘sásamh’ commences with ‘satisfying, pleasing; satisfaction, contentment, comfort, gratification’, whereas his entry s.v. ‘sástacht’ commences with ‘sufficiency, competence, comfort, satisfaction’.

suítear ‘Suím cúis’ is translated as ‘I show cause’ in Téarmaí Dlí. ‘Cúis, ceart, a shuí’ is translated as ‘to establish a cause, a right’ in Ó Dónaill. ‘I establish’ and ‘I prove’ are two of the secondary senses included in Dinneen s.v. ‘suidhim’, the primary meaning being, of course, ‘I sit’. See the commentary on Article 40.3.1<sup>o</sup> regarding ‘suigh’ in the Constitution.

éirigh as Literally ‘rise out of’. Ó Dónaill gives ‘give up, relinquish’ as secondary senses of ‘éirigh as’, citing ‘éirí as obair, to quit work’ and ‘d’éirigh sé as a phost, he resigned from his post’. De Bhaldraithe translates ‘resign’ as ‘éirim as (post)’ and ‘resignation’ as ‘éirí as’.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A person who is or who was a President, (he) is / shall be electible to that office one (single) other time, but that is all.

ENGLISH TEXT

A person who holds, or who has held, office as President, shall be eligible for re-election to that office once, but only once.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 ‘(He) shall be eligible for re-election once’ is expressed as ‘is intofa chun na hoifige sin é aon uair amháin eile’ (‘He is / shall be electible to that office one (single) other time’) in the Irish text.
- 2 ‘A person who holds, or who has held, office as President’ is expressed as ‘Duine atá nó a bhí ina Uachtarán’ (‘A person who is or who was a President’) in the Irish text.

Commentary

intofa This headword is translated as ‘eligible for election’ in Ó Dónaill. Following this, ‘eligible for re-election’ would be 'in-atofa' (< 'in-ath-thofa'). 'Eligible' alone is translated as 'inainmnithe, intofa, i dteideal chun' in De Bhaldraithe – who, however, translates 'eligible for a position' as 'incheaptha do phost' – 'eligibility' being translated there as 'intofacht'. Dinneen translates 'ion-toghtha' ('iontoghtha' being the form in the enrolled version) as 'eligible, deserving to be chosen, fit to choose'. 'Intoga' is translated as 'acceptable' in DIL, only two citations of which are given, with 'permissible' being suggested as a possible translation of 'intoga' in the second citation. The verb 'do-goa', the earlier form of 'togaid', is translated as 'chooses, elects, selects' in DIL, where this verb is cited as glossing Latin 'eligere' in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. DIL gives 'act of electing, election' as a secondary sense of the verbal noun of 'do-goa', 'toga', citing 'Carulus ... do toga docom epocoi Ola Finn' from the Annals of Connacht, s.a. 1307. 'Intofa' is composed of the prefix 'in-', translated in DIL as 'capable of, fit for, worthy of', and the genitive of the verbal noun 'toghadh' and past participle of the verb 'togh', translated primarily as 'choose, select', with secondary sense of 'elect', in Ó Dónaill. 'Intofa' could therefore theoretically be translated as 'electible', 'selectible', 'eligible', 'eligible for election' or 'eligible for selection'. 'Beidh sé iontoghtha chun bheith 'na theachta de Dháil Éireann' translates '(he) shall be eligible to become a member of Dáil Éireann' in Article 15 of the 1922 Constitution, for example. Note also that 'A person shall not be eligible at any particular time for election to the office of conservator' is translated as 'Ní bheidh duine incheaptha aon tráth áirithe chun a thofa chun oifig choimeádaí' in s5 of the Fisheries Amendment Act, 1962.

Turning to the Acts as regards 'eligible for re-election', in s1 of Article 10 of the Second Schedule to the Arbitration Act, 1980, 'The Secretary-General ... shall be elected by the Administrative Council ... and shall be eligible for re-election' is translated as 'Toghfaidh an Chomhairle Riaracháin an tArd-Rúnaí ... agus féadfar iad a atoghadh'. In s14(3) of the Credit Union Act, 1966, 'a person shall not be eligible for re-election or appointment to the board of directors' is translated as 'ní bheidh duine inatofa ná incheaptha chun an bhoird stiúrthóirí'. Finally, 'Féadfar stiúrthóir a bheidh ag scor dá oifig a atoghadh' translates 'A retiring director shall be eligible for re-election' in s94 of the First Schedule to the Companies Act, 1963.

Looking at the earlier Acts, in s15(3) of the Currency Act, 1927, 'A Chairman retiring on the expiration by effluxion of time of his term of office shall be eligible for re-election or re-nomination' is translated as 'Aon Chathaoirleach a raghaidh as oifig ar bheith caithte dá théarma oifige le himeacht aimsire, beidh sé ion-aththoghtha no ion-athainmnithe'. Similarly, 'Gnáth-bhall a bheidh ag dul as oifig ar bheith caithte dá théarma oifige tré imeacht aimsire, beidh sé ion-aththoghtha' translates 'An ordinary member retiring on the expiration by effluxion of time of his term of office shall be eligible for re-election' in s14(2) of the Milk (Regulation of Supply and Price) Act, 1936. Finally, 'beidh sé inatofa' translates 'shall be eligible for re-election' in s6 of the fourth Schedule to the Transport Act, 1944. See further the commentary on Articles 12.4.1° and 16.1.1°.

ina Uachtarán Owing to the upper-case 'U', one could hardly argue that, on the grounds that the definite article does not precede 'Uachtarán', this need not refer to the President of Ireland – Article 12.1 states that 'Uachtarán na hÉireann' will be called 'the President', 'an tUachtarán', in the Constitution.

The direct translation of 'who holds, or who has held, office as President' would be 'atá, nó a bhí, i seilbh oifige mar Uachtarán' – see Article 12.3.1° where 'The President shall hold office for seven years' is expressed as 'Beidh an tUachtarán i seilbh oifige go ceann seacht mbliana'. See the commentary on that subsection for examples from the Acts in general. The phrase 'i seilbh oifige mar' also has the advantage of not having to be gender-proofed.

sin a mbeidh 'Beidh sé i bhfeidhm ar feadh tréimhse nócha lá ó dháta a achtaithe, ach sin a mbeidh' expresses 'it shall remain in force for a period of ninety days from the date of its enactment and no longer' in Article 24.3. While the phrase 'sin a bhfuil' ('that is all') is very familiar, this version in the future tense hangs uncomfortably on to the end of the subsection. 'Sin an méid' might also be considered somewhat colloquial, 'ach ní bheidh ann ach an t-aon uair amháin eile sin' being considered perhaps somewhat wordy. As regards 'sin an méid', see s65(3) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, where 'one request (and not more) may be made by him' is translated as 'féadfaidh sé féin ... a iarraidh d'aisce uair amháin (agus sin an méid)'. This same English phrase is translated as 'féadfaidh sé féin ... iarraitas amháin (agus sin uile) a dhéanamh' in s62 of the Electoral Act, 1963. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú refers to the phrase 'don aon uair amháin' and suggests translating 'shall be eligible for re-election to that office once, but only once' simply as 'féadfar ... a atoghadh chun na hoifige sin don aon uair amháin'.

aon uair amháin eile Regarding the use of both 'aon' and 'amháin' here, see Ó Dónaill s.v. 'amháin', who cites '(Aon) lá amháin tháinig sé isteach anseo, one day, on a certain day, he came in here'. Note that De Bhaldraithe gives 'aon uair amháin' as a translation of 'once', translating 'once more, once again' as 'aon uair amháin eile' and 'aris eile'.

Duine Note that 'aon' precedes 'duine' in Article 12.4.4°, for example: 'Tig le haon duine atá nó a bhí ina Uachtarán ...' ('Former or retiring Presidents may ...'). 'A person who ...' is often translated as 'Aon duine a ...' in the Acts, this phrase also translating 'Any person who ...'.

Gender-proofed Irish text

Duine atá nó a bhí ina Uachtarán nó ina hUachtarán, is intofa chun na hoifige sin é nó í aon uair amháin eile, ach sin a mbeidh.

Direct translation

Féadfar aon duine atá nó a bhí i seilbh oifige mar Uachtarán a atoghadh<sup>1</sup> chun na hoifige sin aon uair amháin<sup>2</sup>, ach sin uile<sup>3,4</sup>.

Variants

- 1 'Aon duine atá nó a bhí i seilbh oifige mar Uachtarán, beidh sé nó sí in-atofa', 'Aon duine atá nó a bhí i seilbh oifige mar Uachtarán, beidh sé nó sí i dteideal go ndéanfar é nó í a atoghadh'

- 2 'chun na hoifige sin uair amháin'

 4 'a atoghadh chun na hoifige sin don aon uair amháin'

TÉACS GAELIGE

Ní foláir toghchán d'oifig an Uachtaráin a dhéanamh lá nach déanaí ná dáta dheireadh théarma oifige gach Uachtaráin ar leith agus nach luaithe ná an seacadú lá roimh an dáta sin, ach má chuirtear an tUachtarán as oifig, nó má tharlaíonn dó (roimh é a dhul i gcúram a oifige nó dá éis sin) é d'éag nó é d'éirí as nó míthreoir bhuan arna suíomh mar a dúradh dá ghabháil, ní foláir toghchán d'oifig an Uachtaráin a dhéanamh taobh istigh de sheasca lá tar éis an ní sin a tharlú.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

An election for the office of (the) President must be held on a day not later than the date of the end of the term of office of each particular President and not earlier than the sixtieth day before that date, but if the President is put out of office, or if (before he enters into the responsibility / takes up the duty of his office or after that) he happens to die or resign or permanent disability/misguidance/derangement established as said seizes him, an election for the office of (the) President must be held within sixty days after that thing happens.

ENGLISH TEXT

An election for the office of President shall be held not later than, and not earlier than the sixtieth day before, the date of the expiration of the term of office of every President, but in the event of the removal from office of the President or of his death, resignation, or permanent incapacity established as aforesaid (whether occurring before or after he enters upon his office), an election for the office of President shall be held within sixty days after such event.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 In the Irish text, the removal from office of the President comes before the list of 'events' or happenings within sixty days after which an election for the office of President is to be held, unlike the English text, where 'in the event' precedes the reference to the removal from office.
- 2 'Every President' is expressed as 'gach Uachtarán ar leith' ('each particular President') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Not later than' is expressed as 'lá nach déanaí ná' ('on a day not later than') in the Irish text.
- 4 'Whether occurring' is not specifically expressed in the Irish text.
- 5 'Shall be held' is expressed as 'ní foláir ... a dhéanamh' ('must be held') in the Irish text.
- 6 As we saw in the previous subsection, 'míthreoir', the Irish term expressing 'incapacity', today has the sense of 'misguidance, mental distraction, derangement'.

Note that the Irish version of this subsection was amended to a greater degree than the English version in the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941. The English text was amended by the insertion of the words and brackets "(whether occurring before or after he enters upon his office)" immediately after the words "as aforesaid". The amendment of the Irish text, however, involved the deletion of "nó má éagann, nó má éirgheann as, nó má ghabhann míthreoir bhuan é agus go suidhfear sin mar adubhradh" and the insertion in their place of the words and brackets "nó má thárluigheann dó (roimh é do dhul i gcúram a oifige nó dá éis sin) é d'éag nó é d'éirghe as nó míthreoir bhuan ar n-a suidheamh mar adubhradh dá ghabháil". If an Irish translation of "(whether occurring before or after he enters upon his office)" was simply added after "agus go suidhfear sin mar adubhradh" (literally 'and that is established as is said'), it is this clause – which, in the Irish text, unlike the English, is a clause in itself – which would be qualified by the words inserted in brackets, i.e. whether the establishment of the incapacity occurred before or after the President enters office. Note, however, that the clause on the establishment of the incapacity was itself also amended. The use of the phrase 'má thárluigheann' in this Amendment brings this subsection into conformity with Article 12.7.

Commentary

má tharlaíonn dó 'Tarlaigh' is translated as 'happen, occur' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'tharla dom a bheith i láthair, I happened to be present'. 'Tarla' comes from *to-ro-la-. The root 'la-' was used in Old Irish side by side with 'cuir-' in the subjunctive and preterite of the deponent verb 'do-cuirethar' ('put', 'invites'). The gloss 'anasirchríde ished doralad hitossuch' ('what is perishable has been put first') is found in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, for example. In later Middle Irish, according to DIL, 'doralá' or 'tarla' exists independently in the sense of 'met, happened'; 'doralá' survived as late as the seventeenth century, according to DIL, where 'doraláighset', '(they) happened to be', is cited from Ó Cianáin's Flight of the Earls – Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks, however, that this relates to a deliberately archaic style.

'Tarlú', the verbal noun of this verb, occurs at the end of the subsection, just as 'event' is repeated at the end of the English text; unlike the English text, however, the reference to the President being removed from office occurs before reference is first made to 'tarlaigh' and therefore might be considered outside of the events cited in the English text which necessitate an election within 60 days. The Irish text, however, has the advantage of separating the clause 'in the event of the removal from office of the President' from the clause within brackets – 'whether occurring before or after he enters upon his office', the removal from office of the President only being possible after the President has entered office.

'In the event of' is generally translated as 'i gcás' in the Acts – 'in the event of the winding up or dissolution of the Society' is translated as 'i gcás an Cumann a fhoirceannadh nó a dhíscaoileadh' in s4(7) of the Dairy Produce (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1973, for example. 'In the case of the death of a person' is translated as 'I gcás duine d'fháil bháis' in s15 of the Finance Act, 1990.

We also find the phrase ‘más rud é go ...’. See further the commentary on Article 30.5.3°.

Looking at the Acts for more specific parallels to the current subsection, ‘The chairman of a review board shall nominate another member of the board to be chairman for a particular sitting of the board in the event of the former being unable to act’ is translated as ‘Ainmneoidh cathaoirleach boird athbhreithnithe comhalta eile den bhord le bheith ina chathaoirleach ag suí áirithe den bhord mura mbeidh sé féin in ann gníomhú’ in s37(5) of the Health (Mental Services) Act, 1981. In s21(1)(b) of the Solicitors (Amendment) Act, 1960, ‘in the event of his death, insolvency or other disability’ is translated as ‘i gcás é d’fháil bháis, d’éirí dócmhainneach nó a theacht faoi dhícháilíocht eile’ while in s4(1) of the Court Officers Act, 1951, ‘In the event of the temporary absence or the temporary incapacity of any district court clerk or in the event of the office of district court clerk for any district court area being vacant, the Minister may ... appoint a deputy to execute the office of such district court clerk during such absence, incapacity or vacancy’ is translated as ‘I gcás aon chléireach cúirte dúiche a bheith as láthair go sealadach nó a bheith faoi éagumas sealadach nó i gcás oifig chléirigh chúirte dúiche d’aon cheantar cúirte dúiche a bheith folamh, féadfaidh an tAire ... ionadaí a cheapadh chun oifig an chléirigh chúirte dúiche sin a chomhlíonadh an fhaid a mhairfeas an neamhláithreach, an t-éagumas nó an folúntas sin’.

Looking at earlier Acts, ‘Má bhíonn Máistir na hArd-Chúirte ... seal as láthair no seal fé mhí-chumas de dheascaibh breoiteachta no má bhíonn oifig an Mháistir san folamh, féadfaidh an tAire fear ionaid do cheapa chun oifig an Mháistir ... san d’fheidmiú le linn na nealáithreachta, an mhí-chumais, no an fholúntais sin’ translates ‘In the event of the temporary absence or the temporary incapacity through illness of the Master of the High Court ... or in the event of the office of such Master ... being vacant the Minister may appoint a deputy to execute the office of such Master ... during such absence, incapacity, or vacancy’ in s27(1) of the Court Officers Act, 1926. ‘Má thárluionn’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating ‘in the event of’ in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann.

tar éis an ní sin a tharlú This would generally be rendered today as ‘tar éis don ní sin tarlú’ – ‘within a reasonable time after the damage occurs’ is translated as ‘laistigh de thréimhse réasúnach tar éis don damáiste tarlú’ in s2(3) of the Liability for Defective Products Act, 1991, for example. ‘Ní’ is the indefinite pronoun, neuter, of ‘neach’, which has the sense of ‘thing, something’.

‘Event’ is generally translated as ‘teagmhas’ in the Acts. ‘Such event being’ is translated as ‘i gcás arb éard é an teagmhas sin’ in s27(b) of the Finance Act, 1981, for example, ‘on the happening of an event’ being translated as ‘ar theagmhas tarlú’ in s25(1) of the Capital Acquisitions Tax Act, 1976. In s27(1)(c) of the Agricultural Credit Act, 1978, ‘to impose on the mortgagor, in the event of any of the stock dying or being stolen ... the obligation to notify the mortgagee of such event within 7 days after it occurs’ is translated as ‘chun a chur d’oibleagáid ar an morgáisteoir, i gcás aon chuid den stoc d’fháil bháis ... an teagmhas sin a chur in iúl don mhorgáistí laistigh de 7 lá tar éis dó tarlú’ while ‘an ní sin a chur in iúl don mhorgáistí laistigh de sheacht lá tar éis é a tharlachtaint’ translates ‘to notify the mortgagee of such event within seven days after it occurs’ in s25(1)(c) of the Agricultural Credit Act, 1947. Finally, in s2(1)(ii) of the Constitution (Consequential Provisions) Act, 1937, ‘in regard to ... so much of such event as occurs’ is translated as ‘i ndáil leis ... an méid sin den teagmhas san a thárlóidh’.

Looking at the earlier Acts, ‘event’ is translated as ‘tuitim-amach’ in s40(2) of the Finance Act, 1926, where ‘in respect of the same instrument, property, or event’ is translated as ‘i leith na hinstruimide, na maoinne, no an tuitim-amach chéanna’. ‘Cás’ is cited as translating ‘event’ in the Oireachtas (Payment of Members) Act, 1923, in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms (the reference given does not appear to be accurate, however).

DIL translates ‘tecmais’ as ‘chance, hap, accident’, citing ‘tre chuis no theagmais eigin’ from the Rule of Tallaght. This word is related to ‘tecmang’, verbal noun of ‘do-ecmaing’, DIL translating ‘d-an-ecmaing’ as ‘he happens to be (in a place, condition, etc.)’. ‘Do-ecmaing’ comes from *to-in-com-icc, ‘do-icc’ (*to-icc) having the sense of ‘comes to, approaches’.

ar leith This phrase involves the dative form of ‘leath’ following the preposition ‘ar’, as it follows the preposition ‘faoi’ in ‘faoi leith’, both phrases being translated as ‘apart, separate; several, distinct; remarkable, special’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘gach ball ar leith, each individual member’, and ‘duine ar leith, a person apart; a remarkable person’. We find ‘gach olltoghchán ar leith’ expressing ‘every general election’ in Article 16.4.1° and ‘gach bliana ar leith’ and ‘gach cás ar leith’ expressing ‘each year’ and ‘each case’ respectively in Article 17.1.2°. ‘Gach’ without accompanying ‘ar leith’, however, usually expresses ‘each’ and ‘every’ in the Constitution, as the varying ways in which ‘each House’ is expressed illustrates. We find ‘each House of the Oireachtas’ expressed as ‘gach Teach ar leith den Oireachtas’ in Article 15.9.1°; ‘each House’ is expressed as ‘gach Teach ar leith’ in Articles 15.10 and 15.11.1°. We also find the genitive singular ‘gach Tí ar leith’ (‘of each House’) in Article 15.9.2°. ‘Ar leith’ is omitted, however, in Article 15.15, where we find ‘the members of each House’ expressed as ‘comhaltaí gach Tí’; ‘the Chairman of each House of the Oireachtas’ is expressed as ‘Cathaoirleach gach Tí den Oireachtas’ – without ‘ar leith’ – in Articles 24.1, 27.5.1° and 27.6, while ‘each of the Houses of the Oireachtas’, in Article 28.3.3°, is expressed as ‘gach Teach den Oireachtas’ and ‘in each House of the Oireachtas’, in Article 28.8, is expressed as ‘i ngach Teach den Oireachtas’. See further the commentary on Article 15.9.1° and see the commentary on Article 38.3.1° regarding ‘faoi leith’.

roimh é a dhul i gcúram a oifige See the commentary on Article 12.3.1° regarding ‘dul i gcúram oifige’. As regards ‘whether occurring’ in the Acts, see s7(8) of the Finance Act, 1968, for example, where ‘in any year of assessment whether occurring before or after the commencement of this Part’ is translated as ‘aon bhliain mheasúnachta cibé acu roimh thosach feidhme na Coda seo nó dá éis sin dó’. ‘Rectify any error or omission (whether occurring before, on or after the operative date) in the register’ is translated as ‘aon earráid nó easnamh sa chlár (cibé acu roimh an dáta feidhme nó air nó dá éis a tharla sé) a cheartú’ in s122(5) of the Companies Act, 1963. Finally, note that ‘Díobhála don duine (ar n-a dtárlachtaint roimh an Acht so do rith no dá éis)’ translates ‘injuries to the person (whether occurring before or after the passing of this Act)’ in s9(1) of the Finance Act, 1942.

arna suíomh ‘Suíomh’ is given as a variant verbal noun of ‘suigh’ in Ó Dónaill, ‘sui’ being the standard form – Ó Dónaill cites ‘cúis, ceart, a shuí, to establish a case, a right’, for example. ‘Suíomh’ is the form found in the Acts, however, ‘to show cause to the contrary’ being translated as ‘cúis dá mhalairt a shuíomh’ in s49(3) of the Capital Acquisitions Tax Act, 1976, for example. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that in Munster Irish it is the form ‘suíomh’ which has the sense of ‘establish, prove’, contrasting ‘tá sé suite go deas ansan’ with ‘táim suite de’, the standard form of which is ‘táim suite de’ (‘I’m convinced of it’). See the commentary on Article 12.3.1° regarding the verb ‘suigh’ in the present context.

toghchán a dhéanamh Literally ‘to make an election’. This is the standard translation of ‘hold an election’ – in s17(7) of the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, for example, ‘if an election is due to be held’ is translated as ‘má dhlítear toghchán a dhéanamh’.

‘Toghchán a chomóradh’ expresses ‘to hold an election’ in the Cork City Management Act, 1929, with ‘following the borough election to be held under this Act next after the occurrence of such casual vacancy’ being translated as ‘tar éis an chéad thoghacháin bhuirge a bheadh le comóra fén Acht so tar éis teacht an fhoth-fholúntais sin’ in s4(2) and ‘until the day on which the borough election to be held under this Act next after the occurrence of the casual vacancy so filled is held’ being translated as ‘go dtí lá comórtha an chéad thoghacháin bhuirge a comórfar fén Acht so tar éis teacht don fhoth-fholúntas a líonfar amhlaidh’ in s4(5) thereof. In s13 of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925, ‘the poll shall be held at the office of the Commissioners’ is translated as ‘déanfar an vótaíocht in oifig na gCoimisinéirí’. This alternation between ‘déan’ and ‘comóir’ expressing ‘hold’ is seen also in the phrases ‘scrúdú a dhéanamh’ and ‘scrúdú a chomóradh’. ‘An examination in dentistry or dental surgery held for the purpose of granting certificates of fitness to practice dentistry or dental surgery by any university’ is translated as ‘scrúdú i bhfiacloireacht no i máinliaghacht fhiacal a dintar, chun deimhnithe do dheona go bhfuiltear oile chun fiacloireacht no máinliaghacht fhiacal do chleacta, ag aon phríomh-scoil’ in s1 of the Dentists Act, 1928, with ‘Every university ... which is authorised by this Act to hold qualifying examinations in dentistry’ being translated as ‘Gach príomh-scoil ... dá n-údarúitear leis an Acht so scrúduithe tástála i bhfiacloireacht ... do chomóra’ in s41 thereof. Similarly ‘fiosrúchán do dhéanamh’ translates ‘to hold an inquiry’ in Iris an Phuist, 1922/23, while ‘fiosrúchán do chomóradh’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating this phrase in translations for the Department of Fisheries. Note that in s45(4) of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1927, ‘cause a public inquiry to be held in regard to the making of the order’ is translated as ‘a chur fé ndéar fiosrúchán puiblí do chur ar siúl i dtaobh an orduithe do dhéanamh’.

The verb ‘commóraid’ is translated as ‘holds, engages in (of battle, feast, hunt, etc.)’, celebrates, convenes’ in DIL, where examples are cited from the twelfth-century Book of Leinster onwards. Dinneen cites ‘comóiram seilg, I convene a hunt’ and Ó Dónaill cites ‘aonach, cruinniú, a chomóradh, to convene a fair, a gathering’, along with ‘féile a chomóradh, to celebrate a feast’. ‘Commóraid’ is based on ‘móraid’ (based on ‘mór’), examples of which in the sense of ‘makes great, magnifies, exalts, glorifies’ are cited in DIL from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles onwards. The development of sense would therefore be ‘celebrate’ > ‘organize’ > ‘hold’. See further the commentary on Articles 13.2.1° and 31.8.

éirí as Note that ‘In case of the death, resignation or disqualification of a member of Seanad Éireann’ is translated as ‘I gcás ball de Sheanad Éireann d’fháil bháis, do thabhairt suas, nó do theacht fé mhí-cháilíocht’ in Article 34 of the 1922 Constitution. See the commentary on Article 13.1.3°.

taobh istigh de See the commentary on Article 21.2.2°. Note that we generally find ‘laistigh de’ translating ‘within’ in the Acts. In s8(ii) of the First Schedule to the Port and Harbour Provisional Order Confirmation Act, 1929, ‘The first meeting of the Commissioners shall be held within one month after the commencement of this Order’ is translated as ‘Comórfar céad chruinniú na gCoimisinéirí laistigh de mhí tar éis tosach feidhme an Orduithe seo’. ‘An election for the purposes of this section shall be held within 12 months after the vesting day’, in s34(6) of the Postal and Telecommunications Services Act, 1983, is translated as ‘Déanfar toghchán chun críocha an ailt seo laistigh de 12 mhí tar éis an lae dhílseacháin’. See further the commentary on Article 16.4.2°.

toghchán do See the commentary on Article 12.2.2°. The preposition, however, suits better here, before ‘oifig’, as against directly before ‘Uachtarán’.

lá nach déanaí ná This would currently be translated as ‘tráth nach déanaí ná’ in the Acts – ‘not later than one month from that date’ is translated as ‘tráth nach déanaí ná mí amháin ón dáta...’ in s24 of the Finance Act, 1990, for example. For ‘lá’, see the commentary on Article 12.3.1°.

deireadh See the commentary on Article 12.3.1°. ‘Istigh’, as recommended by Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú, is perhaps more appropriate than ‘caite’ in the present context.

é d’éag nó é d’éirí as On ‘a’ replacing ‘d(o)’ here in standard Irish see the commentary on Article 15.8.2°.

ní foláir See the commentary on Article 11.

míthreoir See the commentary on Article 12.3.1°.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Gach saoránach ag a bhfuil cúig bliana triochad slán, is intofa chun oifig an Uachtaráin é.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Every citizen who has completed/reached thirty five years, (he) is electable to the office of (the) President.

ENGLISH TEXT

Every citizen who has reached his thirty-fifth year of age is eligible for election to the office of President.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 While the English text requires a Presidential candidate to have 'reached his thirty-fifth year of age', which it has been noted the candidate would do on his thirty-fourth birthday, the Irish text requires him to have completed thirty five years.
- 2 'Eligible for election to' is expressed as 'intofa chun' ('electable to') in the Irish text.

Commentary

slán In his commentary on Article 25.5, which Article deals with the text of the Constitution, J.M. Kelly (op. cit., p. 210) writes as follows:

The Constitution seems to contain some possible conflicts which have not yet surfaced in litigation. The most obvious seems to be in Article 12.4.1<sup>o</sup>, where the Irish text requires a Presidential candidate to have completed thirty-five years of age ('ag a bhfuil cúig bliana triochad slán'), while the English text require him only to have 'reached his thirty-fifth year of age', which he would do on his thirty-fourth birthday.

The Report of the Constitution Review Group (May 1996) commented as follows on this section:

There is an apparent discrepancy between the English and Irish versions. The Irish version has 'ag a bhfuil cúig bliana triochad slán' (that is, has completed thirty-five years), whereas the English version is 'who has reached his thirty-fifth year of age', which could mean has entered rather than completed that year.

The First Progress Report of the All-Party Oireachtas Committee on the Constitution (April 1997), following this, recommends (on p. 89) substituting the word 'completed' for 'reached' in the English text. The Twentieth Amendment of the Constitution Bill, 1999, which proposed to lower the age-limit for candidates for the Presidency, dealt with the noted inconsistency by proposing to substitute 'the age of eighteen years' for 'his thirty-fifth year of age' – i.e. rather than substituting 'his eighteenth year of age'.

We have examples of the word 'slán' in this context from as early as the mid-ninth century. A gloss to the Carlsruhe Bede, a Latin manuscript written in 848 and glossed in 850, reads as follows: 'ar ni tosceli argumint acht bliadni sláin' (translated by Whitley Stokes and John Strachan, Thesaurus Palaeohibernicus ii [1903, p. 18], as 'for the argument ascertains nought but a whole year', querying 'was bliaidan slán a technical term for a year without intercalation?') The second example cited in DIL is perhaps of more relevance, dealing with the age of Christ. In Leabhar na hUidhre, from the early twelfth century, we find the following: 'Trí bliadna trichat ropsat slána do Christ' (which is translated as 'three years and thirty were completed by Christ' in the edition published in Revue Celtique 25 [1904, pp. 238-9]). Finally, Keating's seventeenth-century History of Ireland contains the phrase 'bliadhain 7 trí fichid fá slán dó', which is translated as 'he had completed his 61st year' in Comyn and Dinneen's edition of that text. Ó Dónaill cites 'tá an bhliain slán aige, he is a full year old' s.v. 'slán', and Dinneen cites 'tá bliadhain is slán dóibh ann, they have spent a full year there' – Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú questions whether Dinneen is correct in this construction 'tá ... is'.

Article 16.1 also contains two examples of the word 'slán' in association with 'bliain'. Article 16.1.2<sup>o</sup>i reads as follows:

Gach uile shaoránach ... ag a bhfuil ocht mbliana déag slán ... tá ceart vótála acu i dtoghchán comhaltai do Dháil Éireann. All citizens ... who have reached the age of eighteen years ... shall have the right to vote at an election for members of Dáil Éireann.

Similarly we find in Article 16.1.1<sup>o</sup>:

Gach saoránach ... ag a bhfuil bliain agus fiche slán ... tá sé intofa ar chomhaltas Dháil Éireann. Every citizen ... who has reached the age of twenty-one years ... shall be eligible for membership of Dáil Éireann.

As J.M. Kelly (op. cit., p. 149) states, commenting on Article 16.1, that section 'reproduces in substance the provisions of Articles 14 and 15 of the 1922 Constitution'. In these Articles, the Irish version of which is an acknowledged translation of the English, 'who have reached the age of twenty-one years' and 'who have reached the age of thirty years' are translated respectively as 'go mbeidh aois bhliana is fichead slán aige' and 'go mbeidh aois deich mblián fichead slán aige':

Article 14

All citizens of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) ... who have reached the age of twenty-one years ... shall have the right to vote for members of Dáil Éireann .... All citizens who ... have reached the age of thirty years ... shall have the right to vote for members of Seanad Éireann. Beidh de cheart ag gach saoránach de Shaorstát Éireann ... go mbeidh aois bhliana is fichead slán aige ... vótáil le teachtaí de Dháil Éireann ... . Beidh de cheart ag gach saoránach ... go mbeidh aois deich mblián fichead slán aige ... vótáil le baill de Sheanad Éireann.

Article 15

Every citizen who has reached the age of twenty-one years ... shall be eligible to become a member of Dáil Éireann. Gach saoránach go mbeidh aois bhliana is fiche slán aige ... beidh sé iontoghtha chun bheith 'na theachta de Dháil Éireann.

Based in part on the above, the All-Party Oireachtas Committee on the Constitution recommended, in their Third Progress Report (November 1998, p. 13), that the English text of Article 12.4.1° 'be improved by using the formulation set out in Article 16.1.1° – "who has reached the age of ..." – thus making the English text both unequivocal and consistent with the Irish text'. A possible development of this to bring the wording into line with the Age of Majority Act, 1985, would be substituting 'slánaithe' for 'slán' and re-introducing 'aois' in the Irish text of Articles 16.1 and 12.4.1°, and also substituting 'attained' for 'reached' in the English text of both those Articles. Section 2(1) of the Age of Majority Act, 1985, reads as follows:

Where a person has not attained the age of twenty-one years prior to the commencement of this Act, he shall, subject to section 4, attain full age – (a) on such commencement if he has attained the age of eighteen years .... I gcás nach mbeidh bliain is fiche d'aois slánaithe ag duine roimh thosach feidhme an Acht seo, slánóidh sé aois iomlán faoi réir alt 4 – (a) ar an tosach feidhme sin má bhíonn ocht mbliana déag d'aois slánaithe aige.

As regards 'slánaigh' in association with 'aois', see also s15(1) of the Electoral (Amendment) (No. 2) Act, 1986, where 'a citizen of Ireland who has reached the age of 18 years' is translated as 'saoránach d'Éirinn a bhfuil 18 mbliana d'aois slánaithe aige'. The verb 'slánaigh' is translated as 'attain a certain age' in Ó Dónaill, with 'slánuighim' being translated as 'I attain the age of' in Dinneen.

cúig bliana tríochad 'Tríochad' is the genitive singular form of 'tríocho'. 'Cúig bliana tríochad' could equally be expressed as 'cúig bliana is tríocha' – see Ó Dónaill s.v. 'tríocho', who cites 'ceithre bliana tríochad, ceithre bliana is tríocha, thirty-four years'. 'Bliana' today is the standard plural form of 'bliain' following most numerals. Note how the Twentieth Amendment of the Constitution Bill, 1999, proposes introducing the new spelling into the enrolled

intofa chun See the commentary on Article 12.3.2° regarding 'intofa'. Note, as regards 'chun', that 'do' is found following 'intofa' in s30 of the Údarás na Gaeltachta Act, 1979, where 'A person shall not be eligible for election to an tÚdarás unless ... he has attained the age of eighteen years' is translated as 'Ní bheidh duine intofa don Údarás mura mbeidh aois ocht mbliana déag slánaithe aige'. 'Ní bheidh duine ar bith ... intofa d'oifig stiúrthóra ag aon chruinniú ginearálta' translates 'No person ... shall ... be eligible for election to the office of director at any general meeting' in s45 of the 'Articles of Association' appended to the Companies Act, 1963.

While Article 12.3.2°, 'A person who holds, or who has held, office as President, shall be eligible for re-election to that office once ...', can be literally translated as 'Féadfar aon duine atá nó a bhí i seilbh oifige mar Uachtarán a atoghadh chun na hoifige sin aon uair amháin ...', 'Féadfar gach saoránach ag a bhfuil cúig bliana tríochad d'aois slánaithe a thoghadh chun oifig an Uachtaráin' does not literally translate 'Every citizen who has reached his thirty-fifth year of age is eligible for election to the office of President'. As Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú points out, there is a 'possibility' involved in 'féadfar' that is not appropriate here, and he recommends 'Is féidir aon saoránach ag a bhfuil cúig bliana tríochad d'aois slánaithe a thoghadh chun oifig an Uachtaráin' or 'Féadtar gach saoránach ag a bhfuil cúig bliana tríochad d'aois slánaithe a thoghadh chun oifig an Uachtaráin' rather than the above. He stresses, however, that there is a close relationship between the two English words 'eligible' and 'elect' but that in so far as both words are involved here in 'eligible for election', two stages of a process are being expressed, whereas only one stage – and that itself conditional – is understood from the Irish 'féadfar ... a thoghadh' or the alternative originally proposed by the author as a direct translation below, 'Gach saoránach ag a bhfuil cúig bliana tríochad d'aois slánaithe, is intofa chun oifig an Uachtaráin é nó í'. The relationship between 'electable' and 'eligible' is paralleled in that between 'toghadh' and 'rogha', according to Professor Ó Murchú, who suggests translating the above as 'Beidh gach saoránach ag a bhfuil cúig bliana tríochad d'aois slánaithe inroghnaithe le toghadh chun oifig an Uachtaráin'.

Returning to the Acts in light of the above, we find that 'a person shall not be nominated as a replacement candidate unless he is eligible for election under the Principal Act to the Assembly' is translated as 'ní ainmneofar duine mar iarrthóir ionaid mura mbeidh sé cáilithe lena thoghadh faoin bPríomh-Acht don Tionól' is s3(3)(b) of the European Assembly Elections Act, 1984, and 'lionfaidh Dáil Éireann an folúntas trí dhuine a cheapadh atá cáilithe lena thoghadh faoin Acht seo don Tionól' translates 'the vacancy shall be filled by the appointment by Dáil Éireann of a person who is eligible for election under this Act to the Assembly' in s15(1)(a) of the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977. See further the commentary on Article 16.1.1°.

Gender-proofed Irish text

Gach saoránach ag a bhfuil cúig bliana tríochad slán, is intofa chun oifig an Uachtaráin é nó í.

- 1 'cúig bliana is tríocha'
- 2 'gach saoránach a bhfuil cúig bliana tríochad d'aois slánaithe aige nó aici'
- 3 'le toghadh'
- 4 'd'oifig an Uachtaráin'

ARTICLE 12.4.2<sup>o</sup> AIRTEAGAL 12.4.2<sup>o</sup>TÉACS GAELIGE

Gach iarrthóir d'oifig an Uachtaráin, seachas duine atá nó a bhí ina Uachtarán cheana, is uathu seo a leanas nach foláir a ainmniú a theacht:

- i fiche duine ar a laghad agus gach duine faoi leith díobh sin ina chomhalta, in alt na huaire, de Theach de Thithe an Oireachtais, nó
- ii Comhairlí ceithre Chontae riaracháin ar a laghad (agus Contae-Bhuirgí a áireamh) mar a mhínear le dli.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Every candidate for the office of (the) President, other than a person who is or who was a President already, it is from the following that his nomination must come:

- i at least twenty people and each (individual) one/person of them a member, at the time, of a House / one of the Houses of the Oireachtas, or
- ii the Councils of at least four administrative Counties (including County Boroughs) as defined/expounded by law.

ENGLISH TEXT

Every candidate for election, not a former or retiring President, must be nominated either by:

- i not less than twenty persons, each of whom is at the time a member of one of the Houses of the Oireachtas, or
- ii by the Councils of not less than four administrative Counties (including County Boroughs) as defined by law.

- 1 'Candidate for election' is expressed as 'iarrthóir d'oifig an Uachtaráin' ('candidate for the office of (the) President') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Not a former or retiring President' is expressed as 'seachas duine atá nó a bhí ina Uachtarán cheana' ('other than a person who is or who was a President already') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Must be nominated either by' is expressed as 'is uathu seo a leanas nach foláir a ainmniú a theacht' ('it is from the following that his nomination must come') in the Irish text.
- 4 'Each one of whom' is expressed as 'gach duine faoi leith díobh sin' ('each individual one/person of them') in the Irish text.

- 5 'Define' is expressed by a more general term meaning 'expound' in the Irish text, 'míneadh', which term generally translates 'define' in the Acts also.
- 6 'By' appears to be repeated unnecessarily at the beginning of paragraph ii in the English text.

iarrthóir d'oifig 'Candidate for something' is translated as 'iarrthóir ar rud' in De Bhaldraithe, a noun usually following this phrase – 'iarrthóir ar phost' ('an applicant for a job'), for example, being in general usage, though the Irish legal term for 'applicant' is 'iarratasóir'. In the case of 'every candidate for election' the Irish text avoids directly expressing the verbal noun by reading as 'every candidate for the office of the President'.

'A candidate for election to either House of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'iarrthóir le toghadh chun ceachtar Teach den Oireachtas' both in s6(1) of the Imposition of Duties (Dumping and Subsidies) Act, 1968, and in s18(1) of the Fóir Teoranta Act, 1972, with 'iarrthóir le toghadh chun ceachtar Tí den Oireachtas' translating this clause in s11(1) of the Sugar Manufacture (Amendment) Act, 1973. In s10(1) of the Fourth Schedule to the Industrial Relations Act, 1990, 'Where the chairman ... is nominated ... as a candidate for election to either House of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'I gcás go ndéanfar an cathaoirleach ... a ainmniú ... mar iarrthóir lena thoghadh chun ceachtar Tí den Oireachtas'.

Looking at earlier Acts, in s2(1) of the Electoral (Amendment) (No. 2) Act, 1927, 'Every candidate for election to Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'gach iarrthóir toghacháin chun Dáil Éireann' and in s37(2)(a) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1937, 'every candidate for election as an elector shall be nominated in writing' is translated as 'gach duine fé leith a bheidh á iarraidh go dtoghfaí ina thoghthóir é caithe sé bheith ainmnithe i scríbhinn'.

Ó Dónaill gives 'candidate; entrant, examinee' as the secondary sense of 'iarrthóir', with 'petitioner, supplicant' being the primary sense. Dinneen, who does not appear to give 'iarratasóir' as a headword, translates 'iarrthóir' as 'one who asks or demands; an applicant, petitioner, beggar, candidate'. Neither source gives any examples of the use of this headword, which is based on 'iarr', 'ask', which itself derives from an earlier 'iarar'/'iarair', translated as 'a search; act of seeking, demanding, searching' in DIL, where 'ac iarair in domain' ('searching the world') is cited from the Birth-Tale of Cú Chulainn.

cheana This adverb is translated principally as 'already' in Ó Dónaill. 'Cheana' can qualify both 'atá ina Uachtarán' and 'a bhí ina Uachtarán', that is, 'who is already a President and who was already a President'. In the context of an election for President, the person who is already a President would seem to be 'a retiring President'. Note that 'cheana' is not found in the related Article 12.4.4<sup>o</sup>:

Tig le duine atá nó a bhí ina Uachtarán é féin a ainmniú d'oifig an Uachtaráin. Former or retiring Presidents may become candidates on their own nomination.

Note, also, that the wording of the present subsection was not followed in the Presidential Elections Act, 1937.

The Margin Title of s10 of that Act, 'Nominations by a former or the retiring president' is translated as 'Ainmniúcháin ó dhuine bhí ina uachtarán nó ón uachtarán a bheidh ag dul as oifig' and subsection 1 thereof reads as follows:

Every nomination of himself as a candidate which is made by a former or the retiring president ... signed by such former or retiring president. Gach ainmniú dhéanfaidh duine bhí ina uachtarán nó an t-uachtarán a bheidh ag dul as oifig air féin mar iarrthóir ... agus beidh sé síghníthe ag an duine sin a bhí ina uachtarán nó ag an uachtarán san a bheidh ag dul as oifig.

In the Second Schedule to that Act, 'Form of Nomination Paper for a Nomination of Himself by a Former President' is translated as 'Fuirm an Pháipéir Ainmniúcháin chun Duine bhí ina Uachtarán Tráth dá Ainmniú féin chun bheith ina Iarrthóir', with 'I ... a former President of Ireland hereby nominate myself to be a candidate at the above-mentioned election' being translated as 'Deinim-se ... do bhí im' Uachtarán ar Éirinn tráth, mé féin d'ainmniú leis seo chun bheith im' iarrthóir sa toghachán a luaidhtear thuas'. 'Form of Nomination Paper for a Nomination of Himself by a Retiring President' is translated there as 'Fuirm an Pháipéir Ainmniúcháin chun an Uachtarán a bheidh ag dul as Oifig dá ainmniú féin chun bheith ina Iarrthóir'.

Turning to 'former' in earlier Acts, in s39(6) of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1927, 'Whenever the former undertaker is a local authority' is translated as 'I gcás gur údarás áitiúil an seana-ghnóthaire'. 'Certain Former Officers of Local Authorities' is translated as 'Daoine Áirithe a bhí ina nOifigigh tráth ag Údarás Áitiúla' in the Long Title of the Local Officers' Compensation (War Period) Act, 1924. 'To former judges of the Dáil Supreme Court' is translated as 'do dhaoine bhí ina mbreithiúin de Chúirt Uachtarach na Dála' in the Margin Title of s2 of the Dáil Supreme Court (Pensions) Act, 1925.

'Former President' would now generally be translated simply as 'iar-Uachtarán'. Note how this has superseded De Bhaldraithe's 'sean-' and 'ath-' as translations of 'former', the basic senses of which – 'old-' and 're-' respectively – being probably too strong and therefore unsuitable. As examples of 'iar-' we may cite 'iarchomhaltai saoil' in the Margin Title of s59 of the Fisheries Act, 1980, translating 'former life members'.

Regarding 'retire', in Article 34 of the 1922 Constitution, 'Any member of Seanad Éireann so chosen shall retire from office' is translated as 'Imeoidh aon bhall de Sheanad Éireann a toghfar mar sin as oifig'. In Article 68 'The age of retirement, the remuneration and the pension of such judges on retirement' is translated as 'aois oifige d'fhágaint, luach saothair agus pinsean a leithéidí de bhreithiúin ar oifig d'fhágaint dóibh'. 'Dul as feidhmanas' is cited from early Proceedings of Dáil Éireann in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms. The current term 'scor' is cited in s16(b) of the Garda Síochána Act, 1924, where 'the promotion, retirement ... of members of the Garda Síochána' is translated as 'baill den Ghárda Síochána d'árdú, do scur' – see further the commentary on Article 36i. 'Féadfar stiúthóir a bheidh ag scor dá oifig a atoghadh' translates 'A retiring director shall be eligible for re-election' in s94 of the First Schedule to the Companies Act, 1963, for example. In s53 of the same Schedule, 'the re-appointment of the retiring auditors' is translated as 'na hiniúcháirí a bheidh ag scor a athcheapadh'. 'I retire' is translated as 'scoirim as oifig' in Téarmaí Dlí. In the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 69), 'retiring members' is translated as 'comhaltai a bheidh ag scor'. De Bhaldraithe translates 'retiring' as '(Uachtarán) atá ag dul as oifig'.

in alt na huairé See the commentary on Article 10.1. This phrase expresses 'for the time being' in Articles 10.1, 25.5.3°, 41.3.3° and 46.2. 'In alt na huairé seo' is cited in Ó Dónaill and translated as 'at this juncture'. Dinneen cites 'i n-alt na h-uairé sin' and translates this phrase as 'at that very time'. L. Mc Cionnaith s.v. 'time', gives An tAthair Peadar's Ceart na Gaedhilge as the source of his translation of 'at that very time' as 'i n-alt na huairé sin'. 'Sin' or '-sea' is part of this phrase in the four examples cited in DIL s.v. 'alt' III(a) – the basic meaning of 'alt' being 'joint', 'as alt' translating 'out of joint', for example.

De Bhaldraithe translates 'I was absent at the time' as 'bhí mé as láthair san am' and 'at the time of his marriage' as 'le linn a phósta'. We find both 'san am' and 'an tráth sin' in the Acts. In s14 of the Finance Act, 1978, for example, 'having regard to values prevailing at the time' is translated as 'ag féachaint do na luachanna a bheidh i réim san am' and in s9(1)(b) of the Finance Act, 1983, 'at the time and place appointed' is translated as 'san am agus san áit a bheidh ceaptha'. While 'according to the best of the information available at the time' is translated as 'de réir an eolais is fear a bheidh ar fáil san am' in s364(4) of the Income Tax Act, 1976, in s168(2) of the Corporation Tax Act, 1976, this phrase is translated as 'de réir na faisnéise is fear a bheidh ar fáil an tráth sin' and in s19(1)(a) of the Army Pensions Act, 1932, 'in case such person is at the time in actual receipt of such pension' is translated as 'i gcás an duine sin do bheith ag fáil an phinsin sin an tráth san'.

mar a mhínítear le dlí 'Define' in general usage is usually translated as 'sainmhígh' (i.e. 'sain-', translated as 'special, particular, specific, characteristic' in Ó Dónaill, combined with 'mígh', the secondary sense of which is 'explain, expound, interpret' in Ó Dónaill) but, as we see below, 'mígh' translates 'define' in the Acts, with 'definition' being translated as 'míniú'. 'Mígh' is based on 'mín' ('smooth, level' [DIL]), and basically means 'makes level or smooth'. We have an example of 'míniú' (as 'mínigud') in the sense of 'interpreting, explaining' in the twelfth-century Book of Leinster, while in the Book of Ballymote, written around 1400, we find 'mínigh' glossing the Latin 'interpretatur' – see DIL, s.v. 'mínigud'. Ó Dónaill gives 'explain, expound, interpret' as a secondary sense of 'mígh', citing 'focal a mhíniú, to explain a word'. 'Sainigh', derived from 'sain-', the first element of 'sainmhígh', is used to translate 'define' in Irish translations of European Community legislation – 'The Council may define those matters', for example, is translated as 'Féadfaidh an Chomhairle na hábhair sin a shainiú' in the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 59). See the commentary on Article 22.1.2° s.v. 'míniú'.

Turning to the Acts, in s24(2)(g) of the Land Act, 1923, 'any "glebe" as defined by the Act of 38th and 39th Victoria' is translated as 'aon "tearmann", mar a mínítear é le hAcht an tSiosóin 38 agus 39 Victoria'. 'And such professional interests as may be defined by law for the purpose of this panel' is translated as 'agus pé gairmeanna mineofar le dli chun críche an ainmliosta so' in s4(1) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1937; ten years later, however, in s3(1) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1947, this same clause is translated as 'agus pé garma a léireofar le dli chun críche an rolla seo'. In s33 of the Derelict Sites Act, 1990, 'in relation to ... historic monuments as defined by those Acts' is translated as 'i ndáil le ... séadchomharthaí stairiúla mar a mhínítear leis na hAchtanna sin' and 'mar a mhínítear le halt 95(1) den Acht Airgeadais, 1983' translates 'as defined by section 95(1) of the Finance Act, 1983' in s121 of the Finance Act, 1990.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú relates 'minigh' translating 'define' to the context of words being 'defined' in a dictionary.

ar a laghad Literally 'at least', 'not less than' being usually so translated in the Acts, where you also find 'nach lú ná'. See s9(2)(c) of the Second Schedule to the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978, for example, where 'by a resolution, for which not less than two-thirds of the members of the Council vote, and of the intention to propose which not less than seven days notice is given' is translated as 'le rún, dá vótáil dhá thrian ar a laghad de chomhaltai na Comhairle agus a ndéanfar fógra seacht lá ar a laghad go bhfuiltear chun é a mholadh a thabhairt'. See the commentary on Article 12.10.3° for an example from early Acts.

agus ... a áireamh This would be expressed as 'lena n-áirítear' in the Acts today – see, for example, s26(b) of the Value-Added Tax (Amendment) Act, 1978, where 'sports and pleasure craft of all descriptions including yachts' is translated as 'báid spóirt agus áineasa de gach cineál lena n-áirítear luamha'. In Article 18.7.1°iv, 'Industry and Commerce, including banking, finance ...' is expressed as 'Tionscal is Tráchtáil ar a n-áirítear baincéireacht, airgeadas ...'. See the commentary on Article 10.1.

a leanas Rather than have the list in 2°i and ii governed by the preposition 'ó' ('by'), the Irish makes this clause complete in itself, i.e. 'the nomination must come from the following' – 'uathu' being the 3rd person plural of the preposition 'ó', 'the following' refers to more than one person or thing. This practice is also sometimes found in the Acts, the alternative being to repeat the preposition at the head of every clause it qualifies, as is done below.

seachas This headword is translated as 'besides, other than, rather than; compared to' in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen s.v. 'seachas', gives the etymology of 'seachas' as 'seach' [preposition, 'by, beside, past, beyond, as compared with, in preference to, rather, more or better than, from'] combined with 'is'. See Rudolf Thurneysen, A Grammar of Old Irish, s883.

Teach de Thithe an Oireachtais Literally 'a House of the Houses of the Oireachtas'. Similarly, 'fear de na fir' translates 'one of the men' (alternatively, 'duine de na fir'), for example, and 'lá de na laethanta' translates 'one of the days' in De Bhaldraithe, s.v. 'one'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that this was the regular way of expressing 'one of ...' before the development of the phrase 'ceann de ...'.

fiche duine This phrase could also be expressed as 'scór daoine', 'scór' being an English loanword ('score').

nach foláir Here we have 'foláir' in its general usage, expressing English 'must', as against 'shall' in the previous section and in many other Articles – see the commentary on Article 11.

Comhairlí ceithre Chontae riaracháin Note that 'chontae' has a lower-case 'c' in the enrolled text.

Contae-Bhuirgí 'Contaebhuirgí', without hyphen, is given as a headword in Ó Dónaill and simply translated as 'county borough'.

faoi leith See the commentary on Article 12.3.3°.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Ní cead d'aon duine ná d'aon Chomhairle díobh sin bheith páirteach in ainmniú breis is aon iarrthóir amháin d'oifig an Uachtaráin san aon-toghchán.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No person and no Council of them is permitted to participate in the nomination of more than a single candidate for the office of (the) President in the same election.

ENGLISH TEXT

No person and no such Council shall be entitled to subscribe to the nomination of more than one candidate in respect of the same election.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Díobh sin' would appear to qualify both 'duine' ('person') and 'Comhairle' ('Council') in the Irish text, whereas the corresponding 'such' in the English qualifies 'Council' only.
- 2 'No person ... shall be entitled' is expressed as 'Ní cead d'aon duine' ('No person is / shall be permitted') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Subscribe to the nomination' is expressed as 'bheith páirteach in ainmniú' ('participate in the nomination') in the Irish text.
- 4 'Candidate' is expressed as 'iarrthóir ... d'oifig an Uachtaráin' ('candidate for the office of (the) President') in the Irish text.
- 5 'In respect of' is expressed simply as 'sa' ('in') in the Irish text.

bheith páirteach in Literally 'to participate in'. In Articles 31.4 and 34.5.1° 'take/make and subscribe a declaration in the following form' is expressed as 'an dearbhú seo a leanas a dhéanamh agus a lámh a chur leis', with 'a chuirfidh (a) lámh leis' expressing 'subscribed' in Article 34.5.2° and 'a lámh a chur leis' expressing 'subscribing' in Article 12.8. While the original sense of 'subscribe' is 'to write (one's name or mark) on, originally at the bottom of, a document, especially as a witness or consenting party' (The Shorter Oxford Dictionary), it also has the sense of 'to agree or be a party to a course of action or condition of things; to give approval, sanction or countenance to' (ibid), which sense is found in the present Article. See the commentary on Article 28.3.3°, where 'páirteach' expresses 'participant', and on Article 29.5.1° regarding 'páirteach' itself.

Looking at the Acts, in s105(6) of the Mines and Quarries Act, 1965, 'and shall subscribe their signatures thereto' is translated as 'agus cuirfidh siad a síniú léi' and in s311(9) of the Companies Act, 1963, 'the persons who subscribed the memorandum' is transcribed as 'na daoine a shínigh an meabhrán'. In s425(2) of the Income Tax Act, 1967, 'the oath shall be subscribed by the person by whom it is made' is translated as 'cuirfidh an duine a rachaidh faoin mionn a lámh leis'. On the other hand, in the Sixth Schedule to the Defence Act, 1954, 'that ... I will ... not ... subscribe to (any political organisation)' is translated as 'nach dtaobhód leis (an gcéanna)'. Note how 'páirt' is again involved in translating 'subscribe' in the translation of 'The Community delegation subscribes to your analysis' as 'Tá toscaireacht an Chomhphobail i bpáirt leis an taifeach a rinne tú' in a declaration accompanying the Treaties establishing the European Community (1973, p. 1489). Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that 'i bpáirt le' would have the sense of 'sympathetic towards', which sense need not be contrary to that of the present Article. Professor Ó Murchú recommends the phrase 'gabh le' – see Ó Dónaill s.v. 'gabh le', who includes the sense of 'take sides with', citing 'ghabh siad le Sinn Féin, they sided with Sinn Féin'.

'Subscribe' in the financial sense is now simply translated as 'suibscriobh' – see s3(a) of the Schedule to the International Finance Corporation Act, 1958, for example, where 'Each original member shall subscribe to the number of shares of stock' is translated as 'Suibscriobhfaidh gach comhalta bunaidh i leith an méid scaireanna stoic'. Note how in s79(3)(b) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1934, 'for requiring employers to subscribe to the fund' is translated as 'chun a cheangal ar fhostóirí sintiúisí do thabhairt don chiste'.

Looking at the earlier Acts as regards 'subscribe' in general, 'Such oath shall be taken and subscribed by every member of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'tabharfaidh gach ball an mhóid sin agus cuirfe sé a ainm léi' in Article 17 of the 1922 Constitution. In s4 of the Appropriation Act, 1924, 'until he has subscribed such declaration ... before one of the persons ...' is translated as 'go dtí go ndéanfa sé pé faisnéis ... do shighniú i bhfianaise duine de sna daoine'. Finally, in the Fourth Schedule to the Police Forces Amalgamation Act, 1925, 'that I will not ... join, belong, or subscribe to any political society whatsoever' is translated as 'ná ceanglóid agus ná bainfad agus ná cabhród le haon chumann polaitíochta in aon chor'.

Ní cead 'Cead', which has the basic sense of 'permission', some scholars tracing its origin back to Latin 'licet', is employed many times in the Constitution expressing 'shall' and 'may', as we have seen in the commentary on Article 9.1.3°. The following is a translation of the comments on this matter made by Maolmhaoldhóg Ó Ruairc in his monograph referred to in that commentary:

There are over twenty cases in the Constitution where is cead / ní cead are used to translate the English's 'shall' and three cases where they are the same as 'may'. To make matters worse there is one other case in Article 12.4.3° where it would be difficult to find the exact English version from the Irish as it is: 'ní cead d'aon duine díobh sin bheith páirteach in ainmniú breis is aon iarrthóir amháin d'oifig an Uachtaráin san aon-toghchán'. Has the English 'he may' or 'he shall'? Neither of them, indeed, but 'no person shall be entitled to subscribe to the nomination of more than one candidate in respect of the same election'. Perhaps ní cead is closer to the 'not entitled' than to the 'shall'.

We have examples from at least the twelfth century onwards of 'cead' with the copula followed by 'do' in the sense of 'must' – see DIL s.v. 1'cet' II(b):

With following DO (2nd and 3rd persons only). Usually in sense must, is to.

'Is cet duit sin ... t-imtheachta ... do innisín' ('you must give an account of yourself') is cited in DIL from Leabhar na hUídhre (written before 1106). The only instances of 'cead' followed by the preposition 'do' cited in Dinneen, however, are 'gan chead do, in spite of, notwithstanding, pace; is cead dó, let him; i gcead duit, by your leave; cuirim i gcead dó, I ask as an advice of ...'. Ó Dónaill only cites 'Má thugann tú a chead dúinn, if you grant us permission for it' and 'I gcead duit, by your leave, with due respect to you. I gcead don chuideachta, dá chóta, with all due respect to the company, to his cloth' and 'gan cead dom, without consulting me'. We find s.v.

'ceadmhach', however, 'más ceadmhach dom labhairt leo, if I may be permitted to speak to them'.

'Teideal' is generally involved in the translation of 'entitled' in the Acts. 'After the passing of this Act, no person shall be entitled to institute proceedings for restitution of conjugal rights' is translated as 'Tar éis an tAcht seo a rith, ní bheidh teideal ag aon duine imeachtaí dlí a thionscnamh chun cearta pósta a aiseag' in s1 of the Family Law Act, 1988 – which Act incidentally only contains two sections, the second of which merely gives its 'Short Title' and the first containing only the sentence just cited. In s23(2) of the Finance Act, 1940, 'by any person who was at any time entitled to ... any property derived from the deceased' is translated as 'ag duine ar bith do bhí uair ar bith i dteideal aon mhaoine ... do tháinig ón duine marbh'. 'Ní bheidh teideal ag éinne chun aon phinsean ... d'fháil' translates 'No person shall be entitled to receive any pension' in s5(3) of the Superannuation and Pensions Act, 1923.

diobh sin This can be read as qualifying both 'aon duine' and 'aon Chomhairle' – i.e. none of the twenty or more members of the Houses of the Oireachtas nor none of the Councils of the four or more administrative Counties referred to in the preceding subsection. In the English text only the Councils are so qualified, i.e. 'No person and no such Council'.

Looking at the Acts, 'táirge, toradh nó ábhar ... a ionú, a thriomú, a mheascadh, a shórtáil, a phacáistiú, a bhrandáil nó a thástáil, nó aon phróiseas eile dá samhail a fheidhmiú orthu, ... nó aon phróisis díobh sin i dteannta a chéile' translates 'purifying, drying, mixing, sorting, packaging, branding, testing or applying any other similar process to a product, produce or material ... or any combination of such processes' in s41(1)(c) of the Finance Act, 1990. 'Den sórt sin' or simply 'sin' generally translates 'such' in the Acts. In s11(1)(b) of the Air Navigation and Transport Act, 1973, for example, 'attempts to perform any such act' is translated as 'a thabharfaidh faoi ghníomh den sórt sin a dhéanamh' and in s15(1) of the Capital Acquisitions Tax Act, 1976, 'the market value of any property ... shall be estimated to be the price which ... such property would fetch' is translated as 'Measfar gurb é margadhluach aon mhaoine ... an praghas a gheofaí ... ar an maoin sin'. See further the commentary on Article 8.3.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that 'such' in this context does not have the sense of 'a leithéid sin' ('that kind of'), etc., but '... áirithe sin' ('that particular').

iarrthóir ... d'oifig an Uachtaráin Here we see the Irish text's preference not just for 'candidate for the office of the President' as against 'candidate for election', as we saw in the preceding subsection, but as against 'candidate' on its own.

ainmniú breis is aon iarrthóir amháin 'Níos mó ná' would have the advantage over 'breis' following 'ainmniú', which should take the genitive case, as no question of inflection would arise – see, s58(2)(c) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, for example, where 'is set opposite the name of more than one candidate' is translated as 'os coinne ainm níos mó ná iarrthóir amháin'.

san aon-toghchán Literally 'in the one election', but by being compounded with the following noun, 'aon' achieves the sense of 'same'. Dinneen cites 'bhíomar araon ar aon-scoil, we both attended the same school', commenting as follows s.v. 'aon':

Aon is sometimes stressed, and forms one word with the following nouns ... The accentuation of aon takes place when emphasis is to be laid on the singleness, unity, or identity of the idea conveyed by the following word; thus ní'l aon bhrígh leis an bhfocal sain, that word has no meaning, but aoín-bhrígh is eadh an dá fhocal, both words have one and the same meaning. In the first of those two sentences aon is not emphasised, and should not form one word with bhrígh. If the word amháin follow in the sentence it sometimes takes the emphasis off aon.

'Céanna' with preceding article and noun generally translates 'the same' today. The earlier form 'cétnae' had the sense of '(the) first' ('cét' > Modern Irish 'céad'), DIL citing 'isin chétnae tuiste' ('in the primal creation') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. 'Cétnae' in the sense of 'same' is cited from the same collection of Glosses ('na precepta cétní' ['the same teachings']).

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that it is understood from the word 'céanna' that reference is being made to something already mentioned, e.g. 'ba sa toghchán céanna a scriosadh Clann na Poblachta' ('Clann na Poblachta were destroyed in the same election'), this sense not being involved in the present Article.

TÉACS GAEILGE

Tig le haon duine atá nó a bhí ina Uachtarán é féin a ainmniú d'oifig an Uachtaráin.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Any person who is or who was a President may nominate himself for the office of (the) President. / It is open to any person who is or who was a President to nominate himself for the office of (the) President.

ENGLISH TEXT

Former or retiring Presidents may become candidates on their own nomination.

- 1 According to the Irish text, if a President nominates himself or herself, there would be no question of an election. 'May become candidates on their own nomination' is expressed as 'Tig le ... é féin a ainmniú d'oifig an Uachtaráin' ('may nominate himself for the office of (the) President') in the Irish text, i.e. they may nominate themselves for the office of President rather than as candidates for the office of President or for election to the office of President.
- 2 Apart from the word 'President', the literal translation of the Irish above has only the conjunction 'or' in common with the official English version, 'retiring Presidents' being expressed as 'Aon duine atá ... ina Uachtarán' ('any person who is a President') in the Irish text, much like we have seen in Article 12.4.2°.

é féin a ainmniú d'oifig an Uachtaráin Literally 'to nominate himself for the office of the President', the English text having 'become candidates on their own nomination'. Unlike Article 12.4.2° ('Every candidate for election ... must be nominated either by', 'Gach iarrthóir d'oifig an Uachtaráin, ... is uathu seo a leanas nach foláir a ainmniú a theacht'), this subsection does not include the word 'iarrthóir' ('candidate'), and states not that former or retiring Presidents may nominate themselves as candidates for the office of President or that they may nominate themselves for election to the office of President, but simply that they may nominate themselves to the office of President. Note that 'iarrthóir' is included in the next subsection (Article 12.4.5°), which commences as follows: 'Where only one candidate is nominated for the office of President ...', 'Nuair nach n-ainmnítear d'oifig an Uachtaráin ach aon iarrthóir amháin'. See the commentary on Article 41.3.2° regarding 'ainmnigh'.

Note that 'iarrthóir d'oifig an Uachtaráin' expresses 'candidate for election' in Article 12.4.2° and 'candidate' in Article 12.4.3°. 'Iarrthóir' alone would today be used to translate 'candidate' – see s18(3) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, where 'those candidates shall be regarded as a single candidate' is translated as 'measfar gurb aon iarrthóir amháin na hiarrthóirí sin'.

As regards 'become', 'The State may become a member of the European Coal and Steel Community' and 'and may become a member of that Union' are translated respectively as 'Tig leis an Stát a bheith ina chomhalta den Chomhphobal Eorpach do Ghual agus Cruach' and 'agus tig leis a bheith ina chomhalta den Aontas sin' in Articles 29.4.3° and 29.4.4° following Amendments of the Constitution. 'Become' is usually translated by the circumlocutious phrase 'teacht chun bheith' in the Acts today – see s7 of the Value-Added Tax (Amendment) Act, 1978, for example, where 'The Revenue Commissioners shall set up and maintain a register of persons who may become or who are taxable persons' is translated as 'Déanfaidh na Coimisinéirí Ioncaim clár a bhunú agus a chothabháil de dhaoiné a d'fhéadfadh teacht chun bheith, nó atá, ina ndaoine inchánach'. In s8(1) of the Fisheries (Amendment) Act, 1991, 'Feadfaidh aon club duántachta ... teacht chun bheith ina chomhalta corpraithe de chumann' translates 'Any angling club ... may become a corporate member of a society' and in s10(3) of the Schedule to the Great Southern Railways Company (Superannuation Scheme) Act, 1947, 'A woman who is permanently employed ... may become a contributing member' is translated as 'Bean a bheas ar buan-fhostú ... féadfaidh sí teacht chun bheith ina comhalta ranniocach'.

Finally, 'nomination' is translated as 'ainmniú' or 'ainmniúchán' in the Acts – 'ní chuirfidh a bhás ó bhail a ainmniú' translates 'his death shall not invalidate his nomination' in s20(4)(a) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, for example, 'na tráthanna chun ainmniúcháin a ghlacadh' translating 'the times for receiving nominations' in s2(a) thereof. In s11(2)(c) of the Transport (Re-organisation of Córas Iompair Éireann) Act, 1986, 'the Chairman of the Board may ... be appointed on his own nomination to be chairman ... of the company' is translated as '(go) bhféadfar ... Cathaoirleach an Bhoird a cheapadh ar a ainmniúchán féin le bheith ina chathaoirleach ... ar an gcuideachta'. See further the commentary on Articles 13.1.1° and 30.2.

aon duine atá nó a bhí ina Uachtarán As we have seen, 'duine' generally expresses 'person' in the Constitution. 'Éinne' or 'aoinne' are colloquial forms of 'aon duine', reflecting its pronunciation. Note how 'aon' is not included in Article 12.4.2°, 'seachas duine atá nó a bhí ina Uachtarán cheana', and how 'cheana' is not included here in Article 12.4.4°. See the commentary on Article 12.4.2° regarding 'former or retiring' in the Acts.

Tig le 'The President may' is expressed as 'Tig leis an Uachtarán' in Articles 13.2.2°, 13.2.3°, 13.7.1°, 13.7.2°, 25.2.2°, 31.3, 31.7 and 31.8. In Article 26.1.1°, however, 'The President may' is expressed as 'Is cead don Uachtarán' while in Article 31.1 'all matters on which the President may consult the said Council' is expressed as 'gach ní dá gcuirfidh an tUachtarán ina gcomhairle', literally, 'all matters on which the President will consult them'. In Article 12.10.1°, 'The President may be impeached' is expressed as 'Féadfar an tUachtarán a tháinseamh'.

We also find 'tig le', 'is cead' agus 'féadfaidh' expressing 'may' in Articles not related to the President. In Article 28.7.2°, however, 'not more than two may be members of Seanad Éireann' is expressed as 'ní dleathach thar beirt acu a bheith ina gcomhaltaí de Sheanad Éireann', and in Article 14.3 'is dleathach' expresses 'may'. Ó Dónaill gives 'lawful, legal' as the basic sense of 'dleathach', Dinneen including 'just, fair ... , lawful, legal, permissible' s.v. 'dleaghtach'. 'Dleathach'/'dleaghtach' comes from Old Irish 'dligthech', which is based on 'dliged', Modern Irish 'dlí', 'law' – in a commentary on an early Irish law-text, we find, for example, 'ní dligthech don aigne cin fis na n-earnúile so aige', which is translated in DIL as 'it is not lawful for the advocate not to know [these tracts]'. (See further the commentary on Article 10.1). 'Cead' basically means 'permission' – see further the commentary on Article 9.1.3°. On the other hand both 'tig' and 'féad', as we see below, connote ability to do something ('the power to do something', according to Maolmhaoldhóg Ó Ruairc below).

Dinneen translates ‘féadaim’ as ‘I am able, can’ and cites ‘féadaim a rádh, I may say’. The verb ‘féatid’ (‘is able, can’) is a Middle Irish development of ‘-éta’, proto-tonic stem of the verb ‘ad-cota’, ‘gets, obtains’, according to DIL, and in Middle Irish is most frequently in negative conditional sentences. In one version of the Táin we get, for example, ‘ní féatim-se beith i n-écmais m’airm’ (‘I cannot be without my weapons’). A ‘positive’ example from Leabhar na hUídhre, written before 1106, would be ‘cach olc as mó ro féat ... iss ed dogniat’ (‘they do the worst they can’) – spoken of one of the groups of people doomed on the Day of Judgment! (Note in passing that the usual verb today to express ‘get, obtain’, i.e. ‘faigh’, can also be used to express ‘be able to’ – among the examples cited in Ó Dónaill s.v. ‘faigh’ III, are ‘ní bhfaighteá iad a shásamh, you couldn’t satisfy them’ and ‘gheobhainn an muineál a chasadh aige, I could wring his neck’). See the commentary on Article 40.3.3° regarding ‘féad’ in the Constitution.

‘Tig’ is originally the prototonic form of ‘do-icc’, ‘come’ – see DIL s.v. ‘do-icc’:

With ‘la’ (i.e. Modern Irish ‘le’); late Middle Irish ticc limm I am able (to), succeed (in) ... Common in Modern Irish.

In Ó Dónaill s.v. ‘tig’, we are referred to ‘tar’ (‘come’) where both ‘tagann’ and ‘tig’ are given as the present indicative of this verb. The form ‘tig’, however, is cited only under ‘tar le’ (4):

Tagann le, tig le, is able. Thiocfadh liom cuidiú leat, I could help you. Tháinig liom comhairle a chur air, I was able to influence him. Ní thiocfadh liom a leithéid sin a dhéanamh, I couldn’t do the like of that. Ní thig liom, I can’t.

Dinneen’s entry s.v. ‘tig’ refers to ‘tig’ as an ‘atrophied third singular of tigim, treated like féidir in is tig liom é, I can, am able’, citing s.v. ‘tigim (tagaim)’, ‘tig liom, I am able, succeed in’. Dinneen states that ‘tagaim’ is the ordinary Munster form, ‘thigim’ being the Ulster form.

Writing on the evolution of the dialects of Irish, Nicholas Williams states that ‘tig’ – the historic form of the third person present indicative of the standard Irish verb ‘tar’ (the imperative second person singular form ‘tar’ comes from the Old Irish verb ‘do-airicc’) – is found in Ulster and in Oriel where the initial consonant was often lenited (Nicholas Williams, ‘Na Canúintí a Theacht chun Solais’, in Kim McCone et al., op. cit., p. 457; see also Art Hughes, op. cit., p. 653, on ‘t(h)ig sé’ as the form of the third person, present indicative, in Ulster). The form ‘tag-’ gradually took the place of ‘tig’ in Munster (see Seán Ua Súilleabháin, op. cit., p. 531). ‘Tig le’ is, however, also found in Connacht – see Ruairí Ó hUiginn, op. cit., p. 594.

According to Maolmhaodhóg Ó Ruairc, in his monograph Dúchas na Gaeilge, the word ‘may’ is perhaps the most important word in any legal document. He focuses on Article 31.3:

The President may at any time ... appoint such other persons as, in his absolute discretion, he may think fit to be members of the Council of State.

The whole statement is, according to Maolmhaodhóg Ó Ruairc, subject to ‘in his absolute discretion’. Unlike the use of ‘may’ in ‘as he may think fit’, ability and power are involved in ‘may’ at the beginning of the statement.

Maolmhaodhóg Ó Ruairc poses the question: ‘Is there a distinction to be made between he has permission to do it if he wishes and he has the power to do it?’ (‘An bhfuil idirdhealú le déanamh idir tá cead aige é a dhéanamh mäs mian leis nó tá an chumhacht aige chuige?’). In this case, according to Maolmhaodhóg Ó Ruairc, the Irish text chooses the power version (‘Sa chás seo roghnaíonn an Ghaeilge leagan na cumhachta’), the Irish text of Article 31.3 reading as follows:

Tig leis an Uachtarán uair ar bith ... cibé daoine eile is oiriúnach leis, as a chomhairle féin, a cheapadh ... chun bheith ina gcomhaltaí den Chomhairle Stáit.

‘May’ is usually translated as ‘féadfaidh’ in the Acts – see, for example, ‘he may ... claim to ...’ in s26(1) of the Finance Act, 1990, which is translated as ‘féadfaidh sé a éileamh go ...’. ‘Tig le’ is also found in the Acts – see the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1972, for example, where ‘the State may become a member’ is translated as ‘tig leis an Stát a bheith ina chomhalta’. Sometimes the simple future tense of the verb translates ‘may’ in the Acts – see s27 of the Health Act, 1970, for example, where ‘accounts shall be kept by a health board in such form ... as may be prescribed by the Minister’ is translated as ‘coimeádfaidh bord sláinte cuntais i cibé foirm ... a fhorordóidh an tAire’.

ENGLISH TEXT

Where only one candidate is nominated for the office of President it shall not be necessary to proceed to a ballot for his election.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 ‘To proceed to a ballot’ is expressed simply as ‘vótáil’ (‘to vote’) in the Irish text.

Commentary

vótáil 'Bhótáil' is the form in the enrolled text, this verbal noun having the sense of 'voting/ballot, to vote' – see the commentary on Article 12.2.1°. 'Tá sé de cheart aige vótáil' expresses 'shall have to right to vote' in Article 47.3. See the commentary on Article 12.2.3° regarding 'ballot'.

As regards 'proceed', in s38(3)(a) of the Nurses Act, 1985, 'the Committee shall proceed to hold the inquiry' is translated as 'rachaidh an Coiste ar aghaidh leis an bhfiosrúchán a sheoladh' and in s8(2) of the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1983, and 'the registrar ... may proceed to strike the name of the public limited company off the register' is translated as 'féadfaidh an cláraitheoir ... dul ar aghaidh le hainm na cuideachta poiblí teoranta a bhaint den chlár'. Finally, note that the phrase 'to proceed with' is also translated as 'dul ar aghaidh le' in the Acts – see, for example, s109(6)(a)(iv) of the Finance Act, 1983, where 'not to proceed with the appeal' is translated as 'gan dul ar aghaidh leis an achomharc'.

Nuair In Article 42.5 'where the parents ... fail in their duty towards their children' is expressed as 'nuair a tharlaíonn ... nach ndéanaid na tuistí a ndualgais dá gclainn'. 'Where necessary' is expressed as 'nuair is gá sin' in Article 45.3.1° and as 'nuair a bheas riachtanas leis' in Article 45.4.1°. In Article 42.4, 'when the public good requires it' is expressed as 'nuair is riachtanas chun leasa an phobail é'. 'Nuair a dhéanann duine ar bith gearán' expresses 'Upon complaint being made by ... any person' in Article 40.4.2° and 'nuair a ritear' expresses 'upon having been passed' in Article 46.2. In Article 25.4.4°, on the other hand, 'Where the President signs the text of a Bill' is expressed as 'I gcás an tUachtaráin do chur a lámhe le téacs Bille', 'I gcás' expressing 'Where' at the beginning of clauses in Articles 40.4.3° and 40.4.5°, while in Article 38.3.1° 'where it may be determined' is expressed as 'i gcásanna a gcinnefar'.

'Nuair' is usually translated as 'when', being an unstressed form of 'an uair', Old Irish 'úar' coming from Latin 'hora'. We find 'nuair' translating both 'when', 'where' and 'upon' in the Acts. In s33(2) of the Finance Act, 1990, for example, 'when applied' is translated as 'nuair a chuirtear i bhfeidhm é'; in s39(c) of the Fourth Schedule to the Fisheries Act, 1980, 'where the offender is apprehended under this section' is translated as 'nuair a ghabhtar an ciontóir faoin alt seo' and in s25 of the First Schedule to the European Elections Act, 1977, 'upon taxation of his accounts' is translated as 'nuair a bheidh a chuntais á bhfómhas'. 'Where' at the beginning of a sentence in the Acts is today generally translated as 'I gcás' – see s21 of the Finance Act, 1990, for example, where 'Where a person makes an election under subsection (4)' is translated as 'I gcás ina ndéanfaidh duine roghnú faoi fho-alt (4)'.

aon ... amháin 'One only' is the translation given in Dinneen of 'aon ... amháin' s.v. 'amháin'. In Article 12.3.2° 'A person ... shall be eligible for re-election to that office once, but only once' is expressed as '... is intofa chun na hoifige sin é aon uair amháin eile, ach sin a mbeidh'. 'Aon ... amháin' is used in negative clauses in Articles 16.1.4° ('No voter may exercise more than one vote at an election for Dáil Éireann', 'Ní cead do thoghthóir ar bith thar aon vóta amháin a thabhairt i dtoghchán do Dháil Éireann') and 12.4.3° ('No person and no such Council shall be entitled to subscribe to the nomination of more than one candidate', 'Ní cead d'aon duine ná d'aon Chomhairle díobh sin bheith páirteach in ainmniú breis is aon iarrthóir amháin'). In Article 11 'form one fund' is expressed as 'a chur in aon chiste amháin'. Finally, in Article 16.4.1°, 'an t-aon lá amháin' expresses 'the same day'.

In the layout of the following two examples cited in Ó Dónaill s.v. 'aon', we see how 'amháin' need not add to the force of 'aon': 'aon duine (amháin) clainne, one of a family' and 'in aon lá (amháin), in one day'. Dinneen s.v. 'amháin', has the abbreviation for 'Connacht' following the entry 'ceist amháin' (omitting 'aon'), 'one question'. In s15 of the Finance Act, 1990, we see how even 'only one' need not necessarily contain both 'aon' and 'amháin': 'if only one account was made' is translated there as 'mura ndearnadh ach cuntas amháin'. See further the commentary on Article 16.4.1°.

ní gá This phrase translates both 'it is not necessary' and 'it will not be necessary'. In s94 of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, for example, 'it shall not be necessary to prove the signature of the returning officer' is translated as 'ní gá cruthúas ar shíniú an cheann comhairimh'. The future is more clearly marked in the translation of s24(7) of the Wealth Tax Act, 1975, where 'it shall not be necessary to prove' is translated as 'ní bheidh sé riachtanach cruthúas a thabhairt ar'. 'Gá' is translated as 'need, requirement' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'ní gá a rá (go), needless to say (that)'. 'Riachtanach' is translated as 'necessary' but can be stronger than 'gá' as we see from the translation of the following two examples from Ó Dónaill: 'Tá sé riachtanach don tsláinte, it is essential to health. Níl sé riachtanach agat fanacht anseo, you are not obliged to stay here'. 'Gá' developed from 'gád', translated as 'danger, stress, need' in DIL, no examples being cited from the earlier Irish sources. Dinneen translates 'gábhadh' (the form in the enrolled text) as 'want, need; distress, danger, peril, adventure'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that 'gá(dh)' would be more precise than 'gábhadh', although both words have fallen together. He remarks, however, that Ó Dónaill has both 'gá' and 'gábh' as headwords. The principal sense of 'gábh' in Ó Dónaill is 'danger, peril', with 'gá' given as the standard form of the secondary sense. See the commentary on Article 41.1.2° where 'riachtanach' expresses 'necessary'.

- 1 'Subject to' is expressed as 'faoi chuimsiú' ('within the scope/constraint of') in the Irish text, as in some other Articles.
- 2 The Irish 'rialú' may correspond variously to 'control', 'regulate' and 'rule' in the English text.
- 3 'Elections for the office' is expressed as 'toghcháin d'oifig' ('elections to [the] office') in the Irish text, though the Irish phrase can also be read as 'elections for the office'.

Commentary

Faoi chuimsiú forálacha an Airteagail seo According to the official standard, 'forálacha' would be lenited here after the prepositional phrase 'faoi chuimsiú' – see An Caighdeán Oifigiúil (1979), p. 38, and the commentary on Article 1, regarding the (lenited) nominative in place of the genitive. Note that 'foráilí' is the form in the original text.

'Faoi chuimsiú' expresses 'subject to' in Articles 11, 12.10.2°, 13.10, 14.5.1°, 16.7, 18.7.2°, 18.10.1°, 22.2.1°, 28.2, 29.4.2°, 30.6, 33.6, 34.4.3°, 36, 40.3.3° and 50.1, with 'Subject as aforesaid' being expressed as 'Faoi chuimsiú na nithe réamhráite' in Article 47.4 – see further the commentary on Article 40.3.3°. 'Faoi chuimsiú' is translated as 'within the scope of' in the Glossary appended to An Caighdeán Oifigiúil. In Téarmaí Dlí, 'within the scope of the employment' is translated as 'faoi chuimsiú na fostaíochta', with 'subject to' being translated as 'faoi réir'. In s9(4) of the Landlord and Tenant (Ground Rents) (No. 2) Act, 1978, 'na foirgnimh faoi chuimsiú an léasa a aisiriú' translates 'to reinstate the buildings comprised in the lease'. 'Faoi chuimsiú' translates 'within', 'within the framework' and 'under' in the Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973): 'the principle of non-discrimination in liberalisation of trade within the Organisation for European Economic Cooperation' is translated as '(ar) chlásal an neamhidirdhealaithe sa léirscaoileadh trádála faoi chuimsiú na hEagraíochta um Chomhar Eacnamaíoch san Eoraip' (p. 122); 'Féachfaidh Institiúidí an Chomhphobail, faoi chuimsiú chomheagraíocht na margaí do tháirgí iascaigh, le réiteach sásúil a fháil' translates 'The institutions of the Community will seek, within the framework of the common organization of the market in fishery products, adequate solutions' (p. 1341) and 'faoi chuimsiú taraif-chuótaí' translates 'under tariff quotas' (p. 141).

'Cuimsiú' is translated as 'connotation, scope' and 'inclusion' in Ó Dónaill, this being the verbal noun of 'cuimsigh', translated there as 'comprehend; connote; comprise, include'. 'I comprehend, keep within bounds, moderate, control' is given as one of the senses of 'cuimsighim' in Dinneen, who translates this headword principally as 'I hit (as a mark); aim; fit, adapt, bring into relation, line or measure, with, enumerate', citing 'má chuimsighim ort, beidh a chuimhne agat, if I turn all my attention to you, you will have cause to remember it'. DIL translates 'coimsigid' as 'arranges, disposes', citing 'go gcoimsighid an tiomlán' (= they comprehend) from Donlevy's Irish Catechism, 1742, 'a choimsiughadh' (= comprehend) being cited s.v. 'coimsiugad' (verbal noun of 'coimsigid') from a seventeenth-century translation of the Bible (Eph. iii 18). 'Coimsigid' is related to 'coimse' and 'commus', the former being a participle of 'con-midethar' is translated as 'suitable, fitting, appropriate, due' in DIL, the latter being the verbal noun of 'con-midethar' is translated principally as 'act of controlling, arranging, directing' in DIL, Modern Irish 'cumas' ('power, ability, capacity') coming from that form.

'Subject to' is generally translated as 'faoi réir' in the Acts, as in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Subject to and in accordance with regulations' is translated as 'faoi réir agus de réir rialachán' in s63(a) of the Finance Act, 1989, for example. 'The provisions applicable to Case 1 ... shall ... have effect subject to the subsequent provisions of this section' is translated as 'beidh éifeacht, faoi réir na bhforálacha ina dhiaidh seo den alt seo, leis na forálacha is infheidhme ar Chás 1' in s29(2)(a) of the Finance Act, 1981, and in s283(1) of the Companies Act, 1963, 'the value of such debts ... which may be subject to any contingency or which sound only in damages' is translated as 'luach na bhfiacha ... sin atá faoi réir aon teagmhais nó inchúitithe le damáistí amháin'.

We find 'faoi réir' translating 'subject to' even in early Acts. 'And subject to the provisions of this Act' is translated as 'agus fé réir forálacha an Achta so' in s1(2) of the Finance Act, 1923, for example. 'Faoi' alone translates 'subject to' in some early Acts – 'and every such force shall be subject to the control of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'agus beidh gach fórsa dá shórt fé smacht an Oireachtais' in Article 46 of the 1922 Constitution, 'fé cheadú ó' translating 'subject to the sanction of' in s10 of the 'Galway County Scheme' in the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. 'Whose actions shall be subject to the approval of the County Board of Health', in s8 of the 'Kildare County Scheme' in that same Act, is translated as 'na mbeidh a ngníomhartha ag brath ar mhola Bhord Sláinte na Contae', with 'subject to the limitations hereafter specified' being translated as 'laistigh de sna teoranna a déarf ar ina dhiaidh seo' in that same section; 'subject to the approval of the Minister for Finance' is translated as 'fé mhola an Aire Airgid' in s6 of the Comptroller and Auditor-General Act, 1923. 'Tar éis pé atharuithe a ordófar leis na rialacháin sin a dhéanamh ortha' translates 'subject to such modifications as may be prescribed by such regulations' in s14(5) of the National Health Insurance Act, 1923 and, finally, 'subject to the approval of' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'ach an ... do thoilú chuige' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1922/23.

Note finally that 'ach gan san a dhul chun dochair do' expresses 'subject to' in Article 44.2.1°.

rialófar The future passive of 'rialaiigh'. 'Rialaiigh' expresses 'regulate' in Articles 13.5.1°, 16.7, 18.10.1°, 22.1.1°, 28.12, 30.6, 36, 40.6.1°iii, 40.6.2°, 43.2.1° and 47.4 also. The verbal noun of 'rialaiigh' expresses 'for the control' in Articles 10.3 and 10.4, and 'to control' in Articles 33.1, 40.4.6° and 40.6.1°iii, while 'rialú a dhéanamh ar thionóil' expresses 'control meetings' in Article 40.6.1°ii. 'Gurb é leas an phobail uile is buanchuspóir agus is príomhchuspóir a rialós ina mbaineann le hurlámhas creidimheasa' expresses 'That in what pertains to the control of credit the constant and predominant aim shall be the welfare of the people as a whole' in Article 45.2.iv. Note, finally, that 'riaghlóchar' is the form in the original text.

'Rialaim' – the first person singular, present indicative, of 'rialaiigh' – is translated as 'I control; I rule' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill gives 'regulate' as one of the senses of 'rialaiigh', and cites s.v. 'rialaiigh' (3), 'cíos a rialú, to control rent' and 'clog a rialú, to regulate a clock'. Dinneen includes 'I regulate' among the senses of 'riaghlúghim', along with 'I rule, reign, govern'. 'Rialáil', which is not given as a headword in Ó Dónaill, specifically translates 'regulate' in the Acts, though 'rialaiigh' is also found. In s19 of the Second Schedule to the Fisheries Act, 1980, for example, 'the Central Board shall regulate its procedures and business' is translated as 'rialóidh an Príomh-Bhord a nós imeachta agus a ghnó' and in s15(6) of the Irish Film Board Act, 1980, 'Subject to this Act, the Board shall regulate its procedure by rules or otherwise' is translated as 'Faoi réir an Achta seo, rialóidh an Bord a nós imeachta le rialacha nó ar shlí eile'. In s6(3) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978, on the other hand, 'The Council may ... regulate its own procedure' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an Chomhairle ... a nós imeachta féin a rialáil' and 'toirmeasc a chur nó rialáil a dhéanamh ar aon ola ... a scaoileadh amach' translates 'prohibiting or regulating the discharge ... of any oil' in s10(1) of the Sea Pollution Act, 1991.

Both 'rialaiigh' and 'rialáil' translate 'regulate' in the early Acts, with 'rialáil' gaining in popularity. 'Laws regulating the manner in which the right of forming associations ... may be exercised' is translated as 'Na dlíthe a rialóidh an tslí 'na bhféadfar ceart cumainn do bhunú ... do chur i bhfeidhm' in Article 9 of the 1922 Constitution, with 'rialú cánach' translating 'regulation of taxation' in Article 35. On the other hand, 'agus, leis na rialacha san, féadfa sé an cleachta agus an nós imeachta féin alt so ... do regleáil' translates 'and may by any such rules regulate the practice and procedure under this section' in s6(12) of the Dublin Reconstruction (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1924. 'Is leis na Rialacha atá sa Dara Sceideal ... a regleálfar co-dhéanamh ... bordanna sláinte' translates 'The constitution ... of boards of health ... shall be regulated by the Rules' in s12(2) of the Local Government Act, 1925. 'For regulating the practice of registration under this Act' is translated as 'chun an cleachta a bhaineann le clárú féin Acht so do rialáil' in s153(1)(a) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927. We find the phrase 'regulate by law' in s23(f) of the Slaughtered Animals (Compensation) Act, 1928, where 'which the Trustees think proper to regulate and prescribe by rules' is translated as 'agus is dó leis na hÍontaobhaithe is ceart do rialáil nó d'ordú le rialacha' and 'rialálfar áit agus stiúra na dtoghachán san le dlí' translates 'The place and conduct of such elections shall be regulated by law' in s2 of the toghcháin d'oifig an Uachtaráin Note how in the Long Title of the Presidential Elections Act, 1937, which Act follows directly on the Articles of the Constitution dealing with the President, 'An Act to regulate ... elections for the office of President of Ireland' is translated as 'Acht chun rialála do dhéanamh ... ar thoghacháin chun oifige Uachtaráin na hÉireann'. Perhaps influenced by the wording of the Constitution, in the Long Title of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1985, 'the right to vote at elections for Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'an ceart vótála ... i dtoghcháin do Dháil Éireann'. See further the commentary on Article 12.2.2°.

Commentary

bheith ina chomhalta de Dháil Éireann ná de Sheanad Éireann The English text has simply '... be a member of either House of the Oireachtas'. The direct translation of this would be 'bheith ina chomhalta de cheachtar Teach den Oireachtas' – in s14(5) of the Higher Education Authority Act, 1971, for example, 'Where a person who is either an officer or servant in the employment of An tÚdarás becomes a member of either House of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'I gcás duine is oifigeach nó seirbhíseach i bhfostaíocht faoin Údarás teacht chun bheith ina chomhalta de cheachtar Teach den Oireachtas'. We find 'de cheachtar' in the very next subsection: 'If a member of either House of the Oireachtas be elected ...' is expressed as 'Má thoghtar comhalta de cheachtar de Thithe an Oireachtas ...', in Article 12.6.2°. Unstressed pronominal forms are usually not lenited in Irish – see Graiméar Gaeilge na mBráithre Críostaí (p. 37), where 'tabhair é do cibé a thiofaidh' and 'ag déanamh ionadh mór de cé a rinne é' are cited as examples of this non-lenition – but this rule does not apply to 'ceachtar' which, according to Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú, is normally stressed. 'De cheachtar' in two subsections after each other may have been avoided for stylistic reasons. We find 'de cheachtar den dá Theach' in Article 15.11.3° and 'in the vicinity of either House of the Oireachtas' is expressed as 'i gcóngar do cheachtar de Thithe an Oireachtais' in Article 40.6.1°ii.

In the earlier language 'cechtar' had the sense of 'each (of), both (of)' – 'cach', 'cech' ('each, every, all') being an unstressed form of 'cách'. According to Rudolf Thurneysen's Grammar of Old Irish (p. 311), 'cechtar' is probably modelled on 'nechtar', for which see the commentary on Article 12.7. DIL cites 'cechtar inda leithe sin' ('each of those two parts') from the ninth-century St Gall Glosses on Priscian as an example of the sense of 'each (of), both (of)', citing 'nó gur bhás do cheachtar dhuinn' (from the Transactions of the Ossianic Society) as an example of the later sense.

Ní cead 'Permission' is the basic sense of 'cead', as we have seen in the commentary on Article 9.1.3°. In this subsection, as in Article 9.1.3°, where 'No person may be excluded from Irish nationality ...' is expressed as 'Ní cead náisiúntacht ... Éireann a cheilt ar dhuine ar bith', 'ní cead' is followed, not by the preposition 'do' as in Article 12.4.3°, but directly by the noun followed by the verbal noun. 'Shall not' is expressed as 'ní cead' plus noun (or pronoun) and verbal noun in Articles 12.10.3°, 12.11.3°, 16.2.2°, 30.4, 33.3, 33.5.1°, 35.4.1°, 35.5, 38.4.2°, 38.5, 44.2.4°, 44.2.6° and 46.4. 'No x shall' is expressed as 'ní cead x' plus verbal noun in Articles 16.1.3°, 16.2.6°, 26.2.2°, 34.3.2°, 34.4.5°, 35.3, 38.1, 38.5, 40.4.1° and 41.3.2°. 'Nothing shall ...' is expressed as 'Ní cead aon ní ...' plus verbal noun in Articles 18.4.3°, 28.3.3° and 40.4.6°. 'Ní cead níos mó ná ...' expresses 'Not more than ... shall' in Article 18.7.2° and 'Ní cead aon idirdhealú ... a bheith i ...' expresses '... shall contain no ... discrimination' in Article 40.6.2°. We have only three examples of 'cead' used without the negative: in Article 21.1.1°, 'Money Bills shall be initiated in Dáil Éireann only' is expressed as 'Is i nDáil Éireann amháin is cead Billí Airgid a thionscnamh'; in Article 40.6.1°iii, 'Laws ... may be enacted for ...' is expressed as 'is cead dlíthe a achtú chun ...' and in Article 46.1, 'Any provision of this Constitution may be amended' is expressed as 'Is cead foráil ar bith den Bhunreacht seo a leasú ...'. See the commentary on Article 9.1.3° for other ways in which 'shall' and 'may' are expressed in the Constitution.

Turning to the Acts, 'a person shall not be a member of the Institute' is translated simply as 'ní bheidh duine ina chomhalta den Fhoras' in s3(2) of the National Institute for Higher Education, Dublin, Act, 1980, for example. 'Ní bheidh comhalta den Bhord ina chomhalta d'údarás áitiúil' translates 'A member of the Board shall not be a member of a local authority' in s4(6) of the First Schedule to the Undeveloped Areas Act, 1952, and 'Ní bheidh sé 'na bhall den Oireachtas' translates 'He shall not be a member of the Oireachtas' in Article 63 of the 1922 Constitution.

TÉACS GAEILGE

Má thoghtar comhalta de cheachtar de Thithe an Oireachtais chun bheith ina Uachtarán, ní foláir a mheas go bhfuil scartha aige le comhaltas an Tí sin.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If a member of either of the Houses of the Oireachtas is elected to be/become President, it must be deemed that he has relinquished / parted with membership of that House.

ENGLISH TEXT

If a member of either House of the Oireachtas be elected President, he shall be deemed to have vacated his seat in that House.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'If a member ... be elected President' is expressed as 'Má thoghtar comhalta ... chun bheith ina Uachtarán' ('if a member is elected to be/become President') in the Irish text, perhaps indicating more clearly that it is immediately on having been deemed elected that the member must vacate his seat and that he cannot retain his seat during the period between the election and the assumption of the office of President.
- 2 'He shall be deemed to have vacated his seat in that House' is expressed as 'ní foláir a mheas go bhfuil scartha aige le comhaltas an Tí sin' ('it must be deemed that he has parted with membership of that House') in the Irish text, the English version being directed towards the member himself while the Irish is more impersonal; again 'shall' is expressed as 'ní foláir' ('must') in the Irish text, as we have seen earlier.

Commentary

scartha aige le ‘Scar’ is translated as ‘part, separate’ in Ó Dónaill, who translates ‘scar le’ as ‘separate from; part with, give up, relinquish’, citing ‘scaradh le ceart, to relinquish a right’ and ‘scaradh le hoifig, to vacate an office’. DIL cites ‘rosarsat fri hiriss’ (‘they have separated from [the] faith’) from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, along with the poetic line ‘in tan no scairiub frim chrí’ (lit. when I am separated from my body, i.e. when I die) from a later source, as examples of ‘scaraid’ in the sense of ‘relinquishes, gives up, is without, desists from’. See further the commentary on Article 34.5.4°.

‘Vacate’ is translated as ‘fágaim (post)’ in De Bhaldraithe, where ‘to vacate office’ is translated as ‘éirí as oifig, scaradh le hoifig’. De Bhaldraithe also gives ‘fágaim, éirim de (shuíochán)’, with ‘éirí de shuíochán’ being translated as ‘to rise from a seat’ in Ó Dónaill. Turning to the Acts, ‘When a judge of the Supreme Court ... vacates his office ... he shall be deemed ... to have vacated his office’, in s1 of the Courts (Supplemental Provisions) (Amendment) Act, 1968, is translated as ‘I gcás breitheamh den Chúirt Uachtarach ... do scaradh lena oifig ... measfar ... gur scar sé lena oifig’. In s8(7)(a) of the British & Irish Steam Packet Company Limited (Acquisition) Act, 1965, ‘Each director of the Company ... shall ... be deemed to have vacated his office as director’ is translated as ‘Gach stiúrthóir ar an gCuideachta ... measfar ... é a bheith tar éis scaradh lena oifig mar stiúrthóir’. ‘Tuigfear ... gur scar sé le n-a oifig mar gheall ar bhuan-laige’ translates ‘he shall be deemed ... to have vacated his office owing to permanent infirmity’ in s49(6) of the Courts of Justice Act, 1936. Looking at the early Acts, ‘tuigfear é bheith tar éis dul aisti’ translates ‘shall ... be deemed to have vacated (his office as such member)’ in s16(3) of the Railways Act, 1924, ‘tuigfar é bheith tar éis an oifig sin d’fhágaint’ translating ‘shall be deemed to have vacated his office (of judge or justice)’ in s99 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924. Finally, in s34(4) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1937, ‘he shall be deemed to have vacated his membership of Seanad Éireann immediately after his said election thereto’ is translated as ‘tuigfear é d’eirge as bheith ina chomhalta de Sheanad Éireann díreach tar éis é thogha chuige’.

Turning specifically to vacating a seat, ‘he shall forthwith be deemed to have vacated his first seat’ is translated as ‘tuigfear feasta a chéad shuidheachán do bheith follamhuithe’ in Article 16 of the 1922 Constitution. In s8(4) of the Seanad Bye-Election Act, 1930, ‘shall ... be deemed to have been duly so elected and to vacate their seats’ is translated as ‘tuigfear iad do bheith toghtha go cuibhe amhlaidh agus iad d’fhágaint a suíochán’. Finally, ‘vacate seats of members’ is cited in Foclóir Oifigiúil as being translated as ‘comhaltá a chur as a suíochán’ in Iris Oifigiúil, 1922/23.

Má thoghtar ... chun bheith Note that this is not ‘Má thoghtar ina Uachtarán’, ‘If elected President’, but ‘Má thoghtar ... chun bheith ina Uachtarán’, i.e. ‘If elected to be (come) President’. See, for example, s5 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997) where ‘an comhalta a bheidh tofa ag Dáil Éireann chun bheith ina Chathaoirleach ...’ translates ‘the member elected by Dáil Éireann to be Chairman of Dáil Éireann’. Ó Dónaill cites ‘toghadh ina uachtarán é, he was elected president’ and De Bhaldraithe a mheas The verb ‘meas’ is translated as ‘estimate, value, judge; deem, consider’ in Ó Dónaill. This verb is based on ‘mes(s)’, the verbal noun of ‘midithir’, originally ‘weighs, measures’, hence ‘judges’ – see DIL s.v. ‘midithir’, examples of the sense of ‘deems, thinks, supposes’ being cited there from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, glossing Latin ‘putare’ and ‘existimare’. See further the commentary on Articles 16.6 and 28.3.2°.

‘Meas’ generally translates ‘deem’ in the Acts today, ‘measfar gur cheannaigh an trádálaí an leas ar chomhain ab ionann agus a mhargadhluach’ translating ‘the trader shall be deemed to have purchased the interest for a consideration equal to its market value’ in s29(2)(a) of the Finance Act, 1981, for example, and ‘measfar é bheith fanta as láthair gan chead’ translating ‘he shall be deemed to have absented himself without leave’ in s28(2) of the Health (Mental Services) Act, 1981. ‘Tuig’ rather than ‘meas’ translated ‘deem’ in earlier legislation, although we have early examples of ‘meas’ in this sense – ‘do measadh é bheith oiriúnach’ translates ‘it has been deemed expedient’ in Iris Oifigiúil, 1926, p. 837, for example. On the other hand, see Article 38 of the 1922 Constitution, where ‘a Bill ... shall ... be deemed to be passed by both Houses’ is translated as ‘tuigfear ... gur rith an dá Thigh é’. ‘Deem’ was also expressed by various other phrases in early official translations. ‘In any way he may deem necessary’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated in Iris Oifigiúil, 1922/23, as ‘ar aon slí is dó leis is riachtanach’ as against ‘... shall be deemed guilty of an offence against ...’ being translated as ‘tuigfear ... do bheith ciontach i gcionta i gcoinnibh ...’ in Iris Oifigiúil, 1928, p. 1034. Finally, in Article 2(1) of the County Courts (Amendment) Act, 1923, ‘Any County Court Judge may deem any document to which this section applies to have been validly served’ is translated as ‘Féadfidh aon Bhreitheamh Cúirte Contae a thógaint gur seirbheáladh go dleathach aon scríbhinn le n-a mbaineann an t-alt so’, with ‘Féadfar seirbheáil billí sibhialta ... do thógaint mar sheirbheáil dleathach’ translating ‘Service of civil bills ... may be deemed good’ in the Margin Title of that section.

comhaltas The basic sense of this abstract noun, based on ‘comhalta’ (see the commentary on Article 12.2.2°), is ‘joint fosterage’ but here it has the sense of ‘membership’, which is given as the third set of senses s.v. ‘comhaltas’, in Ó Dónaill, following ‘joint fosterage’ and ‘body of persons, brotherhood’. It is in the sense of ‘membership’ that ‘comhaltas’ is most used today, and we see how recent this specific use is in the fact that Dinneen only cites the first two of Ó Dónaill’s three sets of senses. The second sense is enshrined in ‘Comhaltas Ceoltóirí Éireann’. See further the commentary on Article 12.10.4°.

comhalta de cheachtar de Thithe an Oireachtais See the commentary on Article 12.6.1°.

Ní foláir ‘It must be’ – see the commentary on Article 11.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The President is not permitted to have any office or post of emolument/benefit except his Presidential office.

ENGLISH TEXT

The President shall not hold any other office or position of emolument.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The Irish text specifies 'seachas a oifig Uachtaráin' ('other than his Presidential office') as against the English text's 'any other' (office or position of emolument).
- 2 Both Irish and English texts can perhaps be read as if 'sochair'/'of emolument' only qualified 'post'/'position' rather than reading as 'aon oifig sochair' / 'any (other) office of emolument' and 'aon phost sochair' / 'any (other) position of emolument'.
- 3 The term expressing 'emolument' in the Irish text, 'sochar', usually translates 'benefit' and is not the specific Irish term for 'emolument' in the later Acts.
- 4 'Shall not' is again expressed as 'ní cead' ('is not permitted to') in the Irish text.

Commentary

sochair The genitive singular form of 'sochar'. The plural form, 'sochair', expresses 'emoluments' in Articles 12.11.2<sup>o</sup> and 12.11.3<sup>o</sup>, with 'and shall not hold any other office or position of emolument' being expressed as 'ná a bheith in aon oifig ná post sochair eile' in Article 33.3 and 'ná bheith in aon oifig ná post sochair eile' expressing 'or to hold any other office or position of emolument' in Article 35.3.

'Sochar' is translated in Ó Dónaill, from examples from earlier Irish literature, as 'privileges, dues; emoluments', following the abbreviation for 'collective'. 'Benefit, profit; advantage, gain' is the current principal sense of this word, according to Ó Dónaill. In Téarmaí Dlí 'sochar an amhrais' is translated as 'benefit of the doubt' and 'sochar míchumais' is translated as 'disablement benefit'. Dinneen translates 'sochar' as 'profit or source of profit, benefit, advantage, emolument, appurtenance, wealth, asset, increase, produce, interest or commission, an accommodation, a present, loan, obliging act, etc., relief; comfort, ease, prosperity'. It is, as Dinneen points out, the opposite of 'dochar', translated as 'harm; hurt, injury; loss, distress' in Ó Dónaill. As stated in DIL, 'sochar' was an important legal term in early Irish law, having the sense of 'a good or valid contract'. It is composed of the prefix 'so' ('good') and 'cor' (literally 'putting, placing, setting up', legal 'contract' – 'Irish equivalent of the stipulatis of Roman Law, the solemn verbal contract' according to DIL). Fergus Kelly (op. cit., p. 307) translates 'sochar' as 'advantageous contract'. As regards the present context, see DIL s.v. 'sochar' (b), where examples of its use in the sense of 'privileges, rights, dues, revenues (of a chief)', as well as 'the emoluments of a poet', are given.

'Emolument' is translated as 'luach saothair; tuarastal' in De Bhaldraithe. Turning to the Acts, 'A judge shall not be eligible to sit in the Oireachtas, and shall not hold any other office or position of emolument' is translated as 'Ní bheidh breitheamh iontoghtha chun suidhe san Oireachtas, agus ní bheidh aon oifig ná ionad eile sochair aige' in Article 69 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Emolument', as a single term, is translated as 'sochar oifige' in the 'Definitions' in s2 of the Local Government (Superannuation) Act, 1948. In s15(b) of the Oireachtas (Allowances to Members) and Ministerial and Parliamentary Offices (Amendment) Act, 1973, 'Where a person held the office of Attorney General ... or held any position or office of emolument, other than membership of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'I gcás ina raibh duine i seilbh oifige an Ard-Aighne ... nó i seilbh aon phoist nó oifige sochair eile seachas comhaltas an Oireachtais'.

'Emolument' is defined in Henry Murdoch's Dictionary of Irish Law as (1) 'Some profit or advantage ... remuneration' and (2) 'Anything assessable to income tax under Schedule E: Income Tax Act 1967 s.124. It includes all payments of salaries, fees, wages, and perquisites, whether taxable directly under the main Schedule E charging section (ibid, s.110) or by virtue of any other provision in the Income Tax Acts which requires the particular payment to be taxed under Schedule E'. 'Díolaíochtaí' rather than 'sochair' translates 'emoluments' in s124 of that Act. In s9(1)(c) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, 'diminution of emoluments' is translated as 'laghdú díolaíochtaí' with 'díolaíochtaí' translating 'emoluments' in s1 of the Youth Employment Agency Act, 1981, also. In s5(e)(i) of the Courts (Supplemental Provisions) (Amendment) Act, 1991, 'in the case of a person ... who ... is appointed to an office or position of emolument' is translated as 'i gcás duine ... a cheaptar ... chun oifige nó poist díolaíochtaí'. See further the commentary on Article 12.11.2<sup>o</sup>.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that 'post díolaíochtaí' might be understood as the person having the post being engaged in paying and he favours 'post sochair' as being both established and understandable. Professor Ó Murchú refers to 'post éadála' and 'post tuarastail' as possible alternatives. Note that 'emoluments' is translated as 'éadálacha' in translations of European legislation, 'éadail' being translated as 'acquisition, find; gain, profit; salvage, spoil; wealth; riches' in Ó Dónaill.

post Under the headword 'post' Dinneen gives the senses of 'the (letter) post, a position or stand, a position or employment'. Ó Dónaill gives three headwords 'post': (1) '(timber) post, stake', (2) 'post, letter carrier' and (3) 'Military: post ... (of employment) post'. He cites 'post muiníne, position of trust' under the latter group of meanings. As DIL states, 'post', meaning 'a post, prop', is a Romance loanword, while 'posta', meaning 'post, courier or official conveyance', is an English or Romance loanword.

'To occupy, hold a position' is translated as 'post a bheith agat' in De Bhaldráithe. Turning to the Acts, in s63(1) of the Mental Treatment Act, 1945, 'a servant who is appointed to hold a position ... as a substitute servant' is translated as 'seirbhíseach a ceapfar chun bheith i seilbh poist ... mar sheirbhíseach ionaid'. In s10 of the Finance Act, 1978, 'in the case of an individual ... who held a position as a civil servant' is translated as 'i gcás pearsa aonair a raibh aige féin ... post mar státseirbhíseach'. In s7(8) of the Local Government (Planning and Development) Act, 1983, 'and shall not at any time during his term of office hold any other office or employment in respect of which emoluments are payable' is translated as 'agus ní shealbhóidh sé, am ar bith i gcaitheamh a théarma oifige, aon oifig ná fostaíocht eile a mbeidh díolaíochtaí iníoctha ina leith'. Finally, 'Beidh an tUachtarán i seilbh oifige' expresses 'The President shall hold office' in Article 12.3.1<sup>o</sup> – see further the commentary on that Article.

Ní cead don Uachtarán Literally 'The President is not permitted' – see the commentary on Article 12.6.1<sup>o</sup>.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Ní foláir don chéad Uachtarán dul i gcúram a oifige chomh luath agus is féidir é tar éis é a thoghadh, agus ní foláir do gach Uachtarán dá éis sin dul i gcúram a oifige an lá i ndiaidh deireadh théarma oifige a réamhtheachtaí nó chomh luath agus is féidir é dá éis sin nó, má tharlaíonn dá réamhtheachtaí go gcuirfear as oifig é nó go n-éagfaidh

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The first President must enter into the responsibility of his office as soon as possible after he has been elected, and every President after that must enter into the responsibility of his office the day after the end of the term of office of his predecessor or as soon as possible after that or, if his predecessor (either) happens to be put out of office or dies or resigns from office or else that permanent (mental) disorder/misguidance/incapacity seizes him and that that is established as is provided by section 3 of this Article, as soon as possible after the election.

ENGLISH TEXT

The first President shall enter upon his office as soon as may be after his election, and every subsequent President shall enter upon his office on the day following the expiration of the term of office of his predecessor or as soon as may be thereafter or, in the event of his predecessor's removal from office, death, resignation, or permanent incapacity established as provided by section 3 hereof, as soon as may be after the election.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Or permanent incapacity established as provided by section 3 thereof' is expressed in the Irish text as 'nó neachtar acu go ngabhfaidh míthreoir bhuan é agus go suifear sin mar a shocraítear le halt 3 den Airteagal seo' ('or else that permanent (mental) disorder/incapacity seizes him and that that is established as is provided by section 3 of this Article') – i.e. the Irish text contains a qualifier and an extra clause.
- 2 'Incapacity' is again expressed in the Irish text by 'míthreoir', a term now generally understood as '(mental) disorder', 'misguidance'; 'enter upon his office' is again expressed as 'dul i gcúram a oifige' ('enter into the responsibility of his office') and 'shall' as 'ní foláir' ('must'), again as we have seen in other Articles.
- 3 'As soon as may be' is on three occasions expressed as 'chomh luath agus is féidir é' ('as soon as (it is) possible') in the Irish text, this Irish phrase expressing 'as soon as may be' in early Acts also.

Commentary

nó neachtar acu The introduction of 'nó neachtar acu' to the Irish text breaks the repetition for the third time in succession of 'nó go' plus the verb and adds to the style of the Irish text. It may be noted, however, that not alone is this phrase not expressed in the English text but it is not included in the Irish text of Articles 12.3.1<sup>o</sup> and 12.3.3<sup>o</sup>, which contain the same list.

The pronoun 'neachtar' in this adverbial phrase is translated as 'or else' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'nó neachtar acu fan sa bhaile, or else stay at home'. Dinneen's entry s.v. 'neachtar', reads as follows:

... either, one of two (Munster), generally with aca (of them).

Dinneen cites the following two examples of ‘nó neachtar acu’: ‘ragha tú ar scoil nó neachtar aca geobha’ mé ort, either you go to school or I beat you’ and ‘éirigh ar scoil nó neachtar aca fan’ ’sa bhaile, go to school or else stay at home (take your choice) – the last example probably being Ó Dónaill’s source. Following the first example we could translate ‘má tharlaíonn dá réamhtheachtaí go gcuirfear as oifig é nó go n-éagfaidh nó go n-éireoidh as oifig nó neachtar acu go ngeobhfaidh míthreoir bhuan é’ as ‘if it happens to his predecessor either that he is put out of office or that he dies or that he resigns or else that permanent incapacity seizes him’. See DIL, s.v. ‘nechtar’, ‘one of two, either (= Latin alteruter)’, where the following example of ‘nechtar’ as quasi-adverb, with the preposition ‘do’, is cited from the Táir: ‘láech aile for áth dó-som nó nechtar de longphort do gabail d’fearib Erend’ ([to send] another warrior to the ford to [fight] him or alternatively ...). ‘Nechtár’ with the preposition ‘oc’ (i.e. ‘ag’) is found in Classical Irish, according to DIL.

chomh luath agus is féidir é ‘Lena chinntiú go mbeidh cuidiú ar fáil chomh luath agus is féidir ag gach leanbh a bhfuil deacrachtaí foghlama nó iompair aige’ translates ‘to ensure that every child with learning or behavioural difficulties has access to help at the earliest stage’ in the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97 (p. 30). ‘As soon as may be’ is generally translated as ‘a luaithe is féidir’ in the Acts – see s3(5) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example, where ‘Regulations shall be laid before each House of the Oireachtas as soon as may be after they are made’ is translated as ‘Déanfar rialacháin ... a leagan faoi bhráid gach Tí den Oireachtas a luaithe is féidir tar éis a ndéanta’, and s11 of the Shannon Free Airport Development Company Limited (Amendment) Act, 1970, where ‘as soon as may be thereafter’ is translated as ‘a luaithe is féidir ina dhiaidh sin’. ‘Chó luath agus is féidir é tar éis é do bheith déanta leagfar fé bhráid gach Tighe den Oireachtas gach ordú a déanfar fén alt so’ translates ‘Every order made under this section shall be laid before each House of the Oireachtas as soon as may be after it is made’ in s8(2) of the Gárda Síochána (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. ‘As soon as may be after any law has received the King’s assent’ is translated as ‘Chó luath agus féadfar tar éis d’aon dlí aontú an Rí d’fháil’ in Article 42 of the 1922 Constitution.

réamhtheachtaí Translated as ‘predecessor’ in Téarmaí Dlí, this headword is a compound of ‘réamh-’ (‘ante-, pre-, fore-’) and ‘teachtaí’ (‘comer’). DIL cites ‘Iohain Baptaist ... ba remthechtaid Crist’ (i.e. John the Baptist was Christ’s precursor) from Saltair na Rann, composed c. 1000. ‘From the expiration of the term of office of his predecessor’ is translated as ‘ó dheireadh théarma oifige a réamhtheachtaí’ in s2(4) of the Censorship of Publications Act, 1946, for example, this same English phrase being translated as ‘ón am a bheidh téarma oifige an té a bhí roimhe caithte’ in s4(1) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1927, and as ‘ón am a bheidh téarma oifige an té bhí roimhe caithte’ in s10(3) of the Veterinary Surgeons Act, 1931.

mar a shocraítear le halt 3 ‘Except as provided by section 162(2)’ is translated as ‘ach amháin mar a fhoráiltear le halt 162(2)’ in s296(2)(b) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, and ‘ach amháin mar a foráiltear le halt 13 den Acht seo’ translates ‘except as provided by section 13 of this Act’ in s14 of the National Maternity Hospital, Dublin (Charter Amendment) Act, 1936. See the commentary on Article 8.3 regarding ‘socruí’, ‘socraigh’ and ‘foráil’ in the Acts and in the Constitution.

dá éis sin ‘Ina dhiaidh sin’ generally translates ‘subsequent’ in the Acts. ‘Every subsequent local financial year’ is translated as ‘gach bliain airgeadais áitiúil ina dhiaidh sin’ in s2(1) of the Agriculture (Amendment) Act, 1958, for example. ‘For the second and every subsequent such certificate’ is translated as ‘Ar an dara deimhniú den sórt sin agus gach deimhniú den sórt sin ina dhiaidh sin’ in the Seventh Schedule to the Finance Act, 1980.

i ndiaidh deireadh théarma oifige a réamhtheachtaí Note that ‘deireadh’ is lenited in ‘dáta dheireadh théarma oifige gach Uachtaráin ar leith’ (‘the date of the expiration of the term of office of every President’) in Article 12.3.3°. On ‘deireadh’, literally ‘end’, see the commentary on Article 12.3.1°.

má tharlaíonn dá réamhtheachtaí Literally ‘if it happens to his predecessor’ – see the commentary on Article 12.3.3°.

dul i gcúram a oifige ‘Enter into the responsibility of his office’ or ‘take charge of his office’ – see the commentary on Article 12.3.1°.

Ní foláir don ... Uachtarán Literally ‘The President must’ – see the commentary on Article 11.

éirigh as See the commentary on Article 12.3.1°.

éag See the commentary on Article 12.3.1°.

míthreoir See the commentary on Article 12.3.1°.

TÉACS GAEILGE

Is é slí a rachaidh an tUachtarán i gcúram a oifige ná leis an dearbhú seo a leanas a dhéanamh go poiblí agus a lámh a chur leis i bhfianaise chomhaltaí den dá Theach den Oireachtas, agus breithiúna den Chúirt Uachtarach agus den Ard-Chúirt agus maithe poiblí eile:-

"I láthair Dia na nUilechumhacht, táimse, , á ghealladh agus á dhearbú go sollúnta is go firinneach bheith i mo thaca agus i mo dhídin do Bhunreacht Éireann, agus a dlíthe a chaomhnú, mo dhualgais a chomhlíonadh go dílis coinsiasach de réir an Bhunreacht is an dlí, agus mo lándícheall a dhéanamh ar son leasa is fónaimh mhuintir na hÉireann. Dia do mo stiúradh agus do mo chumhdach."

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The way the President will enter into the responsibility of his office is by publicly making the following declaration and putting his hand to it in the presence of members of both Houses of the Oireachtas, and judges of the Supreme Court and of the High Court and other public gentry/dignitaries:-

"In the presence of God the Almighty, I, , am solemnly and truly promising and declaring to be a support and shelter to the Constitution of Ireland, and to preserve its laws, to fulfil my duties faithfully and conscientiously in accordance with the Constitution and the law, and to do my utmost for the welfare and service of the people of Ireland. God direct me and protect me."

ENGLISH TEXT

The President shall enter upon his office by taking and subscribing publicly, in the presence of members of both Houses of the Oireachtas, of Judges of the Supreme Court and of the High Court, and other public personages, the following declaration:-

"In the presence of Almighty God I do solemnly and sincerely promise and declare that I will maintain the Constitution of Ireland and uphold its laws, that I will fulfil my duties faithfully and conscientiously in accordance with the Constitution and the law, and that I will dedicate my abilities to the service and welfare of the people of Ireland. May God direct and sustain me."

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 In the Irish text 'an dearbhú ... a dhéanamh' ('taking the declaration') is separated from 'a lámh a chur leis'

('subscribing the declaration') and can perhaps be read as the President after publicly making the declaration subscribes it in the presence of the members of the Houses of the Oireachtas, Judges and other public personages – i.e. on the one hand 'go poiblí' ('publicly') does not qualify 'a lámh a chur leis' ('subscribing') in the Irish text and on the other 'i bhfianaise chomhaltaí' ('in the presence of the members') does not necessarily qualify 'an dearbhú a dhéanamh' ('making the declaration').

- 2 'Taking the declaration' is expressed as 'an dearbhú a dhéanamh' ('making the declaration') in the Irish text and 'subscribing' is taken as 'signing', 'a lámh a chur leis', although the Irish legal term for 'sign', 'sínigh', is not used.
- 3 'That I will maintain the Constitution of Ireland' is expressed as 'bheith i mo thaca agus i mo dhídin do Bhunreacht Éireann', '(that I will) be a support and shelter to the Constitution of Ireland', in the Irish text.
- 4 'Sincerely' is expressed in the Irish text by the term generally rendering 'truthfully', 'go firinneach', which sense is inappropriate in this context.
- 5 'Uphold its laws' is expressed as 'a dlíthe a chaomhnú' ('preserve its laws') in the Irish text.
- 6 'That I will dedicate my abilities to the service and welfare of ...' is expressed in the Irish text as 'mo lándícheall a dhéanamh ar son leasa is fónaimh', '(that I will) do my full best for the welfare and service of ...'.
- 7 'The President shall enter upon his office' is expressed as 'Is é slí a rachaidh an tUachtarán i gcúram a oifige ná' ('The way the President shall enter upon his office is') in the Irish text, with 'enter upon his office' being expressed as 'rachaidh an tUachtarán i gcúram a oifige' ('enter into the responsibility of his office'), as we have seen earlier.
- 8 A comma precedes and follows the space for the President's name in the Irish text alone.
- 9 'Judges' has an initial capital, the corresponding 'breithiúna' having a lower-case 'b'.

Commentary

go firinneach This adverb is translated as 'truthfully; really, truly' in Ó Dónaill and as 'really, truly' in Dinneen. DIL translates the phrase 'go firinnech' as 'truly', citing 'co firinnech' ('verily, in truth') from the Leabhar Breac, which manuscript was compiled in 1411 or earlier. 'Firinnech' is based on 'firinne', the usual sense of which in Old Irish is 'justice, righteousness' ('firinne' being an abstract noun based on 'firén', 'just, righteous'), with 'truth' being the usual sense in Middle and Modern Irish, this sense being already frequent in early Irish Glosses, 'firinne' translating Latin 'veritas' in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles.

'Sincere' is translated as 'dílis, fireata, dáiríre' in De Bhaldraithe. 'Dílis' is found further on in the declaration expressing 'faithfully', while 'dáiríre' is translated as 'earnest, serious' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'firéanta', the standard form of 'fireata', as (1) 'just, righteous' and (2) 'true, genuine; faithful, sincere'. 'Fireata' is translated as 'true, frank, sincere' in Dinneen, 'firéanta' being translated as 'just, righteous' in DIL, where no examples are cited from the earlier Irish sources. Colmán Ó hUallacháin also translates 'sincere' as 'fireata' in his Foclóir Fealsaimh. This aspect of 'truth' is reflected also in L. Mc Cionnaith, who translates 'sincere friend' as 'fiorchara', 'fireacht' translating 'sincerity', along with 'diuideas' (Ó Dónaill gives 'sincere' as one of the senses of 'diúid') and 'dáirireacht', the reader also being referred to 'true, honest, heart'. 'Sincere' is defined as 'not falsified or perverted in any way; genuine, pure; veracious; exact' in the Shorter Oxford Dictionary, coming from Latin 'sincerus', 'clean, pure, sound' – as Jim O'Donnell remarks, this term literally means 'without wax', referring to pottery without cracks which have been sealed over. Foley (1855) translates 'sincerity' as 'slán, falláin, iomlán, dilis, ionnruic, glan, fior', 'dileas' also being given in Edmund E. Fournier d'Albe and T. O'Neill Lane, who gives 'fiordha' as a translation of 'sincerity' in the sense of 'true' and 'diongmhála' in the sense of 'free from hypocrisy'.

'Macánta' translates 'sincere' in the early Acts. While 'honest' is the general sense of this word today, note that Ó Dónaill cites 'go macánta cneasta, honestly and sincerely' and Dinneen translates 'go macánta' as 'honestly! sincerely!' – note that Dinneen also cites 'madradh macánta, an approachable dog', with DIL citing 'samhradh fliuch macánta (a 'mild' wet summer) from the Irish Corpus Astronomiae. 'Macánta' is based on 'macán', a diminutive of 'mac' ('son'), this being a term of endearment, with the literal sense of 'a little son'. 'Childlike' is the basic sense of 'macánta'.

To return to the Acts, in s29(2) of the Electoral Act, 1923, 'I, A B, do solemnly, sincerely and truly declare and affirm' is translated as 'Dinimse, A.B., a dheimhniú agus a dhearbhu go sollamanta, go macánta agus go firinneach', with 'guarantees ... of the sincere intention of Saorstát Éireann to observe its international obligations' being translated as 'urraíochta ar é do bheith d'intinn mhacánta ag Saorstát Éireann a oblagáidí eadarnáisiúnta do chó-liona' in s1 of the League of Nations (Guarantee) Act, 1923. In s97 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'if satisfied as to the sincerity of the objection' is translated as 'más deimhin léi go bhfuil an cur-i-gcoinnibh macánta'. In s99 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924, the Declaration to be taken by Judges reads as follows:

'I ... do solemnly and sincerely before God promise and declare that I will duly and faithfully ... execute the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Saorstát Éireann.' Dinim-se ... a gheallúint agus a fhaisnéis go solamanta agus go macánta i láthair Dé go bhfeidhmeod go cuibhe agus go dilis ... oifig Phrímh-Bhreitheamh Chúirt Uachtarach ... Shaorstáit Éireann.

In the Second Schedule to the Garda Síochána Act, 1924, 'I ... do solemnly and sincerely before God declare' is translated as 'Dinim-se ... a fhaisnéis ... go solamanta agus go macánta i láthair Dé'. We also find 'go macánta' translating 'sincerely', with 'go firinneach' translating 'truly', in s30(2) of the Presidential Elections Act, 1937 – which Act relates directly to the Constitution – where 'I swear by Almighty God (or I, A B, do solemnly, sincerely and truly declare and affirm) ...' is translated as 'Bheirim-se Dia na nUile-chomhacht (no Deinim-se, A B, a dheimhniú agus a dhearbhu go solamanta, go macánta agus go firinneach)'. We find 'go dilis macánta' in the Schedule to the Statutory Declarations Act, 1938, where 'I ... do solemnly and sincerely declare that ...' is translated as 'Deinim-se ... a dhearbhu go sollamanta agus go dilis macánta go'. 'Go fireata' appears in the Sixth Schedule to the Pawnbrokers Act, 1964, where 'Dearbhaimse ... go sollúnta agus go fireata gur liomsa an t-earra ... a thuaiscítear anseo thíos' translates 'I ... do solemnly and sincerely declare that that article ... described below is ... my property'. Note that 'go fireata' translates 'faithfully' and 'go firinneach' translates 'truly' in the form of declaration to be made by Special Commissioners in Part 1 of Schedule 17 to the Income Tax Act, 1967:

'I, A.B., do solemnly declare, that I will truly, faithfully, impartially and honestly ... execute the powers and authorities vested in me by the Acts relating to income tax'. Dearbhaimse, A.B., go sollúnta, go ndéanfaidh mé go firinneach, go fireata, go cothrom agus go macánta ... na cumhachtaí agus na húdaráis a dhílsítear dom leis na hAchtanna a bhaineann le cáin ioncaim a fhorghníomhú.

In a typescript dictionary of legal precedents, Fasaigh Dlí-Théarmaí, 'I do solemnly and sincerely declare' is translated as 'Dearbhaimse go sollúnta agus go fireata', followed by the reference 72/1962 (App K, F. 18). Note finally that in s39(2) of the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, probably following the wording of the Constitution, '(I) do solemnly, sincerely and truly declare and affirm' is translated as 'Dearbhaim agus dearbhascam go sollúnta, go firinneach agus go hionraic'.

táimse, ..., á ghealladh agus a dhearbhu This can be translated as 'I, ..., promising (it) and declaring (it)', or as 'I, ... , promise and declare ...'. See the commentary on 'firinneach' above for 'Dinim-se' in place of 'táimse' in this context and 'dearbham agus dearbhascam go sollúnta' translating '(I) do solemnly declare and affirm'. As regards 'dearbhu', see the commentary below.

Note that 'dá gheallamhaint' is the form of the phrase 'á ghealladh' in the original text. 'Gealladh' is the standard Irish form of the verbal noun of 'geall', translated principally as 'pledge (one's word), promise' in Ó Dónaill. 'Geallaim' is translated as 'I promise, I undertake' and 'geallaim go' as 'I give an undertaking that' in Téarmaí Dlí. DIL s.v. 'gellaid', cites 'ni geallaimsi a n-ioc so' ('I do not promise to heal that') from the Táin. The noun 'geall' is generally used today in the sense of 'wager, bet', 'tigh gill' ('betting house') being cited from Munster by L. Mc Cionnaith, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú referring to 'siopa gill'. DIL cites examples of 'gell' in the sense of 'a pledge, a surety' from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses onwards. In early Irish law, 'gell' was used specifically 'of the pledge of some valuable personal belonging, given as earnest of payment from debtor to creditor who fasts on him', according to DIL – 'legal fasting', which was also recognised in early Indian law, was used to exert moral pressure on a more powerful adversary (see Fergus Kelly, op. cit., p. 182f., who distinguishes this from the 'hunger strike'). Early Irish law relied greatly on the use of pledges to ensure that legal obligations were carried out, according to Professor Kelly (ibid, p. 164). 'Gell' is from the same root as 'gíall' ('hostage'), there being a close connection in the Celtic languages between the ideas of 'pledge' and 'hostage' (ibid, p. 164).

'Geall' is also in general use today in the phrase 'mar gheall ar', 'in return for, on account of', the earliest citation of which in DIL is from the seventeenth century. 'Gealladh' is also found in the phrase ‘tá gealladh faoi’, ‘he/it shows promise’.

dearbhú This is the Irish legal term for ‘declaration’ – see Téarmaí Dlí, s.v. ‘declaration’, where ‘dying declaration’, for example, is translated as ‘dearbhú i mbéal báis’. ‘Dearbhú’ is the verbal noun of ‘dearbhaigh’, which is translated as ‘declare, affirm; assure, confirm; alert, prove’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘ní briathar a dhearbhaíonn ach gníomh, actions speak louder than words’. The Old Irish verb ‘derbaid’ is based on ‘derb’, ‘sure, certain, fixed, determinate’, Modern Irish ‘dearbh’. DIL s.v. ‘derbad’, verbal noun of ‘derbaid’, cites ‘a nderbad hua desimrechtaib’ (‘to certify them by examples’) from the ninth-century St. Gall Glosses on Priscian, where it glosses Latin ‘approbata’, along with ‘derbad n-inderb’ (‘inconclusive proof’), from the twelfth-century Book of Leinster. See further the commentary on Article 29.1 where ‘dearbhaigh’ expresses ‘affirms’.

‘It shall be lawful for a member of the Garda Síochána ... to take and receive a statutory declaration for the purpose of the making of an application for a grant’ is translated as ‘Is dleathach do chomhalta den Garda Síochána ... dearbhú reachtúil a ghlacadh agus a fháil chun go ndéanfar iarratas ar dheontas’ in s19 of the Housing (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1979. In s1 of the Statutory Declarations Act, 1938, ‘It shall be lawful for any of the following persons ... to take and receive the declaration in writing of any person making the same before him’ is translated as ‘Is dleathach d’aon duine acu so leanas ... dearbhú scríobhtha dhuine ar bith, is dearbhú ar n-a dhéanamh ag an duine sin ina fhianaise ... do thógaint agus do ghlacadh’. In s2 of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland (Charter Amendment) Act, 1965, ‘in the Oath or Declaration to be taken by Licentiates’ is translated as ‘sa Mhionn nó sa Dearbhú a chaithfidh Ceadúnaigh a thabhairt’. Following the trail of the usage of this term in a specific phrase in the Acts, in s2 of the Defence Act, 1954, ‘an association ... the members of which are required by the regulations thereof to take or enter into ... an oath, affirmation, declaration or agreement not to disclose the proceedings of the association’ is translated as ‘comhlachas ... a bhfuil a chomhaltaí faoi cheangal do réir a rialachán ... mionn nó dearbhasc nó dearbhú nó comhaontú a thabhairt nach nochtfaid imeachta ... an chomhlachais’, this same text being translated as ‘comhlachas ... gur gá dá bhaill do réir a rialachán ... mionn do thabhairt no a dheimhniú no a dhearbhú nó a chó-aontú gan imeachta ... an chomhlachais ... do nochtadh’ in s16(2) of the Offences Against the State Act, 1939, and (without the reference to an ‘agreement’) as ‘comhlachas ... gur gá dá bhaill do réir a rialachán ... mionn do thabhairt no deimhniú no dearbhú do dhéanamh gan imeachta ... an chomhlachais ... do nochtá’ in s8(2) of the Treasonable Offences Act, 1925.

‘Faisnéis’, the term now used to translate ‘information’, translates ‘declaration’ in the Court of Justice Act, 1924, in s99 of which ‘Any judge or justice who declines or neglects to take the declaration aforesaid in the manner aforesaid’ is translated as ‘Aon bhreitheamh a eiteoidh no a leigfidh i bhfaillí an fhaisnéis roimhráite a dhéanamh ar an gcuma roimhráite’. In s35 of the Electoral Act, 1923, ‘and may take and receive any declaration authorised by this Act to be taken before the returning officer or magistrate’ is translated as ‘agus aon fhaisnéis a húdarúitear leis an Acht so a thabhairt i láthair an chinn chomhrimh no i láthair aon ghuíúistis, féadfaid í do ghlaca’.

Finally, as an illustration of the difference in Irish between ‘taking’ and ‘making’ a declaration, see s43(1) of the Defence Act, 1954, where ‘Gach duine a ceapfar ina oifigeach de na Buan-Óglaigh glacfaidh sé mionn nó déanfaidh dearbhú’ translates ‘Every person appointed to be an officer of the Permanent Defence Forces shall take an oath or make a declaration’. See further the commentary on Article 12.10.7° for ‘dearbhaigh’.

i bhfianaise chomhaltaí According to the official standard ‘comhaltaí’ would not be lenited after ‘i bhfianaise’, only a ‘definite’ noun (‘ainmfhocal cinnte’) and a proper noun being lenited after a prepositional phrase – see An Caigndeán Oifigiúil, p. 83.

Dinneen translates ‘i bhfiadhnaise’ (the form in the enrolled text) as ‘in the presence of, before’, citing ‘i bhfiadhnaise na tine, in front of the fire’. Ó Dónaill cites ‘i bhfianaise duine, in the presence of someone’ and ‘i bhfianaise Dé, before God, as God is my witness’. Old Irish ‘fiadhnaise’ is based on ‘fiada’, ‘a witness; one who bears testimony’, DIL citing ‘i fiadnaisi ind rig’ (‘before / in the presence of the king’) – the King here referring to God – from the edition of Fis Adamnáin (‘The Vision of Adamhnán’) contained in the early twelfth-century manuscript Leabhar na hUidhre. ‘Fianaise’ is translated as ‘evidence; testimony’ in Téarmaí Dlí, ‘witness’ being added to these two senses in Ó Dónaill, who gives ‘presence’ as a secondary sense. ‘In the constructive presence of’ is translated as ‘i láthair ... go hinchiallaithe’ in Téarmaí Dlí. Note that the declaration itself commences with the phrase ‘I láthair Dia na nUilechumhacht’ (‘In the presence of Almighty God’) rather than ‘I bhfianaise Dia na nUilechumhacht’, distinguishing the two ‘presences’, the first having the people as corporeal witnesses.

Both ‘am’ fhianaise’ and ‘am’ láthair’ are cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating ‘in my presence’ in translations for ‘Oifig an Phuist’. ‘A mheá ar an droichead meáchain i bhfianaise an chomhalta’ translates ‘to be weighed on the weighbridge in the presence of the member’ in s3(1)(iv) of the Finance (Excise Duties) (Vehicles) (Amendment) Act, 1960. On the other hand, ‘To examine, either alone or in the presence of any other person’ is translated as ‘scrúdú a dhéanamh, ina aonar nó i láthair aon duine eile’ in s114(2)(c) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981. In s20(2)(c) of the Dáil Éireann Courts (Winding-Up) Act, 1923, ‘guilty of contempt in the presence of the Commissioners’ is translated as ‘a bheith ciontach i ndí-mheas i láthair na gCoimisinéirí’ and in s6(1) of the Fourth Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923, ‘The postal voters ballot boxes shall be opened by the returning officer, in the presence of the agents’ is translated as ‘Osclóidh an ceann comhairimh boscaí ballóide na bpost-vótáluithe i bhfianaise na ngníomhairí’.

i mo thaca agus i mo dhídin ‘Taca’ is translated principally as ‘prop, support’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘taca, fear taca, supporter, mainstay; (boxing, etc.) second’ and ‘taca na bhfann, the supporter of the weak’. ‘Crann taca’ has the figurative sense of ‘pillar, champion’ and ‘cúl taca’ that of ‘backing; backer’. Dinneen’s entry is as follows:

a peg, pin or nail; an item of rigging, the forepart of a sail (Aran); a prop, a support of any kind, a fastening; aid, a helping hand, a foothold; security, bail, one who can be relied on to do a thing ...

This form is familiar also in the phrases 'um an dtaca seo, about this time, by now' and 'i dtaca le, as regards'. No examples of 'taca' are given in DIL from the earlier Irish sources, though the entry includes examples of the senses 'prop, support' and 'a supporter, helper, mainstay' along with 'a point in time'. Dinneen s.v. 'taca', refers the reader to English 'tack' as well as to 'aga, time' and 'aice, surety'.

'Dídin' is the dative singular form of 'dídean' after 'i mo' (more succinctly as 'im' in the original text). 'I mo dhídin' would generally be written today as 'i mo dhídean'. 'Dídean' is translated as 'cover, shelter; refuge, protection' in Ó Dónaill and as 'act of protecting, sheltering; protection, shelter, safety; refuge, abode' in Dinneen. 'Shelter' seems to be the original meaning of Old Irish 'dítiu', verbal noun of 'do-eim', according to DIL, where the following senses are given: 'covering, cover, shelter; hence in general covering, protecting, defence'. DIL cites 'bid dítiu láedhi is leabhor' ('a protection for songs and books') from a miscellaneous collection of early Irish texts.

Turning to 'maintain', which 'taca' and 'dídean' express in the current Article, 'maintenance order' is translated as 'ordú cothabhála' in Téarmaí Dlí. The third set of senses in Ó Dónaill s.v. 'cothaigh', includes 'maintain; hold fast, stay', 'cothabháil' being given only as a noun, translated as 'sustenance, maintenance', with 'cothú' rather than 'cothabháil' given there as the standard form of the verbal noun of 'cothaigh'. 'Cothuighim' is translated as 'I rear, feed, maintain, nourish, preserve; keep up ...' in Dinneen.

'Cothabháil' translates 'maintain' in a variety of contexts in the Acts. In s12(3) of the Minimum Notice and Terms of Employment Act, 1973, for example, 'Proceedings ... may be instituted and maintained on behalf of the employee by the Minister' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an tAire ... imeachtaí a thionscnamh agus a chothabháil thar ceann an fhostaí'. 'To establish and maintain the hospital known as the Leopardstown Park Hospital', in the Long Title of the Leopardstown Park Hospital (Trust Deed Amendment) Act, 1974, is translated as 'do bhunú agus do chothabháil an ospidéil ar a dtugtar Ospidéal Pháirc Bhaile na Lobhar'. 'Every person who is liable to maintain the beneficiary' is translated as 'gach duine a dhlífidh an tairbhí a chothabháil' in s17(1) of the Social Welfare (Supplementary Welfare Allowances) Act, 1975. In s3(b) of Article IV of the Schedule to the Bretton Woods Agreements (Amendment) Act, 1977, 'cooperative arrangements by which members maintain the value of their currencies in relation to the value of the currency ... of other members' is translated as 'comhshocráiochtaí comhair trína gcothabhálann comhaltáí luach a n-airgeadraí i ndáil le luach airgeadra ... comhaltáí eile'. See further the commentary on Article 44.2.5° where 'maintain institutions' is expressed as 'fundúireachtaí a chothabháil'.

Looking at earlier Acts, 'Liability of soldier to maintain wife and children', in the Margin Title of s141 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, is translated as 'Oblagáid ar shaighdiúir chun a bhean agus a chlann do chothú'. In s7(1) of the Dáil Éireann Courts (Winding Up) Act, 1923, Amendment Act, 1924, 'for the purpose of asserting or maintaining any right or title to any property' is translated as 'chun aon cheart no teideal chun aon mhaoine ... do dhearbhu no do chosaint'. In the Schedule to the Methodist Church in Ireland Act, 1928, 'that no minister ... shall preach maintain propagate or teach therein any doctrine or practice' is translated as 'ná déanfidh aon mhinistéir ... aon teagasc ná cleachta do shearmóin, do chraobhscaoile, do theagasc ná seasamh leis'. In the 'Appendix to Rules' in the Criminal Justice (Administration) Act, 1924, 'receive, comfort, harbour, assist and maintain the said H.C.' is translated as 'H.C. sin do ghlaca, do shólású, do chimeád fé n-a choimirce agus cabhair agus cothú do thabhairt do'. 'Maintain an armed force' is translated as 'fórsa armtha ... do chimeád ar bun' in s4(1)(b) of the Public Safety Act, 1927. 'Maintain public decency' and 'maintain public order' are translated respectively as 'caomhnaím an t-ómós poiblí' and 'coimeádam an t-ord poiblí' in Foclóir Oifigiúil (without reference), with 'cothaim' (dogma) and 'seasam le' also being given s.v. 'maintain'.

De Bhaldraithe translates 'I maintain my rights' as 'seasam mo chearta' and Ó Dónaill cites 'do cheart a sheasamh, to stand up for one's rights' as an example of the sense of 'stand up for, keep hold of, defend' of Irish 'seas'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks, against translating 'to maintain the Constitution of Ireland' as 'Bunreacht na hÉireann a sheasamh', that only words like 'ceart' and 'clú' are found with the Irish verb 'seas' in this construction, a possible development on its general usage with 'fód', i.e. 'an fód a sheasamh, to stand one's ground'. 'Seas le' has the basic sense of 'stand by', Ó Dónaill citing 'seasamh le conradh, to abide by a contract'. In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973) we find 'caomhnaigh', 'coimeád (ar bun) / (i bhfeidhm)', 'coimigh (le) / (ar bun) / (ar fáil)', 'cothaigh', 'lean le', 'seas ar' and 'teannadh a choimeád le' – 'in the event of an equal division of votes and if the High Authority maintains its proposal after a second discussion', for example, being translated there (p. 32) as 'i gcás comhionannas vótaí agus má sheasann an tArd-Údarás ar a thogra tar éis é a phlé an dara huair'. 'Coimeád ar bun' consistently translates 'maintain' in the Treaty on European Union (1992) – 'Portugal is hereby authorized to maintain the facility afforded to the Autonomous Regions of the Azores and Madeira to benefit from an interest-free credit facility', for example, being translated there (p. 189) as 'Údaraítear leis seo don Phortaingéil an tsaoráid a choimeád ar bun a tugadh do Réigiúin Fhénrialaithe Oileáin Asóir agus Mhaidéara tairbhíú do shaoráid chreidmheasa saor ó ús'.

ar son leasa is fónaimh The nominative would replace the genitive here, with 'fónamh' being lenited, preceding the genitive 'na hÉireann', according to the official standard – see the commentary on Article 1 regarding the (lenited) nominative in place of the genitive.

'Leas' is translated as 'interest (i.e. beneficial, etc.)' in Téarmaí Dlí, now common in the Acts in the phrase 'leas sóisialach', 'social welfare'. This headword is translated as 'good, well-being, benefit, interest' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'leas na tíre, the good of the country' and 'leas an phobail, the common good'. Dinneen translates 'leas' as 'benefit, advantage, profit, use, improvement, welfare, good luck ...' and translates 'leas na tíre' as 'the national well-being'. According to DIL s.v. 'les', the earliest sense, exemplified particularly in early Irish laws, seems to be 'relief, redress, remedy'. DIL cites 'is oc bar less ataat'

(‘they are benefiting you’) from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses as an example of the secondary sense of ‘les’, ‘advantage, good, benefit, profit, interest’.

Turning to the Acts, ‘ensuring that, in what pertains to the control of credit, the constant and predominant aim shall be the welfare of the people as a whole’ is translated as ‘chun a áirithiú gurb é leas an phobail i gcoitinne is príomh-chuspóir buan ina mbaineann le hurlámhas creidiúnais’ in s6(1) (b) of the Central Bank Act, 1942. Both ‘leas’ and ‘maithe’ are cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating ‘welfare’ in early official translations. ‘That the injury to the building has not materially prejudiced the economic welfare of the district’ is translated as ‘nár dhin an díobháil don fhoirgneamh aon dochar substainteach do staid chó-ionmhuis an cheanntair’ in s10(2) (b) of the Damage to Property (Compensation) Act, 1923.

‘Fónamh’, the verbal noun of ‘fóin’, is translated as ‘service; usefulness, benefit; validity’ in Ó Dónaill, this form being most frequently used today in the phrase ‘ar fónamh, fit, well; excellent’. Dinneen translates ‘fóghnamh’ as ‘act of serving, availing, doing good or being of use to; suiting, sufficing, satisfying, performing, service, ability, goodness, utility’, citing ‘duine gan fhóghnamh, a useless, idle person’. Old Irish ‘fognam’ is the verbal noun of ‘fogni’ and is translated as ‘service, rendering service’ in DIL, where ‘tri fognam innamball naile doib’ (‘through the service of the other members to them’) is cited from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. In his ‘Index of Irish Terms’ in A Guide to Early Irish Law, Fergus Kelly translates ‘fognam’ as ‘service to a lord’.

‘That I will faithfully serve as such’ is translated as ‘Go bhfónfad go dílis mar shaighdiúir den tsórt san’ in s9 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923 (Continuance and Amendment) Act, 1924. ‘Service’ is generally translated in the Acts, however, by the English or Romance loanword ‘seirbhís’. ‘That I will render good and true service and obedience to Saorstát Éireann and its constitution’ is translated as ‘go dtabharfad seirbhís agus go mbead umhal, go maith agus go dílis macánta, do Shaorstát Éireann agus dá bhunreacht’ in the Second Schedule to the Garda Síochána Act, 1924, for example. ‘Who is not required to devote substantially the whole of his time to the service of the company’ is translated as ‘nach bhfuil ceangal air a chuid ama go léir go substainteach a chaitheamh le seirbhís na cuideachta’ in s8(4) of the Finance Act, 1978, with the contrary, ‘who is required to devote substantially the whole of his time to the service of the company’, being translated as ‘a bhfuil air bunús a chuid ama go léir a chaitheamh ag déanamh seirbhíse don chuideachta’ in s26(6) (a) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975. ‘Before his transfer by virtue of this section to the service of the Council’ is translated as ‘sular aistríodh é de bhua an ailt seo chun seirbhís na Comhairle’ in s13(3) of the National Council for Educational Awards Act, 1979. Finally, s1 of the Appropriation Act, 1981, reads as follows:

The Minister for Finance may issue out of the Central Fund and apply towards making good the supply granted for the service of the year ... the sum of ten pounds. Féadfaidh an tAire Airgeadais suim deich bpunt a eisiúint as an bPríomh-Chiste agus a chur chun slánaithe an tsoláthair a deonaíodh le haghaidh seirbhíse na bliana ....

mo dhualgais ‘Dualgas’ is translated as ‘duty (of office, etc.)’ in Téarmaí Dlí, this being the secondary sense of ‘dualgas’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘do dhualgas a dhéanamh, a chomhlíonadh, to do, fulfil, one’s duty’. The principal sense of ‘dualgas’ in Ó Dónaill is ‘natural right, due; customary fee or reward’. Dinneen gives ‘duty, that which is due to or from’ as the principal sense of ‘dualgas’, giving ‘church duty, divine service’ as a secondary sense, citing ‘tar éis dualgais na maidne do chóimhlíonadh, after attending the morning service’. No examples of ‘dualgas’ are cited from the earlier Irish sources in DIL, the seventeenth-century works of Keating being the principal source there of the citations of the sense ‘custom, tribute or other obligation (due to someone)’. ‘Dualgas’ is based on ‘dual’, which is common in Modern Irish in the phrase ‘is dual do’, Ó Dónaill citing ‘an rud is dual do dhuine a dhéanamh, what is natural for one to do, what one may be expected to do’. See further the commentary on Articles 15.3.2° and 42.5.

a chaomhnú ‘Caomhnú’ is the verbal noun of ‘caomhnaigh’, which verb is translated as ‘cherish; preserve, conserve, protect’ in Ó Dónaill, ‘caomhnaim’ being translated as ‘I preserve, protect, help, maintain, cherish’ in Dinneen. No early examples of ‘caemnaid’, ‘protects, preserves, helps, maintains’, are given in DIL; this verb is based on ‘caemna’, ‘act of protecting, keeping’. The sense ‘cherish’ comes from the verb ‘caemaid’, based on ‘caem’, ‘dear, precious, beloved; belonging to the family’ (Modern Irish ‘caomh’).

In the declaration by the Ceann Comhairle (s8 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, 1997), ‘uphold the rights and privileges of members’ is translated as ‘cearta agus pribhléidí comhaltaí a chaomhnú’. ‘To uphold the law’ is translated as ‘an dlí a chumhdach, a chaomhnú’ in De Bhaldraithe. We find ‘seas le’ translating ‘uphold’ in this context in both current and early official translations. ‘That they will uphold the democratic wish ...’ is translated as ‘go seasfaidh siad le mian daonlathach ...’ in the Joint Declaration of 15 December 1993. ‘That I will uphold the Constitution of Saorstát Éireann’ is translated as ‘go seasód le Bunreacht Shaorstáit Éireann’ in the Declaration to be taken by Judges in s99 of the Court of Justice Act, 1924. Similarly, in s3(2) (c) of the Unit Trusts Act, 1972, ‘before deciding to uphold or overrule the proposal of the registrar’ is translated as ‘sula gcinnfidh sé ar sheasamh le beartú an chláraitheora nó rialú in aghaidh an bheartaithe sin’. We find a literal translation of ‘uphold’ in s5(s) of the Bank of Ireland Act, 1929, where ‘to take ... all such steps ... as may seem best calculated to uphold and support the credit of the Bank’ is translated as ‘gach céim do thabhairt ... a measfar is fear do raghadh chun creidiúint an Bhainc do chimeád suas agus do neartú’. Finally note that ‘uphold the democratic values enshrined in the Constitution’ is translated as ‘tacóidh sé leis an bhfiúchas daonlathach atá cumhdaithe sa Bhunreacht’ in s13 of the Broadcasting Authority (Amendment) Act, 1976, and ‘that those rights will be upheld and protected’ is translated as ‘go gloíofear leis na cearta sin agus go gcosnófar iad’ in the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97.

mo lándicheall a dhéanamh ‘Lándicheall’ is translated as ‘utmost endeavour’ in Ó Dónaill, with ‘ar lán a dhíchill’ being translated as ‘at his best endeavour’ in Dinneen.

According to DIL, 'dichell' (translated there as 'effort, pains, utmost endeavour') is 'a late word common in Modern Irish'; DIL cites 'mesaim go bfuil do dhichell le dénam acat do chóta ... d'iomchur' ('I think you find it as much as you can do to carry your coat') from a miscellaneous collection of Irish prose.

De Bhaldraithe translates 'to dedicate your life to something' as 'do shaol a chaitheamh le rud'. 'Dedicate' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'bronna' in translations done for the Department of Local Government and Public Health. 'I dedicate' is translated as 'toirbhím' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'A State authority may ... dedicate such State land ... for use by the public' is translated as 'Féadfaidh údarás Stáit ... an talamh Stáit sin ... a thoirbheart chun úsáide an phobail' in s11(2) of the State Property Act, 1954. 'Toirbhir' is translated as 'hand over, deliver; give, present; dedicate' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'thoirbhir siad a mbeatha do Dhia, they devoted their lives to God', along with 'toirbhirt leabhair, dedication of book'. The earlier form, 'tairbert', is the verbal noun of 'do-airbir' (from *to-air-ber-, Modern Irish 'tabhair' coming from *to-ber-), literally 'bends, bends down, lowers, inclines', but with the sense of 'yields, gives, hands over, surrenders' cited in DIL from the Táin, for example – 'co ndarairbert Cúchulaind dia araid' ('which Cúchulainn had handed over to his charioteer' [a mantle]).

Turning to 'ability' in the Acts, 'chó fada lem' chumas' translates 'to the utmost of my ability' in the form of declaration in the Second Schedule to the Gárda Síochána (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. 'To the best of his knowledge, ability, or belief' is translated as 'chó fada le n-a eolas, le n-a chumas no le n-a thuairim' in s7(1) of the Statistics Act, 1926, with 'as to age, sex, health, character, knowledge, and ability for that situation' being translated as 'maidir le haois, innscin, sláinte, carachtar, eolas, agus ábaltacht' in s3 of the Civil Service Regulation (Amendment) Act, 1926. Turning specifically to 'abilities' in the Acts, 'it shall be the duty of the patient or ... of every person liable to maintain him, to repay such amount to the authority according to their respective abilities' is translated as 'beidh sé de dhualgas ar an othar nó ... ar gach duine a dhlifeas é a chothabháil, an méid sin d'aisioc leis an údarás do réir acmhainne gach duine acu faoi seach' in s233(a) of the Mental Treatment Act, 1945, 'do réir a n-acfuinní fé seach' translating the final clause in s28(a) of the Public Assistance Act, 1939. No plural form of 'acmhainn' or 'cumas' is given in Ó Dónaill; unlike 'cumais', 'acmhainní' is in general use today in 'acmhainní nádúrtha', 'natural resources', for example. Dinneen cites 'ag féachaint mo chumais céille, testing my mental abilities', this being the genitive singular form, following a verbal noun, rather than the plural. The plural is cited in DIL from Saltair na Rann (composed c. 1000), for example – 'fotrochess ot'mórchoimsib' ('who deprived thee of thy great powers'). Bearing 'lándicheall' in mind, one could perhaps express the English plural 'abilities' somewhat more literally than 'lándicheall' as 'lán mo chumais'.

i láthair Dia na nUilechumhacht According to the official standard, 'Dia' would be lenited here following the prepositional phrase 'i láthair' – see An Caighdeán Oifigiúil, p. 83, where 'i láthair bhean an tí' is cited. Normally 'Dia' would be in the genitive following 'i láthair'

(see 'i láthair Dé' in Ó Dónaill, for example) but, as it is followed by a 'definite' noun (i.e. in this case a noun preceded by the article), 'Dia' remains in the nominative and is lenited – see the commentary on Article 1 regarding the (lenited) nominative in place of the genitive. See the commentary on Article 38.4.2° regarding 'i láthair'.

'Uilechumhacht' is translated as 'omnipotence' in Ó Dónaill, where only the nominative and genitive singular forms are given. Here we have a variant genitive plural of 'cumhacht' – see Ó Dónaill s.v. 'cumhacht', standard plural form 'cumhachtaí'. Dinneen gives 'uile-chumhacht, omnipotence' and 'uile-chumhachtach, omnipotent (Dia Uile-chumhachtach, Almighty God), sometimes an tUile-chumhachtach, the Almighty'. DIL cites 'oen Dia uli-chumhachtach' from the Passions and Homilies from the Leabhar Breac (a manuscript compiled in 1411 or earlier). Note that in Mícheál Ó Griobhtha's draft of a version of this Article we find 'Dearbhúghim dar Dia Uilechumhachtach' – see Breandán Mac Giolla Choille, op. cit., p. 65. See further the commentary on Article 44.1.

Bunreacht Éireann 'Northern Ireland' is styled 'Tuaisceart Éireann' rather than 'Tuaisceart na hÉireann' in the Acts and in general usage – see the Annals of the Four Masters where Tadhg ua Baoighill is referred to as 'sonus, taccadh tuaiscirt Éireann' (cited in DIL s.v. 'taca'). The Constitution itself, however, is styled 'Bunreacht na hÉireann' rather than 'Bunreacht Éireann' on the title-page.

go dílis See the commentary on Article 9.2 regarding 'dílis'. Turning to the Acts for 'dílis' in this context, 'That I will faithfully serve as such' is translated as 'Go bhfónfad go dílis mar shaighdiúir den tsórt san' in s9 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923 (Continuance and Amendment) Act, 1924, with 'that I will be faithful to the utmost of my ability' being translated as 'go mbead dílis chó fada lem' chumas' in the Second Schedule to the Gárda Síochána Act, 1924, for example. In the form of commission to an Officer, in the Fifth Schedule to the Defence Act, 1954, 'You will faithfully discharge your duty in the ... rank of ...' is translated as 'Comhlionfair go dílis do dhualgas i gcéim ...', with 'that he has faithfully, honestly and diligently served as such clerk' being translated as 'gur thug sé seirbhís dhílis, ionraic, dhúthachtach mar chléireach den tsórt sin' in s5(c) of the Second Schedule to the Solicitors Act, 1954. See the commentary on 'firinneach' above where 'go fireata' is also cited as translating 'faithfully'. Note finally that in the declaration made by the Ceann Comhairle in s8 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, 1997, 'I do solemnly declare that I will duly and faithfully ...' is translated as 'Dearbhaím go sollúnta go ndéanfaidh mé, go cuí agus go dílis ...'.

coinsiasach In the Schedule to the Statutory Declarations Act, 1938, 'I, A.B., do solemnly and sincerely declare that ... and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true' is translated as 'Deinim-se, A.B., a dhearbhu go sollamanta agus go dílis macánta go ... agus deinim an dearbhú sollamanta so agus mé á chreidiúint go coinsiasach go bhfuil sé fíor'. In the Sixth Schedule to the Pawnbrokers Act, 1964, 'conscientiously believing the same to be true' is translated as 'á chreidiúint go coinsiasach é a bheith fíor'. 'Conscientiously believing' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as ‘a chreideann go macánta’ in translations done for the Department of Finance.

Dia do mo stiúradh agus do mo chumhdach The form of this phrase in the enrolled text is ‘Dia dom stiúradh agus dom chumhdach’, which is perhaps preferable in the declaration to the official standard form ‘do mo ...’ and perhaps also to a literal translation, ‘Go stiúraí agus go gcumhdaí Dia mé’. As regards the phrases ‘Dia do mo stiúradh’ and ‘Go stiúraí Dia mé’, see Ó Dónaill s.v. ‘sábháil’, where ‘Dia ár sábháil! Go sábhála Dia sinn! God save us!’ is cited. The official standard form would not be adhered to in the oral delivery of a formal declaration of this sort, the synthetic form of the verb replacing the analytic form, for example, and variant forms being used – the literal translation below might perhaps be spoken as follows:

‘Stiúru’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating ‘direct’ in translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health, this being the first entry there s.v. ‘direct’. ‘Socrú’ follows ‘stiúru’ with ‘approve or direct’ being translated as ‘ceadú nó socrú’ in translations for the same Department, ‘díriú’ being cited there from translations for the Department of Justice. See the commentary on Articles 45.2 and 40.6.1<sup>iii</sup>, with ‘stiúir’ expressing ‘control’ in the latter.

‘Cumhdach’ is the verbal noun of ‘cumhdaigh’, the primary sense of which is ‘cover, protect’ according to Ó Dónaill, ‘keep, preserve’ being given as a secondary sense, Ó Dónaill citing ‘Dia ár gcumhdach, God protect us’ and ‘go gcumhdaí Dia sibh, may God keep you’. This verb goes back to Old Irish ‘con-utaing’, ‘builds, constructs’. Regarding ‘sustain’, ‘to achieve and sustain devolution’ is translated as ‘cineadh a bhaint amach agus a choimeád’ in the 1985 Anglo-Irish Agreement, for example. Ó Dónaill cites ‘d’anam a choimeád, to preserve one’s life’ s.v. ‘coimeád’. Foley translates ‘sustain’ as ‘iomchair, congghaigh suas, beathuigh, cothuigh’, T. O’Neill Lane also including ‘conggháil suas’ s.v. ‘sustain’, citing ‘d’aithin mise do bhaintreabhaigh annsoin do chonggháil suas’ (‘I have commanded a widow-woman there to sustain thee’) from the seventeenth-century translation of 1 Kings 17.9. See further the commentary on Article 34.5.1<sup>o</sup>.

Turning to the Acts, ‘and there is a good and valid conviction to sustain the order or direction’ is translated as ‘agus má tá daora daingean dleathach ann mar thaca leis an ordú nó an treoir’ in s202(2) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, the same English text (with ‘that’ preceding ‘there’) being translated as ‘agus go bhfuil ciontú maith bailí ann mar bhonn leis an ordú nó leis an treoir’ in s40(2) of the Defence Act, 1954. ‘From the date when evidence to sustain the prosecution came to the notice of the Attorney-General’ is translated as ‘ón dáta ar ar tharla fianaise chun neartuithe leis an gcúiseamh do theacht fé bhráid an Phríomh-Atúrnae’ in s35(1) of the Dangerous Drugs Act, 1934, ‘the date on which evidence to sustain such prosecution came to the notice’ being translated as ‘an dáta ar a bhfuair sé fianaise chun an chúisimh sin do shuidheamh’ in s14(4) of Connaught Rangers (Pensions) Act, 1936.

a lámh a chur leis ‘Do lámh a chur le rud’ is translated as ‘to sign something’ and ‘to set one’s hand to something’ in Ó Dónaill. ‘A lámha a chur le’ is translated as ‘to set their hands to’ in Tearmaí Dlí, where ‘I sign’ is translated as ‘sínim’. De Bhaldraithe gives ‘cuirim m’ainm le, sínim (litir)’ s.v. ‘sign’, and, s.v. ‘subscribe’, we find (a) ‘sínim, cuirim (m’ainm) le (scribhinn)’, (b) ‘aontaím le (tuairim)’. For ‘subscribe’ in the Acts, see the commentary on Article 12.4.3<sup>o</sup>, where ‘to subscribe to the nomination’ is expressed as ‘bheith páirteach in ainmniú’. See the commentary on Article 12.10.3<sup>o</sup> regarding ‘faoi lámh’ expressing ‘signed by’.

maithe ‘Maithe’ is translated as ‘principal, important, people’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘maithe agus móruaisle na tíre, the gentry and nobility of the country’. The noun ‘maith’ is, according to Dinneen, ‘sometimes a good man, a man of rank, a noble, a grandee (especially in plural)’. Dinneen cites ‘maithe aeir, the fairies’, ‘maithe na dúithche, the local magnates’ and ‘maithe agus mór-uaisle Chorcaighe, the burgesses and nobility of Cork’. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that the phrase ‘na maithe’ was also a common phrase at one time, Tadhg Ó Cianáin in his Flight of the Earls frequently so referring to the ‘Earls’ and other gentry. De Bhaldraithe translates ‘personage’ as ‘duine mór le rá, ceannasach; plural maithe’. L. Mc Cionnaith s.v. ‘personage’, translates ‘important personage’ as ‘duine mór’, Foley (1855) translating ‘personage’ as ‘taoiseach, duine mór’.

de réir an Bhunreacht ‘Do réir an Bhunreacht’ is the form of this phrase in the original text, ‘an Bhunreacht’ rather than ‘an Bhunreacht’ being the standard Irish form of the genitive singular.

Is é slí ... ná Literally ‘it is how’ or ‘it is (the) way’, the absence of the definite article before ‘slí’ reminiscent of ‘is é ainm a bhí air ná Séadna’, in the opening line of An tAthair Peadar’s renowned novel.

i gcúram a oifige See the commentary on Article 12.3.1<sup>o</sup>.

The President is not permitted to leave the State while he is in office, except with the will of the Government.

ENGLISH TEXT

The President shall not leave the State during his term of office save with the consent of the Government.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The phrase expressing ‘with the consent of the Government’ in the Irish text, ‘le toil an Rialtais’, can be read as ‘with the will of the Government’; ‘toiliú’ rather than ‘toil’ is the Irish legal term for ‘consent’.
- 2 Note that the Irish text contains the verb ‘imigh’, basically ‘go, go away’, rather than ‘fág’, ‘leave’ in the sense of ‘quit, forsake’, which sense does not suit this context.
- 3 ‘During his term of office’ is expressed as ‘le linn é a bheith in oifig’ (‘while he is in office’) in the Irish text.
- 4 Again ‘The President shall not’ is expressed as ‘Ní cead don Uachtarán’ (‘The President is not permitted to’) in the Irish text.

Commentary

toil ‘Mura nglactar ... an togra ... le toil an phobail i Reifreann’ expresses ‘unless ... the proposal shall have been approved ... by the people at a Referendum’ in Article 27.5.1°, ‘Cibé uair a dhéantar togra ... a ghlacadh le toil an phobail’ expressing ‘Whenever a proposal ... shall have been approved ... by the people’ in Article 27.5.2°. ‘Mura dtoilí Dáil Éireann le téarmaí an chonartha’ expresses ‘unless the terms of the agreement shall have been approved by Dáil Éireann’ in Article 29.5.2° and ‘ní foláir a mheas ... go dtoilíonn an pobal leis’ expresses ‘shall ... be held to have been approved by the people’ in Articles 47.1 and 47.2.2°. ‘With their own consent’, on the other hand, is expressed as ‘le réamhchead uatha féin’ in Article 18.3, ‘le réamhchead na ndaoine a ainmneofar’ expressing ‘with the prior consent of persons so nominated’ in Article 18.10.2°. Following current practice in translating the Acts (along with Téarmaí Dlí), however, ‘consent’ is rendered as ‘toiliú’ in the Amendment contained in Article 29.7.1°, ‘The State may consent to be bound by the British-Irish Agreement done at Belfast on the 10th day of April, 1998’ being translated as ‘Tig leis an Stát a thoiliú a bheith faoi cheangal ag Comhaontú na Breataine-na hÉireann, arna dhéanamh i mBéal Feirste an 10ú lá d’Aibreán, 1998’ and the new Article 3 inserted by the same Amendment reads ‘that a united Ireland shall be brought about only by peaceful means with the consent of a majority of the people’, ‘gur trí mhodhanna síochánta amháin le toiliú throlach na ndaoine ... a dhéanfar Éire aontaithe a thabhairt i gcrích’.

‘Toil’ is translated as ‘will; inclination, desire, wish’ in Ó Dónaill, who does however cite ‘le toil duine, with the consent of someone’. ‘Le do thoil’ is translated there as ‘(if you) please’, Ó Dónaill citing the expression ‘ár dtoil a chur le toil Dé, to accept the will of God’ s.v. ‘cuir le’. ‘Tionóntacht ar toil’ is translated as ‘tenancy at will’ in Téarmaí Dlí, where ‘le toiliú’ translates ‘by consent’, ‘toiliú feabhsúcháin’ translating ‘improvement consent’ and ‘toilim’ translating ‘I consent’. ‘Toiliú le rud’ is translated as ‘to consent to something; to accept something’ by Ó Dónaill s.v. ‘toiligh’ (‘will, consent, agree’), and ‘toiliú’ is translated there as ‘volition; consent’. ‘Toil’ is translated as ‘will, wish, desire, consent, willingness, leave, permission’ in Dinneen and ‘le toil’ as ‘with the consent of’. Dinneen translates ‘toilighim, -iughadh’ as ‘I will, assent, agree to’. DIL s.v. ‘tol’, cites ‘fritoil dée’ (‘against God’s will’) from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, translating ‘tol’ principally as ‘will’. ‘Tol’ also has the sense of ‘goodwill, affection, love’, ‘desire, appetite’ and ‘sexual desire, sexual intercourse’, ‘toil an chuirp’ being translated in DIL as ‘semen virile’, Dinneen citing ‘Dia na Toile, Eros’.

Turning to the Acts, ‘A payment shall not be made under subsection (1) save with the consent of the Minister for Finance’ is translated as ‘Ní dhéanfar iocaiocht faoi fho-alt (1) ach amháin le toiliú an Aire Airgeadais’ in s123(2) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, and ‘A health board shall not exercise its powers under subsection (3) ... save with the consent of the Minister’ is translated as ‘Ní fheidhmeoidh bord sláinte, ach amháin le toiliú an Aire, a chumhachtaí faoi fho-alt (3)’ in s38(4) of the Health Act, 1970. ‘With the consent of a majority of the people of Northern Ireland’ is translated as ‘le toiliú throlach mhuintir Thuaisceart Éireann’ in Article 1A of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, 1985.

shall not be concluded without its own consent' is translated as 'Ar choinníoll ná críochnófar siosóin Sheanaid Éireann gan a thoil féin'. In s11 of the Methodist Church in Ireland Act, 1928, 'A copy of any consent, approval, sanction, decision, resolution or special resolution of the Conference' is translated as 'cóip d'aon toiliú, aontú, ceadú, breith, rún nó rún speisialta ón gCódháil'. 'Consent form' and 'consent order' are cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as having been translated respectively as 'foirm toiliúcháin' and 'ordú toiliúcháin' in early translations.

imeacht ó Stát While 'imigh ó' is translated as 'go away from, leave, be lost to' in Ó Dónaill, the examples cited there ('imeacht ó do mhuintir, to leave one's people', 'ag imeacht ón tréad, leaving the fold') refer to leaving people, as against 'imigh as', 'go out of' ('imeacht as áit, to leave a place' being cited in Ó Dónaill), and would seem to favour expressing 'leave the State' as 'imeacht as an Stát'. Like Ó Dónaill, Dinneen has 'imthighim as, I leave, depart from', citing 'ós duine ag imtheacht uaim thú, since you are going from me'. Perhaps one could argue that 'State' refers to the people of the State. We may note that De Bhaldraithe translates 'leave' as 'imím ó (áit, dhuine), fágaim (áit, duine), scaraim le (duine)' but translates 'he has left Galway' as 'd'fhág sé Gaillimh; tá sé imithe as Gaillimh'.

Turning to the Acts, 'the accused has been free to leave the State during a continuous period of seven days' is translated as 'go raibh saoirse ag an gcúisí imeacht as an Stát i rith tréimhse leanúnach seacht lá' in s20(5)(b) of the Criminal Law (Jurisdiction) Act, 1976. In s39(2)(b) of the Extradition Act, 1965, however, 'where that person, having had an opportunity to leave the State' is translated as 'i gcás caoi a bheith ag an duine sin an Stát a fhágáil' and in s19(1) of the Exchange Control Act, 1954, 'a person ... who, on any occasion, is about to leave the State' is translated as '(beidh ar) dhuine ... a bheas, ar ócáid ar bith, ar tí an Stát d'fhágáil'. Finally, in s124 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1988, 'If any person ... leaves the State' is translated as 'Má dhéanann aon duine ... an Stát a fhágáil'.

le linn é a bheith in oifig We find this phrase again in Article 12.11.3° expressing 'during his term of office'. In Article 12.3.3°, however, 'the date of the expiration of the term of office of every President' is expressed as 'dáta dheireadh théarma oifige gach Uachtaráin ar leith' and in Article 12.7 'the day following the expiration of the term of office of his predecessor' is expressed as 'an lá i ndiaidh deireadh théarma oifige a réamhtheachtaí'. The literal translation of 'term of office', of course, is 'téarma oifige' and this phrase is so translated in the Acts. In s7 of the Schedule to the Wool Marketing Act, 1968, for example, 'A member of An Chomhairle whose term of office expires by effluxion of time shall be eligible for reappointment' is translated as 'Beidh comhalta den Chomhairle a n-éagfaidh a théarma oifige trí imeacht aimsire inathcheaptha'. In s7(8) of the Local Government (Planning and Development) Act, 1983, 'and shall not at any time during his term of office hold any other office or employment in respect of which emoluments are payable' is translated as 'agus ní shealbhóidh sé, am ar bith i gcaitheamh a théarma oifige, aon oifig ná fostaíocht eile a mbeidh díolaíochtaí iníochta ina leith'. In s14 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'The term of office of the Ceann Comhairle and of the Leas-Cheann Comhairle shall be the term of the Dáil existing at the time of their appointment' is translated as 'Is é téarma oifige a bheidh ag an gCeann Comhairle agus ag an Leas-Cheann Comhairle an téarma a bheidh le caitheamh ag an Dáil a bheidh ann tráth a gceaptha', 'term of office' being cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'téarma oifige' in Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, 1926.

Ní cead do Literally, 'is not permitted' – see the commentary on Article 9.1.3°.

ENGLISH TEXT

The President may be impeached for stated misbehaviour.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The verb 'state' is expressed in the Irish text by the Irish legal term for 'cite', 'luaigh', this term also expressing 'express', 'specify', 'mention' and 'define' in the Constitution.

Commentary

a luafar 'Within the stated period defined in the next following subsection' is expressed as 'taobh istigh den tréimhse áirithe a luaitear sa chéad fho-alt eile' in Article 23.1.3°, with 'tréimhse áirithe' expressing 'stated period' on two more occasions in that subsection, once in the following subsection and again in s2.2° of the same Article, 'ar thrátha áirithe' expressing 'at stated periods' in Article 33.4. 'Except for stated misbehaviour or incapacity' is expressed as 'de dheasca mí-iompair nó míthreora(ch) a luafar' in Articles 33.5.1° and 35.4.1°. 'I bhfoirm cháis riofa' expresses 'by way of case stated' in Article 40.4.3°. In the Amendment on Cabinet confidentiality contained in Article 28.4.3°, 'to inquire into a matter stated by them to be of public importance' is rendered as 'chun fiosrú a dhéanamh faoi ní a luafaidh siad ina thaobh go bhfuil tábhacht phoiblí ann'. The more usual translation in the Acts is found in the new Article 3.2, added by the Amendment following the Belfast Agreement:

Institutions with executive powers ... may be established by their respective responsible authorities for stated purposes. Féadfaidh údaráis fhreagracha faoi seach na ndlínsí sin institiúidí ag a mbeidh cumhachtaí ... feidhmiúcháin ... a bhunú chun críoch sonraithe.

'Luaign' expresses 'express' in Articles 24.1, 25.1, 26, 27, 28.3.3°, 31.1, 32, 46.3 and 50.2, where we find the following two examples:

Laws enacted before, but expressed to come into force after, the coming into operation of this Constitution, shall, unless otherwise enacted by the Oireachtas, come into force in accordance with the terms thereof. Dlíthe a bheas achtaithe roimh an mBunreacht seo a theacht i ngníomh agus a mbeidh luaite iontu iad do theacht i bhfeidhm dá éis sin, tiocfaid i bhfeidhm de réir mar a luaitear iontu mura n-achtaí an tOireachtas a mhalairt.

'Luaign' expresses 'specify' in Articles 14.5.2°, 22.2.6°, 24.1, 24.2 and 24.3 and expresses 'mention' in Articles 18.4.2°i, 18.4.3° and 43.2.1°.

'Luaim' is translated as 'I cite' in Téarmaí Dlí, 'lua' being translated there as 'citation'. 'I state (a case)', is translated as 'sonraim (cás)' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'stated case' being translated as 'cás sonraithe' – 'stated account' is, however, translated as 'cuntas ríofa'. 'Luaign' is translated as 'mention, cite' in Ó Dónaill. 'Luaidhte' is translated as 'moved, stirred up; mentioned, engaged to marry, chosen' in Dinneen. The earlier verb 'luid', 'moves', is found mostly in archaic passages, being replaced early by 'luaidid', according to DIL, where examples of this form in the sense of 'mentions, adverts to; utters, proclaims; discusses' are cited, including 'a molad maissiu máenib / luaidfidir láedib limmsa' ('his praise is more beautiful than treasures, it will be sung in lays by me'), from an eighth-century poem in praise of a Leinster prince, and 'tlás na leith ó luaidhfídhir' ('since he will be charged with weakness'), from the seventeenth-century 'Contention of the Bards'. See further the commentary on Article 31.1.

The verb 'state' is translated as 'luaim, dearbhaím, deirim, cuirim in iúl' in De Bhaldraithe, where 'on stated days' is translated as 'ar laethanta ainmnithe', however. Looking at the early Acts, 'The forms of process, summons, case stated, appeal or otherwise, and the conditions which a party who requires a case stated ... must comply with', in s91 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924, is translated as 'na fuirmeacha próisis, gairme, cáis aithriste, athchomhairc no éinní eile, agus ar na coiníollacha ná foláir do pháirtí a iarrfidh aithris cáis ... a chó-líona' – note that 'cás sonraithe' now translates 'case stated', following Téarmaí Dlí. In s4 of the Erasmus Smith School Act, 1938, 'to attend the stated Services of their own Church' is translated as 'chun bheith i láthair ag Seirbhísi luaite a nEaglaise féin'. Finally, note that Article 63 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

The Comptroller and Auditor-General shall not be removed except for stated misbehaviour or incapacity on resolutions passed by Dáil Éireann and Seanad Éireann. Ní cuirfear an t-Ard-Sgrúdaí as oifig ach mar gheall ar dhroch-iompar no mí-chumas a luadhfar agus ar rúin a rithfidh Dáil Éireann agus Seanad Éireann.

'Gur mainníodh na fáthanna ar a bhfuil an dámhachtain bunaithe a lua inti' translates 'that the award has failed to state the reasons on which it is based' in s1(e) of Article 52 of the Second Schedule to the Arbitration Act, 1980, and 'go bhfuil suim a luafar dlíte' translates 'that a stated amount is due' in s15(4)(b) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981. 'Sonraigh', however, generally translates 'state' in the modern Acts. 'The chairman may be removed from office by the Government ... if he has committed stated misbehaviour' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an Rialtas an Cathaoirleach a chur as oifig ... má rinne sé é féin a mhí-iompar mar a bheidh sonraithe' in s5(15) of the Local Government (Planning and Development) Act, 1983. In s7 of the Second Schedule to the Fisheries Act, 1980, 'who has committed stated misbehaviour' is translated as 'a mhí-iompair é féin mar a bheidh sonraithe'. 'But shall not be removed from office except for stated misbehaviour, incapacity or bankruptcy and then only upon resolutions passed by Dáil Éireann and by Seanad Éireann calling for his removal', in s2(3)(b) of the Ombudsman Act, 1980, is translated as 'ach ní cuirfear as oifig é ach amháin mar gheall ar mhí-iompar sonraithe, éagumas nó féimheacht ná ansin féin ach tar éis do Dháil Éireann agus do Seanad Éireann rúin a rith ag éileamh é a chur as oifig'. In s3(1) of the First Schedule to the Adoption Act, 1952, 'The Government may remove a member from office for stated misbehaviour or incapacity' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an Rialtas comhalta a chur as oifig de dheasca mí-iompair a sonrófar nó de dheasca éagumais'. See further the commentary on Article 25.4.2°.

Note that 'during a stated period' is translated as 'i rith tréimhse a shonrófar' in s4 (Table) of the Finance Act, 1981, as against 'tréimhse áirithe' which we saw above expressing 'stated period' in the Constitution, as it does in s2 of the Constitution (Amendment No. 13) Act, 1928, for example. Looking at the verb 'state' in general, 'it shall order the court which made the determination to state and sign a case' is translated as 'ordóidh sí don chúirt a rinne an cinneadh cas a shonrú agus a shíniú' in s18(2)(c) of the Malicious Injuries Act, 1981, for example. Finally, note that 'to state in writing' is translated as 'a chur in iúl i scríbhinn' in s6(a) of the Fifth Schedule to the Fisheries Act, 1980.

as ucht mí-iompair 'Mí-iompar' is translated as 'misconduct, misbehaviour' in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen translates 'mí-iomchar' (the spelling in the original text) as 'misconduct, sexual immorality', citing 'clann mí-iomchair, misbehaving progeny'. The adjective 'mí-iomprach' occurs in Téarmaí Dlí in the phrase 'ar meisce agus mí-iomprach, drunk and disorderly'. 'Misbehaviour' is translated as 'mí-iompar, drochiompar' in De Bhaldraithe, who translates 'misconduct (of person)' as 'mí-iompar' also. DIL cites 'a dhrochiomchar leis féin' (translated as 'his misbehaviour') from earlier Irish literature s.v. 'imchor'. 'Imchor' is the verbal noun of 'imm-cuirethar' ('carries around, carries, brings, conveys') and, as an ordinary noun, has the concrete sense of ‘a charge, burden’, with the abstract senses of ‘bearing, deportment, behaviour’, along with ‘forbearance, suffering’, according to DIL.

As we saw above, in s7 of the Second Schedule to the Fisheries Act, 1980, ‘who has committed stated misbehaviour’ is translated as ‘a mhí-iompair é féin mar a bheidh sonraithe’ – this verbal form translating ‘misbehave’ in the Health Act, 1947, also – and ‘But shall not be removed from office except for stated misbehaviour’ is translated as ‘ach ní chuirfear as oifig é ach amháin mar gheall ar mhí-iompar sonraithe’ in s2(3) of the Ombudsman Act, 1980. In s3(1) of the First Schedule to the Adoption Act, 1952, ‘The Government may remove a member from office for stated misbehaviour or incapacity’ is translated as ‘Féadfaidh an Rialtas comhalta a chur as oifig de dheasca mí-iompair a sonrú nó de dheasca éagumais’. Turning to early Acts, ‘The Comptroller and Auditor-General shall not be removed except for stated misbehaviour or incapacity’ is translated as ‘Ní cuirfear an t-Ard-Sgrúdaí as oifig ach mar gheall ar dhroch-iompar nó mí-chumas a luadhfar’ in Article 63 of the 1922 Constitution. ‘The offence of misbehaving or inducing others to misbehave before the enemy in such a way as to show cowardice’ is translated as ‘Mí-iompar os cóir an namhad ar shlí a thaisbeánfadh meacht, no daoine eile do mhealla chun an chionta san’ in s32(4) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923.

Regarding ‘as ucht’, this phrase is translated as ‘for the sake of, on account of, on behalf of, in return for’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘tá sé tuillte aige as ucht a ndearna sé dúinn’, he deserves it for all he has done for us’. Dinneen translates ‘as ucht’ as ‘for the sake of, on account of, in payment for’. ‘A hucht’ was the earlier form of this phrase, which literally means ‘from the breast’, but has the senses of ‘from the middle of, out of, from’, ‘in the name of, representing, on behalf of’, ‘instead of, in place of’, ‘by means of’, ‘by the influence of’ and ‘for the sake of’, according to DIL, along with ‘because of, on account of’, DIL citing ‘mé ó phurt ag taisdeal na dtonn / as a n-ucht ní haisdear liom (“I feel my course sure on account of them”) / mo sdiúir tar buinne an bhean mhall / crann siúil mo luinge an Fear fionn’ from a miscellaneous collection of religious poetry. The Irish preposition ‘as’ alone can translate ‘for’ in the sense of ‘on account of’ – ‘moladh iad as a gcineáltas’, for example, is translated as ‘they were praised for their kindness’ in Ó Dónaill s.v. ‘as’ (4), ‘reason, cause’.

a tháinseamh ‘Táinsim’ is translated as ‘I impeach’ and ‘táinseamh’ as ‘impeachment’ in Téarmaí Dlí. ‘Impeach’ is given as the secondary sense of ‘táinsigh’, after the abbreviation for ‘Jurisprudence’, in Ó Dónaill, where the primary sense is ‘reproach, censure, accuse’. ‘Táinsim’ is translated as ‘I traduce, censure, reproach’ in Dinneen. This verb goes back to ‘do-áinsea’, ‘disparages, condemns’, DIL citing ‘“Ced ara tánsi na firu?” or Ailill. “Nidá tánsam dam”, ol Medb’ (“Why do you belittle the men?” asked Ailill. “I am not belittling them”, said Medb’) from the version of the Táin in Leabhar na hUidhre (written before 1106). ‘Coirigh’, which is translated as ‘accuse, criminate’ in Ó Dónaill, translates ‘impeach’ in s3(3) of the County Courts (Amendment) Act, 1923, where ‘nor shall the verdict thereon be impeached or questioned on account of the return of such person as a juror’ is translated as ‘ná ní déanfar breith an choiste sa triail sin do choiriú ná do chur in amhras mar gheall ar an duine sin do bheidh cláruithe mar choisteoir’. Note finally, in passing, that 2 Anne c.5, 1703, ‘An Act to make it High Treason in this Kingdom to impeach the Succession of the Crown, as limited by several Acts of Parliament’, was one of the Statutes repealed by the Statute Law Revision (Pre-Union Irish Statutes) Act, 1962.

Féadfar See the commentary on Article 12.4.4° regarding ‘féad’.

TÉACS GAEILGE

Ceachtar de Thithe an Oireachtais a dhéanfas an cúiseamh agus is faoi chuimsiú agus de réir forálacha an ailt seo a dhéanfar é.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

(It is) either of the Houses of the Oireachtas that will make the charge/accusation and it is within the scope/constraint of and according to (the) provisions of this section that it will be made.

ENGLISH TEXT

The charge shall be preferred by either of the Houses of the Oireachtas, subject to and in accordance with the provisions of this section.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 ‘Cúiseamh’, the term expressing ‘charge’ in the Irish text, also has the sense of ‘accusation’, being the Irish legal term for both ‘charge’ and ‘accusation’; in the next subsection, however, ‘cúis a thabhairt’, rather than ‘cúiseamh a dhéanamh’, following the wording of this subsection, expresses ‘to prefer a charge’.
- 2 As against the English text’s statement, followed by a comma and a qualifying clause, the Irish text contains two statements, repeating ‘a dhéanfar é’ (‘that will make/prefer it’), the conjunction ‘agus’ linking the statements.
- 3 ‘Subject to’ is again expressed as ‘faoi chuimsiú’ (‘within the scope/constraint of’) in the Irish text.

Commentary

cúiseamh ‘Cúisiú’ is the form in the original text. ‘When a charge has been preferred by either House of the Oireachtas’ is expressed as ‘Má dhéanann ceachtar de Thithe an Oireachtais cúiseamh’ in subsection 5°. In subsection 3°, however, ‘to prefer a charge against the President' is expressed as 'cúis a thabhairt in aghaidh an Uachtaráin' and in subsection 7<sup>o</sup> 'an chúis a tugadh in aghaidh an Uachtaráin' expresses 'the charge preferred against the President'.

'Cúiseamh' is translated both as 'accusation' and 'charge' (i.e. criminal) in Téarmaí Dlí and as 'accusation, charge' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'cúiseamh a dhéanamh (ar), to prefer a charge (against)'. This is the standard form of the verbal noun of 'cúisigh', which verb is translated as 'accuse; charge, prosecute' in Ó Dónaill, 'cúisim' and 'cúisighim' being translated as 'I accuse, charge, prosecute' in Dinneen. These forms are based on 'cúis', which comes from Latin 'causa', and is translated in DIL as (a) 'cause, reason', (b) 'cause, case; debate, dispute, controversy, more specifically law, law (case), suit, charge, etc.' and (c) 'matter, affair; business'. 'Cúis' is translated as 'cause' in Téarmaí Dlí but, as we see in DIL, Dinneen and Ó Dónaill, it has the secondary sense of 'case, charge', Ó Dónaill citing 'cúis dlí, lawsuit'. 'Case' is translated as 'cás' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'I bring proceedings' is translated as 'tionscnaím imeachtaí'. 'Cúis' is translated as 'a cause, case, ... charge, accusation; cause of quarrel; case in the courts' in Dinneen, who also cites 'cúis dlíghidh, lawsuit, legal process'. See further the commentary on Articles 30.3 and 38.1.

In Foclóir Oifigiúil, as well as giving the examples above from the Constitution, 'cúis a chur i leith' is given, without source, s.v. 'prefer'. In L. Mc Cionnaith, we are referred to 'accuse' s.v. 'prefer (charge against)' and s.v. 'accuse (charge, implicate, &c.)', 'níor cheart Seán do chúiseamh, chúisiú' is cited from Munster. De Bhaldrath translates 'to prefer a charge' as 'cúisiú a dhéanamh'.

Looking at early Acts, 'to examine on oath into the truth of any charge or complaint of neglect or violation of duty preferred against any member of the Dublin Metropolitan Police' is translated as 'scrúdú fé mhionn do dhéanamh ar cé'ca fíor bréag aon chúiseamh no gearán a cuirfar i gcoinnibh aon bhaill de Phóilíneacht Chathrach Bhaile Átha Cliath i dtaobh faillí i ndiúité no sárú diúité' in s12(1) of the Dublin Police Act, 1924. 'Guilty of the offence ... charged in the indictment preferred against him' is translated as 'ciontach sa chion ... is ábhar don chúiseamh sa díotáil ina aghaidh' in s19(1) of the Juries Act, 1976. In s4(5) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1984, 'Where a member of the Garda Síochána has enough evidence to prefer a charge for an offence against a person detained in a Garda Síochána station' is translated as 'I gcás ina mbeidh dóthain fianaise ag comhalta den Gharda Síochána chun cúiseamh i leith ciona a chur in aghaidh duine atá á choinneáil i stáisiún Garda Síochána'.

de réir forálacha an ailt seo 'Forálacha' would be lenited here in official standard Irish after the prepositional phrase 'de réir' – see the commentary on Article 1 regarding the (lenited) nominative in place of the genitive.

faoi chuimsiú See the commentary on Article 12.5. 'Subject to and in accordance with regulations' is translated as 'faoi réir agus de réir rialachán' in s63(a) of the Finance Act, 1989, for example.

a dhéanfas See the commentary on Article 6.1 regarding the old special form of the relative of the verb.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Má thairgtear do cheachtar de Thithe an Oireachtais cúis a thabhairt in aghaidh an Uachtaráin faoin alt seo ní cead aird a thabhairt ar an tairiscint sin ach amháin de bharr fógra tairisceana i scríbhinn faoi láimh tríocha comhalta ar a laghad den Teach sin.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If it is offered/proposed to either of the Houses of the Oireachtas to take/bring a case against the President under this section it is not permitted to heed that proposal/motion except as a result of a written notice of proposal/motion signed by / under the hand of at least thirty members of that House.

ENGLISH TEXT

A proposal to either House of the Oireachtas to prefer a charge against the President under this section shall not be entertained unless upon a notice of motion in writing signed by not less than thirty members of that House.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'To prefer a charge against' is expressed in the Irish text as 'cúis a thabhairt in aghaidh' ('to take/bring a case against'), this phrase differing from that in the preceding subsection, where we find the Irish legal term for 'charge', 'cúiseamh'.
- 2 'A proposal to either House' is expressed as 'Má thairgtear do cheachtar de Thithe' ('If it is proposed/offered to either House'), with 'proposal' referred to directly further on ('ní cead aird a thabhairt ar an tairiscint sin' ['it is not permitted to heed that proposal']); 'tairiscint' also expresses 'motion' in 'fógra tairisceana' ('notice of motion') in this subsection, this being the term for 'motion' in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann.
- 3 While attention has been drawn to the perhaps unnecessarily prohibitive tone of the Irish text's 'ní cead', 'it is not permitted', in other sections, expressing 'shall', in the phrase 'ní cead aird a thabhairt ar', 'it is not permitted to heed', the tone better matches the English text's 'shall not be entertained'.

Commentary

má thairgtear do ... tairiscint ... fógra tairisceana 'Tairiscint', genitive singular 'tairisceana', is the verbal noun of 'tairg'. 'Togra' expresses 'proposal', in a Bill, in Articles 24.1, 25.1, 26, 27, 27.1, 27.5.1<sup>o</sup>, 27.5.2<sup>o</sup>, 27.6, 46.2, 46.4, 46.5, 47.1, 47.2.1<sup>o</sup> and 47.2.2<sup>o</sup> – 'Every proposal for an amendment of this Constitution shall be initiated in Dáil Éireann as a Bill' is expressed as 'Gach togra chun an Bunreacht seo a leasú ní foláir é a thionscnamh i nDáil Éireann ina Bhille' in Article 46.2, for example.

'Tairgim' is translated as 'I offer' in Tearmaí Dlí, with Ó Dónaill citing 'rud a thairiscint do dhuine, to offer something to some one' s.v. 'tairg'. 'Tairiscint' is translated principally as 'offer' in Ó Dónaill. 'Tairgin(t)' is translated as 'act of offering, bidding, trying, challenging; an offer, proposal, bid or challenge, proposition, motion, tender' in Dinneen. 'Tairiscint imshocraíochta' is translated as 'offer of composition' in Tearmaí Dlí, where 'tairiscint shásaimh, tender of amends' is also cited. In the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'tairiscint' translates 'motion', with 'proposal' being translated as 'moladh' – 'ach amháin i gcás go gcuirtear in aghaidh moladh den sórt sin' translates 'save where any such proposal is opposed' in s26(2) thereof, being preceded by 'and may propose, on motion made ...', 'agus féadfaidh sé nó sí, ar thairiscint a dhéanamh ...'. The verb 'tairg' translates 'propose' in the Standing Orders; 'A member who has made a motion or proposed an amendment' is translated as 'Aon chomhalta a dhéanfaidh tairiscint nó a thairgfídh leasú' in s51. As 'tairiscint' is the verbal noun of 'tairg', we find 'the text ... of all motions, and amendments thereto, to be proposed' translated as 'téacs gach tairisceana a bheidh le déanamh, agus gach leasaithe ar a leithéid a bheidh le tairiscint' in s30. 'Notice of Motion' is translated as 'Fógra Tairisceana' in the Standing Orders. 'Proposal' in a Bill is translated there as 'togra' – see s108(4) where 'The matters which shall be dealt with by Bills shall include all proposals for legislation' is translated as 'Ar na nithe a ndéileálfar leo le Billí áirítear gach togra reachtaíochta'.

Looking at the early Acts, in Article 33 of the 1922 Constitution, 'The method of proposal and selection for nomination shall be decided by Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'Socróidh Dáil Éireann ... an tslí déanfar tairiscint agus togha chun ainmniúcháin'. 'Chun díospóireacht ... do dhéanamh ar intinn an Bhille' translates 'for the purpose of debating ... the proposals of the Bill' in Article 38 thereof. 'For his report on the general merits of the proposals contained in the petition' is translated as 'chun a thuarasgabháil d'fháil ar thréithe generálta na molta atá san achuinge' in s3(1) of the Arterial Drainage Act, 1925. In s20(2) of the Minerals Exploration and Development Company Act, 1941, 'A notice of a proposal to acquire an existing mining business given under paragraph (a)' is translated as 'Fógra do bhéarfáir fé mhír (a) ... i dtaobh é bheith beartuithe sean-ghnó mianadóireachta do thógaint'. 'Notice of proposal' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'fógra faoi é bheith beartuithe' in Iris Oifigiúil 31/24. 'On giving six months' notice in writing to the Corporation' is translated as 'tar éis fógra sé mhí do thabhairt i scríbhinn don Bhárda' in s5(3) of the Dublin Reconstruction (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1924.

'Notice of Motion' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'fógra tairiscint' in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann. 'Fógra tairisceana' translates 'notice of motions' in the Margin Title of s29 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997). In s11 of the Solicitors (Amendment) Act, 1960, 'the Society may ... apply by notice of motion ... to the High Court for an order striking off the roll the name of the solicitor' is translated as 'féadfaidh an Cumann ... iarratas tri fhógra foriarratais ... a dhéanamh chun na hArd-Chúirte ag iarraidh ordú ag scriosadh ainm an aturnae den rolla'. In s8(3) of the Waterford City Management Act, 1939, 'and no notice, whether by notice of motion or otherwise, shall be required for the transaction of any such business' is translated as 'agus ní bheidh fógra ar bith, i bhfuirm fógra tairiscint ná ar aon tslí eile, riachtanach chun aon ghnótha den tsórt san do dhéanamh', following s37(3) of the Local Government (Dublin) Act, 1930.

'Motion was declared carried accordingly' is translated as 'do faisnéiseadh dá réir sin go rabhthas tar éis glaca leis an dtairiscint' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 26/11/26. 'Tairiscint' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'motion' (=proposal) in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann. 'The Statistical Council shall meet whenever summoned by the Minister for Industry and Commerce on his own motion' is translated as 'Tiocfidh an Chomhairle Staitisticíochta le chéile aon uair a ghairmfídh an tAire Tionnscail agus Tráchtála chuige sin iad ar a chomhairle féin' in s4(4) of the Statistics Act, 1926, 'at the request of the under-sheriff or on his own motion' being translated as 'ar iarratas an fho-shirriaim no más maith leis féin é' in s4(3) of the Enforcement of Court Orders Act, 1926. In s20 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1928, 'unless the Court on the application of any party ... or on its own motion at the trial shall consider ...' is translated as 'maran dó leis an gCúirt, ar iarratas a dhéanfaidh aon pháirtí ..., nó uaithi féin ag an triail'.

Looking at modern Acts, 'A local authority shall not proceed with a proposal to designate land as a casual trading area' is translated as 'Ní rachaidh údarás áitiúil ar aghaidh le beartú chun talamh a ainmniú mar limistéar corr-thrádála' in s7(7) of the Casual Trading Act, 1980. 'Go gceadófar togra an aontaithe le rún speisialta ó gach cumann' translates 'a proposal to unite is approved by a special resolution of each society' in s25(1)(a) of the Building Societies Act, 1976, 'ach amháin togra chun an Cóiriú seo a athrú' translating 'except a proposal to alter this Constitution' in s10 of the Schedule to the Greyhound Industry Act, 1958. 'The decision on any proposal to disqualify a conciliator ... shall be taken by the other members of the Commission' is translated as 'Is iad na comhaltá eile den Choimisiún ... a dhéanfaidh an cinneadh maidir le haon togra chun comhréiteoir ... a dhícháiliú' in Article 58 of the Second Schedule to the Arbitration Act, 1980.

faoi lámh This phrase expresses 'signed by' also in Articles 17.2 and 27.2. The phrase 'faoina lámh agus faoina Shéala' expresses 'under his hand and Seal' in Articles 27.5.1<sup>o</sup>, 27.6, 31.3, 31.7, 33.5.3<sup>o</sup> and 35.4.3<sup>o</sup>. 'A lámh a chur le' expresses 'sign' in Articles 25.2.1<sup>o</sup>, 25.3, 25.4.1<sup>o</sup>, 25.4.2<sup>o</sup>, 25.4.3<sup>o</sup>, 25.5.2<sup>o</sup>, 27.6 and 46.5, 'the text of such law which was signed by the President' being expressed as 'an téacs den dlí sin lena mbeidh lámh an Uachtaráin' in Article 25.4.5<sup>o</sup>. The heading for Article 25, however, 'Signing and Promulgation of Laws' is expressed as 'Dlíthe a Shíniú agus a Fhógairt', s3 of which reads as follows:

Every Bill the time for the consideration of which by Seanad Éireann shall have been abridged under Article 24 of this Constitution shall be signed by the President on the day on which such Bill is presented to him for signature and promulgation as a law. Gach Bille a ndearnadh an tréimhse chun a bhreithnithe ag Seanad Éireann a ghiorrú faoi Airteagal 24 den Bhunreacht seo, ní foláir don Uachtarán a lámh a chur leis an lá a thairgtear an Bille sin dó chun é a shíniú agus chun é a fhógairt ina dhlí.

'As soon as may be after the signature ... of a Bill' is expressed as 'Chomh luath agus is féidir é tar éis Bille a shíniú' in Article 25.4.5°, where 'an dá théacs sínithe' expresses 'both the signed texts'. 'The copy so signed' is expressed as 'An chóip a bheidh sínithe ... amhlaidh' in Article 25.5.1°. 'Signature' is expressed as 'síniú' throughout the text.

'Faoi mo lámh' is translated as 'signed by me' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'gheall sé faoina lámh (go), he signed a promise (that)'. Dinneen translates 'fá lámh' as 'under the power or control of, signed by, at the command of', citing 'cuirim fá'm lámh é, I sign it'. DIL cites the phrase 'fo lámh', in swearing, from the twelfth-century Book of Leinster ('gebatsa a luige fó lámh Chiaráin' – translated as 'by Ciarán').

In the Long Title of the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922, 'the Treaty between Great Britain and Ireland signed at London on the 6th day of December, 1921' is translated as 'an Conradh idir an Bhreatain Mhóir agus Éire do sghníodh i Lundain ar an 6adh lá de mhí na Nodlag, 1921'. In s11(3) of the Statistics Act, 1926, 'Any document produced by an officer of statistics ... and purporting on its face to be such appointment and to be duly signed in accordance with this section' is translated as 'Aon scríbhinn a thabharfidh oifigeach staitistíochta i láthair ... agus go dtuigfí le féachaint uirthi gurb í an ceapachán san í agus go bhfuil sí sghníthe go cuibhe do réir an ailt seo'. In s88(3) of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1927, however, 'Every arbitrator appointed under this Act shall have power by notice in writing signed by him to summon witnesses' is translated as 'Beidh ag gach eadarascánaí a ceapfar fén Acht so comhacht, tré fhógra i scríbhinn fé n-a lámh, chun finnithe do ghairm'.

Looking at modern Acts, 'A certificate purporting to be signed by an officer of the company' is translated as 'Deimhniú a airbheartóidh a bheith sínithe ag oifigeach don chuideachta' in s92(2) of the Postal and Telecommunications Services Act, 1983. 'Foréileamh a bheidh sínithe ag seisear ar a laghad de chomhaltaí na Comhairle' translates 'a requisition signed by not less than six members of the Council' in s11 of the Second Schedule to the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978. 'Proposed amendments shall be in writing signed by a member' is translated as 'is i scríbhinn arna síniú ag comhalta a bheidh leasuithe a bheidh le tairiscint' in s113 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997). 'A statement in writing, signed by him' is translated as 'ráiteas i scríbhinn, agus é sínithe aige' in s15 of the Finance Act, 1979, and in s21(3) of the Plant Varieties (Proprietary Rights) Act, 1980, 'Unless otherwise directed by the court, the Controller, in lieu of appearing and being heard, may submit to the court a statement in writing signed by him' is translated as 'Mura n-ordóidh an chúirt a mhalairt, féadfaidh an Rialaitheoir, in ionad láithriú agus éisteacht a fháil, ráiteas i scríbhinn agus é sínithe aige a chur os comhair na cúirte'.

We find both 'arna síniú ag comhalta' and 'faoi lámh chomhalta' in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann translating 'signed by a member'. 'All motions to be put on the Order Paper for any day, shall be in writing, signed by a member' is translated as 'Gach tairiscint a bheidh le cur ar Riar na hOibre le haghaidh lá ar bith, ní foláir í a bheith i scríbhinn, faoi lámh chomhalta' in s29, 'Proposed amendments shall be in writing signed by a member' being translated as 'is i scríbhinn arna síniú ag comhalta a bheidh leasuithe a bheidh le tairiscint' in s113. See further the commentary on Article 13.3.1°.

aird a thabhairt ar 'Aird bhreithiúnach' is translated as 'judicial notice' in Téarmaí DLí, while Ó Dónaill cites 'aird a thabhairt ar rud, to pay attention to something' and 'ná tabhair aird air, don't heed him'. Dinneen cites 'bheirim áird ar do chainnt, I heed what you say'. In s10(2) of the Trade Union Act, 1975 'Ní thabharfar aird ar ghearán faoin alt seo' translates 'A complaint under this section ... shall not be entertained' and in s24(4) of the Wealth Tax Act, 1975, 'Ní rachaidh na Coimisinéirí Achomhairc ar aghaidh le hachomharc faoin alt seo i gcoinne measúnachta ná ní thabharfaidh siad aird air' translates 'An appeal under this section against an assessment shall not be proceeded with or entertained by the Appeal Commissioners'. On the other hand, in s39(3) of the Finance Act, 1970, 'to the satisfaction ... of the court entertaining the appeal' is translated as 'chun sástacht na cúirte a bhreithneoidh an t-achomharc'. Similarly 'the payment of such fee shall be a condition precedent to the entertainment of the application by the Minister' is translated as 'beidh íoc na táille sin mar roimh-choinioll a có-lionfar sara mbreithneoidh an tAire an t-iarratas' in s9(1) of the Agricultural Produce (Eggs) Act, 1924. 'And any such application which is received by the Seanad returning officer after that period shall not be entertained or examined by him' is translated as 'agus ní ghlacfaidh ná ní scrúdóidh ceann comhairimh an tSeanaid aon iarratas den tsórt sin a gheobhas sé tar éis na tréimhse sin' in the Schedule to the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1954. 'Glacadh le hiarratas' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'to entertain an application' in Iris an Phuist, 29/2/28. 'To entertain (a complaint, etc.)' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'áird do thabhairt ar ...' in Iris an Phuist, 30/11/27, 'áird do thabhairt ar an iarratas' being cited as translating 'to entertain an application' in early translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health.

cúis a thabhairt See the commentary on the previous subsection, 'The charge shall be preferred' being expressed there as 'a dhéanfas an cúiseamh', i.e. 'to prefer a charge' being expressed as 'cúiseamh a dhéanamh' rather than 'cúis a thabhairt', as in the present subsection. See also the commentary on Article 38.1.

de bharr This prepositional phrase is translated as 'as a result of, because of' in Ó Dónaill. In s127(1) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'upon a Resolution restoring it to the Order Paper' is translated as 'má ritear Rún á chur ar ais ar Riar na hOibre'.

ar a laghad ‘The Commissioner may in the case of perishable goods not less than twelve hours ... after the seizure cause the goods to be sold’ is translated as ‘féadfídh an Coimisinéir a chur fé ndéar go ndíolfar na hearraí tar éis dhá uair dhéag a chluig ar a luíod o am a dtógtha más earraí meathtachta iad’ in s11(1) of the Street-Trading Act, 1926, for example. See the commentary on Article 12.4.2° for an example from modern Acts.

TÉACS GAEILGE

Ní cead do cheachtar de Thithe an Oireachtais glacadh le haon tairiscint den sórt sin ach amháin de bharr rúin ón Teach sin lena mbeidh tacaíocht dhá thrian ar a laghad dá lánchomhaltas.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Neither of the Houses of the Oireachtas is permitted to accept any such proposal/motion except as a result of a resolution from that House which will have the support of at least two-thirds of its full membership.

ENGLISH TEXT

No such proposal shall be adopted by either of the Houses of the Oireachtas save upon a resolution of that House supported by not less than two-thirds of the total membership thereof.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 As in the previous subsection, ‘proposal’ is expressed by the term ‘tairiscint’ in the Irish text, which term translates ‘motion’ in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann and expresses ‘motion’ in the phrase ‘fógra tairisceana’ in the previous subsection; ‘tairiscint’ in the present subsection can therefore refer to the proposal to prefer a charge against the President and to the motion in writing signed by not less than thirty members of that House.
- 2 ‘No ... shall’ is expressed as ‘Ní cead’ (‘It is not permitted’) in the Irish text, as in some other Articles.

Commentary

glacadh le ‘Laws enacted, acts done or measures adopted by the State’ is expressed as ‘aon dlíthe a d’achtaigh, gníomhartha a rinne nó bearta lenar ghlac an Stát’ in Article 29.4.7°. In Article 29.4.2° ‘avail of or adopt any organ, instrument, or method of procedure used or adopted for the like purpose by the members of any group’ is expressed as ‘aon organ stáit nó sás nó nós imeachta a chur chun críche nó a ghlacadh a chuirtear chun críche nó a ghlactar chun a leithéid sin de chuspóir ag na náisiúin is comhaltaí d’aon bhuíon’, i.e. without the preposition ‘le’ following ‘glac’. ‘Do hereby adopt ... this Constitution’, in the Preamble, is expressed as ‘Atáimid leis seo ag gabháil an Bhunreachta seo chugainn’.

‘Glacadh le rud’ is translated as ‘to accept, admit, something’ in Ó Dónaill. This phrase translates ‘adopt’ in the present context in Parliamentary translations. In s54 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), ‘within six months from the date of its (i.e. a resolution) adoption’ is translated as ‘go ceann sé mhí ón dáta a glacadh le haon Rún den sórt sin’. ‘Aon mhodhnú ar na tograí sin lenar glacadh ag aon cheann de na cruinnithe sin’ translates ‘any modification of those proposals adopted at any of those meetings’ in s19(b) of the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1990. In Article 6 of the Second Schedule to the Arbitration Act, 1980, ‘The decisions ... shall be adopted by a majority of two thirds of the members of the Administrative Council’ is translated as ‘Glacfar leis na cinntí ... le tromlach dhá thrian de chomhaltaí na Comhairle Riaracháin’. In s192(2)(b) of the Companies Act, 1963, ‘to have been made in accordance with any practice adopted ... by the company’ is translated as ‘gur tugadh í de réir aon chleachtais a mbeidh an chuideachta ... tar éis ... glacadh leis’. The heading of the Schedule to the League of Nations (Obligations of Membership) Act, 1935, ‘Proposals Adopted by the Co-ordination Committee’, is translated as ‘Na Tairiscintí le n-ar Ghlac an Coiste Co-ordúcháin’.

Looking at earlier translations, ‘The passing and adoption of this Constitution by the Constituent Assembly ... shall be announced’ is translated as ‘Fógrófar ... gur ghlac an Dáil Bhunaidh ... an Bun-reacht so’ in Article 83 of the 1922 Constitution. ‘The regulations governing Boarding-out are such as may be adopted by the Local Government Department’ is translated as ‘Siad rialacháin a bhainfidh le haltranas ná pé rialacháin a cheapfidh Roinn an Rialtais Áitiúla’ in s7 of the ‘Clare County Scheme’ in the First Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. ‘To adopt a procedure’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as ‘leanúint’ in the Proceedings of the Public Accounts Committee, 1927. In s19(1) of the Local Authorities (Combined Purchasing) Act, 1939, ‘appointing the procedure to be adopted by local authorities in carrying this Act into effect’ is translated as ‘an nós imeachta do cheapadh a leanfaidh údaráis áitiúla agus iad ag cur an Achta so in éifeacht’, this same English sentence being translated as ‘an nós-imeachta do cheapa a leanfaidh údaráis áitiúla agus iad ag cur an Achta so in éifeacht’ in s12(1)(a) of the Local Authorities (Combined Purchasing) Act, 1925.

lánchomhaltas Literally ‘full membership’. ‘Total’ is translated both as ‘lán’ and ‘iomlán’ in Téarmaí Dlí, ‘constructive total loss’ being translated as ‘lánchailiteanas inchiallathé’ and 'total purchase price' being translated as 'praghas iomlán ceannaigh'.

In s58(4) of the Local Government (Dublin) Act, 1930, 'and the number of members voting for such resolution exceeds either half the total membership of the Council, or two-thirds of the members present and voting' is translated as 'agus gur mó an méid ball a vótálfaidh leis an rún san ná leath ballra iomlán na Comhairle, no dhá dtrian na mball a bheidh i láthair agus a vótálfaidh', the same initial English phrase being translated as 'agus go vótálfaidh níos mó ná leath ballra iomlán na Comhairle leis an rún san' in s9(4) of the Waterford City Management Act, 1939. In s17(6)(vi) of the Building Societies Act, 1976, 'any reference in that section to the total membership shall be construed accordingly' is translated as 'déanfar aon tagairt san alt sin don chomhaltas iomlán a fhorléiriú dá réir sin', this same phrase being translated as 'is dá réir sin a fhorléireofar aon tagairt san alt sin don chomhaltas iomlán' in s16(6)(f) of the Building Societies Act, 1989.

Looking at early translations of 'total', 'Uimhir lán-iomlán na bpáipéirí éifeachtacha go léir' translates 'the full total number of all valid papers' in s4 of the Third Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923, with 'líon na vótanna go léir' translating 'the number of votes' in s12(8) thereof. 'For the purpose of calculating the total sum to be debited to any fund ... the total number of members ... shall be calculated' is translated as 'Chun an tsuim iomlán a bheidh le cur i gcoinnibh aon chiste ... d'áireamh, déanfar lán-uimhir na mball ... d'áireamh' in s1(3) of the National Health Insurance Act, 1927. 'Total area' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated both as 'achar iomlán' and 'lán-achar' in early translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health.

Looking at early translations of 'membership', 'and who gives notice ... of his desire to terminate his membership' is translated as 'agus a thabharfaidh fógra ... gur mian leis deire do chur le n-a bhallaíocht' in s10 of the National Health Insurance Act, 1923. 'Ballraíocht an Oireachtais' translates 'membership of the Oireachtais' in the Dáil Order Paper, 1926, p. 400, 'ballra' translating 'membership' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 1925, p. 21. The Margin Title of s1 of the Constitution (Amendment No. 5) Act, 1927, 'Increase of membership of Executive Council', is translated as 'Méadú ar líon ball na hArd-Chomhairle' and in s9(1) of the Fisheries Act, 1925, 'Any elected member of a board of conservators may at anytime ... resign his membership of the board' is translated as 'Féadfidh aon bhall tofa de bhórd chimeádaithe aon uair ... eirghe as bheith ina bhall den bhord'.

rún ón Teach sin Literally 'resolution from that House'. 'Rún' is translated as 'resolution' in Téarmaí Dlí, in the Acts and in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann. 'Resolution of the European Council of 5 December 1978' is translated as 'Rún ó Chomhairle na hEorpa an 5 Nollaig, 1978' on a Dáil Order Paper (date not given in record). In s35 of the First Schedule to the Companies Act, 1963, for example from the Acts, 'any share ... may ... be forfeited by a resolution of the directors to that effect' is translated as 'féadfar aon scair ... a fhorghéilleadh ... le rún chuige sin ó na stiúrthóirí'. The phrase 'de chuid' fulfills the same role as the preposition 'ó' in s54 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), where 'in the case of a Resolution of the Committee' is translated as 'i gcás Rúin de chuid an Choiste'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that the construction 'x dá chuid' is solely a Northern construction connoting 'possession' or 'relationship' rather than 'action' as is involved here.

'Rúin Airgid' translates 'Financial Resolutions' in Article 36 of the 1922 Constitution, and 'rún a rith an Tigh iniú' translates 'Resolution of the House of this day' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 1927, p. 659. 'Upon resolution of the Dáil' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'ach an Dáil do bheartú an rud san le rún' in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann.

tacaíocht See the commentary on Article 28.10. 'Beidh tacaíocht trí cheathrú de na comhaltaí a bheidh i láthair agus a dhéanfaidh vótáil ag teastáil i gcomhair aon chinneadh a ghlacfaidh an Coiste' translates 'Any decision taken by the Committee ... shall require the support of three-quarters of the members present and voting' in s58(6) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), for example. 'And such resolution is supported by not less than two-thirds of the members of the Committee' is translated as 'agus go gcuideoidh dhá thrian ar a laghad de chomhaltaí an Choiste ... leis an rún sin' in s5(2)(c) of the Dublin Cemeteries Committee Act, 1970. 'Má chailleann seisean tacuíocht mhór-áirimh i nDáil Éireann' translates 'should he cease to retain the support of a majority in Dáil Éireann' in Article 53 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Support (of a resolution, etc.)' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'cabhrú' in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, though 'tacaíocht' is also cited there as translating 'support' in the same Standing Orders. 'Ag cuidiú le hiarratas' translated 'supporting an application' in early translations for the Department of Justice. 'Éinní ná beidh an líon is gá i bhfabhar a bpléite' is cited as translating 'any matter which fails to obtain the requisite support' in the 1926 Standing Orders, as it does in s31(4) of the current Standing Orders.

dhá thrian Note that 'dhá dtrian' is the form in the original text, Ó Dónaill including both 'dhá thrian' and 'dhá dtrian', s.v. 'trian', where the sense of 'the major part' is given, along with the literal sense, 'two-thirds'. 'Dhá dtrian' is found in expressions such as 'bhí dhá dtrian meisce air, he was three parts drunk' and 'chait siad dhá dtrian den am ag breallaireacht, they spent the greater part of the time talking nonsense', cited by Ó Dónaill, 'dá dtrian cára (or córa) cumhachta, might makes two-thirds of right' and 'do-ghníonn na gothaidhe dá dtrian na h-oibre, the gestures ("show") are the main factor in every work' being cited by Dinneen. Ó Dónaill cites the adage 'dhá dtrian den damhsa an chosúlacht', literally, 'two-thirds of the dance is the appearance', translated by Ó Dónaill as 'appearances count' s.v. 'cosúlacht'. 'Dhá thrian' is the form found in An Caighdeán Oifigiúil (p. 44).

ach amháin Looking at early Acts, 'save that in the case of a holding subject to a judicial rent, the record filed ... shall be final and conclusive' is translated as 'ach amháin i gcás gabhátais fé chíos cúirte ná beidh dul thar an mbreachthachán a cuireadh i dtaisce' in s22(3) of the Land Act, 1923. 'I gcás connartha agus tort (lasmuich d'aicsein i gcúrsaí pósa agus comhráidh choiriúla)' translates 'in contract and tort (save matrimonial and criminal conversation actions) in s48(ii) of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924. 'An order under this subsection shall not be made save upon request made by the council of the county of Wicklow by resolution' is translated as 'Ní dhéanfar ordú faoin bhfo-alt seo ach amháin ar chomhairle chontae Chill Mhantáin dá iarraidh sin le rún' in s2(6)(b) of the Health Authorities Act, 1960. In s11(4) of the Waterford City Management Act, 1939, 'The Minister shall not make or revoke an order under this section save upon the application of the Council made to the Minister in pursuance of a resolution passed by the Council' is translated as 'Ní dhéanfaidh ná ní cheiliúrfaidh an tAire ordú fén alt so ach ar a iarraidh sin ar an Aire don Chomhairle de bhun rúin do rith an Chomhairle'. See further the commentary on Article 49.2, where 'ach amháin' expresses 'save only'. 'Ach de réir dlí' expresses 'save in accordance with law' in Article 40.5.

- 1 'Charge' is expressed by both 'cúiseamh' and 'cúis' in the Irish text, both terms being found in earlier subsections, the former being the Irish legal term for 'charge'.
- 2 'Investigate' is expressed by 'scrúdaigh' ('examine') in the Irish text.
- 3 'When a charge has been preferred by either House of the Oireachtas', which follows on directly from the previous subsections, is expressed in the Irish text as

- 4 'Shall' is again expressed as 'ní foláir' ('must') in the Irish text.

Commentary

scrúdú 'Scrúdú' expresses 'investigation' in the next two subsections, with 'scrúdaigh' again expressing 'investigate' in the latter of those subsections, and the verbal noun expressing 'investigation' in Article 13.8.2<sup>o</sup>. 'Scrúdaigh' and 'scrúdú' respectively are the Irish legal terms for 'examine' and 'examination', scrúdaím, 'I examine (documents, etc.)' and 'ordú scrúdaithe, examination order' being cited in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Investigate' and 'investigation', on the other hand, are translated there as 'imscrúdaigh' and 'imscrúdú', 'I investigate, imscrúdaím' and 'investigation of title, imscrúdú teidil' being cited.

'Imscrúdaigh' is based on 'scrúdaigh', combined with the prefix 'im-'. Ó Dónaill gives two headwords 'im-', translated as 'about, around' and 'great', the latter being an intensive particle. Ó Dónaill translates 'imscrúdaigh' and 'imscrúdú' respectively as 'investigate' and 'investigation', translating 'scrúdaigh' and 'scrúdú' respectively as 'examine' and 'examination', the following examples being cited s.v. 'scrúdaigh': 'Abairt, teoiric, a scrúdú, to examine a statement, a theory. Do choinsias a scrúdú, to examine one's conscience. Aghaidh a scrúdú, to scrutinize a face. Spéir na hoíche a scrúdú, to study the sky at night'. Dinneen's entry s.v. 'scrúduighim, -ughadh' is as follows: 'I search, examine, pry into, scrutinise, investigate; ponder, meditate', translating 'scrúduightheoir' as 'a searcher, an examiner, an investigator'. Dinneen has no headword 'i(o)imscrúdaigh' nor is this headword found in DIL. The Old Irish verb 'scrútaid' comes from Latin 'scrutor' and is translated in DIL as (a) 'examines, scrutinizes, investigates, searches' and (b) 'excogitates, devises, meditates, contemplates', citing 'noscrutainse ... dús in retarscar cairde ndae 7 aremcaissiu' ('I used to consider ... whether the covenant of God and His Providence had departed') from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Psalms. The verbal noun 'scrútaid' is translated there as (a) 'act of examining, investigating, meditating on' ('scrúdadh croide' being cited from the Flight of the Earls, in the published edition of which it is translated as 'self-examination') and (b) 'act of excogitating, pondering, contemplating'.

'Imscrúdaigh' and 'imscrúdú' respectively translate 'investigate' and 'investigation' in the modern Acts, following Téarmaí Dlí. In s7(1) of the Companies Act, 1990, 'The court may appoint one or more competent inspectors to investigate the affairs of a company in order to enquire into matters specified by the court' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an chúirt cigire inniúil amháin nó níos mó a cheapadh chun cúrsaí cuideachta a imscrúdú d'fhonn fiosrú a dhéanamh i dtaobh nithe a bheidh sonraithe ag an gcúirt'. 'Investigations' in the Title of that section is translated as 'Imscrúduithe'. In s227 of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, 'Every such officer shall investigate into and report to the Minister upon any claim for ... a children's allowance' is translated as 'Déanfaidh gach oifigeach den sórt sin imscrúdú agus tabharfaidh sé tuarascáil don Aire i dtaobh aon éilimh ar liúntas leanaí', 'chun críche an imscrúdaithe agus na tuarascála sin' translating 'for the purpose of such investigation and report'. 'Provided also that the Ombudsman may investigate the action notwithstanding that the investigation would contravene paragraph (f)' is translated as 'Ar choinníoll freisin go bhféadfadh an tOmbudsman an gníomh a imscrúdú d'ainneoin go ndéanfadh an t-imscrúdú sárú ar mhír (f)' in s5(1) of the Ombudsman Act, 1980, for example.

Looking at early Acts, 'coiste meastóirí, a ceapfar fén Acht so agus a bheidh cáilithe chun éilithe ar chúiteamh fén Acht so i marbha na n-ainmhithe sin do scrúdú' translates 'a committee of assessors appointed under this Act and qualified to investigate claims for compensation under this Act' in s14(1) of the Slaughtered Animals (Compensation) Act, 1928. 'When the charge is being investigated' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'le linn scrúdú na cúise do luadh' (with 'R.D./40' given as reference). In s4 of the 'Kerry County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'That the Committee of Management ... immediately undertake an investigation into the question of outdoor relief as at present dispensed in each Union' is translated as 'An Coiste Bainistí ... do dhéanamh scrúduithe láithreach ar an gcuma ina ndintear fóirithin allamuich i ngach Aontas fé leith fé láthair'. The heading of s84 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'Investigation of Charges', on the other hand, is translated as 'Iniúcha Cúiseanna' and subsection 1 reads as follows:

A charge against an officer shall in the first instance be investigated by his Commanding Officer. Is é a Oifigeach Ceannais a iniúchfaidh cúis i gcoinnibh oifigigh sa chéad dul síos.

'Lorgaireacht' translates 'investigation' in s13(2)(e) of the Interpretation Act, 1923, where 'affect any investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy in respect of any such right' is translated as 'baint le haon lorgaireacht, imeacht dlí, ná leigheas i dtaobh aon chirt'. We find 'rannsócháin' in s6(2) of the Dublin Reconstruction (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1924, where 'the Judge may direct such inquiries and investigations as he thinks proper for the purpose of ascertaining the title to the ownership of the site and the values of the several estates and interests therein' is translated as 'féadfaidh an Breitheamh a ordú go ndéanfar pé fiosrúcháin agus rannsócháin is ceart, dar leis, chun an teideal chun únaereacht an ionaid agus luacha na n-estát agus na leasanna iomdha ann do dhéanamh amach'.

'Fiosrúcháin' is found in s3(3)(a) of the Arterial Drainage Act, 1925, where 'either approving of the proposals contained in the petition or declaring that such proposals require further investigation' is translated as 'á rá go bhfuilid sásta leis na molta atá san achuinge no á fhaisnéis nách mór tuille fiosrúcháin do dhéanamh ionta' – 'na molta san do scrúdú' translates 'to examine such proposals' in the following paragraph. Finally, 'Criminal Investigation Department' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'Roinn Taighde um Chuirpigh'.

a chur The verb 'cuir' with a verbal noun has the sense of 'set, cause, to do something', Ó Dónaill citing 'duine a chur a luí, to put someone to bed', 'rud a chur á dhéanamh, to arrange to get something done' and 'rud a chur ag gabháil, ag oibriú, to set something going, working'. De Bhaldraithe translates 'to cause someone to do something' as 'cur faoi deara do dhuine, tabhairt ar dhuine, rud a dhéanamh' and 'to cause something to be done' as 'rud a chur á dhéanamh; cur faoi deara rud a dhéanamh'. In the Acts also 'to cause something to be done' is generally translated as 'cur faoi deara rud a dhéanamh' – see, for example, s11(7) of the National Institute for Higher Education, Limerick, Act, 1980, where 'The Minister shall cause every scheme submitted and approved of under this section to be laid before each House of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'Cuirfidh an tAire faoi deara go ndéanfar gach scéim a chuirfear faoi bhráid an Aire agus a cheadófar faoin alt seo a leagan faoi bhráid gach Tí den Oireachtas'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú questions whether this phrase can be used without indirect object, i.e. 'cuir faoi deara do dhuine', etc.

'Féadfaidh Aire Feidhmiúcháin gabháil agus coinneáil do chur ar dhaoine áirithe' translates 'Executive Minister may cause arrest and detention of certain persons' in the Margin Title of s1 of the Public Safety (Powers of Arrest and Detention) Temporary Act, 1924, with the section itself commencing as follows: 'It shall be lawful for an Executive Minister to cause the arrest ... of any person', 'Beidh sé dleathach d'Aire Feidhmiúcháin a chur fé ndéar go ngabhtar ... éinne'. 'To cause a thing to be done' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'd'fhéachaint chuige go ...' in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann. See further the commentary on Articles 25.5.1° and 40.6.1°ii.

cúiseamh This headword is translated as 'accusation, charge' in Téarmaí Dlí; 'cúiseamh a dhéanamh (ar)' is translated as 'to prefer a charge (against)' in Ó Dónaill – see the commentary on Article 12.10.2°. 'The Justice shall cause the charge to be reduced into writing and read to the person charged' is translated as 'cuirfidh an Breitheamh faoi deara an cúiseamh a chur i scríbhinn agus a léamh don duine a cúisíodh' in s10 of the Defamation Act, 1961, for example.

cúis This headword is translated as 'cause' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'case, charge' given as secondary senses, in Ó Dónaill – see the commentary on Article 12.10.3°.

Má 'When' is usually translated as 'nuair a ...' but is often translated as 'i gcás ...' in the Acts. See the commentary on Article 12.4.5° regarding 'nuair'.

ní foláir Literally 'must', but also translates 'shall' in many Articles – see the commentary on Article 11.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The President will have the right to be present and to have advocates/pleaders with him at that examination.

ENGLISH TEXT

The President shall have the right to appear and to be represented at the investigation of the charge.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'To be represented' is expressed as 'lucht tagartha a bheith aige' ('to have advocates/pleaders with him'), literally 'to have reference people', in the Irish text.
- 2 'To appear' is expressed as 'bheith i láthair' ('to be present') in the Irish text.
- 3 'At the investigation of the charge' is expressed as 'ar an scrúdú sin' ('at that examination') in the Irish text.

lucht tagartha 'Tagartha' is the genitive singular of 'tagairt'. Dinneen states that 'tagairt' is a 'doublet with tagra', which headword he translates as 'act of pleading, disputation, argument, alluding to; argument, discussion'. Ó Dónaill, following the abbreviation for 'literary use; literature', translates 'tagra' as '(act of) pleading; plea; disputation, argument, lawsuit', giving 'tagairt' as the standard form of the secondary sense of 'tagra'. 'Tagairt' and 'tagra' come from 'tacara', verbal noun of 'do-accair', examples of which are cited in DIL from early Irish law-tracts in the technical legal sense of 'pleading, law-suit'. Examples are also given in DIL in the more general sense of 'a pleading for, on behalf of'.

'Tagairt' is translated as 'reference' in Téarmaí Dlí and as 'reference, allusion' in Ó Dónaill. The secondary sense of 'lucht' in Ó Dónaill is '(class, category, of) people', 'lucht freastail, imeartha, attendants, players' being cited for example – see further the commentary on Article 45.4.2<sup>o</sup> where 'lucht oibre' expresses 'workers' and note also that 'lucht achainí' expresses 'petitioners' in Article 27.2. As well as the headword 'tagairt', translated as 'act of pleading, debating, telling, speaking, protecting, declaiming; referring or alluding to; a gloss, reference or allusion', Dinneen gives 'tagartha' itself as a headword, which he translates as 'discussed, mentioned; witty, responsive', and cites 'fear tagartha go maith is eadh é, he is a quick fellow at repartee'. 'Tagarthach' is also given as a headword, being translated as 'witty, responsive, quick at repartee', as well as 'pert, saucy, impertinent, argumentative'. As a noun, however, 'tagarthach' is translated by Dinneen as 'a pleader or arguer', the headword 'tagarthóir' being translated as 'a pleader, a debater, an arguer'.

'I represent the plaintiff' is translated as 'feidhmím ar son an ghearánaí' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Beidh an Bord ... i dteideal go bhfeidhmeofaí ar a son agus go bhfaighidís éisteacht ar aon achomharc faoin bhfo-alt seo' translates 'The Board ... shall be entitled to be represented and heard on any appeal under this subsection' in s64(4)(c) of the Pensions Act, 1990. 'Féadfaidh ionadaí don Aire a bheith i láthair ag an éisteacht' translates 'the Minister may be represented at the hearing' in s13(2) of the Housing (Private Rented Dwellings) (Amendment) Act, 1983. In s7(2)(d) of the Local Elections (Petitions and Disqualifications) Act, 1974, 'the Attorney General may at any stage be represented at and take part in the trial as a party' is translated as 'féadfaidh an tArd-Aighne ionadaí uaidh a bheith ag an triail agus bheith páirteach inti mar pháirtí'. In s20(3) of the Credit Union Act, 1966, 'A group of persons which is a member of a credit union may be represented at the annual general meeting of the credit union by a member of that group' is translated as 'Maidir le grúpa daoine is comhalta de chomhair creidmheasa, féadfaidh comhalta den ghrúpa sin ionadú dó ag cruinniú ginearálta bliantúil an chomhair chreidmheasa'. In s20(18)(b) of the Road Traffic Act, 1961, 'if he does not exercise his right to be present at the examination, he shall have the right to be represented at it by another person selected by him' is translated as 'mura bhfeidhmeoidh sé a cheart chun bheith i láthair ag an scrúdú, beidh de cheart aige duine eile dá rogha féin a bheith mar ionadaí uaidh ag an scrúdú'. Finally, 'who shall be entitled to appear and be represented at the hearing' is translated as 'ag a mbeidh teideal láithriú agus go bhfeidhmeofaí ar a shon' in s21(1)(e) of the Rent Restrictions Act, 1960.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that the first sense of 'represent' in the New Oxford Dictionary of English is 'be entitled or appointed to act or speak for (someone), especially in an official capacity'. This is the sense involved in the present context. Máirtín Ó Murchú suggests, therefore, that 'agus ionadaithe a bheith aige nó aici' would not be correct, in particular as it would mean that the President 'himself' would not be present, which need not necessarily be the case. The same problem arises to some extent with 'feidhmigh' in the translation below, i.e. it gives to understand that the President 'himself' cannot 'act' or 'function', which sense is not involved here. Professor Ó Murchú therefore feels that 'lucht tagartha' very closely represents 'to be represented', but that Modern Irish has lost that particular sense of 'tagairt'. He therefore recommends substituting the phrase 'lucht abhcóidíochta' for 'lucht tagartha'.

Looking at the early Acts, 'a person who represents a shipping company' is translated as 'duine a ionaduinn cuideachta loingseoireachta' in s4(a) of the Schedule to the Pilotage Order, Confirmation Act, 1924. 'And to take part and vote in each election thereof of a pilot member to represent such group', in s2(3) of the Schedule to the Pilotage Order Confirmation Act, 1927, is translated as 'agus bheith páirteach agus vótáil i ngach toghachán ag an gcruinniú san chun ball píolóide do thogha chun an grúpa san d'ionadú'. 'Securing to every person tried by a special court the right to be represented at such trial by solicitor and counsel' is translated as 'ag cur in áirithe do gach éinne a trialfar ag cúirt speisialta an chirt chun atúrnae agus abhcóide do beith mar iondaithe aige ag an triail sin' in s27(1)(b) of the Public Safety Act, 1927. Finally, s34(3) of the Dentists Act, 1928, reads as follows:

The person whose conduct is the subject of an inquiry held under this section shall be entitled to be heard and adduce evidence and, if he so desires, to be represented by solicitor and counsel at such inquiry.

bheith i láthair Literally 'to be present'. See the commentary on Article 28.8, where this phrase expresses 'attend'. 'No person shall disclose information available to him through being present at an investigation held by the Examiner' is translated as 'Ní dhéanfaidh duine ar bith eolas a nochtadh a bheidh ar fáil aige trína bheith i láthair ag imscrúdú a dhéanfaidh an Scrúdaitheoir' in s16 of the Mergers, Take-overs and Monopolies (Control) Act, 1978. 'I appear (in Court)' is translated as 'láithrim' in Téarmaí Díl. 'The person shall be entitled to appear at the inquiry personally or by counsel or solicitor' is translated as 'beidh an duine i dteideal láithriú ag an bhfiosrúchán go pearsanta nó trí abhcóide nó atúrnae' in s29(3)(e) of the Horse Industry Act, 1970, for example. In s10(2) of the Malicious Injuries Act, 1981, 'Any ratepayer ... shall be entitled to appear at the hearing of an application for compensation' is translated as 'Beidh aon rátiócóir ... i dteideal láithriú tráth a bheidh iarratas ar chúiteamh ... á éisteacht'. 'And each such board shall ... be entitled to appear in Court and be heard on the hearing of the application' is translated as 'agus beidh teideal ag gach bord den sórt sin ... láithriú sa Chúirt agus éisteacht a fháil ar an iarratas a bheidh á éisteacht' in s54(1) of the Fourth Schedule to the Fisheries Act, 1980, following s14(1) of the Fisheries (Amendment) Act, 1962. Finally, 'the Minister may ... order that the manager for the local authority may appear separately at the inquiry' is translated as 'féadfaidh an tAire ... a ordú go bhféadfaidh an bainisteoir don údarás áitiúil láithriú ar leithligh ag an bhfiosrúchán' in s90(1) of the Local Government Act, 1946.

Looking at earlier Acts, 'beidh an duine sin i dteideal teacht i láthair ag an bhfiosrúchán san i bpearsain no tré abhcóide' translates 'such person shall be entitled to appear at such inquiry personally or by counsel' in s30(3)(c)(ii) of the Pigs and Bacon Act, 1935. In s6(9) of the Money-lenders Act, 1933, 'A superintendent of the Garda Síochána ... shall have the right to appear in court' is translated as 'Beidh sé de cheart ag ceannphort den Ghárda Síochána teacht os cóir na cúirte'. 'The following persons shall be entitled to appear and be heard (in person or by solicitor or counsel) ... at the inquiry', in s9(2) of the Arterial Drainage Act, 1925, is translated as 'Beidh teideal ag na daoine seo a leanas chun teacht i láthair agus éisteacht d'fháil (i bpearsain no tré atúrnae no tré abhcóide) ... ag an bhfiosrúchán'. 'Certificate of appearance' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'deimhniú ar fhógra teacht i láthair', and 'to enter an appearance' as 'fógra teacht-i-láthair d'iontráil', in the Office of Private Bills.

TÉACS GAELGE

Más é toradh an scrúdaithe sin go rithfear rún, le tacaíocht dhá thrian ar a laghad de lánchomhaltas an Tí den Oireachtas a scrúdaigh an chúis nó a chuir an chúis á scrúdú, á dhearbhu gur suíodh an chúis a tugadh in aghaidh an Uachtaráin agus, an mí-iompar ba shiocair don chúiseamh, gur mí-iompar é a bhfuil an tUachtarán neamhoiriúnach dá dheasca chun fanacht i seilbh oifige, is é is feidhm don rún sin an tUachtarán a chur as oifig.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If the result of that examination is that a resolution is passed, with the support of at least two-thirds of the full membership of the House of the Oireachtas that examined the case or had the case examined, declaring that the case that was brought against the President was established and, the misconduct/misbehaviour which caused the charge, that it is misbehaviour because of which the President is unsuitable to remain in (possession of) office, the function of that resolution is to put the President out of office.

ENGLISH TEXT

If, as a result of the investigation, a resolution be passed supported by not less than two-thirds of the total membership of the House of the Oireachtas by which the charge was investigated, or caused to be investigated, declaring that the charge preferred against the President has been sustained and that the misbehaviour, the subject of the charge, was such as to render him unfit to continue in office, such resolution shall operate to remove the President from his office.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Neamhoiriúnach', the term expressing 'unfit' (to continue in office) in the Irish text, can be interpreted as 'unsuitable', though 'unfit' is sometimes so translated in the Acts.
- 2 'Such resolution shall operate to remove the President from office' is expressed as 'is é is feidhm don rún sin an tUachtarán a chur as oifig' ('the function of that resolution is to remove the President from office') in the Irish text.
- 3 'The charge ... has been sustained' is expressed as 'suíodh an chúis' ('the case has been established') in the Irish text.
- 4 'If, as a result of the investigation' is expressed as

- 'Más é toradh an scrúdaithe' ('If the result of the examination is') in the Irish text.
- 5 'The subject of the charge' is expressed as 'ba shiocair don chúiseamh' ('which caused the charge') in the Irish text.
- 6 'Caused to be investigated' is expressed as 'a chuir an chúis á scrúdú' ('had the case investigated') in the Irish text.
- 7 As in the previous subsections, 'investigate' and 'investigation' are in the Irish text respectively expressed by 'scrúdaigh' ('examine') and 'scrúdú' ('examination') and 'charge' is expressed both by 'cúiseamh', the Irish legal term for 'charge', and 'cúis', the Irish legal term for 'cause'.

Commentary

neamhoiriúnach This adjective is translated as 'unsuitable' in Ó Dónaill and 'unsuitable, inappropriate, inadequate, inconvenient' in Dinneen (s.v. 'neamh-oireamhach', the form in the original text). 'A d'fhéadfadh é a fhágáil neamhoiriúnach chun a áitithe mar áras teaghlaigh' translates 'may render it unsuitable for habitation as a family home' in s5(1) of the Family Home Protection Act, 1976, for example, 'the Community's existing arrangements for pigmeat will necessarily be inadequate or unsuited for the new situation' being translated as 'gur gá go mbeadh rialacha láithreacha an Chomhphobail i dtaobh muiceola neamhdhóthanach nó neamhoiriúnach don chor nua' in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 1488). 'Mí-oiriúnach' is also translated as 'unsuitable, unsuited' in Ó Dónaill and in s9(1)(c) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1992, 'go bhfuil an soitheach tar éis éirí mí-oiriúnach chun paisinéirí a iompar' translates 'the vessel has become unsuitable for the carriage of passengers'.

Both 'mí-oiriúnach' and 'neamhoiriúnach' also translate 'unfit' in the Acts. 'Or is found to be physically or mentally unfit for such employment as a result thereof' is translated as 'nó má fhaightear amach dá thoradh sin go bhfuil sé mí-oiriúnach ó thaobh coirp nó aigne don fhostaíocht sin' in s112 of the Mines and Quarries Act, 1965, for example, while 'it may declare either spouse to be unfit to have custody of any dependent child of the family' is translated as 'féadfaidh sí a dhearbhu gur céile neamhoiriúnach ceachtar céile chun aon leanbh cleithiúnach den teaghlach a bheith ina choimeád' in s41(1) of the Judicial Separation and Family Law Reform Act, 1989.

We also find negatives of 'inniúil' and 'feidhmiúil' translating 'unfit' in the Acts. In s26(1) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1992, 'the vessel is unfit to proceed on any voyage' is translated as 'go bhfuil an soitheach ... neamhinniúil chun dul ar aon turas'. In s56(3)(b) of the Courts (Supplemental Provisions) Act, 1961, 'he satisfies the Committee that he is not suffering from any disability which would render him unfit to continue to discharge efficiently the duties of his office' is translated as '(ina) gruthóidh sé chun sástachta an Choiste nach bhfuil sé faoi aon mhíchumas a thabharfadh go mbeadh sé neamhinniúil chun leanúint de dhualgais a oifige a chomhlíonadh go héifeachtúil', the same English sentence being translated as 'é do chruthú chun sástachta an Choiste nach bhfuil sé faoi aon mhíchumas a bhéarfadh go mbeadh sé neamhoiriúnach chun leanúint de dhualgais a oifige a chomhlíonadh go héifeachtúil' in s2(2)(b) of the Courts of Justice (District Court) Act, 1949. In s47(1) of the Courts of Justice Act, 1936, 'and that such justice is not suffering from any physical or mental ill-health or disability which would render him unfit to continue to discharge efficiently the duties of his office' is translated as 'agus ná fuil aon easláinte ná éalang chuirp ná aigne air do bhéarfadh ná beadh sé oiriúnach ar leanúint de dhualgais a oifige a chlíonadh go héifeachtúil'. In s9(1) of the Merchant Shipping (Certification of Seaman) Act, 1979, 'Where it appears to the Minister that the holder of a certificate ... is unfit to discharge his duties, whether because of incompetence or for any other reason' is translated as 'Más dealraitheach don Aire maidir le sealbhóir ar dheimhniú ... nach bhfuil sé in ann, mar gheall ar neamhinniúlacht nó ar aon chúis eile, a dhualgais a chomhlíonadh'.

For a person charged under section 50 of the Principal Act with being unfit to drive a mechanically propelled vehicle' is translated as 'do dhuine a gcuirfear de chúiseamh faoi alt 50 den Phríomh-Acht ina leith é a bheith neamhfheidhmiúil chun feithicil inneallghluaiste a thiomáint' in s34 of the Road Traffic Act, 1968. In s45(5)(b) of Part V of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978, which Part deals with 'Fitness to Practise' ('Feidhmiúlacht chun Cleachtadh') and where reference is made to 'the Fitness to Practise Committee' ('an Coiste um Fheidhmiúlacht chun Cleachtadh'), 'unfit to engage in the practice of medicine because of physical or mental disability' is translated as 'neamhfheidhmiúil, mar gheall ar mhíchumas coirp nó meabhrach, míochaine a chleachtadh'. 'Neamhfheidhmiúil' is not given as a headword in Ó Dónaill or in Dinneen. Ó Dónaill translates 'neamh-infheidhme' as 'not fit for service', De Bhaldraithe translating 'unfit (for military position)' as 'neamhinfheidhme'. Note that 'The offence of injuring himself ... with the intention of rendering himself ... unfit for service' is translated as 'Díobháil do dhéanamh do féin ... le hintinn é féin ... do dhéanamh neamh-infheadhma' in s48(2) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923.

The negative of 'oiriúnach' is involved in the translation of 'unfit' in early official translations. 'That part only of any picture ... is unfit for exhibition in public' is translated as 'ná fuil ach cuid den phictiúir sin gan bheith oiriúnach le taisbeáint go puiblí' in s7(4) of the Censorship of Films Act, 1923. 'Unfit for the food of man' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'nách bhfuil oiriúnach mar bhiadh don duine' and 'atá mí-oiriúnach mar bhiadh don duine' in translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health, and 'unfit (= unhealthy, tired, etc.)' is cited there as being translated as 'neamh-oiriúnach' in early translations for the Department of Lands and Agriculture. Finally, 'that such malady or injury was of such a nature as to render such person unfit to attend a course of instruction' is translated as 'go raibh an aicid no an lot san de shaghas d'fhág an duine sin neamh-iomchuibhe chun cursa theagaisc do fhreastal' in s92(1) of the Vocational Education Act, 1930, and 'a vessel laid up as unfit for sea service' is translated as 'áthach atá leagtha suas mar gheall ar í a bheith neamhchumasach chun seirbhís farraige' in s57(7)(a) of the Harbours Act, 1946.

ba shiocair do(n) The phrase 'is siocair do' expresses 'the subject of' also in Articles 25.2.2°, 27.5.1°, 27.5.2° and 27.6. 'Any Bill the subject of a reference to the Supreme Court under this Article' is expressed as 'Bille ar bith a chuirtear faoi bhreith na Cúirte Uachtaraí faoin Airteagal seo' in Article 26.1.3°, 'I gcás aon Bhille a chuirtear faoi bhreith na Cúirte Uachtaraí faoin Airteagal seo' expressing 'In every case ... a Bill the subject of a reference to the Supreme Court under this Article' in Article 26.3.1°.

'Siocair' is translated as 'immediate cause, occasion, pretext, excuse' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'siocair pheaca, occasion of sin', along with 'an rud ba shiocair leis an achrann, what gave rise to the quarrel' and 'Cad é is siocair leis? What's the cause of it?' Dinneen translates 'siocair' as 'motive, cause, occasion, pretext', referring the reader to 'tucaid', translated as 'cause, reason' in DIL, an example of which is cited there followed by the preposition 'fri' (Modern Irish 'le'). No early examples are given in DIL s.v. 'siocair'. See further the commentary on Article 25.2.2°.

Turning to the Acts, 'the subject of' is usually translated therein as 'is ábhar do' – see, for example, s8(1) of the Larceny Act, 1990, where 'If it is proved that the person handled the property the subject of the charge' is translated as 'Más rud é ... go gcruthófar go ndearna an duine an mhaoin is ábhar don chúiseamh a láimhseáil'. In s9(b) of the Finance Act, 1983, 'if the person whose chargeability to tax is the subject of the case stated so desires' is translated as 'más mar sin a theastóidh ón duine arb é a inmhuirireacht i leith cánach is ábhar don chás'. 'Unless the house the subject of the grant complies with such regulations' is translated as 'mura gcomhlíonfaidh an teach is ábhar don deontas cibé coinníollacha' in s4(3) of the Housing (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1979. 'Subject-matter (i.e. of contract)' is translated as 'ábhar' in Téarmaí Dlí.

Looking at earlier Acts, in s1 of the Double Taxation (Relief) Act, 1923, 'any tax is for the time being payable in respect of a subject of charge in respect of which a corresponding tax is payable in Saorstát Éireann' is translated as 'go mbeidh aon cháin iníochta de thuras na huairé i dtaobh fuilingidhe mhuirir go mbeidh cáin cho-réire iníochta 'na thaobh i Saorstát Éireann'. 'When ... the event which is the subject of the bet is a horse race' is translated as 'más rás capall an ní is abhar don gheall' in s24(1) of the Finance Act, 1926. 'The person whose conduct is the subject of an inquiry held under this section' is translated as 'An té go mbeidh a iompar fé scrúdú ag fiosrúchán a comórfar fén alt so' in s30(3) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1927.

feidhm This headword is translated as 'function; use, service; work, office, duty' in Ó Dónaill, and as 'effort, act; service, use, office, function, duty; work, a task; employment; action; an action, a conflict; emergency; affluence, influence, power; need' in Dinneen, who cites 'caidé is feidhm dó? what is its use (or function)?' and 'cread é is feidhm do'n uisce choisreagtha? what is the virtue of holy water?' The primary sense of 'feidm', according to DIL, seems to be 'load, stress, strain', passing into the senses of 'utmost effort, effort, exertion; burden, service, function'. Under 'feidm' (b), translated as 'work, service, duty, function', DIL cites, 'ní feidm flatha nã firlaich duitsi aisc feicheamnis do thabhairt ...' ('it is not the act of a prince in thee ...') from O'Curry's edition of Cath Maige Léana, and under (d), translated as 'use; efficacy', is cited 'ní feidhm do an Ghaoidheilg do léaghadh ... gan a bfiós do bheith aige do mheabhair' ('without having them by heart it is a vain effort for him to attempt [he will not be able for] the reading of Irish') from a miscellaneous collection of Irish literature. See the commentary on Article 45 regarding 'feidhmigh' (there expressing 'apply'), on Article 19 (where 'dream feidhme' expresses 'functional group'), on Articles 17.1.2° and 29.4.3° (where 'feidhm dlí' respectively expresses 'effect' and 'force of law'), and on Article 15.3.1° (where 'feidhmeannas' expresses 'functional').

'I operate' is translated as 'oibrim' in Téarmaí Dlí – see the commentary on Article 3. 'Nothing in this section shall operate to relieve from ... the additional excise duty' is translated as 'Ní oibreoidh aon ní san alt seo chun faoiseamh a thabhairt ón dleacht máil bhreise' in s28(4) of the Finance Act, 1970, for example. In s23(4) of the Nurses Act, 1950, 'an order under subsection (2) ... shall not operate to remove a member of the Committee from his office' is translated as 'ní oibreoidh ordú faoi fho-alt (2) ... chun comhalta den Choiste a chur as a oifig' and in s30(1) of the Central Bank Act, 1942, 'No disqualification of the Governor ... shall operate to remove him from his office until a resolution has been passed by the Board declaring him to be disqualified' is translated as 'Dí-cháiliú ar bith a bhainfidh don Ghobharnóir ... ní oibreoidh chun é chur as oifig go dtí go rithfidh an Bord rún á dhearbhu é bheith dí-cháilithe'. Finally, in s14 of the Illegitimate Children (Affiliation Orders) Act, 1930, 'Nothing in this Act shall operate to remove or diminish the liability of the mother of an illegitimate child to maintain such child' is translated as 'Ní oibreoidh éinní san Acht so chun freagarthacht mháthar leibh tabhartha i gcothú an leinbh sin do chur ar cheal ná do laigheadú'.

Looking at the earlier Acts, 'An occasional licence shall operate to exempt the person to whom the licence is granted ... from the provisions of this Act' is translated as 'Oibreoidh ceadúnas ócáideach chun an té dá ndeantar é do shaora ... o sna forálacha den Acht so' in s6(4) of the Intoxicating Liquor Act, 1927, and 'such floating charge shall not operate to prevent or restrict the alienation ... by the Board of ... any of such property' is translated as 'ní oibreoidh an muirear so-ghluaiste sin chun cosc no srian do chur leis an mBord d'aistriú aon choda den mhaoin sin uatha' in s16(1)(b) of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1927.

suíodh an chúis 'Suim cúis' is translated as 'I show cause' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Go suítear sin go sásamh na Cúirte Uachtaraí' expresses 'being established to the satisfaction of the Supreme Court' in Article 12.3.1° – see the commentary on that Article for other citations of 'suigh' in the sense of 'establish'. Note that 'proceeding shall not be sustained' is translated as 'ní bheidh imeachta ionsuite' in the Courts of Justice Act, 1936, according to Foclóir Oifigiúil. De Bhaldraithe translates 'to sustain an objection' (of court) as 'agóid a cheadú'.

In s38(5) of the Army Pensions Act, 1957, 'within six months after the date when evidence to sustain the prosecution came to the notice of the Minister' is translated as 'laistigh de shé mhí tar éis an dáta a chuir an tAire eolas ar fhianaise a bhéarfadh bonn don chúiseamh', the same text being translated as 'laistigh de shé mhí tar éis an dáta ar a bhfuighidh an tAire fianaise chun an chúisimh do shuidheamh' in s14(4) of the Connaught Rangers (Pensions) Act, 1936, and as 'laistigh de shé mhí tar éis an dáta ar ar tharla fianaise chun neartuithe leis an gcúiseamh do theacht fé bhráid an Aire' in s50 of the Army Pensions Act, 1937. 'Agus go bhfuil ciontú maith bailí ann mar bhonn leis an ordú nó leis an treoir' translates 'and that there is a good and valid conviction to sustain the order or direction' in s40(2) of the Defence Act, 1954, the same text (without 'that') being translated as 'agus má tá daora daingean dleathach ann mar thaca leis an ordú no an treoir' in s202(2) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. 'Sustain prosecutions against' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated simply as 'do chúiseamh' in the Proceedings of the Public Accounts Committee, 1928.

Mas é toradh The phrase 'de thoradh' translates 'as a result' in the Acts. In s79(3) of the Mines and Quarries Act, 1965, for example, 'if, as a result of the examination, it appears that any report was inadequate' is translated as 'más léir, de thoradh an scrúdaithe, go raibh aon tuarascáil neamhdhóthanach'. 'Which has not issued any of its shares as a result of a public invitation to subscribe for shares' is translated as 'nár eisigh aon scaireanna dá cuid de thoradh cuireadh don phobal suibscríobh le haghaidh scaireanna' in s35(4)(a)(ii) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, and in s5(4) of the Army Pensions Act, 1973, 'A pension granted to any person as a result of a re-assessment under this section' is translated as 'Pinsean a dheonófar do dhuine ar bith de thoradh athmheasta faoin alt seo'. We find 'de dhroim', 'de chionn', 'de bhithin', 'trí', 'ar lorg', 'mar gheall ar' and 'mar thoradh ar' translating 'as a result of' in translations of European legislation, 'de bharr' and 'de dheasca' also capable of translating this phrase.

'If, as a result of the relevant loss of faculty, the beneficiary is incapable of work' is translated as 'más rud é, mar gheall ar an gcailleadh cumais iomchuí, go bhfuil an tairbhí éagumasach chun oibre' in s45(1) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, following s12(1) of the Social Welfare (Occupational Injuries) Act, 1966. 'As a result of' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'de dheascaibh' in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, 'result of inquiry' being cited therein as having been translated as 'tora an fhiosruithe' in translations for 'Oifig an Phuist'.

an mí-iompar ... gur mí-iompar é This phrase expresses 'and that misbehaviour ... was such'. See s20(2)(i) of the Judicial Separation and Family Law Reform Act, 1989, regarding 'such' in this context, where 'if that conduct is such that ... it would ... be repugnant to justice to disregard it' is translated as 'más iompar de chineál é nach mbeadh sé ... ag teacht le ceartas dá ndéanfaí neamhshuim de'. In s7(5)(b) of the Labour Services Act, 1987, 'any alteration in the conditions in regard to tenure of office of such member shall not be such as to render those conditions less favourable to him' is translated as 'aon athrú ar na coinníollacha maidir le seilbh oifige aon chomhalta den sórt sin ní athrú den chineál sin é a fhágfaidh gur lú fabhar dó na coinníollacha sin'. 'That the competence ... and probity of the manager and trustee are such as to render them suitable to act as manager and trustee' is translated as 'go bhfuil inniúlacht ... agus ionracas an iontaobhaí de chineál a thabharfadh go mbeidís oiriúnach chun gníomhú mar bhainisteoir agus mar iontaobhaí' in s3(1)(a) of the Unit Trusts Act, 1972. In Part IV of the Third Schedule to the Insurance Act, 1936, 'Where the terms or conditions ... are such as to render the method ... inapplicable' is translated as 'Más rud é, mar gheall ar na téarmaí ..., ná fuil an modh ... infheidhmíthe'. The arrangements referred to in section 3 or 4 of this Act shall be such as to provide for' is translated as 'na comhshocraíochtaí dá dtagraítear in alt 3 nó 4 den Acht seo is comhshocraíochtaí den chineál sin iad a fhorálfaidh' in s6(2) of the Worker Participation (State Enterprises) Act, 1988, 'The accounting records of a society shall be such as to ... record', in s76(2) of the Building Societies Act, 1989, being translated as 'Na taifid chuntasaíochta a choimeádfaidh cumann, is de chineál iad'.

In s22(5) of the Electoral Act, 1963, 'A polling place appointed by a scheme under this section shall be an area ... but shall be such as to give the electors allocated to it reasonable facilities for voting' is translated as 'Aon áit vótaíochta a cheapfar le scéim faoin alt seo, is limistéar a bheidh ann ... ach beidh sé in áit a thabharfaidh saoráidí réasúnacha chun vótáil do na toghthóirí a dháilfear dó'. In s1(2)(b)(i) of the Finance (Excise Duties) (Vehicles) Act, 1952, 'a rate of duty so prescribed shall be such as to bear to the full annual duty no less than the period of the licence bears to the year' is translated as 'aon ráta dleachta a hordófar amhlaidh, beidh idir é agus an lán-dleacht bhliantúil coibhneas nach lú ná na coibhneas idir tréimhse an cheadúnais agus bliain'. 'Unless he proves that the remuneration received in respect of the employment was such as to provide a substantial contribution towards his means of livelihood' is translated as 'mura gcruthaí sé gur leor an luach saothair a fuair sé i leith na fostaíochta sin chun cion substainteach dá chostas maireachtála a íoc' in s14(1)(b) of the National Health Insurance Act, 1947. Finally, in s4 of the First Schedule to the Seanad Electoral (University Members) Act, 1937, 'The prescribed form of claim ... shall be such as to enable' is translated as 'An fhuirm orduithe éilimh ... beidh sí de shaghas a chuirfidh ar chumas'.

dá dheasca This phrase expresses 'so as to render'. In s8(2) of the Road Traffic Act, 1968, 'A person shall not alter a vehicle ... so as to render its condition such that the vehicle does not comply with the requirements' is translated as 'Ní athróidh duine feithicil ... ionas go mbeidh sí sa riocht sin nach gcomhlíonann an feithicil ceanglais'. In s37(1) of the Radiological Protection Act, 1991, 'render them immune from seizure' is translated as 'a fhágann díolmhaithe iad ó urghabháil'. 'If special circumstances appear to the Commission to render such course expedient' is translated as 'má chítar don Choimisiún gur oiriúnach an rud é' in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms (no reference being given, however). 'For the purpose of rendering effectual the trusts created by the said several gifts and conveyances' is translated as 'chun go dtabharfaí éifeacht do sna hiontaobhaisí a cruthnúidh leis na tabhartaisí agus na leithlithe sin uile agus fé seach' in the Preamble to the Methodist Church in Ireland Act, 1928. 'In such other circumstances as in the opinion of the said Court render it just and equitable that such indemnity should be enforced' is translated as 'i pé cás eile is dó leis an gCúirt sin a dhéanfadh é bheith cóir agus cothrom an slánú san do chur i bhfeidhm' in s4(2) of the Agricultural Credit Act, 1928, 'in ionad tighé eile do fágadh neamh-ionáitithe tré chósta-chreimhirt' translating 'for another

a chur as oifig See the commentary on Article 33.5.1°. In s15(2)(b) of the Local Government (Superannuation) Act, 1956, 'where the officer was removed from his office for a cause other than misconduct or unfitness' is translated as 'i gcás an t-oifigeach a chur as a oifig ar chúis seachas mí-iompar nó neamhoiriúnacht'. 'Until he shall vacate, or be removed from, his office or employment' is translated as 'go dtí go n-eireoidh sé as a oifig no a fhostaíocht no go gcuirfear aisti é' in s33 of the Galway Harbour Act, 1935. 'Gach uair a déanfar Coimisinéir a cheapa no a chur as oifig fén alt so foillseofar láithreach san Iris Oifigiúil an ceapa no an cur-as-oifig sin' translates 'Every appointment and every removal of a Commissioner under this section shall be published immediately in the Iris Oifigiúil in s3(5) of the Local Authorities (Officers and Employees) Act, 1926. 'The Comptroller and Auditor-General shall have full power ... to promote, suspend, or remove any of the officers' is translated as 'Beidh lán-chomhacht ag an Árd-Scrúdóir ... duine ar bith de sna hoifigigh ... d'árdú, do chur ar fionnraí no do bhrise' in s6 of the Comptroller and Auditor-General Act, 1923, while in s1(2) of the District Justices (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'Every person appointed to be a District Justice may be dismissed or removed at the pleasure of the Governor-General of the Irish Free State' is translated as 'Gach duine a ceapfar chun bheith na Ghiúistís Dúithche féadfar é do bhrise no do chur chun siúil ... aon uair is maith le Seanascal Shaorstáit Éireann é' in s1(2) of the District Justices (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. 'Cur as feidhmeannas' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'to remove from office' in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, along with 'do chur as oifig'.

fanacht i seilbh oifige 'Fanfidh an Tiarna Méara in oifig go dtí go mbeidh a chomharba toghtha ag an gruinníú cinn ráithe' translates 'The Lord Mayor shall continue in office until his successor shall have been elected at the quarterly meeting' in s6(3) of the Cork City Management Act, 1929. 'A person shall not be entitled to demand or continue to receive ... a supply of electricity' is translated as 'ní bheidh duine i dteideal soláthar leictreachais d'éileamh ná leanúint d'é d'fháil' in s90(1) of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1927.

á dhearbhu 'Dearbhú' is the verbal noun of 'dearbhaigh' – see the commentary on Article 12.8 for the noun 'dearbhu', 'declaration', and on Article 29.1, where 'dearbhaigh' expresses 'affirms'. In s24(1)(a) of the Apprenticeship Act, 1959, 'An Chomhairle shall make rules declaring that employment in the trade of any specified class ... of persons ... shall constitute employment by way of apprenticeship in the trade' is translated as 'déanfaidh An Chomhairle rialacha á dhearbhu gur fostaíocht ar mhodh printiseachta leis an gceird aon aicme shonraithe ... daoine a bheith fostaithe leis an gceird' and 'ordú á dhearbhu go ndearnadh an feabhsúchán go cuí' translates 'an order declaring that the improvement was duly made' in s55(2) of the Landlord and Tenant (Amendment) Act, 1980.

Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'dearbhu', with 'Clerk of the Dáil, March 1928' given as reference. 'The Question was declared carried accordingly' is translated as 'do faisnéiseadh dá réir sin go rabhtas tar éis glaca leis an gCeist' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 1928, p. 255. 'Faisnéis' translates 'declaration' in s53(6) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, where 'The offence of making any false declaration in any statement ...' is translated as 'Aon fhaisnéis bhréagach do dhéanamh in aon ráiteas'. 'The administering or taking in any form or manner of any oath, declaration, or engagement' is translated as 'mionn, dearbhú no geallúint do dhéanamh no do thabhairt in aon fhuirm no slí' in s9(1) of the Treasonable Offences Act, 1925. In s4(4) of the Local Elections Postponement Act, 1922, 'and shall have made the declaration accepting office' is translated as 'agus go dtí go ndéanfaidh a chomharba an deimhniú go nglacfa sé an oifig'. 'And it is hereby declared that the several provisions of the said Orders respectively shall have full force and effect' is translated as 'agus faisnítear leis seo go mbeidh lán-fheidhm agus lán-éifeacht ag forálacha uile agus fé leith na nOrduithe sin' in s1 of the Pilotage Orders Confirmation Act, 1924, and 'Chun deire do chur le hamhraistí faisnéistear agus achtuitear leis seo' translates 'To remove doubts it is hereby declared and enacted' in s4(1) of the Ministers and Secretaries (Amendment) Act, 1928. Finally, in s2(2) of the Seanad Electoral Act, 1928, 'to ascertain and declare the result thereof' is translated as 'a thora d'fháil amach agus d'fhógairt'. See further the commentary on Article 15.5.

TÉACS GAELGE

Beidh stát-áras ag an Uachtarán i gcathair Bhaile Átha Cliath nó ar a cóngar.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The President will have a state-home in Dublin city or near it.

ENGLISH TEXT

The President shall have an official residence in or near the City of Dublin.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Official (residence)' is expressed as 'stát-áras' ('state [residence]') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Residence' is expressed by 'áras', which term expresses 'home' in modern Acts.
- 3 'City' has an upper case 'c' as against the lower-case 'c' of 'cathair' in the Irish text.

stát-áras This compound would be written as 'státáras' today, without a hyphen. 'Áras' is translated as (1) 'habitation, abode' and (2) 'house, building' in Ó Dónaill, who does not give 'stát-áras' as a headword. Among the senses given in Dinneen s.v. 'árus' (the spelling in the original text) are 'a dwelling-house, a habitation, a room, an apartment; a compartment'. DIL s.v. 'árus', has 'abode, dwelling, residence'.

'Stát' is an English or Romance loanword, 'state'. The earliest examples cited in DIL s.v. 'stát(a)', are from Ó Cianáin's Flight of the Earls. 'Official' is translated as 'oifigiúil' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'official receiver' is translated as 'glacadóir oifigiúil', for example.

Turning to the Acts, 'áras teaghlaigh' translates 'family home' in the Judicial Separation and Family Law Reform Act, 1989, in s16(a) of which 'to occupy the family home' is translated as 'áras an teaghlaigh a áitiú'. 'Áras an teaghlaigh' translates 'family home' in the Margin Title of s22 of the Family Law (Maintenance of Spouses and Children) Act, 1976. 'Residence', on the other hand, is generally translated as 'áit chónaithe', 'áit chónaí' or simply as 'cónaí' in the Acts. 'The deceased's residence, ordinary residence, and domicile at the date of death', in s14(3) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, for example, is translated as 'cónaí, gnáthchónaí agus sainchónaí an éagaigh ar dháta a bháis', while 'áit chónaí phríobháideach' translates 'private residence' in the Margin Title of s25, where, in s25(1), 'his only or main residence' is translated as 'a aon-áit nó a phríomh-áit chónaí'.

Following the present Article, 'in the official residence of the President' is translated as 'i stát-áras an Uachtaráin' in s1(a) of the National Gallery of Ireland Act, 1963, and 'stát-áras an ainmnitheora' translates 'the official residence of the nominator' in the Second Schedule to the Presidential Elections Act, 1937. In s67(1)(a) of the Local Government Act, 1955, 'every reference to a person's official residence shall be construed as a reference to his ordinary place of residence' is translated as 'déanfar gach tagairt d'áit chónaithe oifigiúil dhuine d'fhorléiriú mar thagairt dá ghnáth-áit chónaithe' and in s9(2)(a) of the Harbours Act, 1947, 'the official residence of a person who is a member of a harbour authority' is translated as 'is é áit chónaithe oifigiúil dhuine is comhalta d'údarás cuain'.

Looking at early Acts, in Article 60 of the 1922 Constitution, 'suitable provision shall be made out of those funds for the maintenance of his official residence and establishment', in relation to the Governor-General, is translated as 'déanfar soláthar oiriúnach as an gciste sin chun a áit chomhnuithe oifigiúil agus a theaghlachas do choinneáil suas'. In the Preamble to the Governor-General's Salary and Establishment Act, 1923, however, 'the maintenance of his official residence and establishment pursuant to the said Article 60' is translated as 'costas a thigh comhnuithe agus a theaghlachas oifigiúil do choinneáil suas'. In s4(2)(b) of the Executive Powers (Consequential Provisions) Act, 1937, 'in relation to the maintenance of his official residence and the household staff thereof' is translated as 'maidir le n-a thigh comhnuithe oifigiúil agus le fuirinn an tigh sin do chothabháil'. Finally, note that 'Right of appeal on questions of domicile, residence, and ordinary residence', the Margin Title of s12 of the Finance Act, 1925, is translated as 'Ceart athchomhairc i dtaobh ceisteanna buan-chomhnaí, comhnaí, agus gnáth-chomhnaí'.

'Áit chónaithe' is translated as 'dwelling-place' in Ó Dónaill. 'Áras' is now enshrined in the title 'Áras an Uachtaráin' itself, along with 'Bus-Áras'.

ar a cóngar We find this phrase in Article 15.1.3° also, where 'The Houses of the Oireachtas shall sit in or near the City of Dublin' is expressed as 'Is i gcathair Bhaile Átha Cliath nó ar a cóngar ... a shuífid Tithe an Oireachtais'. 'I gcóngar do cheachtar de Thithe an Oireachtais' expresses 'in the vicinity of either House of the Oireachtas' in Article 40.6.1°ii. 'Cóngar' is translated principally as 'nearness, proximity' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'bheith i gcóngar áite, duine, to be near, close to, a place, a person' and 'dá mbeinn ina, ar a, cóngar, if I were near him'. Ó Dónaill gives 'vicinity' as the secondary sense, translating 'ar na cóngair' as 'in the vicinity'. Dinneen translates 'cómhgar' ('comhgar' being the form in the original text) as 'nearness, convenience, proximity'. The earlier 'comgar' is based on 'gar' and translated literally as '(equally) near, ready' in DIL, with the secondary sense of 'proximity, nearness, shortness', no examples being cited from the earlier sources. See further the commentary on Article 40.6.1°ii.

Looking at the Acts, 'in aon áit iascaireachta nó ina chóngar' translates 'in or near any fishing place' in s42(2) of the Fourth Schedule to the Fisheries Act, 1980. 'In or near a public place' is translated as 'in áit phoiblí nó in aice le háit phoiblí' in the Long Title of the Litter Act, 1982, 'he may establish such sanatorium in or near that area' being translated as 'féadfaidh sé an sanatorium san do chur ar bun sa líomatáiste sin nó in aice leis' in s4(1) of the Tuberculosis (Establishment of Sanatoria) Act, 1945, for example. 'For the establishment of a new fever hospital in or near the city of Dublin' is translated as 'chun ospidéal fhiabhrais nua do bhunú i gCathair Bhaile Átha Cliath nó in aice léi' in the Long Title of the Dublin Fever Hospital Act, 1936.

The President shall receive such emoluments and allowances as may be determined by law.

- 1 'Such', in 'such emoluments and allowances', is not specifically expressed in the Irish text, although 'as' is not expressed simply as 'mar' ('as') but as 'faoi mar'.
- 2 The term expressing 'emoluments' in the Irish text, 'sochair', usually translates 'benefits' and is not the specific Irish term for 'emoluments' in the later Acts, as noted earlier in relation to Article 12.6.3<sup>o</sup>.

liúntas This headword is translated as 'allowance' in Téarmaí Dlí and in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen s.v. 'allúntas' (the form in the original text), gives 'allowance, dole, share (Aran)'. 'Liúntas' is based on English 'allowance' – see DIL s.v. 'liúntas', where this headword is translated as 'pension' with only the following citation: 'do cuireadh go Tor London e le liúntas no pinsion ceithre cced punta' (Celtica 1, 247.242). While De Bhaldraithe gives the form 'liúntas', according to Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú the form 'allúntas', as the more authentic form, was Tomás de Bhaldraithe's preferred form of this word.

'Liúntais áirithe il-ghnéitheacha déirciúla agus eile' translates 'certain miscellaneous charitable and other allowances' in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922, 'Leigheas-liúntas' translating 'Remedy Allowance' in the Second Schedule to the Currency Act, 1927. 'Lascaine' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'allowance' in Iris an Phuist, 26/6/27, 'allowance form books' being translated as 'leabhair d'fhuirmeacha liúntais' in Iris an Phuist, 27/10/26, and 'Allowance Order Book' as 'Leabhar d'Orduithe Liúntais' in Iris an Phuist, 26/9/28.

'The chairman of the Advisory Council ... shall be paid such remuneration and allowances as may be determined by the Minister' is translated as 'Íocfar le cathaoirleach na Comhairle Comhairlí ... cibé luach saothair agus liúntais a chinnfidh an tAire' in s49 of the Safety in Industry Act, 1980, 'Íocfar le comhalta den Bhinse cibé luach saothair ... agus liúntais a chinnfidh an tAire' translating 'A member of the Tribunal shall be paid such remuneration and allowances as may be determined by the Minister' in s39(10) of the Redundancy Payments Act, 1967.

cinnfear Note that 'cibé daoine eile sa Stát a cinnfear le dlí' renders 'such other persons in the State as may be determined by law' in Article 16.1.2<sup>o</sup>ii, following the Ninth Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1984. 'Cinnim' is translated as 'I determine (issue, etc.)' and 'I find (as a fact, etc.)' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Cinn' is translated as 'fix, determine, decree' in Ó Dónaill – see the commentary on Article 1. Note that the phrase in the original text is 'faoi mar cinnfear'.

Looking at the earlier Acts, 'pé suim bhliantúil no suim eile no pé suimeanna bliantúla no suimeanna eile a chinnfidh an t-Aire Airgid ó am go ham a bheith 'na soláthar oiriúnach' translates 'such yearly or other sum or sums as the Minister for Finance may from time to time determine to be suitable provision' in s2 of the Governor-General's Salary and Establishment Act, 1923. 'Ceap' translates 'determine' in s11 of the 'Galway County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, where 'shall be administered by the District Councils or otherwise as the County Council ... may determine' is translated as 'riarfar é ag na Comhairlí Ceanntair no ar aon chuma eile a cheapfidh an Chomhairle Chontae'. We find 'déanamh amach' in Form 1 of the Schedule to the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1923, where 'The said increased rent is determined as follows' is translated as 'Mar seo leanas isea dinedh amach an cíos méadaithe sin'. In the Eighth Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923, 'that doubt shall be determined by the Minister for Local Government' is translated as 'is é an t-Aire um Rialtas Áitiúil a chuirfidh an t-amhras san ar neamh-ní'. 'Chosen by a method to be determined by Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'a toghfar i slí a bheartóidh Dáil Éireann' in Article 55 of the 1922 Constitution. 'To hear and determine appeals' is translated as 'chun athchomhairc d'éisteacht agus do bhreithniú' in s3(2) of the Circuit Court Appeals Act, 1927, 'breith do thabhairt ar ath-chomharc' being cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'to determine an appeal' (followed by what appears to be an inaccurate reference to the National Health Insurance Act, 1925, in s4(a) of which 'such sums in respect of the year 1925 as the Irish Insurance Commissioners ... may determine to be payable to medical practitioners' is translated as 'pé suimeanna i gcóir na bliana 1925 a shocróidh Coimisinéirí Árachais na hÉireann ... a bheith iníoctha le dochtúirí leighis').

sochair See the commentary on Article 12.6.3<sup>o</sup>. The singular 'sochar' translates 'emoluments' in the earlier Acts. 'Ná ní bheidh aon oifig ná ionad eile sochair aige' translates 'nor shall he hold any other office or position of emolument' in Article 63 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Tuarastal agus sochar na hoifige do bhí aige cheana' translates 'the salary and emoluments of his previous office' in s11(i) of the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. In s6(5) of the Superannuation and Pensions Act, 1923, 'regulations ... for determining ... the amount of the increase of pensionable emoluments of any pensioner' is translated as 'rialacháin ... chun a dhéanamh amach ... cá mhéid an méadú a déanfar ar oifig-shochar inphinsin aon phinsineura'. 'Geallbhruifidh an duine sin an oifig, an fhostaíocht, an áit, no an sochar oifige sin láithreach ar n-a chiontú amhlaidh' translates 'such person shall immediately on such conviction forfeit such office, employment, place, or emolument' in s34(1) of the Offences Against the State Act, 1939, this same English text being translated as 'geallbhruifidh an duine sin, láithreach ar dhéanamh an chiontuithe sin, an oifig, an fhostaíocht, an t-ionad, no an sochar san' in s31(1) of the Constitution (Amendment No. 17) Act, 1931. Finally, note that 'teacht isteach' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'emolument' in Iris an Phuist, 25/8/26.

As we saw in the commentary on Article 12.6.3°, 'diolaíocht' translates 'emolument' in the later Acts. In s5(1)(e)(i) of the Courts (Supplemental Provisions) Act, 1991, for example, 'is appointed to an office or position of emolument' is translated as '(duine) ... a cheapfar ... chun oifige nó poist diolaíochta', 'that no remuneration, emolument, gain or profit will accrue to the seller therefrom' being translated as 'nach bhfaibhreoidh aon luach saothair, diolaíocht, gnóchan ná brabús as chuig an díoltóir' in s2(g)(ii) of the Casual Trading Act, 1980.

faoi mar This phrase is translated as 'as if, as' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'faoi mar a bheadh fearg air, as if he were angry' and 'faoi mar ba ghnáth leis, as was usual for him' s.v. 'faoi'. 'Faoi mar atáimid ag dul ar aghaidh' is translated as 'at the rate at which we are progressing', with 'faoi mar' translated as 'according as' s.v. 'mar'. Usually 'as' is left untranslated in the Acts in this context – e.g. 'such other functions as may be delegated to it by the appropriate health board', in s7(5)(b) of the Health Act, 1970, is translated as 'cibé feidhmeanna eile a tharmligfidh an bord sláinte iomchuí chuige'.

- 2 As in the previous subsection, 'emoluments' is expressed in the Irish text by the term generally rendering 'benefits', 'sochair'.

Commentary

laghdú a dhéanamh ar 'Laghdú' is translated as 'abatement (i.e. of legacies)' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Laghdaigh' is translated as 'lessen, decrease, diminish; reduce' in Ó Dónaill, and 'laghdú' as 'decrease, diminution; reduction', with 'laghdú a dhéanamh ar rud' translated as 'to reduce something'. In s4(i) of the Redundancy Payments Act, 1971, 'the fact that the requirements of that business for employees ... have ceased or diminished' is translated as 'go bhfuil deireadh ... le riachtanas, nó ... go mbeidh laghdú ar riachtanas'. In s56(5)(b) of the Succession Act, 1965, 'that the exercise of that right is unlikely to diminish the value of the assets of the deceased' is translated as 'gurb éadóigh go dtabharfaidh feidhmiú an chirt sin laghdú ar luach sócmhainní an éagaigh'.

'Ní déanfar líomatáiste dlínse aon duine i seilbh oifig chróinéara a laghdú' translates 'the area of jurisdiction of any person holding the office of coroner shall not be diminished' in s9(1) of the Local Government Provisional Orders Confirmation Act, 1950, 'the obligations of the Board ... shall not be diminished' being translated as 'na hoblagáidí a bheidh ar an mBord ... ní laigheadófar iad' in s21 of the Dublin Port and Docks (Bridges) Act, 1929. In s86(4) of the Building Societies Act, 1989, 'that the sending of the statement would be likely to diminish substantially public confidence in the society' is translated as 'gur dóigh, dá gcuirfí amach an ráiteas, go laghdófaí go mór muinín an phobail as an gcumann'.

Looking at earlier Acts, 'Ní féadfar an luach saothair sin do luigheadú an fhaid a leanfaid in oifig' translates 'Such remuneration may not be diminished during their continuance in office' in Article 68 of the 1922 Constitution. 'That his security is seriously diminishing in value' is translated as 'go bhfuil luíodú nách beag ag dul ar luach a urrúis' in s9(ii) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1923, where 'to correspond to the diminution of the security' is translated as 'do bheith ar co-réir le luíodú an urrúis'.

Ceapfaidh an tUachtarán an Taoiseach .i. an Ceann Rialtais nó an Príomh-Aire, arna ainmniú sin ag Dáil Éireann.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The President will appoint the Taoiseach i.e. the Head of Government or the Prime Minister, on his having been nominated by Dáil Éireann.

ENGLISH TEXT

The President shall, on the nomination of Dáil Éireann, appoint the Taoiseach, that is, the head of the Government or Prime Minister.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Head' has a lower-case 'h' as against the capital 'c' of the corresponding 'Ceann' in the Irish text.
- 2 The definite article is repeated before 'Prime Minister' in the Irish text, this conforming to normal Irish syntax.

Note that 'The President of the Council shall be appointed on the nomination of Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'Ceapfar Uachtarán na hArd-Chomhairle ar ainmniú Dháil Éireann' in Article 53 of the 1922 Constitution. Note also that Article 28.5.1<sup>o</sup> of the 1937 Constitution contains the following:

The head of the Government, or Prime Minister, shall be called ... the Taoiseach. An Taoiseach is teideal do cheann an Rialtais, .i. an Príomh-Aire.

arna ainmniú sin 'Arna', made up of the preposition 'ar' and the possessive adjective 'a', is used with the verbal noun to translate 'on his, her, its, their, having been ...' – see Ó Dónaill s.v. 'arna', and the commentary on Article 30.2. As regards gender-proofing, note that no distinction is made between number or gender in the case of 'sin', 'a mhac sin, that man's son' and 'lena dtaobh sin, as compared to them' being cited in Ó Dónaill s.v. 'sin' (e), 'with 3rd person possessive adjective and noun' – i.e. both third person masculine and feminine, singular and plural. The phrase 'muintir Chonamara sin' is cited in Graiméar Gaelige na mBráithre Críostaí (p. 50), where it is stated that 'sin' qualifies the feminine noun 'muintir'. See further the commentary on Article 30.2.

'Nominate' is the secondary sense of 'ainmniú' in Ó Dónaill, 'name' being the principal sense – see the commentary on Article 12.4.4<sup>o</sup>. 'The Government may, on the nomination of the Taoiseach, appoint not more than 15 persons ... to be Ministers of State ... and may at any time, on the recommendation of the Taoiseach, remove a Minister of State so appointed' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an Rialtas, ar ainmniú an Taoisigh, cúig dhuine dhéag ar a mhéid ... a cheapadh chun bheith ina nAíré Stáit ... agus féadfaidh sé tráth ar bith, ar mholadh an Taoisigh, Aire Stáit a cheapfar amhlaidh a chur as oifig' in s1 of the Table in s2 of the Ministers and Secretaries (Amendment) Act, 1980. 'Who shall be appointed by the Minister on the nomination of such organisations as ...' is translated as 'a cheapfaidh an tAire ar ainmniú cibé eagraíochtaí a ...' in s6(3)(b) of the Córas Beostoic agus Feola Act, 1979.

Looking at earlier Acts, 'agus díobh san ainmneoidh Dáil Éireann dhá dtrian' translates 'of whom two-thirds shall be nominated by Dáil Éireann' in Article 33 of the 1922 Constitution, where 'The method of proposal and selection for nomination shall be decided by Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'Socróidh Dáil Éireann ... an tsli déanfar tairisint agus togha chun ainmniúcháin'. 'Appointed by the Representative of the Crown on the nomination of the President of the Executive Council' in Article 51 thereof is translated as 'ar n-a gceapa ag Ionadaí na Coróinneach ar ainmniú Uachtaráin na hArd-Chomhairle'.

Príomh-Aire The headword 'príomh-aire' is given in Ó Dónaill and simply translated as 'Prime minister'. General practice in translating is to mirror the capitals of the text being translated, hence 'Príomh-Aire' rather than 'Príomh-aire' would translate 'Prime Minister' – as noted above, however, 'Ceann' has an initial capital as against the lower-case 'h' of 'head'. Also, as the bound form '-aire' is an agent-suffix (in 'cócaire', for example), the hyphen and capital clearly distinguish the noun 'aire'. Note, in contrast to the form of this headword in Ó Dónaill, how 'Ard-Fheis' is given there with initial capitals on both elements of the compound.

'Prim-', the earlier form of the indeclinable prefix 'príomh-', comes from Latin 'primus'. DIL cites 'tri primaradu in rig' (i.e. the three principal charioteers of the king) from the old Irish saga Togail Bruidne Da Derga, this being a compound of 'prim-' with 'ara', 'charioteer'. Old Irish 'aire' had the general sense of 'noble, chief', 'aire no sainsamail' glossing Latin 'optimas' in the ninth-century St Gall Glosses on Priscian, where Latin 'primus' is glossed by 'airech no thoisecha' – the latter noun being the earlier form of 'taoiseach', associated with 'aire' in the present Article. In early Irish law-tracts 'aire' has a much wider meaning than in the non-legal literature, according to D.A. Binchy, who writes as follows in the 'Legal Glossary' to his edition of the early eighth-century law-tract Críth Gablach:

In the Laws aire ... is used to describe every freeman, 'commoner' as well as noble, who possesses an independent legal status, with an honour-price accruing to him in virtue of his own status. The aire is therefore sui iuris, as opposed to those persons, such as women and sons in potestate, whose honour-price is derived from the status of their 'superiors'. Occasionally however, aire is used in the more restricted sense of 'noble' (as opposed to 'commoner'), which is its usual meaning in the literature.

Note finally that s2 of the Second Article of the 1919 Constitution commences as follows:

Isé bheidh san Aireacht ná Príomh-Aireach ... agus ceathrar Aireach eile ....

See further the commentary on Article 28.5.1<sup>o</sup>.

an Ceann Rialtais 'Ceann an teaghlaigh' translates 'the head of the household' in s224(2)(c) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, following s24(1)(d) of the Social Welfare Act, 1970, for example. 'An Roinn Stáit gur ceann uirthi é' translates 'the Department of State of which he is head' in s2(1) of the Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1924. 'Lucht ceannais brainsí' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'heads of branches' (followed by the abbreviation 'R. na G.'), where 'ceannmháighistreas' and 'máistreás cheannais' are both cited as translating 'head mistress' in early official translations, 'Árd-bhanaltra' translating 'Head Nurse' in the 'Galway County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. See further the commentary on Article 28.5.1°.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú recommends 'Ceann an Rialtais', and remarks also that the article should precede 'Príomh-Aire' in the translation below.

Ceapfaidh 'Ceapaim' is translated as 'I appoint' in Téarmaí Dlí. This is one of the many senses of the verb 'ceap' which originated in the language as a loanword from Latin 'cippus' – see the commentary on Article 6.1. 'Ceapfaidh Dáil Éireann Ard-Sgrúdaí' translates 'Dáil Éireann shall appoint a Comptroller and Auditor-General' in Article 62 of the 1922 Constitution, for example, 'the Minister shall appoint the person nominated to fill the vacancy' being translated as 'ceapfaidh an tAire an duine a ainmneofar leis an bhfolúntas a líonadh' in s17 of the Schedule to the Employment Equality Act, 1977.

Taoiseach See the commentary on Article 28.5.1°.

Standardised gender-proofed Irish text

Ceapfaidh an tUachtarán an Taoiseach, .i. an Ceann Rialtais nó an Príomh-Aire, arna ainmniú nó arna hainmniú sin ag Dáil Éireann.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

On their having been nominated by the Taoiseach, with the agreement of Dáil Éireann beforehand, the President will appoint the other members of the Government.

ENGLISH TEXT

The President shall, on the nomination of the Taoiseach with the previous approval of Dáil Éireann, appoint the other members of the Government.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 While no such comma is found in the Irish text in the latest Stationery Office edition, in the original Irish text a comma follows 'Arna n-ainmniú ag an Taoiseach' – i.e. the Irish text corresponding to 'on the nomination of the Taoiseach with the previous approval of Dáil Éireann' is interrupted by a comma after 'on the nomination of the Taoiseach' – both texts, however, appearing to be capable of being read as if the agreement/approval of Dáil Éireann preceded the nomination rather than the appointment.
- 2 'Approval' is expressed as 'comhaontú' ('agreement') in the Irish text, 'formheas' being the Irish legal term for 'approval'.
- 3 While each subsection of the English text of Article 13.1 commences with the phrase 'The President shall ...', no such correspondence is found in the Irish text.

Commentary

comhaontú 'Glac' and 'glacadh' express 'approve' and 'approval' in Article 27.5.2°, 'mura nglactar, agus go dtí go nglactar, an togra' expressing 'unless and until the proposal shall have been approved' in Article 27.5.1°. Note, however, that we find 'glac' expressing 'accept' with 'aontú' expressing 'approval' in Article 40.2.2°: 'No title of nobility or of honour may be accepted by any citizen except with the prior approval of the Government' being expressed as 'Ní cead d'aon saoránach gairm uaisleachta ná gairm onóra a ghlacadh ach le haontú roimh ré ón Rialtas'. 'Unless the terms of the agreement shall have been approved by Dáil Éireann' is expressed as 'mura dtoilí Dáil Éireann le téarmaí an chonartha' in Article 29.5.2°. 'Every such message or address must, however, have received the approval of the Government' is expressed as 'Ach i ngach cás díobh sin ní foláir an Rialtas a bheith sásta roimh ré leis an teachtaireacht nó leis an aitheasc' in Article 13.7.3°. In line with current practice in the Acts, however, 'ceadú' renders 'approval' in the Amendment contained in Article 29.4.6°, where 'any such exercise shall be subject to the prior approval of both Houses of the Oireachtas' is rendered as 'ach beidh aon fheidhmiú den sórt sin faoi réir ceadú a fháil roimh ré ó dhá Theach an Oireachtais'.

'Comhaontú' is translated as 'agreement' in Téarmaí Dlí, following five of the ten Irish Legal Terms Orders, 'aontú' being translated as 'assent'. Ó Dónaill translates 'comhaontú' as 'union, unification' and 'agreement'. 'Cómhaontughadh' is translated as 'act of agreeing; assent' in Dinneen and 'comáentugud' is translated as 'act of agreeing, consenting (to); consent; agreement, compliance' in DIL. 'Comáentu' ('comhaontadh' being the form in the original text, i.e. 'com-' ['together'] and 'oentu' ['oneness', 'unity', 'association']) is translated principally as 'unity, concord, harmony, identity; compact, agreement, alliance' in DIL, with the secondary sense of '(physical) association; sexual union'.

'Approval' is translated as 'formheas' in Téarmaí Dlí. While this translation is followed in some Acts, 'ceadú' frequently translates 'approval' in the Acts, particularly in translating 'previous approval' as we see below. In s2(2)(d) of the Consumer Information Act, 1978, 'implied by the approval of any person' is translated as 'is inchiailithe ó fhormheas aon duine'. In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973), 'with the approval of the Council' is translated as 'le formheas na Comhairle'. On the other hand, 'Unless made with the previous approval of the Minister' is translated as 'mura ndéanfar é le ceadú roimh ré ón Aire' in s8 of the Irish Telecommunications Investments Limited Act, 1981. In s16 of the Air Companies Act, 1966, 'an alteration in the said memorandum or articles shall not be valid or effectual unless made with the previous approval of the Minister' is translated as 'ní bheidh aon athrú ar an meabhrán nó ar na hairteagail sin baili ná éifeachtúil gan ceadú a bheith faighte chuige roimh ré ón Aire', 'with the approval of the Minister signified in writing' being translated as 'le haontú i scríbhinn ón Aire' in s334(1) of the Companies Act, 1963. 'No alteration in the memorandum of association ... of the Company ... shall be valid or effectual unless made with the previous approval of the Minister for Finance' is translated as 'ní bheidh dleathacht ná éifeacht ag aon atharú ar mhemorandum chomhlachais ... na Cuideachtan a déanfar ... mara ndeinidh an tAire Airgid ... aontú roimh ré leis an atharú san do dhéanamh' in s85 of the Insurance Act, 1936. On the Order Paper of Dáil Éireann for 5/7/77, in line with the Constitution, 'Approval of Nominations by the Taoiseach of other Members of the Government' is translated as 'Comhaontú leis an Taoiseach d'ainmniú na gComhaltai eile den Rialtas'. On the other hand, on 12/10/77, 'that Dáil Éireann approves the terms ...' is translated as 'go gceadaíonn Dáil Éireann téarmaí an ...', this being the standard translation of that phrase. In s102(c) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'subject to the approval of the Joint Broadcasting Committee' is translated as 'faoi réir cheadú an Chomhchoiste Craolacháin'.

'Mola' translates 'approval' in early Acts, but we also find 'ceadú' and 'aontú', with 'toiliú' being found in other official translations. 'Subject to the approval of the Minister for Finance' is translated as 'fé mhola an Aire Airgid' in s6 of the Comptroller and Auditor-General Act, 1923, 'any deputy for the time being approved by the Minister for Local Government' being translated as 'aon duine ionaid, a bheidh molta de thuras na huairé ag an Aire um Rialtas Áitiúil' in s10(1) of the Electoral Act, 1923. On the other hand, 'To become properly constituted and approved Irish Societies' is translated as 'Cumainn Éireannacha ceartbhunuithe ceaduithe ... do dhéanamh díobh féin' in s5(1)(a) of the National Health Insurance Act, 1923, and in s92(1) of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925, 'they shall first submit for the reasonable approval of the railway company plans' is translated as 'déanfid ar dtús pleananna ... do chur fé bhráid na cuideachtan bóthair iarainn, chun a gceaduithe go réasúnta'. 'A copy of any consent, approval, sanction, decision, resolution or special resolution of the Conference' is translated as 'cóip d'aon toiliú, aontú, ceadú, breith, rún no rún speisialta ón gCódháil' in s11 of the Methodist Church in Ireland Act, 1928. 'Toiliú' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'approval' in early translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health, 'toil' translating 'approval' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1922/23. 'Deimhniú sástachta' translates 'Certificate of approval' in early translations for the above-mentioned Department.

Note finally that 'formheas' is translated as 'approval' in Ó Dónaill. 'Ceadaim' is translated as 'I allow (a question, costs, etc.)' in Téarmaí Dlí. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that 'formheas' would not suit the context – nor would it be readily understood – either 'aontú' or 'comhaontú' being satisfactory in his opinion.

roimh ré 'Cíos iníoctha roimh ré' is translated as 'rent payable in advance' in Téarmaí Dlí, 'roimh ré' being translated as 'in advance, beforehand' in Ó Dónaill. 'Previous service' is translated as 'seirbhís roimh ré' in s3(a) of the Electricity (Supply) (Amendment) Act, 1970. In s1 of the Solicitors (Amendment) Act, 1947, 'the previous requisite search and inquiry' is translated as 'an réamhchuardach agus an réamhfhiosrú is gá'. In s4(4) of the Sixth Schedule to the Finance Act, 1990, 'and so on back through previous acquisitions' is translated as 'agus mar sin siar trí fháilleana roimhe sin'. 'Roimh ré' also translates 'prior', 'preliminary to' ('a ghabh roimh ré', 'a tabhaíodh roimh ré'), 'advance' ('advance payments of contributions', 'ranníoca d'íoc roimh ré') in the Acts and 'anticipated' ('the matter anticipated', 'an ní ar a dtráchtfar roimh ré') – '... anticipate the discussion' is translated as '(ní) thráchtfaidh sé roimh ré ar aon ní' in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann – along with 'in advance' and 'previously' in translations of European legislation, where 'breith a thabhairt roimh ré' translates 'prejudice'.

'Seirbhís roimh ré' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'previous service' in early translations for the Department of Justice. 'Such annulment shall not prejudice or invalidate any matter or thing previously done under such regulation' is translated as 'ní dhéanfidh an nea-mbriochaint sin dochar ná díth dleathachta d'aon rud ná d'éinní a dineadh fén rialachán san roimhe sin' in s4(3) of the Civil Service Regulation Act, 1923. 'Certain provisions of previous enactments', in the Margin Title of s71 of the Land Act, 1923, is translated as 'forálacha áirithe de shean-achtacháin' and 'being deemed to be a graft on such purchaser's previous interest' is translated as 'd'áireamh mar ghreamú ar roimh-leas an cheannuitheora san' in s2(1)(b) of the Agricultural Credit Act, 1928.

arna n-ainmniú ag See the commentary on the previous subsection. As noted above, in the original text (followed in earlier popular editions), a comma follows the phrase 'Ar n-a n-ainmniú ag an Taoiseach'.

On the advice of the Taoiseach the President must accept any member of the Government giving up office, or any member of the Government being put out of office. / or put any member of the Government out of office.

ENGLISH TEXT

The President shall, on the advice of the Taoiseach, accept the resignation or terminate the appointment of any member of the Government.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The Irish text can perhaps be read as if both the resignation and the termination of the appointment were subject to their acceptance by the President, whereas in the English text it is not that the President will accept the termination but will actually be the terminator – the Irish text may also be read, however, as 'ní foláir don Uachtarán ... comhalta ar bith den Rialtas a chur as oifig' ('the President must ... put any member of the Government out of office') rather than 'ní foláir don Uachtarán glacadh le comhalta ar bith den Rialtas a chur as oifig' ('the President must accept any member of the Government being put out of office').
- 2 'Terminate the appointment' is expressed as 'a chur as oifig' ('put out of office') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Resignation' is expressed as a verbal noun in Irish, 'The President shall ... accept the resignation of any member' being expressed as 'ní foláir don Uachtarán glacadh le haon chomhalta ... d'éirí as oifig' ('The President must accept any member resigning from office') in the Irish text.
- 4 'Any member of the Government' is expressed twice in the Irish text.
- 5 'Shall' is again expressed as 'Ní foláir' ('must') in the Irish text.

Commentary

a chur as oifig Literally 'to put out of office'. In the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann for 6/5/1970, under the heading 'Ceapadh Comhaltaí den Rialtas a Fhoirceannadh' ('Termination of Appointment of Members of the Government'), 'terminate their appointments' is translated as 'a gceapacháin a fhoirceannadh':

D'fhógair an Taoiseach gur iarr sé ar an Teachta Niall Bléine agus ar an Teachta Cathal Ó hEochaidh éirí as oifig mar chomhaltaí den Rialtas agus ... go ndearna an tUachtarán, ar a chomhairleisean, a gceapacháin mar chomhaltaí den Rialtas a fhoirceannadh ... The Taoiseach announced that he had requested Deputies Neil T. Blaney and Charles J Haughey to resign from office as members of the Government and that ... the President had, on his advice, terminated their appointments as members of the Government.

'He shall terminate the appointment as soon as practicable' is translated as 'foirceannfaidh sé an ceapachán a luaithe is indéanta sin' in s11(3) of the Safety, Health and Welfare (Offshore Installations) Act, 1987, 'The Minister ... may at any time terminate the appointment of a deputy manager' being translated as 'Féadfaidh an tAire ... ceapadh leas-bhainisteora d'fhoirceannadh tráth ar bith' in s18(4) of the City and County Management (Amendment) Act, 1955, with 'The Minister may at any time terminate the appointment of a member of the Council who was appointed by him' being translated as 'Féadfaidh an tAire tráth ar bith ceapadh comhalta den Chomhairle a cheap sé féin a fhoirceannadh' in s3 of the Second Schedule of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978. See further the commentary on Article 28.9.4<sup>o</sup>.

Looking at early Acts, 'the Guardians in each Union shall call a special meeting to terminate the appointment of all officials' is translated as 'gairmfidh Caomhnóirí gach Aontais fé leith cruinniú speisialta chun cur-ar-ceal do dhéanamh ar cheapa gach oifigigh' in s12 of the 'Sligo County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. In s10 of the National Health Insurance Act, 1923, 'requiring the payment of a fee by a member of an Approved Society on terminating his membership' is translated as 'a orduíonn do bhall de Chumann Cheaduithe táille d'íoc nuair a cuirtear deire le n-a bhallraíocht'. 'The conditions governing the future acquisition and termination of citizenship in the Irish Free State', in Article 3 of the 1922 Constitution, is translated as 'na coiníollacha a rialóidh feasta saoránacht d'fháil agus do chríochnú i Saorstát Éireann'. 'Éinne go luíodófar no go stopfar a phinsean' translates 'any person whose pension is reduced or terminated' in s3(3) of the Old Age Pension Act, 1924, and 'the reputed proprietors ... of the ... lands ... proposed to be compulsorily acquired, restricted, terminated or otherwise interfered with or affected' is translated as 'na daoine atá in ainm bheith ina ndilseánaigh ... ar na tailte ... go moltar iad do thógaint go héigeanta, do shriana, do stad no cur isteach ortha no baint leo ar aon tslí eile' in s6(2)(e) of the Arterial Drainage Act, 1925.

Finally, regarding 'appointment', both 'ceapachán' and 'post' are cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'appointment' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1922/23. 'Every appointment to any situation to which this Act applies shall be made by means of competitive examination' is translated as 'isé cuma ina ndéanfar gach ceapa chun aon phuist le n-a mbaineann an tAcht so ná tré scrúduithe comórtais' in s4(1) of the Civil Service Regulation Act, 1923. 'Appointment' is translated as 'ceapachán' in Téarmaí Dlí, which translation is followed in the modern Acts.

d'éirí as oifig 'Éirigh as' is translated as 'rise out of' and 'give up, relinquish' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'éirí as obair, to quit work' and 'd'éirigh sé as a phost, he resigned from his post' – see the commentary on Article 12.3.1<sup>o</sup>. 'Éirí' is the verbal noun of 'éirigh', 'd'éirí as' being 'to resign'. In De Bhaldráithe, for example, 'to tender one's resignation' is translated as 'tairiscint éirí as', i.e. 'to tender to resign'. 'To accept the resignation of N.' is translated as 'glacadh le A. d'éirí as' in Foclóir Oifigiúil (citing Iris Oifigiúil, 1924, p. 503, as source). 'Resignation of Members' is translated as 'Comhaltaí d'éirí as' in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (s159). See also the commentary on Article 28.9.1<sup>o</sup>.

We see the effort made to find a single term to express the noun 'resignation' in the Local Elections and Meetings (Post-Ponement) Act, 1931. The heading for s8, 'Remission of penalties for resignation', is translated as 'Pionóisi ghabhann le heirghe-as do mhaitheamh' and in the section itself the genitive is given in the phrase 'alos an eirthe-as san', translating 'on account of such resignation'. In the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann for 5 May 1970, under the heading 'Comhalta den Rialtas d'Éirí as Oifig' ('Resignation of Member of the Government') we read:

D'fhógair an Taoiseach go ndearna an Teachta Mícheál Ó Móráin a éirí-as-oifig mar chomhalta den Rialtas a chur in iúl dó chun an scéal a chur faoi bhráid an Uachtaráin agus gur ghlac an tUachtarán, ar a chomhairle sin, leis an éirí-as-oifig le héifeacht ó 5 Bealtaine, 1970. The Taoiseach announced that Deputy Michael Moran had placed in his hands, for submission to the President, his resignation from office as a member of the Government and that the President, on his advice, had accepted the resignation with effect from 5th May, 1970.

The following day, 'éirí as oifig' – in relation to Kevin Boland's resignation – is no longer hyphenated.

'Féadfaidh an tUachtarán glacadh le tairiscint oifigigh éirí as a choimisiún nó féadfaidh sé diúltú d'í a ghlacadh' translates 'The President may accept or refuse to accept the resignation of his commission tendered by an officer' in s49(2) of the Defence Act, 1954, 'An officer may ... tender to the President the resignation of his commission' being translated as 'Féadfaidh oifigeach a thairiscint don Uachtarán ... éirí as a choimisiún'. 'A vocational education committee may from time to time accept the resignation or revoke the appointment of a banking company as treasurer' is translated as 'Féadfaidh coiste oideachais ghairme beatha o am go ham glaca le cuideachtaí bhancaeareachta d'eirghe as bheith ina cisteoir nó a ceapa mar chisteoir do cheiliúra' in s47(2) of the Vocational Education Act, 1930. Note that 'requiring him to tender his resignation' is translated as 'á cheangal air a éirí as a thairiscint' in s9(2)(c)(iv)(III) of the Civil Service Regulation Act, 1956. Finally, 'and the resignation shall take effect at the commencement of the meeting of the Commission held next after the Commission has been informed by the Government of the resignation' is translated as 'agus glacfaidh an t-éirí as éifeacht an tráth a thosóidh an chéad chruinniú eile den Choimisiún a thionólfar tar éis don Rialtas an t-éirí-as a chur in iúl don Choimisiún' in s2(3) of the Schedule to the Radio and Television Act, 1988.

Looking at early Acts, in s2(1) of the Superannuation and Pensions Act, 1923, 'that any person resigned or was dismissed from the Civil Service of the Late United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland' is translated as 'gur thárla d'aon duine áirithe ... gur éirigh sé no gur briseadh é as Seirbhís Shíbhialta Ríocht Aontuithe na Breatain Móire agus na hÉireann a bhí ann le déanaí', 'the period between the date on which such person so resigned or was dismissed from the Civil Service of the United Kingdom aforesaid' being translated there as 'an tréimhse idir an dáta ar ar éirigh no ar ar briseadh an duine sin mar sin as Seirbhís Shíbhialta na Ríochta Aontuithe roimhráite' and 'that he so resigned or was dismissed as aforesaid solely for political reasons' is translated as 'toisc gur ar chúiseanna polaitíochta amháin a dhin sé eirghe-as no a briseadh é mar adubhradh'. 'Tabhairt suas' translates 'resignation' in Article 29 of the 1922 Constitution where 'In case of death, resignation or disqualification of a member of Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'I gcás teachta de Dháil Éireann d'fháil bháis, do thabhairt suas no do theacht fé mhí-cháiliocht'. 'Tarraing siar' is included in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms where 'at the time of the resignaion of ...' is cited as being translated as 'ar an am gur tharraing ... siar' in early translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health.

Note, finally, that 'a' would replace 'd(o)' in 'd'éirí as oifig' according to Ó Dónaill – see the commentary on Article 3 – and that the original 'do chur as oifig' is standardised to 'a chur as oifig' in the popular edition.

comhairle This headword is translated as 'advice' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill cites 'más ar mo chomhairle atá, if it is for one to advise', 'bheith ar chomhairle duine, to be influenced, led, by someone' and 'd'fhan sé ar chomhairle a athar, he let his father direct him'. 'Ceapfar an Gobharnóir ag an Uachtarán ar chomhairle an Riaghaltais' translates 'The Governor shall be appointed by the President on the advice of the Government' in s19(1) of the Central Bank Act, 1942, 'féadfaidh an Chomhairle, ar chomhairle an choiste, rialacha den sórt sin a dhéanamh' translating 'An Chomhairle may, on the advice of the committee, make such rules' in s49(1)(d) of the Industrial Training Act, 1967. Looking at the early Acts, 'Ní féadfar Dáil Éireann do sgur aon uair ach ar chomhairle na hArd-Chomhairle' translates 'Dáil Éireann may not at any time be dissolved except on the advice of the Executive Council' in Article 28 of the 1922 Constitution. In Article 5, however, 'except with the approval or upon the advice of the Executive Council of the State' is translated as 'ach le cead no ar mhola Ard-Chomhairle an Stáit'.

Note finally in passing that 'Nóta Foláirimh' translates 'Advice Note' in s11 of the 'Kildare County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, where, 'That all payments when authorised shall be made by the County Board of Health by means of Advice Notes and Paying Orders' is translated as 'Bord Sláinte na Contae d'íoc gach íocaíochta le Nótaí Foláirimh agus le hOrduithe Íocaíochta tar éis an íocaíocht do bheith údaruithe'. 'Fuláreamh' translates 'advice' in Iris an Phuist, 24/3/26. 'Innsin-nóta' and 'innsin-tarrac' respectively are cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as early translations of 'advice note' and 'advice draft'.

glacadh le 'Glacaim le' is translated as 'I accept' in Téarmaí Dlí. See the commentary on Article 28.9.3<sup>o</sup>. Note above that 'to accept resignation of (N)' is translated as 'glaca le (A) d'eirghe as' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1924, p. 503. '(May) draw accept and endorse Bills of Exchange' is translated as 'féadfid Billí Malairte ... do tharang, do ghlaca agus do chur fé chúl-scriobh' in s17 of the Sligo Lighting and Electric Power Act, 1924. Finally, note in passing that 'acceptances of trusts' is translated as 'aiceaptaí iontaobhaisí' in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (see the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms).

comhalta ar bith 'Any member'. Note that 'aon chomhalta' also expresses 'any member' in this subsection – the English text's 'any member' is expressed twice in the Irish text.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is the President, on the advice of the Taoiseach, who will convene and dissolve Dáil Éireann.

ENGLISH TEXT

Dáil Éireann shall be summoned and dissolved by the President on the advice of the Taoiseach.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Summon' is expressed by 'comóir' ('convene') in the Irish text, although the term 'comóir' does translate 'summon' in the Acts.
- 2 The Irish text places emphasis on it being the President who summons and dissolves the Dáil whereas the English text focuses on how the Dáil will be summoned and dissolved.

Note that 'The Oireachtas shall be summoned and dissolved by the Representative of the Crown' is translated as 'Déanfaidh Ionadaí na Coróinneach in ainm an Rí an t-Oireachtas do ghairm agus do sgur' in Article 24 of the 1922 Constitution.

Commentary

a chomórfas 'Comóir' is translated as 'convene, assemble' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'aonach, cruinniú, a chomóradh, to convene a fair, a gathering'. Dinneen translates 'comóir' as 'I magnify, extol, convene (an assembly) ...'. See the commentary on Article 12.3.3<sup>o</sup> for the development of the senses of this verb and see the commentary on Article 6.1 regarding the special form of the relative in '-s'.

In s1(1) of the European Communities (Amendment) Act, 1973, 'déanfaidh an Ceann Comhairle Dáil Éireann a chomóradh chun cruinniú ar lá a shonróidh sé' translates 'the Ceann Comhairle shall summon Dáil Éireann to meet on a day named by him', 'oibreoidh sé chun an tOireachtas

... a chomóradh le hationól' translating '(the order) shall operate to summon the Oireachtas ... to reassemble' in s1(5) of the Electricity (Special Provisions) Act, 1966. In s24(1) of Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'the Ceann Comhairle may summon the Dáil' is translated as 'féadfaidh an Ceann Comhairle an Dáil a chomóradh', while in s86(1) 'the Clerk ... shall convene a meeting' is translated as 'déanfaidh an Cléireach ... cruinniú a chomóradh'. L. Mc Cionnaith translates 'summon Parliament' as 'Pairlimint do chomóradh', followed by the abbreviation for 'Terms published by Department Education (Foclóir Staire, Téarmaí Gramadaighe, Téarmaí Eoluigheachta, Téarmaí Ceoil)'.

'The Provisional Council shall convene a further General Meeting' is translated as 'déanfaidh an Chomhairle Shealadach Cruinniú Ginearálta eile a thoghairm' in s12(4) of the Institution of Civil Engineers of Ireland (Charter Amendment) Act, 1969. 'Fógra a d'Fhoilsigh an Ceann Comhairle ag Gairm na Dála Teacht le chéile an lá seo' translates 'Notice Published by the Ceann Comhairle Summoning the Dáil to meet on this Day' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 20/10/1971 – 'Dáil Éireann a chomóradh', however, translates 'summon Dáil Éireann' in the notice itself. In the Proceedings of 2/7/1969, 'I, Éamon de Valéra ... , summon and call together Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'déanaimse, Éamon de Valéra, ... Dáil Éireann ... a ghairm agus a chomóradh chun teacht le chéile ...'. In s9(2) of the Court-Martial Appeals Act, 1983, 'the Court shall be summoned in accordance with directions to be given by the Chief Justice' is translated as 'gairfear an Chúirt de réir ordúithe a thabharfaidh an Príomh-Bhreitheamh', 'the Court of Criminal Appeal shall be summoned in accordance with directions to be given by the Chief Justice' being translated as 'déanfar an Chúirt Achomhairc Choiriúil a chomóradh de réir ordúithe a thabharfaidh an Príomh-Bhreitheamh' in s3(2) of the Courts (Establishment and Constitution) Act, 1961. 'At the meeting of the county council or elective body concerned summoned for the purpose under this section' is translated as 'ag an gcruinniú, ar n-a ghairm chuige sin féin alt so, den chomhairle chontae no den chólucht toghaidhe le n-a mbainfidh' in s29(4) of the County Management Act, 1940, 'gairmfear cruinniú de sna seana-chomhaltaí den chomhairle sin' translating 'a meeting of the former members of such council shall be summoned' in s37(3)(c) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1937.

Ó Dónaill cites 'níor gaireadh chun an chruinnithe iad, they were not summoned to the meeting' while 'gairm scoile' is translated as 'convocation', 'gairm slógaidh' as 'call to arms, mobilization' and 'gairm choiteann a thabhairt' as 'to give a general invitation; to issue a general proclamation'. Dinneen translates 'gairim' as 'I call, summon', and 'cuirim gairm ar' as 'I summon'. DIL translates 'gairid' (II) as 'calls, summons, invites' and translates 'gairm' as 'act of calling or summoning; a call, summons, cry', where 'gairm coitcheann do theacht o Roim', regarding the Papal Jubilee of 1300, is cited from the Annals of Ulster. 'Gairm' is the verbal noun of 'gair'. Note finally that De Bhaldraithe translates 'summon' as 'tionólaim (cruinniú)'.

a lánscoirfeas 'Lánscoir' is translated as '(of parliament) dissolve' in Ó Dónaill. This headword is a compound of 'lán' ('full') and 'scoir', the secondary sense of which is

'come to a halt, stop, rest', according to Ó Dónaill. The primary sense of the earlier verb 'scurid' is 'unyoke (horse, etc.)', according to DIL. In s127(1) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'by reason of the dissolution of the Dáil' is translated as 'toisc an Dáil a lánscor'. In s7(2)(b) of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1969, 'in relation to any bye-election occurring before the dissolution of Dáil Éireann which next occurs after the passing of this Act' is translated as 'maidir le haon chorrthoghchán a tharlóidh roimh an lánscor ar Dháil Éireann is tuisce a tharlóidh tar éis an tAcht seo a rith'. Note above that the simple verb 'sgur' translates 'dissolves' in the 1922 Constitution; Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that a possible reason for using 'lánscor' is to differentiate between a 'break' for holidays and a 'dissolution'.

'Dissolve' is also translated as 'discaoil' in the Acts. 'Discaoilim comhpháirtíocht' translates 'dissolve (a) partnership' in Téarmaí Dlí while Ó Dónaill cites 'comhthionól a dhíscaoileadh, to dissolve an assembly'. 'The Board may at any time dissolve a committee' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an Bord aon tráth coiste ... a dhíscaoileadh' in s25(5) of the Horse Industry Act, 1970, and in s26(2) of the Dublin Cemeteries Committee Act, 1970, 'by reason of the dissolution of the 1846 Committee' is translated as 'de dhroim discaoileadh Choiste 1846'. 'An Act ... to dissolve Iontaobhas Iascaigh Intíre Ioncorportha (The Inland Fisheries Trust Incorporated)', in the Long Title of the Fisheries Act, 1980, is translated as 'Acht ... do dhíscaoileadh an Iontaobhais Iascaigh Intíre Ioncorportha'. 'Scaoileadh' translates 'dissolution (i.e. of marriage)' in Téarmaí Dlí. See further the commentary on Articles 18.4.3<sup>o</sup> and 18.8 and see the commentary on Article 6.1 regarding the special form of the relative in '-eas'.

Commentary

as a chomhairle féin Dinneen translates 'as mo chomhairle féin' as 'on my own initiative [which phrase is translated as 'ar/as a thionscnamh féin' in modern Acts], doing as I like' and 'as comhairle a chéile' as 'in concert'. Ó Dónaill cites 'tá siad ar a gcomhairle féin, they do as they like'. 'Comhairle' is translated as 'advice' in Téarmaí Dlí. Old Irish 'comairle' is the verbal noun of 'con-airlethar', 'consults'.

'At the discretion of' is translated as 'faoi rogha' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'judicial discretion' is translated as 'rogha bhreithiúnach' and 'I exercise discretion' is translated as 'déanaim rogha'. 'Absolute' is translated as 'iomlán' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'absolute privilege', for example, is translated as 'pribhléid iomlán'. In s171(2) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, 'the person in charge ... may, in his absolute discretion, do either or both of the following' is translated as 'féadfaidh an duine is feighlí, ... dá rogha féin amháin, ceachtar ní nó an dá ní acu seo a leanas a dhéanamh', 'The licensee may at any time in his absolute discretion refuse to sell or serve intoxicating liquor to any person' being translated as 'Féadfaidh an ceadúnaí tráth ar bith dá roghain féin a dhiúltú deoch mheisciúil a dhíol le duine ar bith nó d'fhriotháil air' in s49(2) of the Tourist Traffic Act, 1952. In s6 of the Housing (Gaeltacht) (Amendment) Act, 1964, 'The Minister may, in his absolute discretion, refuse to make a building grant' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an tAire, dá rogha féin amháin, diúltú deontas tógála ... a thabhairt' and in s10(1) of the Air Navigation and Transport Act, 1965, 'The Minister may in his absolute discretion approve ... the fares' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an tAire, dá rogha féin amháin, na táillí ... a cheadú'. In s3 of Part II of the First Schedule to the Companies Act, 1963, 'The directors may, in their absolute discretion, and without assigning any reason therefor, decline to register any transfer of any share' is translated as 'Féadfaidh na stiúrthóirí, dá rogha féin go hiomlán agus gan aon chúis a thabhairt leis, diúltú clárú a dhéanamh ar aistriú aon scaire'. In s26(1) of the Land Act, 1936, 'such sum ... as such Lay Commissioners shall, in their absolute discretion, fix in that behalf' is translated as 'pé suim ... a dhéanfaidh na Coimisinéirí Tuaithe sin, as a gcomhairle féin amháin, a cheapadh chuige sin'. 'In exercising his discretion under the immediately preceding sub-section' is translated as 'Le linn don Aire rogha a dhéanamh fén bhfo-alt deiridh sin roimhe seo' in s15(4) of the Tobacco Act, 1934. Finally, in s28 the Standing Orders of Seanad Éireann (1997), 'in the absolute discretion of the Cathaoirleach' is translated as 'faoi rogha an Chathaoirleach féin amháin'.

Looking at early Acts, 'The Commission may in its absolute discretion grant or refuse such application' is translated as 'féadfadh an Coimisiún más rogha leis féin é géille no diúltú do ghéille don iarratas san' in s40(1) of the Currency Act, 1927, 'no, más rogha leis é' translating 'or at his discretion' in s11(4) of the Wireless Telegraphy Act, 1926. 'Beidh costais an cheannasaí do réir mar is rogha leis an gcúirt' translates 'the costs of the controller shall be in the discretion of the court' in s144 of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, 'such portion ... as the Commissioners in their discretion may from time to time determine are not required' being translated as 'pé cuid de a shocróidh na Coimisinéirí o am go ham do réir mar is toil leo a bheith nea-riachtanach' in s100 of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925, 'pé custuim réasúnta a cheapfid agus a shocróid do réir a dtuille féin' translating 'such reasonable tolls as the Commissioners shall from time to time in their discretion fix and determine' in s52. 'Or, at the discretion of the judge' is translated as 'no, más toil leis an mbreitheamh é' in s8(1) of the Companies (Re-construction of Records) Act, 1924. 'Beidh uimhir agus luach saothair na ndaoine sin fén bhFo-Shirriamh' translates 'the number and remuneration of such persons shall be at the discretion of the Under-Sheriff' in s2(4) of the Enforcement of Law (Occasional Powers) Act, 1923, and, finally, in s18 of the Slaughtered Animals (Compensation) Act, 1928, 'The Trustees may borrow money ... to such extent and on such terms as they in their discretion shall think proper' is translated as 'Féadfadh na hÍontaobhaithe airgead d'fháil ar iasacht ... chó fada le pé méid agus ar pé téarmaí a mheádhfid a bheith ceart'.

diúltú do 'Diúltaim' is translated as 'I refuse' in Tearmaí Dlí, where 'diúltaim don fhaisnéis' is translated as 'I refuse informations'. 'Diúltaigh' is translated as 'deny, refuse' in Ó Dónaill, with 'diúltaigh do' translated as (a) 'renounce, repudiate', (b) 'refuse, reject', (c) 'decline, shrink', (d) 'resist'. 'Diúltú rud a dhéanamh' (i.e. without 'do') is translated as 'to refuse to do something'. Dinneen translates 'diúltaighim' as 'I deny, refuse, oppose, renounce (with do)'. See further the commentary on Articles 34.5.4<sup>o</sup>, where 'diúltaigh' without the following preposition expresses 'decline', and 47.2.1<sup>o</sup>, where 'diúltaigh do' expresses 'veto'.

Looking at early Acts, 'Nuair a bheidh aon ordú (ar a n-áirítear diúltú do ghéille d'iarratas) á dhéanamh ag Breitheamh den Chúirt Dúithche fén alt so' translates 'A Justice of the District Court when making any order (including the refusal of an application) under this section' in s32(6) of the Local Government Act, 1925. 'Beidh sé dleathach don Choimisiún ... diúltú do sheachada aon bhuilleoin óir a tairgfar do fén alt so do ghlaca' translates 'it shall be lawful for the Commission ... to refuse to accept delivery of any gold bullion tendered to it under this section' in s47(3) of the Currency Act, 1927. We also find 'eiteach' and 'oba' translating 'refuse' in early Acts. 'Where any registration officer ... refuses, neglects, or fails without reasonable cause to perform his duties in that behalf' is translated as 'Má dhineann aon oifigeach clárathachta ..., gan cúis réasúnta, có-líona na ndualgaisí sin a bheidh air d'oba no do leigint i bhfaillí no gan déanamh' in s63(1) of the Electoral Act, 1923. 'Whenever any person ... refuses or fails to produce such licence or produces such licence but fails or refuses to permit the officer ... to read ... such licence' is translated as 'Éinne ... a eiteoidh no ná déanfidh an ceadúnas san do thaisbeáint no a thaisbeánfidh an ceadúnas san ach ná déanfidh no a eiteoidh a leigint don oifigeach ... an ceadúnas san do léigheamh' in s18(2) of the Betting Act, 1926.

leanúint de 'Lean de' is translated as 'continue at; cling, adhere to; follow' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'leanúint de rud' as 'to continue to do something; to cling to something'. 'Lean de' is translated as 'follow on, persevere' in Dinneen. See further the commentary on Article 28.10. Following the present subsection, 'on the advice under this section of a Taoiseach who has ceased to retain the support of a majority in Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'ar fháil comhairle dhó fén alt so o Thaoiseach ná leanann tromlach i nDáil Éireann de bheith i dtacaíocht leis' in s2(2) of the General Elections (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1943. 'Provided, however, that the Oireachtas shall not be dissolved on the advice of an Executive Council which has ceased to retain the support of a majority in Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'Ar choiníoll, ámh, ná sguirfean an t-Oireachtas ar chomhairle aon Ard-Chomhairle go mbeidh tacuíocht mhór-áirimh i nDáil Éireann caillte aici' in Article 53 of the 1922 Constitution.

'Scoil de' is the usual translation of 'cease' in the Acts. In s17(2) of the Finance Act, 1990, for example, 'In respect of a person who ... ceases to possess the whole of a single source of income' is translated as 'Maidir le duine a scoirfidh ... d'iomlán bunaidh amháin ioncaim a shealbhú'. "Landlord" means the person for the time being entitled to receive ... the rent ... and ... includes a person who has ceased to be so entitled by reason of the termination of his tenancy' is translated as 'ciallaíonn "tiarna talún" an té atá i dteideal de thuras na huairé an cíos ... a fháil ... agus ... folaíonn sé duine a scoir de bheith i dteideal amhlaidh toisc a thionóntacht a bheith foirceanta' in s3(1) of the Landlord and Tenant (Amendment) Act, 1980. 'Any transferred officer or servant who has ceased to be an officer or servant of the Bord' is translated as '(le) haon oifigeach no seirbhíseach aistrithe scuirfidh de bheith ina oifigeach no ina sheirbhíseach don Bhord' in s14(3)(c) of the Saint Laurence's Hospital Act, 1943. 'A person who has ceased to be a director or secretary of a company may ...' is translated as 'féadfaid duine a scoir de bheith ina stiúrthóir nó rúnaí ar chuideachta' in s55(8) of the Companies Act, 1990. In s3(2)(c)(ii) of the Children's Allowances Act, 1944, 'he shall cease to be so entitled' is translated as 'scurfe sé de bheith i dteideal amhlaidh'.

Looking at early Acts, 'That the present Boards of Guardians cease to function' is translated as 'Na Búird Chaomhnóirí atá ann fé láthair do scur de bheith ag feidhmiú' in s3 of the 'Cavan County Scheme' in the First Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'upon his resigning or otherwise ceasing to be employed' being translated as 'ar eirghe as a fhostaíocht do no ar scur ar aon tslí eile de bheith ar fostú dho' in s21(1) of the Limerick Harbour Act, 1926. In s2 of the

'Roscommon County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'Poor Law Unions ... to cease to exist' is translated as 'Gan aontais fé Dhlí na mBocht ... do bheith a thuille', 'provided that such right shall as regards translations into the Irish language cease to exist' being translated as 'ach scuirfidh an ceart san de bheith ann maidir le haistrithe go Gaedhilg' in s154(2)(a) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú raises two objections to 'ar chomhairle Taoisigh a scoirfidh de thacaíocht tromlaigh i nDáil Éireann a choimeád' as a translation below of 'on the advice of a Taoiseach who has ceased to retain the support of a majority in Dáil Éireann'. Firstly, as regards style, this would be following immediately on 'Dáil Éireann a lánscor' ('to dissolve Dáil Éireann'). Professor Ó Murchú feels that the phrase 'a scoirfidh de' has an active sense, i.e. that it is the Taoiseach who would be arranging this, when it is quite the opposite, i.e. a majority not supporting the Taoiseach, in spite of 'him'. Máirtín Ó Murchú recommends 'ar chomhairle Taoisigh a fhágfar gan tacaíocht tromlaigh i nDáil Éireann' or 'ar chomhairle Taoisigh a dteipfidh tacaíocht tromlaigh air nó uirthi', stating that the original Irish version has its merits in this context.

Regarding 'retain' in early Acts, 'he has ceased to retain ...' is translated as 'tá ... cailte aige' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1927, p. 697. In s24(2) of the Finance Act, 1926, 'the amount of a bet shall be the sum of money which ... the bookmaker will be entitled to receive, retain, or take credit for' is translated as 'is é is méid gill ann ná an tsum airgid go mbeidh teideal ag an ngeall-ghlacadóir ... chun é fháil, é choinneáil, nó é chur i gcreidiúint do féin'. Note that 'All such stockbrokers ... as shall from time to time be required to be retained to render occasional services' is translated as 'Gach brócaer stuic ... is gá a chur in áirithe o am go ham chun foth-sheirbhísí do dhéanamh' in s59(1) of the Court Officers Act, 1926. Finally, turning to modern Acts, the Margin Title of s9 of the Housing (Private Rented Dwellings) Act, 1982, 'Entitlement of tenants to retain possession', is translated as 'Teideal a bheith ag tionntaí seilbh a choimeád'. 'To retain such recordings for a period of 30 days' is translated as 'na taifeadtaí sin a choinneáil go ceann tréimhse 30 lá' in s4(8) of the Radio and Television Act, 1988.

tromlach See the commentary on Articles 14.4, 26.2.2° and 28.10. 'Mór-áireamh' translates 'majority' in early Acts. 'Provided, however, that the Oireachtas shall not be dissolved on the advice of an Executive Council which has ceased to retain the support of a majority in Dáil Éireann', in Article 53 of the 1922 Constitution, is translated as 'Ar choinníoll, ámh, ná sguirfear an t-Oireachtas ar chomhairle aon Ard-Chomhairle go mbeidh tacaíocht mhór-áirimh i nDáil Éireann cailte aici'. In Article 22, 'All matters in each House shall ... be determined by a majority of the votes of the members present' is translated as 'Socrófar gach ceist i ngach Tigh ... le mór-áireamh de vótanna na mball atá láithreach'. 'Féadfidh an coróinéir glaca le breith-fhocal an mhóráirimh' translates 'the coroner may accept the verdict of the majority' in s7(1) of the Coroners (Amendment) Act, 1927. Finally, 'furmhór' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'majority' in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann.

i dtacaíocht leis 'Right of support' is translated as 'ceart tacaíochta' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Rinne sé tacaíocht liom' is translated as 'he stood by me' in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen translates 'i dtacaidheacht' as 'by way of security, as guarantee'. 'Taca' is translated as 'prop, support' in DIL – see the commentary on Article 12.8. See also the commentary on Article 12.10.4°.

Tig le This is one of the phrases which expresses 'may' in the Constitution – see the commentary on Article 12.4.4°.

Commentary

comhairle a ghlacadh le 'Comhairle a ghlacadh' is translated as 'to take advice' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'dul i gcomhairle le duine' as 'to take counsel with someone'. 'Consultation' is translated as 'comhchomhairle' in Téarmaí Dlí. ‘Comhairle’ translates ‘consultation’ in the heading of Part II of the Protection of Employment Act, 1977, where the Margin Title of s9, ‘Obligation on employer to consult employees’ representatives’, is translated as ‘Oibleagáid ar fhostóir dul i gcomhairle le hionadaithe fostaithe’, while in s9(1) ‘he shall initiate consultations with employees’ representatives’ is translated as ‘rachaidh sé ... i ndáil chomhairle le hionadaithe fostaithe’. In Article 1 of the Schedule to the Bretton Woods Agreement Act, 1957, ‘the machinery for consultation’ is translated as ‘an gléasra le haghaidh comhchomhairle’. ‘The Minister may ... by order ... and after consultation with the council of any urban district’ is translated as ‘féadfaidh an tAire le hordú ... agus tar éis dó dul i gcomhairle le comhairle an cheantair uirbigh’ in s155(1) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981. Similarly, in s24(2) of the Veterinary Surgeons Act, 1931, ‘or such other date as the Minister, after consultation with the Council may think proper to specify in such notice’ is translated as ‘no ar pé dáta eile is oiriúnach leis an Aire a luadh sa bhfógra san tar éis do dul i gcomhairle leis an gComhairle’. In Article III of the Schedule to the International Development Association (Special Action Account) Act, 1978, ‘Consultation’ in the title is translated as ‘Comhchomhairleachan’. In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973), ‘after consultation with’ is translated as ‘tar éis dul i gcomhairle le’ while ‘after consultations’ is translated as ‘tar éis dóibh a bheith i ndáil chomhairle’.

Looking at early Acts, in s11(1) of the Damage to Property (Compensation) Act, 1923, ‘in accordance with a scale to be prepared by the Minister for Finance in consultation with the Law Officer of Saorstát Éireann’ is translated as ‘do réir scála a ullmhófar ag an Aire Airgid i gcomhairle le Dlí-oifigeach Shaorstáit Éireann’. ‘Dul i gcomhairle le’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating ‘consult’ in translations for ‘Oifig an Phuist’, ‘rialacháin do léigheamh’ translating ‘to consult regulations’ (cited from the same source). ‘After consultation (of books)’ is cited as being translated as ‘ar bheith réidh leo’ in translations for the Department of Education.

a chomóradh See the commentary on Articles 13.2.1° and 31.8. Note that the verb ‘comóir’ expresses ‘summon’ in the first subsection of this section. In s10(5) of the Fourth Schedule to the Foyle Fisheries Act, 1952, ‘The Commission may at any time convene a meeting of the Advisory Council’ is translated as ‘Féadfaidh an Coimisiún tráth ar bith cruinniú den Chomhairle Chomhairlitheach a chomóradh’, with ‘Féadfaidh Uachtarán ... na Comhairle cruinniú den Chomhairle a ghairm ar a thionscnamh féin’ translating ‘The President ... of the Council may convene a meeting of the Council on his own initiative’ in s11 of the Second Schedule to the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978. ‘Féadfaidh aon chúigear comhaltaí den Bhord ... cruinniú den Bhord a ghairm’ translates ‘any five members of the Board may ... convene a meeting of the Board’ in s12(2) of the Second Schedule to the Nurses Act, 1985. In s86(1) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), ‘the Clerk ... shall convene a meeting for the subsequent day’ is translated as ‘déanfaidh an Cléireach ... cruinniú a chomóradh le haghaidh lae dá éis sin’.

See the commentary on Article 16.5 for ‘meeting’ in the Constitution. ‘Meeting’ is translated as ‘cruinniú’ in Téarmaí Dlí – ‘cruinniú a chomóradh’ is translated as ‘to convene a gathering’ in Ó Dónaill. Looking at early Acts, ‘The number of members necessary to constitute a meeting of either House’ is translated as ‘an mó ball a dhéanfaidh cruinniú dleathach d’aon Tigh’ in Article 22 of the 1922 Constitution. ‘The first meeting of the Council shall be a quarterly meeting and shall be held at noon on the appointed day’ is translated as ‘Beidh céad-cruinniú na Comhairle ina chruinniú chinn ráithe agus comófar é um meán lae ar an lá ceaptha’ in s6(1) of the Cork City Management Act, 1929. In s19(1) of the Sligo Lighting and Electric Power Act, 1924, ‘the quorum of a General Meeting of shareholders shall consist of shareholders to the number of not less than ten present in person or by proxy’ is translated as ‘is é méid is quorum do Thionól Choitiann de scaireánaigh ná deichniúr scaireánach ar a luíod agus iad i láthair i bpearsain no tré leas-vótálaithe’, ‘in the case of an Extraordinary Meeting’ being translated as ‘i gcás Tionóil Nea-ghnáthaigh’. In s30(3) of the Electoral Act, 1923, ‘for the purpose of holding a public meeting in furtherance of his candidature’ is translated as ‘Chun cóthálán puiblí do chomóra ar mhaithe len’ iarrthóireacht féin’, ‘for the purposes of the meeting’ being translated as ‘chun crícheanna an chótháláin’. Ó Dónaill gives ‘comhthionól’ as the standard form of the headword ‘cothálán’, Dinneen translating ‘cóimhthionól’ principally as ‘assembly, meeting’ and DÍL citing ‘comhthionól’ (‘act of collecting together, assembling ..., assembly’) from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles onwards, including ‘bátar Ulaid i comthinól i nEmuin Macha in tan brethae in mac’ (‘The men of Ulster were assembled in Emuin Macha when her son was born’) from the story of the Birth of Cú Chulainn in the early twelfth-century manuscript Leabhar na hUidhre.

Looking at ‘convene’ in early Acts, in Article 38 of the 1922 Constitution, ‘a Joint Sitting of the Members of both Houses may ... be convened’ is translated as ‘féadfar Co-shuidhe de Bhaill an dá Thighe do thabhairt le chéile’. ‘Every Local Court-Martial shall be convened by the Adjutant-General’ is translated as ‘Isé an tArd-Chongantóir ... a chó-ghairmfidh gach Arm-Chúirt Áitiúil’ in s92(1) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, the ‘Convening Officer’ being styled ‘an tOifigeach Có-ghairme’ in subsection 4. ‘Gairm le chéile’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating ‘convene’ in translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health.

uair ar bith In s14 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997) ‘the Dáil may, at any time, ...’ is translated as ‘féadfaidh an Dáil, aon uair’. In s58(10)(b), ‘the Ceann Comhairle may at any time ...’ is translated as ‘féadfaidh an Ceann Comhairle am ar bith’ while in s116 ‘a Committee of the whole Dáil may at any time’ is translated as ‘féadfaidh Coiste den Dáil uile, tráth ar bith’. While one finds ‘aon tráth’ in Acts of the 1960s and 1970s, ‘tráth ar bith’ translates ‘at any time’ in the more recent Acts. See further the commentary on Article 13.7.2°, particularly for citations from early Acts.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that ‘tráth’ connotes a ‘period of time’ as against ‘uair’, ‘time’, which he feels better suits this context. Professor Ó Murchú feels that ‘tráth éigin’ is more open than ‘uair éigin’, for example, that ‘uair’ is more limited and more definite in that a point of time is involved. 'Tráth éigin' would have the sense of 'when I get a chance, a period of time, to do it'. 'Tráth' has the secondary sense of 'meal', for example, the stretch of time involved in having a meal, 'tráth' also having the ecclesiastical sense of 'hour' in 'na trátha canónta, the canonical hours', 'tráth easpartan, the hour of vespers', etc. 'Tráth nóna' originally had the sense of 'canonical hour of none', but is used in the general sense of 'evening'. According to Rudolf Thurneysen, 'tri tráth' was originally 'from one hour to the second recurrence of the same, two full days and nights', but was later used for 'three full days' – see DIL s.v. 'tráth'.

ceachtar de Thithe an Oireachtas, nó iad araon In s101(3) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'a member of either House' is translated as 'comhalta de cheachtar Teach'. In s101(1) 'proceedings of both Houses' is translated as 'imeachtaí an dá Theach'. Turning to the Acts, in s1 of the Committees of the Houses of the Oireachtas (Privilege and Procedure) Act, 1976, 'a committee appointed by either House of the Oireachtas or jointly by both Houses of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'coiste arna cheapadh ag ceachtar Teach den Oireachtas nó arna cheapadh ag dhá Theach an Oireachtais i gcomhar'. In s8 of the International Health Bodies (Corporate Status) Act, 1971, 'to be laid before both Houses of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'go leagfar faoi bhráid gach Ti den Oireachtas'. See further the commentary on Article 20.3.

Tig le This is one of the phrases which expresses 'may' in the Constitution – see the commentary on Article 12.4.4°.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Every Bill ... shall require the signature of the President' is expressed as 'Gach Bille ... ní foláir lámh an Uachtaráin a bheith leis' ('every Bill ... (it) must have the signature of the President') in the Irish text.
- 2 'For its enactment into law' is expressed as 'chun é a achtú ina dhlí' ('to / in order to enact it into law') in the Irish text.

Commentary

a ritear Note that we find no relative particle before 'rithear' – nor before 'achtú' – in the original text. Regarding 'rith', 'pass', see s153 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997) where 'Vouching of Bills passed by the Dáil' is translated as 'Billí a ritheadh ag an Dáil a dheimhniú', and the following section, where 'Such true copy of a Bill, passed as aforesaid ... shall be ...' is translated as 'Déanfar an chóip dhílis sin de Bhille a ritheadh mar a dúradh ...'. See the commentary on Article 17.2 regarding 'rith'.

'Rith' translates 'to pass', as regards legislation, in the very first Act of the Irish Free State, 'rithfidh Oireachtas agus Ard-Chomhairle Shaorstáit Éireann fé seach pé reachtúchán eile' translating 'the Parliament and the Executive Council of the Irish Free State shall respectively pass such further legislation' in s2 of the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922. 'Any Bill passed or deemed to have been passed by both Houses may be suspended' is translated as 'Aon Bhille a bheidh no a tuigfear a bheith rithite ag an dá Thigh, féadfar é chur ar fionraoi' in Article 47 of the 1922 Constitution. In s9(1) of the Referendum Act, 1942, 'Whenever a Bill containing a proposal for the amendment of the Constitution shall have been passed, or deemed to have been passed, by both Houses of the Oireachtas, and Dáil Éireann is dissolved' is translated as 'Aon uair a bheidh Bille ina mbeidh togra chun an Bunreacht do leasú rithite no is tuigthe Bille den tsórt san do bheith rithite ag dhá Thigh an Oireachtais agus a scuirfear Dáil Éireann'. In s1(b) of the Referendum (Amendment) Act, 1959, however, we find 'the Bill containing such proposal passed or deemed to have been passed by both Houses of the Oireachtas' translated as '(tríd) an mBille ina mbeidh an togra sin agus a bheidh rite nó a mheasfar a bheith rite ag dhá Theach an Oireachtais', the same English sentence being translated as '(tríd) an mBille ina bhfuil an togra sin agus a ritheadh ag dhá Theach an Oireachtais' in s71(1)(b) of the Electoral Act, 1963. Note, finally, that 'agreement to pass into law' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'aontú go ndéanfaí dlí de' in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann. See the commentary on Article 12.6.2° as regards 'deem'.

lámh 'Do lámh a chur le rud' is translated as 'to sign something' in Ó Dónaill. 'Cuirim fá'm lámh é' is translated as 'I sign it' in Dinneen. 'I sign' is translated as 'sínim' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'signature' translated as 'siniú'. In s9(2) of the Údarás na Gaeltachta Act, 1979, for example, 'The seal of an tÚdarás shall be authenticated by the signature of the chairman of an tÚdarás' is translated as 'Fordheimhneofar séala an Údaráis le síniú chathaoirleach an Údaráis'. 'It shall not be necessary to prove the signature of such Registrar' is translated as 'ní gá síghniú an Chláraitheora san do chruthú' in s13(4) of the Enforcement of Law (Occasional Powers) Act, 1923. See the commentary on Articles 12.8 and 12.10.3°.

ní foláir This phrase has the sense of 'must' and is one of the ways of expressing the sense of 'shall' in the Constitution – see the commentary on Article 11. The verb 'ceangail' generally translates 'require' in the modern Acts. In s49 (Table) of the Finance Act, 1990, for example, 'A return for any period for which a return is required to be made under this section shall be made within nine months' is translated as 'Ní foláir tuairisceán d'aon tréimhse a gceanglaítear tuairisceán a thabhairt ina leith faoin alt seo a thabhairt laistigh de naoi mí'. In s5(1) of the First Schedule to the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, 'Paragraph 4 shall not require the exclusion ...' is translated as 'Ní cheanglóidh mír 4 go n-eisiafar ...'. In s117 of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, 'the matter so required to be notified' is translated as '(ar) an ábhar a gceanglaítear é a fhógairt amhlaidh' and in s7 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1992, 'if the vessel is required to be provided with a radiotelegraph' is translated as 'má cheanglaítear fearas raidió-theileagraif ... a bheith ar an soitheach'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that 'ceanglaítear' may not readily be understood in this context without an accompanying indirect object, i.e. 'ceanglaítear orainn, etc.'

The phrase 'ní mór' also translates 'require' in the Acts. 'And shall require the consent ... of the company to which the distribution is made' is translated as 'agus ní mór toiliú na cuideachta lena ndéanfar an dáileadh a fháil' in s47(3) of the Finance Act, 1983, and 'provided that ... any amendment modifying the loss-sharing arrangement ... shall require the affirmative vote of the Governor of each such member' is translated as 'ar choinnioll ... i gcás aon leasú a mhodhnóidh an chomhshocraíocht um páirtíú i gcaillteanas ... nach mór vóta dearfach ó Rialtóir gach baill den sórt sin' in Article 59(a) of the Schedule to the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency Act, 1988.

'Is gá', along with translating 'is necessary', sometimes translates 'require' in the Acts – see s29(1)(b) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978, for example, where 'a certificate of experience considered by the Council to be equivalent to that required for formal qualification' is translated as 'deimhniú taithí a mheasann an Chomhairle a bheith comhionann leis an gceann is gá le haghaidh cáilíochta foirmiúla'. 'Teastaigh' is sometimes used to translate 'require' – see s58(6) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), for example, where 'Any decision taken by the Committee ... shall require the support of three-quarters of the members present' is translated as 'Beidh tacaíocht thrí cheathrú de na comhaltai a bheidh i láthair ... ag teastáil i gcomhair aon chinnidh a ghlacfaidh an Coiste'.

'Require' is a term occurring very frequently in the Acts and was translated in many different ways in early legislation. 'Aon fhógra nách foláir a sheirbheáil ar shealbhoir do réir an ailt seo' translates 'Any notice required by this section to be served on an occupier' in s2(4) of the Civic Guard (Acquisition of Premises) Act, 1923. In s1(1), 'Whenever the Minister for Home Affairs shall require the Commissioners to provide accommodation' is translated as 'Aon uair a ordóidh an tAire um Ghnóthaí Dúithche do sna Coimisinéirí áit a sholáthar'. In Article 6 of the 1922 Constitution, 'and may make an order requiring the person in whose custody such person shall be detained to produce the body of the person so detained before such Court' is translated as 'agus féadfaid ordú do dhéanamh á chur d'fhiachaibh ar an nduine atá ag cimeád an duine sin corp an duine atá i gcimeád do thabhairt i láthair na Cúirte', while in s2(2) of the Adaptation of Enactments Act, 1922, 'where the context so admits or requires' is translated as 'nuair a cheaduinn no a éilíonn an co-théacs é'.

In s18(1) of the Finance Act, 1923, 'Every provision in any Act to which this section applies requiring a bond to be entered into' is translated as 'Gach foráil, a iarrann go raghfí fé bhanna agus atá in aon Acht le n-a mbaineann an t-alt so'. 'A theastuinn de dheascaibh' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'required as a consequence of' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1925, p. 1143, and in Bill 43 of 1926. 'Subject to such conditions as in their ... opinion justice may require' is translated as 'fé sna coinníollacha san is dó leo-san ... is gá chun ceart do shásamh' in s25(6)(f) of the Agricultural Credit Act, 1927, 'fé mar is gá é' translating 'as occasion requires' in s7(1) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1927. Finally, the modern term generally translating 'require' today, 'ceangail', occurs in s2(2) of the Seanad Electoral Act, 1928, where 'and to do such other matters and things in respect of such election as he is required by this Act to do' is translated as 'agus pé nithe agus rudaí eile do dhéanamh i dtaobh an toghacháin sin a cheanglann an tAcht so air do dhéanamh'.

achtú ina dhlí 'Achtáim' is translated as 'I enact' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Dlí a achtú' is translated as 'to enact a law' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'achtaigh' as 'enact, decree' – see further the commentary on Article 50.1. In s4 of the Local Government (Rateability of Rents) (Abolition) Act, 1971, 'in anticipation of the enactment of this Act' is translated as 'in oirichill an tAcht seo a achtú'. 'An Act to enact a Constitution for the Irish Free State', in the Long Title of the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922, is translated as 'Acht chun Bun-reacht do Shaorstát Éireann d'achtú', and 'decrees and enacts as follows', in the Preamble, is translated as 'dineann sí a reachtú agus a achtú mar leanas'. See further the commentary on Article 15.4.2°.

Regarding 'ina dhlí', see s154 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997) where '... the agreement of the Seanad to the passing of the Bill into law' is translated as '... go gcomhaontóidh an Seanad le dlí a dhéanamh den Bhille'. 'D'aon dlí a déanfar fé' translates 'of any law made thereunder' in s2 of the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922. Note that 'the date of the passing of this Act and the date of the passing into law by the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland of legislation to give statutory effect to the said Agreement' is translated as 'dáta riththe an Achta so agus an dáta ar a ndéanfaidh Párlimint Ríocht Aontuithé na Breataine Móire agus Thuaiscirt Éireann reachtúchán do rith mar dhlí chun éifeacht reachtúil do thabhairt don Chó-aontú san' in s2(1) of the Veterinary Surgeons Act, 1931.

- 2 'Shall' is again expressed as 'ní foláir' ('must') in the Irish text.

a fhógairt Note that the particle 'a' does not precede 'fhógairt' in the original text. Note also that we find 'promulgate' in Article 24.4.2<sup>o</sup>, following the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1942, where 'shall be promulgated by him as a law' is rendered as 'ní foláir dó é a fhógairt ina dhlí'.

'Fógraím' is translated as 'I pronounce (i.e. judgment)' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Fógair' is translated as 'call out, proclaim' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'dlí a fhógairt' as 'to promulgate a law'. 'Declare, announce, make known' are some of the other senses of 'fógair' in Ó Dónaill, 'fógairt dlí' being translated as 'promulgation of law' there – see further the commentary on Article 25.1. L. Mc Cionnaith s.v. 'promulgate', refers the reader to 'announce, spread, advance'. 'Promulgate' is translated as 'foillsiú' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1924, p. 696, and is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'craoladh' in translations for the Department of Defence. De Bhaldráithe translates 'promulgate' as (1) 'fógraím (dlí)' and (2) 'craolaim, scaipim, leathnaím (nuacht, smaoiniamh)'.

1530 [from Latin promulgat-, promulgare to expose to public view ...] To make known by public declaration; to publish; esp. to disseminate (some creed or belief), or to proclaim (some law, decree, or tidings).

As we see from this entry, the earliest known occurrence of the word 'promulgate' is in 1530. In DIL s.v. 'fúacair', the Old Irish form of 'fógair', examples of this verb in the sense of 'proclaims, announces, makes known, generally of important or authoritative statements' are cited from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards, including 'ropridchad dúib céssad Crist amal adcethe vel forócrad dúib amal bid fiadib nocrochthe' ('Christ's Passion hath been preached to you as though it were seen; or it has been announced to you as if He had been crucified before you') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. The Modern Irish word 'fógra' encompasses the sense of advertisement in both newspaper, radio and television.

A different term, 'forus', is found in the Annals of Ulster for the year 783 recording the promulgation of the law of Patrick in Cruachu by Dub da Leithe (abbot of Armagh) and Tipraite son of Tadc (king of Connacht) – i.e. 'Forus Cano Patricii hi Cruachnibh' (see Fergus Kelly, op. cit., pp. 22 and 196, n. 36). This word is also used of promulgation of judgements – see Fergus Kelly, op. cit., p. 195:

The actual judgement is formulated by the judges, but it seems that it is promulgated by the dignitaries of the back-court i.e. the king (in secular matters), the bishop (in ecclesiastical matters) or the chief poet (in poetical matters).

In one early Irish law-tract the 'dignitaries of the back-court' are described as 'the cliff which is behind the courts for judgement and for promulgation' ('... fri breth 7 forus', ibid., p. 195, n. 34). As 'forus' also means 'foundation, basis', Professor Kelly remarks that the announcement of the judgement 'may be accompanied by an exposition of the basis upon which the judgement had been decided' (ibid., p. 196). According to DIL s.v. 'forus', the explanations of this word frequent in early Irish laws only show that the original meaning of the word was then unknown.

dá ndéanfaidh 'Dá' is made up of 'de' + 'a', and is translated as 'of those who(m), of that which' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'iomlán dá mbaineann linn, all (of those) who are connected with us' and 'gach pingin dá bhfuair sé, every penny he got'. See s18(3) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), where 'The Clerk shall cause to be made an official translation into English of every law enacted by the Oireachtas in Irish' is translated as 'Cuirfidh an Cléireach faoi deara go ndéanfar tiontú oifigiúil go Béarla ar gach dlí dá n-achtaíonn an tOireachtas sa Ghaeilge'. Note how 'dá' does not accompany 'gach' in s17(4) of the Juries Act, 1976, for example, where 'Every challenge of a juror shall be made' is translated as 'Gach agóid a dhéanfar in aghaidh giúróra déanfar é ...', or in s13 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1970, where 'Every order made by the Minister under this Act shall be laid before each House of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'Gach ordú a dhéanfaidh an tAire faoin Acht seo leagfar é faoi bhráid gach Tí den Oireachtas'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that while 'gach a' = 'each' ('gach ceann ann féin' [each one in itself]) 'gach dá' = 'every' ('gach ceann agus iad ar fad san áireamh' [each one and they all included]). With 'gach dá', the President could, for example, promulgate a couple of laws together as against 'gach a', which would have the sense of 'each one separately'. Generally in the modern Acts, however, 'gach a' alone is found.

The supreme command of the Defence Forces is hereby vested in the President.

- 1 'The supreme command of the Defence Forces is vested in' is expressed as 'cuirtear na Fórsaí Cosanta faoi ardcheannas' ('the Defence Forces are put under the supreme command') in the Irish text, 'The supreme command' governing 'the Defence Forces' in the English text whereas 'ardcheannas' governs 'Uachtarán' in the Irish text, 'Uachtarán' rather than 'Fórsaí Cosanta' being in the genitive case.
- 2 'Supreme' is expressed as 'ard-' ('high') in the Irish text.
- 3 'The Defence Forces' are officially styled by the Army itself as 'Óglaigh na hÉireann' in Irish, as against 'na Fórsaí Cosanta'.

Commentary

na Fórsaí Cosanta While 'Defence Force Regulations' and 'Defence Force' are respectively translated as 'Rialacháin Fhórsaí Cosanta' and 'Fórsaí cosanta' in the English-Irish Dictionary of Military and Related Terms, published by the Training Section of the Army Headquarters, Department of Defence, 1969 (hereinafter referred to as Téarmaí Mileata), 'The Defence Forces' is translated therein as 'Óglaigh na hÉireann'. 'Armed forces' ('fórsaí armtha') is the term found in Article 46 of the 1922 Constitution. The Act of 3 August 1923, to make temporary provisions in relation to the defence of Saorstát Éireann, and which refers in its opening paragraph to the above Article 46, is cited as 'the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923', 'an tAcht Fórsaí Cosanta (Forálacha Sealadacha), 1923'. Section 4 of that Act, under the title 'Establishment of Defence Forces' ('Bunú Fórsaí Cosanta'), deals with 'Raising and number of Defence Forces', which Margin Title is translated as 'Tógáil agus uimhir na bhFórsaí Cosanta'. The section commences as follows:

It shall be lawful for the Executive Council to raise and maintain an armed force to be called Óglaigh na hÉireann (hereinafter referred to as the Forces) ...

Beidh sé dleathach don Ard-Chomhairle fórsa armtha do thógáil agus do choinneáil suas, fórsa dá ngairmtear Óglaigh na hÉireann (dá ngairmtear na Fórsaí ina dhiaidh seo anso).

'Beidh árd-cheannas na bhFórsaí ... dílsithe san Ard-Chomhairle' translates 'The command in chief of ... the Forces ... shall be vested in the Executive Council' in s5. 'A Defence Force List or Defence Force Gazette ... shall be evidence of the status and rank of the officers therein mentioned', in s196(5), is translated as 'Líost Fórsa Cosanta no Iris Fórsa Cosanta ... is fianaise é ar staid agus ar chéim na n-oifigeach a luadhann ann'. Section 16 of the Defence Act, 1954, reads as follows:

It shall be lawful for the Government to raise ... and maintain defence forces to be called and known as Óglaigh na hÉireann or (in English) the Defence Forces. Is dleathach don Rialtas fórsaí cosanta dá ngairmtear agus ar a dtabharfar Óglaigh na hÉireann nó (i mBéarla) the Defence Forces a bhunú ... agus a chothabháil.

'Óglaigh na hÉireann' translates 'the Defence Forces' in s4(f)(1) of the First Schedule to the Criminal Justice Act, 1990.

Ó Dónaill translates 'Óglaigh na hÉireann' as 'the Irish Volunteers', translating 'óglaigh' as (1) 'Literature: (a) young man. (b) (young) warrior. (2) Literature: attendant, servant; vassal. (3) Military: volunteer'. Téarmaí Mileata also translates 'volunteer' as 'óglaigh'. Dinneen translates 'óglaigh na hÉireann' as 'the Irish Volunteers' and 'óglaigh armtha' (cf. 'Amhrán na bhFiann') as 'armed soldiers'. The Irish Republican Army today styles itself 'Óglaigh na hÉireann' in Irish. Earlier 'óclach', according to DIL, is a formation from 'óc', 'young', analogous to 'echlach', 'midlach', later analysed as 'óc' plus 'laech', 'warrior'. DIL translates 'óclach' as (a) 'a young man', (b) 'generally a young warrior and hence often a warrior, soldier, in wide sense', citing 'Cuchulaind ... in t-ócláech a Murtemne' (i.e. Cú Chulaind, the warrior from Muirthemne), from the story on which Yeats based his play The Only Jealousy of Emer, i.e. The Wasting Sickness of Cú Chulaind.

Finally, 'na Fórsaí' is translated as 'the forces, troops' in Ó Dónaill, who does not cite 'na Fórsaí Cosanta'. Ó Dónaill does, however, cite 'arm cosanta', which phrase is translated as 'defence force', s.v. 'cosaint', 'defence, protection'.

ardcheannas 'Ardcheannas' is translated as (1) 'supremacy' and (2) '(Military) high command' in Ó Dónaill, being a compound of 'ard', 'high', and 'ceannas', translated as 'headship, sovereignty' and 'authority, command' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'i gceannas airm, in command of an army'. The difference in Irish terminology between 'high' and 'supreme' is exemplified in the Irish legal terms for 'the High-Court', 'an Ard-Chúirt', as against 'the Supreme Court', 'an Chúirt Uachtarach'. 'To enter into an Agreement for co-operation or reciprocal concession with any Government or Authorities supreme, municipal or otherwise' is translated as 'Comhaontú a dhéanamh le haghaidh comhoibrithe nó deonaíocht chomharaióchta le haon Rialtas nó le haon Údarás uachtaracha, bardasacha nó eile' in s17(g) of the Dublin Cemeteries Committee Act, 1970, for example. 'Uachtarach' is translated as (1) 'upper, top' and (2) 'higher, superior' in Ó Dónaill, who cites

'Oifigeach Uachtarach, superior officer'. Note, however, that 'ardchomhairle' is translated as 'supreme council' in Ó Dónaill, with 'ardchumhacht' being translated as 'supreme power' and 'high power'. On the Dáil Order Paper of 4/2/1969, 'Soviet of Nationalities of Supreme Soviet' is translated as 'Sóivéid Náisiún na hArdsoivéide'.

In Téarmaí Mileata, in accordance with the present Article, 'Supreme Command of the Forces' is translated as 'Ardcheannas na bhFórsaí'. 'Including the Regulation of the Supreme Command of the Defence Forces', in the Long Title of the Defence Forces Act, 1937 – following on the Constitution – is translated as 'agus ortha san Feidhmiú Ard-Cheannais na bhFórsaí Cosanta do Rialáil'. In s17(1) of the Defence Act, 1954, reference is made merely to 'the military command of the Defence Forces', 'ceannas míleata Óglaigh na hÉireann', and 'under the direction of the President', 'faoi threorú an Uachtaráin'. Section 14 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, reads as follows:

The executive military command and inspection of the Forces ... may ... be vested in such officer ... of the Forces as may be appointed by the Executive Council. Féadfar ... feidhm-cheannas míleata agus cigireacht na bhFórsaí ... do dhílsiú i pé oifigeach ... de sna Fórsaí a cheapfidh an Ard-Chomhairle.

'Ceannasuíocht' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'command' in translations for the Department of Defence.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that as 'ardcheannas' is now established and recognised in the sense involved here, that it is preferable to 'ceannas uachtarach', with 'uachtarach' suiting better a case where a clear distinction is involved between it and lower ranks. Professor Ó Murchú remarks, as regards 'ceannas' without the following preposition 'ar' in the translation below, that 'ceannas Óglaigh na hÉireann' could be read as the command or authority which that force would have rather than the command of the force.

cuirfeair faoi 'Cuir faoi' is translated as 'put under' in Ó Dónaill; Dinneen, like Ó Dónaill, gives examples of 'cuir' with 'fá' ('faoi') and noun, in the sense of 'to bind', 'restrain' – 'cuirim fá smacht iad, I reduce them to discipline' and 'cuirim duine fá choimirce, I place one under the protection of'.

In Téarmaí Dlí 'I vest' is translated as 'dílsím'. In the Third Schedule to the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, 'a cottage ... vested in the person' is translated as 'iostán ... a dílsíodh don duine', for example, and in the First Schedule to the Companies Act, 1963, 'to delegate all or any of the powers, authorities and discretions vested in him' is translated as 'na cumhachtaí, na húdaráis agus na treoracha a dhílsítear dó a tharmligean'. In s12 of the Minerals Development Act, 1979, 'The exclusive right of working minerals is hereby vested in the Minister' is translated as 'Déantar leis seo an ceart eisiatach chun mianraí a oibriú a dhílsiú don Aire', 'Dílsítear leis seo don Bhanc Ceannais an tsócmhainn' translating 'The asset ... is hereby vested in the Central Bank' in s5(1) of the Bretton Woods Agreements (Amendment) Act, 1969, and 'Déantar leis seo an Currach a dhílsiú don Aire' translating 'The Currach ... is hereby vested in the Minister' in s2 of the Currach of Kildare Act, 1961.

Looking at early Acts, 'to vest in the Trust any land and other property which is ... to be transferred to the Trust' is translated as 'chun aon talamh agus maoin eile atá len' aistriú chun an Chóluchta ... do dhílsiú sa Chólucht' in the Preamble to the Land Trust Powers Act, 1923. In s7(2)(a) of the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'all the property of such Board ... shall pass to and vest in and be held in trust for the Council of the County' is translated as 'tíocfidh maoin uile an Bhúird ... i seilbh agus i ndílse agus i gcimeád ar iontaoibh do Chomhairle na Contae'. In s7(2) of the Finance Act, 1923, however, 'the Under-Sheriff shall ... have all such rights, powers and duties as are for the time being vested in him by law' is translated as 'beidh ag an bhFo-Shirriamh ... na ceartanna, na comhachtanna agus na dualgaisí uile sin a bheidh aige de thurus na huair do réir dlí', while in s2(4) of the District Justices (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'A District Justice shall ... have all the powers, authorities and duties which were immediately before the passing of this Act vested in or imposed on a Justice of the Peace' is translated as 'beidh ag Giúistís Dúithche gach comhacht, údarás agus dualgas a bhí, díreach roimh aimsir rithe an Achta so, bronnta no curtha ar Ghiúistís Síochána'. 'Atá agam' translates 'vested in me' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 1927, p. 569. Finally, as we saw in relation to Article 10.1, in Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution, 'All the lands ... hitherto vested in the State' is translated as 'Gach talamh ... dá raibh go dtí so i seilbh an Stáit' and in Article 51, 'The Executive Authority of the Irish Free State is hereby declared to be vested in the King' is translated as 'Fógartar leis seo Údarás Feidhmiúcháin Shaorstáit Éireann do bheith sealbhuithe sa Rí'.

ENGLISH TEXT

The exercise of the supreme command of the Defence Forces shall be regulated by law.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 As in the previous section, 'ardcheannas' (lit. 'high-command') expresses 'supreme command' and 'the Defence Forces' is expressed as 'na Fórsaí Cosanta', the Army's official Irish term being 'Óglaigh na hÉireann'.

- 2 'The exercise of ...' is expressed as 'an modh ar a n-oibreofar' ('the manner in which ... will be operated') in the Irish text, 'oibrigh' again expressing 'exercise'.
- 3 'Regulate' is again expressed by 'rialáigh', the Irish legal term for 'control'/'rule'.

Commentary

a n-oibreofar The future passive of 'oibrigh', 'a n-oibreofar' being the form in the original text. 'Oibrim' is translated as 'I operate' in Téarmaí Dlí – see the commentary on Article 3 regarding 'feidhmigh' v. 'oibrigh'. 'That a right or the exercise of a right conferred by section 12 ... is restricted' is translated as 'go bhfuil ceart nó feidhmíú cirt a thugtar le halt 12 ... srianta' in s11(1) of the Sale of Foods and Supply of Services Act, 1980, for example. Looking at earlier Acts, 'chun feidhmíú do dhéanamh ar aon cheart fén Acht so' translates 'for the purpose of exercising any right under this Act' in s6(1) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1923. Finally, in s1 of the Indemnity (British Military) Act, 1923, 'in exercise or execution of any authority conferred on such person' is translated as 'i gcleachta nó i bhfeidhmíú aon údarais a bronnadh ... ar an duine sin'.

an modh 'Modh' is translated as 'mode, manner' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'ar an modh sin' as 'in that way, thus'. In the Acts, 'ar mhodh' mainly translates 'by way of' (e.g. 'a íoc ar mhodh cúitimh', 'to pay by way of compensation', in s13(1) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1992), 'in the nature of' (e.g. 'ar mhodh cíosa a fhaightear ó aon tailte', 'in the nature of a rent derived from any lands', in s17 (Table) of the Finance Act, 1990) and 'in a manner' (e.g. 'ar mhodh geografach', 'in a geographical manner', in s41(2) of the Schedule to the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1986).

rialófar The future passive of 'rialáigh', 'riaghlóchar' being the form in the original text. 'Rialáim' is translated as 'I control; I rule' in Téarmaí Dlí; 'rialáil' usually translating 'regulate' in the Acts – see the commentary on Article 12.5.

ar Literally 'on', but see Ó Dónaill s.v. 'ceannas', where 'i gceannas ar dhuine' is translated as 'in authority over someone'.

na Fórsaí Cosanta Literally 'the Defence Forces' – see the commentary on the previous section for 'Óglaigh na hÉireann' rendering 'the Defence Forces'.

An t-ardcheannas Literally 'the high-command' – see the commentary on the previous section.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Is ón Uachtarán a bheidh a ghairm ag gach oifigeach gairme de na Fórsaí Cosanta.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is from the President that every vocational/professional officer of the Defence Forces will have his calling/profession.

ENGLISH TEXT

All commissioned officers of the Defence Forces shall hold their commissions from the President.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Gairm', the term in the Irish text expressing 'commissioned' and 'commission', is ambiguous and is neither the term used by the Defence Forces themselves nor the term in general use.
- 2 'Hold' is expressed as 'a bheidh' ('have') in the Irish text.
- 3 As in the previous subsection and section, 'the Defence Forces' are styled 'na Fórsaí Cosanta' as against 'Óglaigh na hÉireann'.

Commentary

gairm ... oifigeach gairme 'Oifigeach gairme' is the form in the original text. 'Gairm' is the verbal noun of 'gair', 'call'. Ó Dónaill cites 'Military: An ghairm dheiridh, the last post'. As an example of 'gairm' in the sense of 'summons', Ó Dónaill cites 'gairm slógaidh, call to arms, mobilization' and as an example of 'gairm' in the sense of 'name, title; inaugural proclamation' he cites 'gairm rí, uaisleachta, title of king, of nobility'. Another set of senses included in Ó Dónaill refers to 'calling': (a) 'divine call, vocation', with Ó Dónaill citing 'gairm chrábhaidh, religious vocation'; (b) 'profession, occupation', with the citations 'do ghairm bheatha, one's mission in life, one's occupation' and 'tá gairm dochtúra aige, he is a doctor by profession'. 'Oifigeach gairme' is not cited in Ó Dónaill s.v. 'oifigeach', where 'oifigeach airm', 'army officer', is cited, as well as 'oifigeach coimisiúnta, neamhchoimisiúnta, commissioned, non-commissioned, officer' and 'oifigeach ceannais, commanding officer'.

'Gairm', genitive singular 'garma', as against Ó Dónaill's 'gairme', is translated as 'act of calling, appealing to, naming, summoning; call, summons, name, title, praise, reputation, honour, fame; calling, avocation or condition of life, vocation' in Dinneen who, s.v. 'oifigeach', merely cites 'oifigeach airm, military officer'. DIL s.v. 'gairm', includes (a) 'act of calling or summoning, a call, summons, cry'; (b) 'act of naming, calling'. (c) 'a name, title' – citing, for example, 'na garma chleachtar anois, mar atá Barún' – and (d) 'a calling, employment, profession'. See further the commentary on Article 40.2.1<sup>o</sup> where 'gairm uaisleachta' expresses 'title of nobility'.

'Commission' is translated as 'coimisiún' in Téarmaí Dlí, following the ninth Irish Legal Terms Order (S.I. No. 291 of 1950 – Terms relating to Companies Law). In Téarmaí Mileata 'commission' is translated as 'coimisiún, údarú, barántas', but 'coimisiún' alone is given in all the examples cited, such as 'Short-service commission, coimisiún gearrsheirbhíse' and 'to relinquish a commission, scarúint le coimisiún'. 'Commissioned officer' is translated as 'oifigeach coimisiúnta' in Téarmaí Mileata. The third decree of the Irish Provisional Government, 1922, was 'A Decree to authorise the issue of Commissions in the Army of Saorstát Éireann', 'Reacht chun tabhairt Choimisiún in Arm Shaorstáit Éireann d'údarú'. In s3(5) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'an officer commissioned or in pay as an officer of the Forces' is translated as 'oifigeach coimisiúnta no ar páigh mar oifigeach de sna Fórsaí', and in subsection (7), 'Non-Commissioned Officer' is translated as 'Oifigeach Nea-Choimisiúnta'. In s3(b) of the Defence Forces (Pensions) (Amendment) Act, 1968, 'non-commissioned officers' is translated as 'oifigeach neamhchoimisiúnta', while in s2(1)(b) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1992, 'commissioned naval rank' is translated as 'céim choimisiúnta chabhlaigh'. 'A commissioned officer of the Defence Forces of the State' is translated as 'oifigeach coimisiúnta d'Fhórsaí Cosanta an Stáit' in s41(6)(a) of the Air Navigation and Transport Act, 1988, 'oifigeach coimisiúnta d'Fhórsaí Cosanta Shaorstáit Éireann' translating 'a commissioned officer of the Defence Forces of Saorstát Éireann' in s64(a) of the Air Navigation and Transport Act, 1936. In s7 of the Fourth Schedule to the Defence Act, 1954, 'the resignation of their commissions by officers' is translated as 'éirí oifigeach as a gcoimisiún'.

Looking further at the early Acts, 'The expression "the forces" means any armed force ... the members of which by the terms of their commission, agreement, enlistment, enrolment, contract or otherwise ...', in s16 of the Army Pensions Act, 1923, is translated as 'Cialluíonn an focal "na fórsaí" aon fhórsaí armtha ... 'na mbeadh a mbaill ... do réir téarmaí a gcoimisiúin, a margaidh, a liostála, a gcláruithe, a gconnartha no éinní eile'. In s3(5) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'The expression "Officer" means any officer commissioned or in pay as an officer of the Forces' is translated as 'Cialluíonn an focal "Oifigeach" oifigeach coimisiúnta no ar páigh mar oifigeach de na Fórsaí' and in s3(7) thereof 'The expression "Non-Commissioned Officer" includes an acting non-commissioned officer' is translated as 'Foluíonn an focal "Oifigeach Nea-Choimisiúnta" oifigeach nea-choimisiúnta gníomhathach'. In s8(2) of the Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1924, 'and three military members being commissioned members of the said Defence Forces' is translated as 'agus triúr ball mileata, eadhon, baill choimisiúnta de sna Fórsaí Cosanta san'.

Note, finally, that L. Mc Cionnaith translates 'commissioned rank' as 'céim choimisiúnta', followed by the abbreviation for 'Terms from Staff of Dáil, Foclóir Oifigeamhail'.

a bheidh 'To hold office' and 'to hold the appointment of Adjutant-General' are translated respectively as 'bheith i seilbh oifige' and 'ceapachán Ardaidiúnaigh a shealbhú' in Téarmaí Mileata. 'All Officers of the Forces shall hold their commissions during the pleasure of the Executive Council', in s15 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, is translated as 'Sealbhóidh Oifigigh uile na bhFórsaí a gcoimisiúin faid is toil leis an Ard-Chomhairle'. 'And shall hold their employment on such terms and conditions as the board concerned shall ... determine' is translated as 'agus beidh siad i seilbh a bhfostaíochta ar cibé téarmaí agus coinníollacha a chinnefidh an bord áirithe' in s25(3) of the Fisheries Act, 1980, for example. In s5(1) of the Local Elections Postponement Act, 1922, 'shall hold office in all respects' is translated as 'sealbhóidh sé a oifig i ngach slí'. 'Beidh seilbh ag gach duine de bhaill mhíleata na Comhairle Cosanta ar an oifig sin an fhaid is toil leis an Ard-Chomhairle é' translates 'Each of the military members of the Council of Defence shall hold that office at the pleasure of the Executive Council'. Finally, 'comhacht ... chun talamh do bheith ar seilbh aige agus do chur dá lámh' translates 'power ... to hold and dispose of land' in s14(2) of the Currency Act, 1927.

Turning to modern Acts, in s13(4) of the Health Act, 1970, 'A chief executive shall hold his office on such terms ...' is translated as 'Sealbhóidh príomh-oifigeach feidhmiúcháin a oifig ar cibé téarmaí ...'. In s1(3)(b) of the Ministerial and Parliamentary Offices Act, 1972, 'the person ... had held the office of Deputy Chairman of Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'go raibh an duine ... i seilbh oifige mar Leas-Chathaoirleach Dháil Éireann'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú recommends keeping 'a bheidh' and simply substituting 'coimisiún'/'coimisiúnta' and 'Óglaigh na hÉireann' to bring the original text into line with current terminology, i.e. to read 'Is ón Uachtarán a bheidh a gcoimisiún ag oifigigh choimisiúnta uile Óglaigh na hÉireann'.

With this the President is given a right of pardon/absolving, and power to mitigate or to remit a punishment which is imposed on people in any court of criminal jurisdiction, but, apart from cases of death-sentence, that power of mitigation or remission may also be given by law to other authorities.

ENGLISH TEXT

The right of pardon and the power to commute or remit punishment imposed by any court exercising criminal jurisdiction are hereby vested in the President, but such power of commutation or remission may, except in capital cases, also be conferred by law on other authorities.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'To commute punishment', that is, to substitute one punishment for another, is expressed as 'chun maolaithe pionóis' ('to mitigate punishment') in the Irish text, with 'commutation' expressed as 'maolú' ('mitigation'); the Irish legal terms for 'commute' and 'commutation' respectively are 'iomalartaigh' and 'iomalairt', whereas 'maolaigh' and 'maolú' are the Irish legal terms for 'mitigate' and 'mitigation' respectively.
- 2 The right of pardon and the power to commute' is expressed as 'ceart maithiúnais, agus cumhacht chun maolaithe' ('a right of pardon, and power to remit') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Capital cases' is expressed as 'cásanna breithe báis' ('cases of death sentence') in the Irish text.
- 4 'Imposed by any court exercising criminal jurisdiction' is expressed as 'a ghearrtar ar dhaoine in aon chúirt dlínse coire' ('imposed on people in any court of criminal jurisdiction') in the Irish text.
- 5 'Right' and 'power' are given ('bheirtear do') to the President in the Irish text whereas they are vested in the President in the English text, the Irish text using the same verb to express 'confer'.

maolaithe The genitive singular form (after 'chun') of 'maolú', which verbal noun is translated as 'mitigation' in Téarmaí Dlí, 'maolaím' being translated as 'I mitigate'. 'Maolaigh' is translated principally as 'make, become, bare or bald' in Ó Dónaill, who includes the secondary sense of 'mitigate', following the abbreviation for 'Jurisprudence', and cites 'breith, pionós, a mhaolú, to mitigate a judgment, a penalty'. This is just one of a set of meanings of 'maolaigh' included by Ó Dónaill, others being 'decrease, slacken, moderate', 'abate' and 'modify'.

Henry Murdoch, A Dictionary of Irish Law, defines 'commute' as 'to substitute one punishment for another'. 'I commute' is translated as 'iomalartaím' and 'commutation' is translated as 'iomalairt' in Téarmaí Dlí, which words are based on 'malairt', 'change'. 'Iomalartaigh' is translated as 'commute, exchange' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'pianbhreith a iomlartú, to commute a sentence'. 'The power ... to commute or remit a punishment' is translated as 'An chumhacht ... pionós a iomlartú nó a loghadh' in s5(1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1990, following s23(1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1951, where 'the government may commute or remit ... any punishment imposed by a Court exercising criminal jurisdiction' is translated as 'féadfaidh an Rialtas aon pionós a bheas forchurtha ag Cúirt a fheidhmíos dlínse choiriúil d'iomalairtiú nó a loghadh'. 'Exercisable during the period for which the commutation or remission of his punishment is prohibited by subsection 1' is translated as 'infheidhmithe i gcaitheamh na tréimhse a mbeidh iomlartú nó loghadh a phionóis toirmiscthe le fo-alt (1)' in s5(3) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1990.

Looking at early Acts, in s21 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923 (Continuance and Amendment) Act, 1924, 'the prescribed officer may mitigate or remit such punishment or punishments or commute or reduce such award for any less punishment or punishments' is translated as 'féadfaidh an t-oifigeach orduithe an pionós no na pionóis sin do luíodú no do mhaitheamh no an gearra san d'atharú no d'isliú go dtí aon pionós nó pionóis is lú ná san'. 'Such annual sum by way of commutation as may be fixed by the Commissioners' is translated as 'pé suim bhliantúil, mar mhalairt íoca, a cheapfidh na Coimisinéirí' in s48 of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925, the Margin Title of that section, 'Power to commute tonnage and quayage rates in respect of steam trawlers and fishing vessels' being translated as 'Comhacht chun suim bhliantúil do chur in ionad rátaí tonnáiste agus céibhe ar scór tráiléirí gaile agus ártach iascaigh'.

cásanna breithe báis 'Breith bháis' is translated in Ó Dónaill as 'sentence of death' s.v. 'breith', 'judgment, decision'. 'Sentence', however, is translated as 'pianbhreith' in Téarmaí Dlí, which headword is translated as 'sentence' in Ó Dónaill also. 'Capital offence' and 'capital punishment' are respectively translated as 'cion báis' and 'pionós báis' in Téarmaí Dlí. As we see above, in s23(1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1951, 'Except in capital cases' is translated as 'Ach amháin i gcásanna lena ngabhann pionós báis', this same English phrase being translated, following this Article in part, as 'Lasmuich de chásanna breithe báis' in s33(1) of the Offences Against the State Act, 1939, and in s13(1) of the Constitution (Consequential Provisions) Act, 1937.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that 'breith bháis' in 'cásanna breithe báis' would be the standard expression of 'capital' in 'capital cases', referring to the following line by the eighteenth/nineteenth-century poet Seán na Ráithíneach, 'díotáil bháis ó láimh gach n-aoin ort' (translated by Professor Ó Murchú as 'and capital indictment has been signed by all against you'). Máirtín Ó Murchú also refers to the use of the verb 'daor' in this context, the basic sense of which is 'enslave', but which has the secondary sense of 'convict, condemn', Ó Dónaill citing 'daoradh chun báis iad, they were condemned to death'.

aon chúirt dlínse coire 'Cúirt dlínse achomaire' is translated as 'court of summary jurisdiction' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Dlínse' is translated as 'jurisdiction' in Ó Dónaill and 'dlíghinse' is translated as 'authority, jurisdiction' in Dinneen, who cites 'dlínse' followed by the abbreviation for Sean-chaint na nDéise, by the Most Rev. Dr Michael Sheehan (1906) – see the commentary on Article 3.

'Coir' is the Irish legal term for 'crime', and is translated as 'crime, offence, fault, transgression' in Ó Dónaill and as 'sin, crime, accusation, trespass' in Dinneen. 'Criminal' is translated as 'coiriúil' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'the Court of Criminal Appeal' is translated as 'an Chúirt Achomhairc Choiriúil'. As we see above, in s23(1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1951, 'a Court exercising criminal jurisdiction' is translated as 'Cúirt a fheidhmíós dlínse choiriúil'. 'The remission of any forfeiture or disqualification imposed by a Court exercising criminal jurisdiction' is translated as 'aon fhorghéilleadh nó dícháiliú a loghadh a d'fhorchuir Cúirt ag feidhmiú dlínse coiriúla di' in s5(e)(ii) of the Ombudsman Act, 1980.

Looking at earlier Acts regarding 'criminal', 'power to determine all matters and questions whether of law or fact, civil or criminal' is translated as 'comhacht chun socrúithe gach cúrsa agus gach ceiste bhaineas le dlí no le firinne, pe'ca sibhialta no coiriúil' in Article 64 of the 1922 Constitution. 'In all criminal cases before ... the Court of Criminal Appeal' is translated as 'i ngach cás coiriúil i láthair ... na Cúirte Athchomhairc Choiriúla' in s36(ii) of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924, 'suidheanna na Príomh-Chúirte Coiriúla do Bhaile Átha Cliath' translating 'the sittings of the Central Criminal Court for Dublin' in s36(iii). 'Criminal conversation' is translated as 'comhrá coiriúil' in s77A(ii) of the same Act. 'Cuirpe', genitive singular as attributive adjective, is found in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922, where 'For ... the maintenance of criminal lunatics confined in district lunatic asylums' is translated as 'chun cimeád suas na ngealt cuirpe a choinnítear i ngealtlanna ceantair' – 'gealt coiriúil' translates 'a criminal lunatic' in s9(6) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1925. Finally, 'For the Expenses of Criminal Prosecutions' is translated as 'Chun Costaisí Coir-phróiseacht' in Schedule B to the Appropriation Act, 1926.

ceart maithiúnais 'Maithiúnas' is translated as 'forgiveness, pardon' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'maithiúnas na bpeacaí, the forgiveness of sins', and as 'forgiveness, pardon, remission, release' in Dinneen. 'Maitheamnas' is based on 'maithem', the verbal noun of 'maithid', the original sense of which may be 'grants, concedes', according to DIL, wherein 'maithid' is translated as (a) 'remits, excuses (an obligation, penalty)', (b) 'pardons, forgives (an offence)', (c) 'remits, i.e. abates, withholds' and (d) 'gives up (claim to); renounces'.

'In no case shall persons condemned to death be deprived of the right of petition for pardon or reprieve' is translated as 'Ní dhéanfar i gcás ar bith ceart achainí ag iarraidh maithiúnais nó iomalairte a bhaint de dhaoine a bheidh daortha chun báis' in Article 75 of the Fourth Schedule to the Geneva Conventions Act, 1962. 'Pardon of the offence by the Minister' is translated as 'An tAire do mhaitheamh an chionta dho' in s96(2) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. 'Whenever ... the convicted person is granted a free pardon' is translated as 'Pé uair ... a deonfar saor-phardún don duine chiontuithe' in s19(4) of the Public Safety Act, 1927.

In Téarmaí Oifigiúla 'free pardon' is translated as 'saormhathúnas' (no source being given), and 'maitheamh' and 'maithiúnas a thabhairt do' are also cited without source. De Bhaldraithe gives 'pardún, maithiúnas' s.v. 'pardon' and, following the abbreviation for 'Jurisprudence', translates 'free pardon' as 'saormhathiúnas', 'to receive the King's pardon' as 'pardún a fháil ón rí' and 'general pardon' as 'pardún coiteann', translating 'I pardon' as 'maithim, tugaim pardún do'.

loghtha The genitive singular form (after 'chun') of 'loghadh', which is translated as 'remission (i.e. of a sentence)' in Téarmaí Dlí, 'loghaim' being translated as 'I remit (i.e. a sentence)'. Ó Dónaill translates 'logh' as 'remit, forgive' and cites 'peacaí, pionós, a loghadh, to remit sins, a penalty'. 'Loghaim' is translated as 'I forgive, remit, pardon, indulge' in Dinneen. See further the commentary on Article 21.1.1°.

'The Executive Council may ... at any time freely pardon any person convicted by the Tribunal for any offence and wholly remit the punishment imposed by the Tribunal on such person' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an Ard-Chomhairle ... saor-mhathiúnas do thabhairt uair ar bith d'éinne bheidh ciontuithe i gcionta ar bith ag an mBínse agus an pionós do chuir an Bínse ar an duine sin do mhaitheamh ar fad' in s12(1) of the Constitution (Amendment No. 17) Act, 1931. 'Remission of sentence' is translated as 'loghadh pianbhreithe' in s5(1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1990, 'Remission of punishment' being translated as 'Pionós ... a loghadh' in the Margin Title of s23 of the Criminal Justice Act, 1951.

'Any automatic forfeiture of pay ... may be remitted by the Minister' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an tAire maitheamh do thabhairt in aon phágh-chailiúint átom-aitigiúil' in s132 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. 'The imposition, repeal, remission, alteration or regulation of taxation' is translated as 'leaga, ath-ghairm, maitheamh, atharú no rialú cánach' in Article 35 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Granting to bookmakers remissions or refunds (as the case may require) of betting duty' is translated as 'maitheamh no aisíoc (pe'ca aca is gá sa chás) sa gheall-diúité do dheona do gheall-ghlacadóir' in s25(1) of the Finance Act, 1926.

a ghearrtar ar 'Pionós a ghearradh ar dhuine' is translated as 'to impose a penalty on someone', and is cited in Ó Dónaill with 'gearradh príosún air, he was sentenced to imprisonment' as examples of this use of the verb 'gearr' to express 'impose'. 'Gearr', basically 'cut', can also translate 'levy' as in 'cáin, fineáil a ghearradh ar dhuine, to levy a tax, a fine, on someone'.

In s17(3)(a) of the Consumer Information Act, 1978, 'Where a court imposes a fine' is translated as 'I gcás a ngearrfaidh cúirt fineáil', and in Article 25 of the Protocol on the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Atomic Energy Community 'the Court may impose pecuniary penalties' is translated as 'féadfaidh sí pionóis airgid a ghearradh'. In s23(1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1951, however, 'any punishment imposed by a Court' is translated as 'aon phionós a bheas forchurtha ag Cúirt'. In s19(b) of the Value-Added Tax (Amendment) Act, 1978, 'any condition ... imposed by the Revenue Commissioners' is translated as 'aon choinníoll ... a d'fhorchuir na Coimisinéirí Ioncaim'.

'Gearra' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'impose (a punishment)' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1922/23. The Long Title of the Finance Act, 1923, 'An Act to charge and impose certain duties ...' is translated as 'Acht chun diúitéthe áirithe ... d'éileamh agus do ghearra', 'the said Military Forces are discharging with success the duty so imposed on them', in the Preamble to the Public Safety (Emergency Powers) Act, 1923, being translated as 'go bhfuil ag eirghe leis na Fórsaí Mileata san an dualgas a cuireadh ortha amhlaidh do chó-liona', with 'to validate sentences imposed by military tribunals', in the Long Title of the Indemnity Act, 1923, being translated as 'chun dleathacht do thabhairt do bhreitheanna a thug Binsí Airm'. 'All ... duties as are for the time being vested in or imposed on an under-sheriff by law' is translated as 'gach dualgas a bheidh ag fo-shirriam, no air, de réir dlí de thuras na huairé' in s2(1) of the Local Government (Collection of Rates) Act, 1924. Finally, 'all ... penalties ... imposed or levied by any court' is translated as 'gach ... pionós ... a fhorchuirfar no a gearrfar ag aon chúirt' in s51(1) of the Court Officers Act, 1926.

pionós The genitive singular form of 'pionós', which is translated as 'penalty' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'pionós báis', however, is translated as 'capital punishment'. 'Pionós' is translated as 'penalty, punishment' in Ó Dónaill, where the phrases 'pionós a ghearradh ar dhuine' and 'pionós a chur ar dhuine' are translated respectively as 'to impose a penalty on someone' and 'to penalize, punish, someone'. We have seen above that 'punishment' is translated as 'pionós' in the Criminal Justice Act, 1951, as it is in s209 of the Defence Act, 1954, for example. 'Pionósí mar gheall ar chiontú sa Sceideal' and 'Pionós i gcóir daoine 'na mbeidh maoin ghuidhe acu' respectively translate 'Punishments for offences in Schedule' and 'Punishment of persons having stolen property' in the Margin Titles of s5 and s9 of the Public Safety (Emergency Powers) Act, 1923.

Dinneen translates 'pionós' as 'penance; worry, anxiety' and 'pionósuighim' as 'I worry, punish'. Only two fairly recent examples of 'pionús', 'punishment', are given in DIL (see also 'péinis' [< 'pían'], 'a penalty'; 'pennas', 'pain, penalty' and 'pennait', from Latin 'poenitere' or 'poenitentia', 'penitence', 'penance' and 'penalty').

a thabhairt le dlí Regarding 'confer' in the Acts, in s7(a)(iii) of Schedule 5 to the Fisheries Act, 1980, 'in case the order is made under section 39 of this Act, be expressed and operate to confer ... on any person a right to pass ...' is translated as 'i gcás ar faoi alt 39 den Acht seo a dhéanfar an t-ordú, beidh sé sainráite ann agus oibreoidh sé chun go dtabharfar ... d'aon duine ceart gabhála ...'. In s112 of Schedule 1 to the Companies Act, 1963, 'The directors may entrust to and confer upon a managing director any of the powers ...' is translated as 'Féafaidh na stiúrthóirí aon chumhachtaí dá mbeidh infheidhmithe acu a chur ar iontaoibh stiúrthóra bainistíochta agus a thabhairt dó ...'. 'The final award shall operate and be expressed to charge, impose and confer on the county council the duty and the power' is translated as 'An dualgas agus an chomhacht ... oibreoidh an mola deiridh chun iad do mhuirearú, d'fhorchur, agus do bhronna ar an gcomhairle chontae agus déarfann ann go ndineann sé amhlaidh' in s12(1) of the River Owenmore Drainage Act, 1926. In s159(1) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, 'as are or may be conferred by law' is translated as 'a bronntar no a bronnfann le dlí'.

Bheirtear 'Tugtar' would replace 'bheirtear' according to the official standard – see the commentary on Article 12.1. As regards 'dilsigh', 'to vest', see the commentary on Article 13.4, where 'The supreme command of the Defence Forces is hereby vested in the President' is expressed as 'Leis seo cuirtear na Fórsaí Cosanta faoi ardcheannas an Uachtaráin'.

d'údaráis Regarding 'authority' in early Acts, 'Acknowledging that all lawful authority comes from God to the people', in the Preamble to the 1922 Constitution, is translated as 'á admháil gur ó Dhia a thagann gach údarás dleathach'. 'The general lighthouse authority' is translated as '(ag) an údarás generálta a bheidh ann do thithe soluis' in s108(1) of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925. See further the commentary on Article 6.2 regarding 'údarás'.

leis seo Literally 'with this', which phrase translates 'hereby' in the Acts. Note how 'Leis seo' is found at the beginning of Article 13.4, before the verb. It generally follows the verb in the Acts – see, for example, s1(1) of the Finance Act, 1990, where 'the Finance Act, 1980, is hereby, amended' is translated as 'leasaítear leis seo an tAcht Airgeadais, 1980'.

cumhacht See the commentary on Article 13.9 and note that 'Gach comhacht rialtais' translates 'all powers of government' in Article 2 of the 1922 Constitution.

Standardised Irish text

Tugtar don Uachtarán leis seo ceart maithiúnais, agus cumhacht chun maolú nó loghadh pionós a ghearrtar ar dhaoine in aon chúirt dlínse coire, ach, taobh amuigh de chásanna breithe báis, féadfar an chumhacht mhaolaithe nó loghtha sin a thabhairt le dlí d'údaráis eile freisin.

Direct translation

Dílsítear don Uachtarán leis seo an ceart chun maithiúnas a thabhairt agus an chumhacht chun pionós a ghearrfaidh<sup>1</sup> aon chúirt ag feidhmiú dlínse choiriúil di<sup>2</sup> a iomaltú nó a loghadh,<sup>3</sup> ach féadfar an chumhacht iomaltaithe nó loghtha sin a thabhairt le dlí d'údaráis eile freisin, ach amháin i gcásanna lena ngabhann pionós báis.

Variants

- 1 'a fhorchuirfidh'
- 2 'a fheidhmeoidh dlínse choiriúil'
- 3 'Déantar leis seo an ceart chun maithiúnas a thabhairt agus an chumhacht chun pionós a ghearrfaidh aon chúirt ag feidhmiú dlínse choiriúil di a iomaltú nó a loghadh a dhílsíú don Uachtarán.'

ARTICLE 13.7.1<sup>o</sup> AIRTEAGAL 13.7.1<sup>o</sup>

TÉACS GAEILGE

Tig leis an Uachtarán, tar éis comhairle a ghlacadh leis an gComhairle Stáit, teachtaireacht nó aitheasc a chur faoi bhráid Tithe an Oireachtais i dtaobh aon ní a bhfuil tábhacht náisiúnta nó tábhacht phoiblí ann.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The President may, after taking advice with the Council of State, put a message or address before the Houses of the Oireachtas on any thing which has national importance or public importance.

ENGLISH TEXT

The President may, after consultation with the Council of State, communicate with the Houses of the Oireachtas by message or address on any matter of national or public importance.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Communicate with the Houses of the Oireachtas by message or address' is expressed as 'teachtaireacht nó aitheasc a chur faoi bhráid Tithe an Oireachtais' ('put a message or address before the Houses of the Oireachtas') in the Irish text. According to Maolmhaoldhóg Ó Ruairc, op. cit., p. 215f., based on the fact that the phraseology in the Irish text is identical to that of the next subsection, with reference to an address to the nation, 'aitheasc a chur faoi bhráid an Náisiúin' – the President being unable to present 'himself' before the nation – the Irish text of Article 13.7.1<sup>o</sup> would not allow the President to come before the Oireachtas to give an oration or address or to read out or proclaim a message to the audience.

Commentary

a chur faoi bhráid 'Rud a chur faoi bhráid duine' is translated as 'to set something in front of someone; to submit, refer something to someone' in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen, who cites 'féar do chur fá bhrághaid na bó, to set hay before the cow, as a feed', translates 'cuirim fá bhrághaid' as 'I recommend to, put under the protection of'. 'A chur faoi bhráid ...' literally means 'to put under the neck of ...' / 'at the breast of'. See the commentary on Article 17.1.1<sup>o</sup>.

In s149(4) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'The Committee may ... in private communication, make such suggestion ...' is translated as 'féadfaidh an Coiste, i gcumarsáid rúnda, cibé moltaí ... a dhéanamh' and the Margin Title of s151, 'Communication between the Dáil and Seanad', is translated as 'Cumarsáid idir an Dáil agus an Seanad'. In s152(1), however, 'The Ceann Comhairle shall ... communicate any such message to the Dáil' is translated as 'Cuirfidh an Ceann Comhairle aon Teachtaireacht den sórt sin in iúl don Dáil'.

Turning to the Acts, in s6(1)(a) of the Prosecution of Offences Act, 1974, 'it shall not be lawful to communicate with the Attorney General' is translated as 'ní dleathach cumarsáid a dhéanamh leis an Ard-Aighne'. In s22(4) of the Juries Act, 1976, 'for the purpose of preventing undue communication with the jurors' is translated as 'do chur cosc le cumarsáid mhíchúí leis na giúróirí'. 'It shall not be lawful to communicate with a person referred to in section 6(1) ... for the purpose of influencing the making of a decision' is translated as 'ní bheidh sé dleathach cumarsáid a dhéanamh le duine dá dtagraítear in alt 6(1) ... d'fhonn tionchar a imirt ar chinneadh a dhéanamh' in s4(1)(a) of the Extradition (Amendment) Act, 1987. In s1(a) of Article 36 of the Second Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, 'consular officers shall be free to communicate with nationals of the sending State and to have access to them' is translated as 'beidh saoirse ag oifigigh chonsalachta chun cumarsáid a dhéanamh le náisiúnaigh an Stáit shallchuir agus chun teacht a bheith acu orthu'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú recommends 'dul i gcum-arsáid le' rather than 'cumarsáid a dhéanamh le' but, as 'dul i gcomhairle le' precedes this in the translation below, that phrase does not suit the present context.

Looking at early Acts, in the 'Galway County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'whenever the condition of any patient demands that ... the relatives of such patient should be sent for or communicated with' is translated as 'aon uair a iarrfidh cor aon othair fios do chur ar ... ghaolta an othair sin, no scéala do chur chucha'. In s2 of the Wireless Telegraphy Act, 1926, 'the expression "wireless telegraphy" means and includes any system of communicating messages ... by means of radiated electro-magnetic waves' is translated as 'cialluíonn agus foluíonn an focal "radio-thelegrafaíocht" aon mhodh chun teachtaireachtaí ... do chur in iúl le tontracha leictré-mhaighnéadacha leathta'. 'To this end he will communicate with the Government of the French Republic' (following 'Any ... Party shall be entitled to ... call for the assembling of a new international Conference') is translated as 'Chuirge sin cuirfe sé scéala go dtí Rialtas Phoblacht na Fraince' in Article 41 of the First Schedule to the Air Navigation and Transport Act, 1936.

teachtaireacht This headword is translated as 'message, errand' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'teachtaireacht oifigiúil' as '(official) dispatch'. 'Teachtaireacht' is translated as 'a message, errand or commission, an enclosure in a letter, as money, etc.; ... an embassy' in Dinneen, who cites 'teachtaireacht teinntrighe, a telegram' as a recent phrase. Both Ó Dónaill and Dinneen cite 'Teachtaireacht an Aingil, the Annunciation', also 'the Angelus' according to Dinneen. 'Teachtairecht' is translated as 'message, errand, mission, embassy' in DIL, where examples are cited from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards. This word is based on 'techtair' ('messenger, courier, envoy'), which itself is based on 'techt' ('messenger, envoy, courier'), which originally was the same word as 'techt' (verbal noun of 'téit', 'act of going', 'act of coming'). Note that 'Mara ndéanfar sa tsíósón céanna intinn a churtha i leithreas do mhola trí theachtairacht ó Ionadaí na Coróinneach' translates 'unless the purpose of the appropriation has in the same session been recommended by a message from the Representative of the Crown' in Article 37 of the 1922 Constitution.

aitheasc This headword is translated as 'address (to Court, etc.)' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill translates 'aitheasc' as 'address, allocation', 'exhortation, homily' and, finally, following the abbreviation for 'Rhetoric', as 'apostrophe'. 'Aitheasc' is translated as 'advice, admonition, a lecture; reply, result; address; an oracle' in Dinneen. DIL translates 'aitheasc' as 'answer, reply', 'message, announcement, news' and 'utterance, speech in general', citing examples from the Glosses onwards. In the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 2/2/1995, 'Address by the President to the Houses of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'Aitheasc ón Uachtarán do Thithe an Oireachtais'.

Looking at early Acts, in s5(2) the Adaptation of Enactments Act, 1922, 'Every mention of or reference to the presentation of an address to his (or Her) Majesty by both or each or either of the Houses of Parliament contained in any British Statute' is translated as 'Gach luadh no tagairt do thairisgint dileagra dá Shoillse ó sna Tighthe Páirliminte araon no ó gach ceann no aon cheann aca atá in aon Reacht Briotáineach'. 'Address (oration)' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'óráid' in the Proceedings of Seanad Éireann, 3/10/1923.

aon ní 'Ní' is translated as 'thing; something' in Ó Dónaill, 'nídh' being translated as 'a thing, item, matter or circumstance, ... something, anything ...' in Dinneen, who translates 'aon nídh' as 'anything, anything whatever'. See DIL s.v. 2 'ní' where it is stated that 'in late language the sense anything is rendered by the compound aen- (én-) ní'. In s32 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'Provided that Questions relating to matters of urgent public importance may ... be asked on private notice' is translated as 'Ach féadfar ... Ceisteanna i dtaobh nithe a bhfuil deabhadh agus tábhacht phoiblí ag baint leo a chur tar éis fógra príobháideach ina dtaobh a thabhairt'. In s56, 'a member shall not be prevented from raising in the Dáil any matter of general public importance' is translated as 'ní choisfeair ar chomhalta aon ní a bhfuil tábhacht ghinearálta phoiblí ag baint leis a ardú sa Dáil'.

Looking at earlier Acts regarding 'matter', 'gach gnó, deighleáil, ní agus rud riamh a bhaineann le hairgead' translates 'every transaction, dealing, matter, and thing whatever relating to money' in s7 of the Coinage Act, 1926. In s40 of the First Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923, 'the several acts, matters and things to be done' is translated as 'na gníomhartha, na rudaí agus na nithe iolartha a bheidh le déanamh' and in s5 of the Sligo Lighting and Electric Power Act, 1924, 'supply of such material and products matter and things' is translated as 'stuif agus tora saothair, abhar agus rudaí do sholáthar'. 'All matters in each House shall ... be determined' is translated as 'Socrófar gach ceist i ngach Tigh' in Article 22 of the 1922 Constitution and 'i ngach cás 'na dtiocfaidh cúrsaí den tsórt san i gceist' translates 'in all cases in which such matters come into question' in Article 65. See further the commentary on Article 34.3.1°.

tábhacht 'A matter stated by them to be of public importance' is rendered as 'ní a luafaidh siad ina thaobh go bhfuil tábhacht phoiblí ann' in Article 28.4.3°ii, following the Seventeenth Amendment of the Constitution.

'Tábhacht' is translated as 'importance; significance, substance' in Ó Dónaill and as 'value, validity, substance, substantiality, strength, importance' in Dinneen, who cites 'ní h-aon tábhacht liom é, I consider it of no account', 'níl tábhacht agam ann' and 'mise i mbeag-thábhacht air' having the same meaning. 'Tadbacht' is translated as 'weight, importance, validity, substance' in DIL, where 'nach fuil tabhacht i seanchus Éireann' is cited from Keating's seventeenth-century History of Ireland.

'Literary manuscripts certified by the Director of the National Library as being of major national importance and of either cultural or artistic importance' is translated as 'lámhscríbhinní liteartha a mbeidh sé deimhnithe ag Stiúrthóir Leabharlann Náisiúnta na hÉireann gur lámhscríbhinní iad a bhfuil tábhacht mhór náisiúnta leo agus a bhfuil tábhacht leo ó thaobh an chultúir nó na healaíne de' in s63(a) of the Finance Act, 1989. 'Because he performs essential and urgent services of public importance' is translated as 'mar go ndéanann sé seirbhísí riachtanacha práinneacha lena ngabhann tábhacht phoiblí' in the First Schedule to the Juries Act, 1976. 'Is required for use for purposes of public importance' is translated as 'ag teastáil chun é úsáid chun crícheanna le n-a mbaineann tácht phuiblí' in s22(1)(a) of the Air-Raid Precautions Act, 1939. 'The efficiency, extent, and relative importance of the industry in respect of which the application is made' is translated as 'Éifeachtúlacht, méid, agus tácht chomparáideach an cheárdais go bhfuil an t-iarratas á dhéanamh ina thaobh' in s1 of the Schedule to the Tariff Commission Act, 1926.

Note finally that 'poiblidhe' is unlenited following 'tábhacht' in the enrolled text.

i dtaobh This phrase is translated as 'about, concerning' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'i dtaobh ruda, concerning something', and as 'near, beside' and 'regarding, in reference to, about' in Dinneen. Examples from earlier literature of 'i dtaobh', in the sense of 'as regards, with respect to', are cited in DIL s.v. 'taeb'. See further the commentary on Article 49.1, where this prepositional phrase expresses 'in respect of'.

comhairle a ghlacadh 'To take advice'. The Irish legal term for 'consultation' is 'comhchomhairle' – see the commentary on Article 13.2.3°. 'The Minister may ... by regulations make provision after consultation with the Minister for Education for the attendance of unemployed persons at courses' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an tAire ... le rialacháin, socrú a dhéanamh tar éis dó dul i gcomhairle leis an Aire Oideachais, maidir le daoine difhostaithe do dhéanamh freastail ar chúrsaí' in s149 of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example.

Tig leis an Uachtarán 'It is open to the President'. 'Tig le ...', literally '... can' is one of the ways of expressing '... may' in the Constitution – see the commentary on Article 12.4.4°.

Tithe an Oireachtais According to the official standard, the initial 'T' of the 'Tithe' would be lenited after the compound preposition 'faoi bhráid' – see the commentary on Article 1.

ENGLISH TEXT

The President may, after consultation with the Council of State, address a message to the Nation at any time on any such matter.

- 1 'Address a message to the Nation' is expressed as 'aitheasc a chur faoi bhráid an Náisiúin' ('put an address before the Nation') in the Irish text.
- 2 The same phraseology is used in the Irish text as in the previous subsection: Article 13.7.1<sup>o</sup> reads 'aitheasc a chur faoi bhráid Tithe an Oireachtais' ('to put an address before the Houses of the Oireachtas') and the present Article reads 'aitheasc a chur faoi bhráid an Náisiúin' ('to put an address before the Nation'); the phraseology of the corresponding English text alters from one subsection to the next: 'communicate with the Houses of the Oireachtas by ... address', in Article 13.7.1<sup>o</sup>, and 'address a message to the Nation' in Article 13.7.2<sup>o</sup> above.

aitheasc a chur faoi bhráid See the commentary on the previous subsection, where 'teachtaireacht' expresses 'message' and 'aitheasc' expresses the noun 'address'. In s151 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'Messages from the Dáil to the Seanad shall be in writing ... and shall be addressed to the Clerk of the Seanad' is translated as 'Is i scríbhinn ... a chuirfear Teachtaireachtaí ón Dáil go dtí an Seanad, agus is chun Cléireach an tSeanad a dhíreofar iad'. In the Treaty on European Union (Maastricht, 1992, p. 176), 'the EMI shall address a report to the Council' is translated as 'díreoidh IEA tuarascáil chuig an gComhairle'. While both these examples concern written material, 'dirigh ar' literally translates 'direct at/to' or 'focus on' – see Ó Dónaill, who cites 'dirim m'achainn ort, I direct my appeal to you'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that 'díriú ar', in the translation below, connotes a sense of exclusiveness, i.e. that the message would be directed solely to the Nation and also that it would have a certain force. Professor Ó Murchú suggests 'teachtaireacht a thabhairt don Náisiúin'.

In Téarmaí Dlí 'I address (court, etc.)' is translated as 'aitheascaim' and, as we have seen, 'aitheasc' translates 'address (to Court, etc.)'. 'The right of the accused, if not represented by counsel or a solicitor, to address the court or jury ... on a matter on which, if he were so represented, his counsel or solicitor could address the court or jury on his behalf' is translated as '(do) cheart an chúisí, mura mbeidh abhcóide nó aturnae ag feidhmiú ar a shon, an chúirt nó an giúiré a aitheasc ... i dtaobh aon ábhair ar ina thaobh a d'fhéadfadh a abhcóide nó a aturnae an chúirt nó an giúiré a aitheasc thar a cheann, dá mbeadh abhcóide nó aturnae aige' in s23(1)(a) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1984. 'The candidate or any agent of the candidate addressing therein electors' is translated as 'an t-iarrthóir no aon ghníomhaire don iarrthóir do thabhairt óráide ann' in s56 of the Prevention of Electoral Abuses Act, 1923.

uair ar bith 'Uair', 'hour', also has the sense of 'time, occasion' (see Ó Dónaill). 'Uair ar bith' is translated as '(at) any time, whenever (often with "go")' in Dinneen. 'At any time' is usually translated as 'tráth ar bith' in the modern Acts – see, for example, s35 of the Finance Act, 1990, where 'where there is, or was at any time ... a requirement' is translated as 'i gcás go bhfuil, nó go raibh tráth ar bith, ... ceanglas'. See the commentary on Article 13.2.3<sup>o</sup>.

Regarding early Acts, 'Féadfidh an tAire ordú fé fho-alt (1) den alt so do cheiliúra aon uair' translates 'An order under sub-section (1) of this section may be revoked at any time by the Minister' in s11(3) of the Gas Regulation Act, 1928, 'at all reasonable times' being translated as 'gach tráth réasúnta' in s10(1). In s1(1) of the Road Fund (Advances) Act, 1924, 'to meet all sums which are now or may at any time before the 1st day of April, 1925, be charged thereon' is translated as 'gach suim d'íoc atá anois, no a bheidh aon tráth roimh an 1adh lá d'Abrán, 1925, ina mhuirear air'. 'The members of the Committee shall be appointed ... at the times and in the manner in the Schedule hereto provided' is translated as 'Ar na tráthanna agus sa tslí a forálar sa Sceideal a ghabhann leis seo a déanfar baill an Choiste do cheapa' in s4(2) of the Schedule to the Pilotage Order Confirmation Act, 1927.

den sórt sin 'Sórt' is translated as 'sort; kind, variety' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'rudai den sórt sin, such things'. This is an English loanword, translated as 'a sort, kind, species' in DIL. 'Den sórt sin' frequently translates 'such' in the Acts – see, for example, s41(1) of the Finance Act, 1990, where 'in payment for such repair or maintenance' is translated as 'mar íocaíocht as deisiú nó as cothabháil den sórt sin'.

an Náisiúin 'Náisiún' is a late Romance loanword, according to DIL, s.v. 'náisiún', where Ó Cianáin's Flight of the Earls provides the only citations – see the commentary on Article 1.

tar éis comhairle a ghlacadh See the commentary on the previous subsection.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

But in each of those cases the Government must be satisfied beforehand with the message or the address.

ENGLISH TEXT

Every such message or address must, however, have received the approval of the Government.

- 1 'Must have received the approval of the Government' is expressed as 'ní foláir an Rialtas a bheith sásta roimh ré le' ('the Government must be satisfied beforehand with') in the Irish text.
- 2 The Irish text introduces 'i ngach cás díobh sin' ('in each of those cases') at the beginning of the subsection, the section concluding with 'an teachtaireacht nó (leis) an aitheasc' ('the message or the address'), both of which phrases are expressed in the English text by the single phrase 'every such message or address'.
- 3 'However' is expressed as 'Ach' ('but') in the Irish text, as in other Articles.

Commentary

sásta le This phrase translates 'satisfied with' in the Acts – see, for example s11(4) of the Fourth Schedule to the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, where 'where he [the inspector] is not satisfied with the account' is translated as 'i gcás nach mbeidh sé sásta leis an gcuntas'. 'Sásaím' is translated as 'I satisfy' in the Téarmaí Dlí. 'Sásta' is translated as 'satisfied, contented, pleased' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'bheith sásta le rud' as 'to be satisfied with something'. Dinneen translates 'sásta' as 'satisfied, contented, comforted, willing, pleasing ...', and 'sásta le' as 'satisfied or pleased with'. Note, however, that he translates 'táim sásta leis sin' as 'I agree to that'. 'Sásta' is the participle of 'sásaid' ('satisfies [particularly with food], feeds; assuages, soothes', according to DIL), translated as 'satisfied, content' in DIL, citing four examples 'apparently in meaning "capable of giving satisfaction, satisfactory, agreeable, pleasant"' – note how the following example with meaning 'agreeable' cited there refers to food: 'luibi in talman ... nirbat sastai leo eside iar mbiadaib blasta Parthuis' ('they found them disagreeable', i.e. they did not find earthly foods agreeable after the tasty foods of Paradise). See further the commentary on Article 46.5 where 'ar mbeith sásta dó gur ...' expresses 'upon his being satisfied that'.

'Approval' is translated as 'formheas' in Téarmaí Dlí (following the first Irish Legal Terms Order, i.e. terms relating to Landlord and Tenant Law, Conveyancing and Property Law) and 'I approve' is translated as 'formheasaim'. In s2(2)(d) of the Consumer Information Act, 1978, 'implied by the approval of any person' is translated as 'is inchiallaithe ó fhorhneas aon duine'. As we saw in the commentary on Article 13.1.2<sup>o</sup>, however, 'ceadú' often translates 'approval' in the Acts. In s3(b)(ii) of the Schedule to the Industrial Development Association (Special Action Account) Act, 1978, for example, 'taking account of the time necessary for parliamentary approval of the annual budgets' is translated as 'aird a thabhairt ar an am is gá chun ceadú parlaiminte a fháil do na buiséid bhliantúla'. 'Le toiliú nó le ceadú' generally translates the phrase 'with the consent or approval' in the Acts – see s7 of the Regulation of Banks (Remuneration and Conditions of Employment) (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1973, where 'with the consent or approval of ... any person' is translated as 'le toiliú nó le ceadú aon duine'. In the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97, 'without approval by the Oireachtas' is translated as 'mura mbíonn ceadú ón Oireachtas faighte roimhe sin'. In s102(c) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'that, subject to the approval of the Joint Broadcasting Committee ..., broadcasters be permitted ...' is translated as 'go gceadófar do chraoltóirí, faoi réir cheadú an Chomhchoiste Craolacháin ...'. In the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 52), 'guidelines ... shall require the approval of the Member State concerned' is translated as 'is gá ceadú an Bhallstáit i drácht do threoirilinte'. Note that in the Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 150), 'Subject to the approval of the Government concerned' is translated as 'Ar an gcoinníoll go bhfaighfear tuairim fhábhach ón Rialtas lena mbaineann'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that, outside of a high legal context, 'formheas' would not readily be understood.

See the commentary on Article 13.1.2<sup>o</sup> regarding early translations of 'approval'. Note that 'Deimhniú sástachta' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'Certificate of Approval' in translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health and 'le n-a bhfuiltear sásta' is cited there as translating 'approved' in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, 1926, p. 37. Finally, 'And whereas such resolution was published twice in each of the said newspapers, and has received the approval of the Minister' is translated as 'Agus de bhri gur foillsíodh an rún san fé dhó i ngach páipéar nuachta fé leith de sna páipéirí nuachta san agus go bhfuil an tAire ... tar éis aontú leis' in the Preamble to the Mountjoy Square, Dublin, Act, 1938.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The President is not answerable to any House of the Oireachtas nor to any court in the operation and in the fulfilment of the powers and functions of his office nor in any deed which he does or which gives to understand that it is a deed he does in the operation and in the fulfilment of those powers and functions.

ENGLISH TEXT

The President shall not be answerable to either House of the Oireachtas or to any court for the exercise and performance of the powers and functions of his office or for any act done or purporting to be done by him in the exercise and performance of these powers and functions.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'The President shall not' is expressed as 'Níl an tUachtarán' ('The President is not') in the Irish text, with 'any act done or purporting to be done' (by the President) expressed as 'aon ghníomh dá ndéanann sé nó a bheireann le tuiscint gur gníomh é a dhéanann sé' ('any act which he does or gives to understand that it is an act which he does').
- 2 'Freagrach' is translated as 'responsible' in Téarmaí Dlí and, though literally meaning 'answerable in', 'freagrach i' is translated as 'responsible for' and 'accountable for' respectively in Dinneen and Ó Dónaill – the latter does, however, translate 'bheith freagrach do dhuine i rud' as 'to be answerable to someone for something' and 'bheith freagrach i' is also found in Acts translating 'answerable for'.
- 3 'Either House' is expressed as 'aon Teach' ('any House') in the Irish text.
- 4 'Exercise' is expressed by the Irish legal term for 'operation', 'oibriú', as we saw earlier.

Commentary

freagrach do 'Freagrach' is translated as 'responsible' in Téarmaí Dlí and as 'answerable, accountable' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'bheith freagrach do dhuine i rud, as rud, to be answerable to someone for something', 'freagrach san airgead, accountable for the money' and 'tá sé freagrach san uile ní, he bears responsibility for everything'. 'Freagarthach', the form in the enrolled text, is translated as 'answerable, suitable, responsible, responsive; ready' in Dinneen, who translates 'freagarthach i' as 'responsible for'. 'Freagarthach' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'answerable' in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann. See further the commentary on Article 28.4.1<sup>o</sup> where this phrase expresses 'responsible to'.

'And the finance house and the seller shall ... be answerable to the buyer for breach of the contract of sale' is translated as 'agus beidh an teach airgeadais agus an díoltóir freagrach ... don cheannaitheoir mar gheall ar an gconradh díolacháin a shárú' in s14 of the Sale of Foods and Supply of Services Act, 1980. In s17(1)(a) of the Finance Act, 1970, and s21 of the Finance Act, 1976, 'to be answerable for the carrying out of such operations by others' is translated as '(a) bheith freagrach sna hoibriochtaí sin a dhéanamh ag daoine eile'. In s494(1) of the Income Tax Act, 1967, 'the owner ... of the profits thereof shall be answerable for the tax so charged' is translated as 'beidh úinéir ... na mbrabús freagrach sa cháin a mhuirearófar amhlaidh'. Finally, in the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 244), 'military units answerable to WEV' is translated as 'aonaid mhíleata atá freagrach do AIE'.

On the other hand, 'freagrach' is involved in translating 'responsible' in s22(5)(b) of the Consumer Information Act, 1978, for example, where 'that he disclaimed by other means responsibility for the description' is translated as 'gur shéan sé ar dhóigh eile go raibh sé freagrach sa tuairisc'. In s2(1) of the Civil Liability Act, 1961, "wrong-doer" means a person who commits or is otherwise responsible for a wrong' is translated as 'ciallaíonn "éagóiritheoir" duine a rinne éagóir nó atá freagrach ar shlí eile in éagóir'. In s8(1) of the Companies Act, 1963, 'any director who was responsible for the doing by the company of such act' is translated as 'aon stiúrthóir ... a bhí freagrach sa chuideachta do dhéanamh an ghnímh'.

'Freagrach do' translates 'amenable to' in s1 of Article 43 of the Second Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, with 'Consular officers ... shall not be amenable to the jurisdiction ... in respect of acts ...' being translated as 'Ní bheidh oifigigh chonsalachta ... freagrach do dhlinse ... i leith gníomhartha ...'. In the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97 (p. 16), 'that the Government are fully accountable to the Dáil for their policies' is translated as 'go mbeidh an Rialtas freagrach go hiomlán don Dáil as a chuid beartas'.

a bheireann le tuiscint In Article 28.3.3<sup>o</sup> 'ná chun aon ghníomh dá ndéantar nó a bheireann le tuiscint gur gníomh é a dhéantar in aimsir chogaidh ... a chur ar neamhni' expresses 'or to nullify any act done or purporting to be done in time of war'. 'A bheireann le tuiscint' would be written as 'a thugann le tuiscint' according to the official standard – see the commentary on Article 12.1. 'Tuiscint' comes from 'tuisc', which is the Middle Irish verbal noun of 'do-uccí', the Old Irish verbal noun being 'tabairt' (2 'tabairt' in DIL, 'understanding'). 'Tabairt' is also the verbal noun of 'do-beir', 'gives, puts, brings, gets' (1 'tabairt' in DIL, 'giving, bestowing, etc.'). In the phrase 'tabhair le tuiscint', therefore, the two main words are developments from a single Old Irish verb – see DIL s.v. 'do-beir':

The perfective forms are supplied ... in the meaning brings, gets by *to-ucc- ... The perfective *to-ucc- (lit. can bring) also forms a complete paradigm without distinction of perfective and non-perfective forms, with the meaning understands (later tuicid) the verbal-noun being 2 tabairt later replaced by tuisciu.

DIL includes the senses of (a) 'comprehends, understands', (d) 'means, signifies', (e) 'In certain cases followed by preposition ... FRI (LE), understands (of), applies or refers to (frequently in passive)' as the sixth set of senses of 'do-beir', in which set the forms of 'do-ucci' are given.

In the Acts '(tabhair) le tuiscint' has been called on to translate 'imply' and 'represent oneself' – in s7(1) of the Central Bank Act, 1971, for example, 'a person ... shall not ... carry on banking business or hold himself out or represent himself as a banker' is translated as 'ní dhéanfaidh duine ... gnó baincéireachta a sheoladh ná a thabhairt le tuiscint nó le fios gur baincér é'. In s2(4) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, '... shall not imply that any expenditure is incurred' is translated as 'ní bheidh sé le tuiscint aisti go bhfuil aon chaiteachas á thabhu ...'. The verb 'airbheartaigh' generally translates 'purport' in the Acts. In s37(1) of the Companies Act, 1963, for example, 'Any contract ... purporting to be entered into by a company' is translated as 'Aon chonradh ... a airbheartóidh a bheith déanta ag cuideachta'. In s15(4)(b) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, 'a certificate purporting to be signed by the Collector-General ...' is translated as '(beidh) deimhniú a airbheartaíonn a bheith sínithe ag an Ard-Bhailitheoir ...'. See further the commentary on Article 28.3.3°.

'Purport' was expressed in varying ways in the early Acts. In s1(2) of the Expiring Laws Continuance Act, 1922, 'so as to validate all acts and things purported to be done under such Acts respectively since that date' is translated as 'i dtreo go ndleathóidh sé gach gníomh agus gach ní a dineadh le hintinn a dhéanta fé sna hAchtanna san fé seach ón ndáta san i leith'. 'Má dineadh no gur tuigeadh gur dineadh an gníomh, rud no ní sin' translates 'provided such act, matter or thing was done or purported to be done' in s1(1) of the Indemnity Act, 1923, 'deimhniú ar na nithe sin agus a dheabhramh air gur sghníodh é ag an oifigeach san' translating 'a certificate purporting to have been signed by such officer' in s196(8) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, and 'iontráil a thaisbeánfidh no a bheidh in ainm bheith á thaisbeaint go bhfuil aon tionónta i riaráiste i dtaobh aon tsuime' translating 'an entry showing or purporting to show any tenant as being in arrears in respect of any sum' in s15(2)(a) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1923. In s2(1) of the Deputy Registrar in Bankruptcy (Cork) Act, 1926, 'every act done ... by the Deputy Registrar in purported exercise of a power which the Judge had purported to delegate to him' is translated as 'gach gníomh ... do dhin an Leas-Chlárathóir ... i ndeabhramh a bheith i bhfeidhmiú comhachta do dheabhruigh an Breitheamh a leigint chuige' and, finally, 'A copy purporting to be a copy printed and published by or for the Council' is translated as 'cóip a thugann le tuisgint gur cóip í do clóbhuaileadh agus do foillsíodh ag an gComhairle no don Chomhairle' in s31(5) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1927.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú recommends 'a dhealróidh' rather than 'a airbheartóidh' in the literal translation which follows as being more readily comprehensible.

Níl It is unusual to have the present tense here, as against the future 'ní bheidh', the English text having 'shall not be'. As against the many examples of 'ní bheidh' in the Constitution there is but one other example of 'níl', i.e. in Article 15.2.1° where 'no other legislative assembly has power to make laws for the State' is expressed as 'níl cumhacht ag údarás reachtaíochta ar bith eile chun dlíthe a dhéanamh don Stát'. We find the present tense in the Irish text corresponding to the future tense in the English text in Article 14.2.1°, for example, with 'Is iad na daoine seo a leanas an Coimisiún' expressing 'The Commission shall consist of the following persons'.

aon ghníomh See the commentary on Article 15.5. Looking at early Acts, 'i dtaobh ná i leith ná a los aon ghnímh, ruda ná ní a dhin sé go cuibhe' translates 'for or on account of or in respect of any act, matter or thing duly done by him' in s27(1)(a) of the Dáil Éireann Courts (Winding-Up) Act, 1923, and 'Ní bheidh aon cheann de ghníomhartha ná d'imeachta an Choiste nea-dhleathach' translates 'No act or proceeding of the Committee shall be invalid' in s5(3) of the Schedule to the Pilotage Confirmation Act, 1924.

cumhachtaí is feidhmeanna See the commentary on Article 13.6 regarding 'cumhacht' and on Article 12.10.7° regarding 'feidhm'; both would be lenited according to the official standard. Note that 'i gcomhlíonadh cumhacht is feadhmanna' is the form of this phrase in the enrolled text.

oibriú This headword is translated as 'operation' in Téarmaí Dlí – see the commentary on Articles 3 and 13.5.1°.

comhlíonadh This headword is translated as 'performance' in Téarmaí Dlí – see the commentary on Article 12.1.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Ach féadfar iompar an Uachtaráin a chur faoi léirmheas i gceachtar de Thithe an Oireachtais chun críocha alt 10 d'Airteagal 12 den Bhunreacht seo, nó ag aon chúirt, binse nó comhlacht a cheapfar nó a ainmneofar ag ceachtar de Thithe an Oireachtas chun cúis faoi alt 10 den Airteagal sin a scrúdú.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

But the conduct of the President can be put under review in either of the Houses of the Oireachtas for the purposes of section 10 of Article 12 of this Constitution, or by any court, tribunal or body which will be appointed or nominated by either of the Houses of the Oireachtas to examine a case under section 10 of that Article.

ENGLISH TEXT

The behaviour of the President may, however, be brought under review in either of the Houses of the Oireachtas for the purposes of section 10 of Article 12 of this Constitution, or by any court, tribunal or body appointed or designated by either of the Houses of the Oireachtas for the investigation of a charge under section 10 of the said Article.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'The investigation of a charge' is expressed as 'cúis a scrúdú' ('to examine a case') in the Irish text – see Article 12.10 for similar expressions of these terms, though 'charge' is expressed both as 'cúis' and 'cúiseamh' – the Irish legal term for 'charge' – in that section.
- 2 'Designated' is expressed as 'a ainmneofar' ('nominated') in the Irish text.

Commentary

iompar This headword is translated as 'behaviour' in Téarmaí Dlí where 'urbhac ar fhoras iompair' is translated as 'estoppel by conduct'. 'Bearing, conduct' is the ninth set of senses of 'iompar' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'iompar duine i gcomhluadar' as 'a person's behaviour in company' and 'ní thaitníonn a n-iompar liom' as 'I don't like the way they go on'. Dinneen gives 'deportment, carriage, behaviour, conduct' as one set of senses of 'iompar', but follows 'conduct' with the remark 'generally in a good sense'. DIL gives 'bearing, deportment, behaviour' as one set of senses of 'imchor', verbal noun of 'imm-cuirethar', 'carries around, carries, brings, conveys'. See the commentary on Article 12.10.1° regarding 'mí-iompar'.

Turning to the Acts, 'On all matters relating to ethical conduct and behaviour' is translated as 'i dtaobh na n-ábhar ar fad a bhaineann le hiompar eiticiúil' in s69(2) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978, and in s51(2) of the Nurses Act, 1985. 'Is caused by another person's misconduct, skylarking or negligence ... or by the behaviour or presence of an animal', in relation to an accident, is translated as 'gurb é is cúis léi mí-iompar, ábhaillí nó faillí duine eile ... nó an chuma inar iompair ainmhí é féin nó ainmhí a bheith sa láthair' in s4(2)(b)(i) of the Social Welfare (Occupational Injuries) Act, 1966. 'Chun rialáil a dhéanamh i dtaobh iompair agus giúlain bádóirí, last-oibríthe, hablaerí, giúrnálaithe, stibheadóirí agus daoine eile a bhíos ar fostú sa chuan' translates 'For ... regulating the conduct and behaviour of boatmen, lumpers, hobbler, jobbers, stevedores and others employed at ... the harbour' in s15 of the Second Schedule to the Harbours Act, 1946. Dinneen refers 'giúlán' to Antrim, translating that headword as 'act of behaving, behaviour, conduct'; Ó Dónaill translates 'giúlán' as '(act of) bearing, carrying; carriage, conduct', citing 'tú féin a ghiúlán go maith, to carry oneself well; to conduct oneself properly', along with 'tá sí ag giúlán, she is expecting a baby' – which sense 'iompar' also has also, Ó Dónaill citing 'bheith ag iompar (clainne, linbh), to be with child'.

faoi léirmheas 'Tuairimí léirmheasa ar bheartas an Rialtais' expresses 'criticism of Government policy' in Article 40.6.1°i. 'Léirmheas' is translated as 'critical consideration, complete assessment' and 'criticism, critique, review' in Ó Dónaill – the general usage today is in relation to book review. In Dinneen the sense of 'critical estimate, criticism' is followed by the abbreviation 'recent', 'léir-mheas' being translated as 'high esteem; a balancing, consideration, estimate, judgment, decision'. 'Léir-mhes' is translated as 'criticizing, calculating' in DIL, where two examples are cited from Keating's seventeenth-century Three Shafts of Death.

In the Treaties establishing the European Union (1973, p. 260), 'to keep under review the monetary and financial situation of the Member States' is translated as 'staid airgeadaíochta agus staid airgeadais na mBallstát ... a choimeád faoi léirmheas' and, on p. 300, 'The Court of Justice shall review the legality of acts of the Council' is translated as 'Déanfaidh an Chúirt Bhreithiúnais léirmheas ar dhlíthiúlacht ghníomhartha de chuid na Comhairle'. On p. 488, however, 'the need ... to keep this situation under careful review' is translated as '(ar) an ngá atá ann ... an cor sin ... a choinneáil faoi bhreithniú go cúramach', 'I review' being translated as 'athbhreithnim', and 'review' as 'athbhreithniú', in Téarmaí Dlí. In s4(1) of the Law Reform Commission Act, 1975, 'The Commission shall keep the law under review' is translated as 'Coimeádfaidh an Coimisiún an dlí faoi bhreithniú', and in s9(6)(a) of the Consumer Information Act, 1978, 'to keep under general review practices' is translated as 'cleachtas ... a choimeád faoi bhreithniú ginearálta'. In s3(e) of Article V of the Schedule to the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (Financial Support Fund) (Agreement) Act, 1976, 'The Governing Committee shall keep the economic policies of the borrower ... under review' is translated as 'Coimeádfaidh an Coiste Rialaithe beartais eacnamaíochta an iasachtaí ... faoi bhreithniú'. 'The Board shall keep under review the working of the system of investigation ... of complaints' is translated as 'Coinneoidh an Bord oibriú an chórais imscrúdúcháin ... gearán faoi athbhreithniú' in s13(3) of the Garda Síochána (Complaints) Act, 1986. In s5(1)(a) of the Restrictive Practices Act, 1972, 'to hold a special review' is translated as 'léirbhreithniú speisialta a dhéanamh'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú recommends 'faoi bhreithniú' rather than 'faoi athbhreithniú' in the direct translation below; notwithstanding the English text's 'review', an investigation of the behaviour of the President on a previous occasion is not envisaged.

Looking at 'review' in early Acts, 'Aon deighleáil chothrom le haon obair chun stuidéir phriobháidigh, lorgaireachta, no léirmheasa, no chun achmaireacht do dhéanamh uirthi i bpáipeur nuachta' translates 'any fair dealing with any work for the purposes of private study, research, criticism, review, or newspaper summary' in s155(1)(i) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927 – 'léirmheas' including the senses of ‘criticism’ and ‘review’ – ‘páipeur nuachta, irisleabhar léirmheasa, meaisín, no tréimhseachán den tsórt san’ translating ‘a newspaper, review, magazine, or similar periodical’ in s177(1). On the other hand, ‘The decision of the Supreme Court shall in all cases be final and conclusive, and shall not be reviewed or capable of being reviewed by any other Court’ is translated as ‘Ní bheidh dul thar breith na Cúirte Uachtaraíge in aon chás, agus ní déanfar aith-bhreithniú ná ní féadfar aith-bhreithniú do dhéanamh ar an mbreith sin ag aon Chúirt’ in Article 66 of the 1922 Constitution, ‘agus chun socrú do dhéanamh chun na breitheanna san d’aith-bhreithniú’ translating ‘and to provide for the review of such sentences’ in the Long Title of the Indemnity Act, 1923. In s(2) of the ‘Clare County Scheme’ in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, however, ‘the County Board of Health, whose decisions shall be subject to review and sanction of the County Council’ is translated as ‘Bórd Sláinte na Contae ‘na mbeidh a bhreitheanna fé ath-fhéachaint agus fé chead na Comhairle Contae’. In s6(10) of the Dublin Reconstruction (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1924, ‘The Judge may review, rescind, or vary any order made under this section’ is translated as ‘Féadfaidh an Breitheamh aon ordú a dineadh féin alt so d’ath-scrúdú, do chur ar neamh-ní no d’atharú’. Note, finally, that in s44(1)(a) of the Control of Prices Act, 1937, ‘stating their intention to keep under review ... the prices charged’ is translated as ‘á rá go bhfuil ar intinn acu bheith ag faire ... ar na praghsanna bheidh á n-éileamh’.

chun críocha This phrase, which is found throughout the Acts translating ‘for the purposes of’, is not cited either in Ó Dónaill nor in Dinneen s.v. ‘críoch’, though Dinneen does give ‘purpose’ as one of the senses of ‘críoch’. DIL translates ‘crích’ as (a) ‘boundary, limit (of territory), end; aim, purpose, etc. (particularly in later language)’ and (b) ‘confines, territory, district, land’ – see the commentary on Article 2. Strictly speaking, this should read as ‘chun críoch’ (i.e. the genitive plural), according to the official standard, but the phrase is so established now that it is treated as a unit in itself. Note that ‘chun crícheanna’ is the form in the enrolled text.

Looking at early Acts, ‘Chun gach críche féadfar an t-Acht um Bun-reacht Shaorstáit Éireann, 1922, do ghairm den Acht so’ translates ‘This Act may be cited for all purposes as the Constitution of The Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922’ in s3 of the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922. In Article 37 of that Constitution, ‘unless the purpose of the appropriation has in the same session been recommended’ is translated as ‘mara ndéanfar sa tsíósón céanna intinn a churtha i leithreas do mhola’.

binse This headword is translated as ‘tribunal’ in Téarmaí Dlí, where ‘barántas binse’ is translated as ‘bench warrant’. ‘Binse’ is translated as ‘bench’ in Ó Dónaill who cites ‘an Binse, the Bench, binse breithimh, judge’s bench; tribunal’, following the abbreviation for ‘Jurisprudence’. Ó Dónaill cites ‘idir barra is binse, in open court’. ‘Binse’ is translated as ‘a seat, a bench, bench in court’ in Dinneen. According to DIL s.v. ‘bein(n)se, béinse’, this may be an English loanword (although it has been claimed to be a French loanword). DIL translates this headword as ‘bench, table, the Judicial Bench’.

‘In aon changean, agra, ionchúiseamh nó imeacht eile a bhí ar feitheamh díreach roimh an lá ceaptha in aon chúirt nó binse’ translates ‘In any action, suit, prosecution or other proceeding which was pending immediately before the appointed day in any court or tribunal’ in s4 of the Second Schedule to the Údarás na Gaeltachta Act, 1979. ‘By any other Court, Tribunal or Authority whatsoever’ is translated as ‘ag aon Chúirt, Binse ná Údarás eile ar bith’ in Article 66 of the 1922 Constitution.

comhlacht This word translates ‘body’ in the Acts but in general usage renders ‘a company’ (‘cuideachta’ in Téarmaí Dlí). ‘Comhlacht’ is translated as ‘body; company, firm’ in Ó Dónaill, ‘cómhlucht’ being translated as ‘fellow-labourers; an associated band; a household; a company’ in Dinneen. ‘Comlucht’ is a compound with ‘lucht’, according to DIL, where two examples are cited, one of which is translated as ‘accomplices’, the other as ‘companions’. ‘Na toghacháin chun cóluchtaí áitiúla áirithe’ translates ‘the elections to certain local bodies’ in the Long Title of the Local Elections Postponement Act, 1922. ‘Aon fhostathóir is cólucht daoine’ translates ‘any employer being a body of persons’ in s47(2) of the Finance Act, 1925.

a cheapfar ... a ainmneofar See the commentary on Articles 12.4.4° and 13.1.1° regarding ‘ainmnigh’ and ‘nominate’; see the commentary on Article 6.1 regarding ‘ceap’ and ‘designate’ and see the commentary on Article 13.1.1° on ‘ceap’ as ‘appoint’. ‘Beidh ábhar achomhairc ann in aghaidh an chinnidh sin chun duine ... a cheapfaidh nó a ainmneoidh an tAire’ translates ‘an appeal shall lie against such determination to a person ... appointed or designated by the Minister’ in s205(1) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981. ‘Ceapa’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating ‘designate’ in translations for the Department of Fisheries, ‘designated to contain’ being cited as having been translated as ‘atá ceaptha chun ... do choinneáil’ in Iris Oifigiúil, 1922/23, and ‘designated by the numbers’ being translated in another source as ‘marcálta leis na huimhreacha’. ‘(Or shall) ... assume the name, designation or description of any ... member of the Garda Síochána’ is translated as ‘má dhineann sé ainm, teideal no comharthaí aon ... bhaill den Ghárda Síochána do thabhairt air féin’ in s17(1) of the Garda Síochána (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. ‘Comharthaí sóirt’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating ‘designation’ in Iris an Phuist, 12/1/27, while ‘roinnt’ is cited as translating ‘designation (of areas)’ in translations for the Department of Justice.

cúis See the commentary on Article 12.10.3°. ‘Which relate to procedure upon investigation of a charge against an officer’, in s5 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1925, is translated as ‘a bhaineas le nós-imeachta tar éis cúis i gcoinnibh oifigigh d’iniúcha’. ‘Upon the hearing of a charge against a proprietor’ is translated as ‘ar chúiseamh a éisteacht i gcoinne dílseánaigh’ in s9 of the Defamation Act, 1961.

alt 10 Note that ‘alt’ is in the genitive singular in the enrolled text, ‘ailt’.

a scrúdú See the commentary on Article 12.10.5°.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Apart from a case where it is provided by this Constitution that the President will act from his own counsel, or after taking counsel with the Council of State, or that he will act upon something relating to the Council of State, or on the advice or nomination of any other group or person, or upon receipt of any other news from any other group or person, it is only on the advice of the Government (that) the President is permitted to operate and fulfil the powers and the functions that are given to him by this Constitution.

ENGLISH TEXT

The powers and functions conferred on the President by this Constitution shall be exercisable and performable by him only on the advice of the Government, save where it is provided by this Constitution that he shall act in his absolute discretion or after consultation with or in relation to the Council of State, or on the advice or nomination of, or on receipt of any other communication from, any other person or body.

- 1 'That he shall act ... after consultation with or in relation to the Council of State' is expressed as 'go ngníomhóidh an tUachtarán ... tar éis comhairle a ghlacadh leis an gComhairle Stáit, nó go ngníomhóidh sé i dtaobh ní a bhaineas leis an gComhairle Stáit' ('that the President will act ... after consultation with the Council of State, or that he will act upon something relating to the Council of State') in the Irish text.
- 2 As in Article 13.2.2°, 'in his absolute discretion' is expressed as 'as a chomhairle féin' (literally 'from his - own counsel'), 'on his own initiative', in the Irish text.

- 3 'Communication' is expressed as 'scéala' ('news') in the Irish text.
- 4 Again, 'is cead' is prohibitive in tone and focuses the section on what the President 'is permitted' to do, whereas the English text focuses on when the powers and functions of the President are 'exercisable and performable' by him.
- 5 'Save where it is provided' is expressed as 'Taobh amuigh de chás dá socraítear' ('apart from a case where it is provided') in the Irish text.
- 6 'Body' is expressed in the Irish text as 'comhlacht' in the previous subsection but as 'dream' in this section, as in Article 10.1.

scéala This headword is translated as 'news, tidings' in Ó Dónaill, with the secondary senses of 'word, message' and 'information, disclosure'. Dinneen states that 'scéala' is sometimes used as plural of 'scéal' but that it is probably a separate word, translating that headword as 'news, tidings, a message', citing 'tháinig aingeal le scéala chun Muire, an angel came with a message to Mary'. See the commentary on Article 33.5.3°, along with the commentary on Article 33.5.2°, where 'scéala a thabhairt' expresses 'notify'.

See the commentary on Article 13.7.1° regarding 'communicate'. In s387 of the Companies Act, 1963, 'to disclose any privileged communication made to him otherwise than as such solicitor' is translated as 'aon chumarsáid faoi phribhléid a nochtadh a rinneadh leis ar dhóigh seachas ina cháil mar atur nae den sórt sin'. In s149(4) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'The Committee may ... in private communication, make such suggestions to the Comptroller and Auditor General ... as they see fit' is translated as 'féadfaidh an Coiste, i gcumarsáid rúnda, cibé moltaí is cuí leo a dhéanamh leis an Ard-Reachtair Cuntas agus Ciste' and the Heading above s151, 'Communication between the Dáil and the Seanad', is translated as 'Cumarsáid idir an Dáil agus an Seanad'. Note that s151 reads as follows:

Messages from the Dáil to the Seanad shall be in writing ... Is í scríbhinn ... a chuirfear Teachtaireachtaí ón Dáil go dtí an Seanad.

In s7(7) of the Judicial Separation and Family Law Reform Act, 1989, 'Any oral or written communication between either spouse and any third party' is translated as 'Aon teagmháil ó bhéal nó i scríbhinn idir ceachtar céile agus aon tríú páirtí'. In s18(1) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, 'each candidate ... shall ... be entitled to send, free of any charge for postage, to each person ... one postal communication' is translated as 'beidh gach iarrthóir ... i dteideal aon phost-teachtairacht amháin ... a chur saor ó tháille phostais chuig gach duine'. Finally, in s52 of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978, 'reports made by the Fitness to Practise Committee to the Council ... and any other communications between the Committee and the Council' is translated as 'tuarascálacha a thabharfaidh an Coiste um Fheidhmíúlacht chun Cleachtadh don Chomhairle ... agus aon teachtaireachtaí eile idir an Coiste agus an Chomhairle'.

Looking at early Acts, 'Every communication from the Minister to an applicant' is translated as 'Gach teacht-aireacht ón Aire chun iarratasóra' in s4(7) of the Neutrality (War Damage to Property) Act, 1941. 'I dtuarasgabháil ... no i gconbharsáid eile ón gCoimisiún' translates 'in a report ... or other communication from the Commission' in s21(4)(a) of the Control of Prices Act, 1932, 'conbharsáid' translating 'communication' in the early Acts in general. 'Conbharsáid no có-fhreagarhas do bheith aige leis an namhaid' translates 'The offence of treacherously ... holding communication or correspondence with ... the enemy' in s32(3) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'conbharsáidí ... idir Rialtas Shaorstáit Éireann agus Rialtas aon stáit ... eile' translating 'communications ... between the Government of Saorstát Éireann and the Government of any other state' in s1(xi) of the Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1924, and 'by affording an improved means of communication' being translated as 'tré shlí chonbharsáide fheabhsuithe do thabhairt dóibh' in s27(c) of the Arterial Drainage Act, 1925.

On the other hand, 'nothing in this Act shall make a husband compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during the marriage' is translated as 'ní féadfar, de bharr éinní san Acht so, a chur fhiachaint ar fhear céile aon eolas a thug a bhean do le linn bheith pósta dhóibh do nochta' in s1(d) of the Criminal Justice (Evidence) Act, 1924. 'Scéal' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'communication' in early translations for the Department of Justice, 'comhrádh' being cited as translating 'communication' in Iris an Phuist, 4/1/1928, and 'oifigeach teangmhála' as translating 'officer of communication' in the Proceedings of Seanad Éireann, 3/10/23.

a oibriú is a chomhlíonadh See the commentary on Articles 3 and 13.5.1°. Regarding 'exercisable', see s8 of the Fuel (Control of Supplies) Act, 1921, where 'The powers conferred on the Minister by the Act shall be in addition to ... any other powers exercisable by the Minister' is translated as 'Na cumhachtaí a thugtar don Aire leis an Acht seo is cumhachtaí iad i dteannta ... aon chumhachtaí eile is infheidhmithe ag an Aire'. In s8 of the Air Companies Act, 1966, 'where a right or power is exercisable by attorney' is translated as 'i gcás ceart nó cumhacht is infheidhmithe trí aturnae'. Unfortunately, 'performable' is also translated as 'infheidhmithe' – see, for example, s16(1) of the Health Act, 1970, where 'The chief executive officer of a health board may delegate any function performable by him to another officer of the board' is translated as 'Féadfaidh príomh-oifigeach feidhmiúcháin boird sláinte aon fheidhm is infheidhmithe aige a tharmligean chun oifigeach eile de chuid an bhoird'. As we have seen, 'comhlíon' expresses 'perform' earlier on in the Constitution, and translates 'perform' in Téarmaí Dlí. In s36(1) of the same Health Act, we find an example of 'inchomhlíonta': 'subject to all trusts and equities affecting the same and then subsisting and capable of being performed' is translated as 'faoi réir na n-iontaobhas agus na gcothromas go léir a dhéanann difear don chéanna agus a bhí an tráth sin ann agus inchomhlíonta'.

'And those powers, duties and functions shall become exercisable and performable by those authorities' is translated as 'agus beidh na cumhachtaí, na dualgais agus na feidhmeanna sin infheidhmithe agus inchomhlíonta ag na húdaráis sin' in s10(1) of the Local Government (Toll Roads) Act, 1979. In s45 of the Air-Raid Precautions Act, 1939, 'The powers and duties conferred or imposed on an essential undertaker ... shall be exercisable and performable by such essential undertaker notwithstanding ...' is translated as 'Na comhachta bronntar no bronnfar agus na dualgaisí forchuirtear no forchuirfear ar ghnóthaire riachtanach ... beid infheidhmithe agus ionchóilíonta ag an ngnóthaire riachtanach san d'ainneoin ...', 'na comhachta agus na dualgaisí do bheadh infheidhmithe agus ionchóilíonta ... ag an dochtúir oifigiúil sin' translating 'the powers and duties which would be exercisable and performable ... by such medical officer' in s8(2) of the Milk and Dairies Act, 1935. 'In the exercise or the performance by the Council ... of any of the powers ... of the Corporation which are exercisable or performable by them' is translated as 'i gcóilíonta do dhin an Chomhairle ... ar aon cheann de chomhachta ... an Bhárdais is infheidhmithe, no is ionchóilíonta acu-san' in s16(1) of the Cork City Management Act, 1929.

a bhaineas The special relative form of 'bain' – see the commentary on Article 6.1. 'Bain le' is translated by Ó Dónaill as (1) 'touch, interfere with' and (2) 'concern, relate to', the latter being its general usage in the Acts – see s9 of the Finance Act, 1990, for example, where 'provisions relating to relief' is translated as 'foráil a bhaineann le faoiseamh'.

'In relation to' is generally translated as 'i ndáil le' in the modern Acts. 'For the purpose of reading any prices displayed on, with or in relation to the goods' is translated as 'chun aon phraghsanna a bheidh ar taisealbhadh ar na hearraí nó leis na hearraí nó i ndáil leo a léamh' in s15(1)(a) of the Consumer Information Act, 1978, for example. Looking at earlier Acts, 'any document ... registered by him ... in relation to a company' is translated as 'aon scríbhinn ... a chláraigh sé ... maidir le cuideachta' in s11(1) of the Companies (Re-construction of Records) Act, 1924. 'Is attributable to manufacturing operations performed thereon or in relation thereto in Saorstát Éireann' is translated as 'gur obráidí déantóireachta a dineadh ortha no mar gheall ortha i Saorstát Éireann fé ndear é' in s6 of the Third Schedule to the Finance Act, 1926. Finally, 'I ... do solemnly swear that I will not disclose any information in relation to the business ... which may come to my knowledge' is translated as 'Mionnuím-se, ... go solamanta ná déanfad aon eolas a thiocfidh chugham ar ghnó' in s32(1) of the Currency Act, 1927.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments on the translation below that the sense of 'i ndáil le' is not very clear and recommends 'de gheall uirthi/orthu / ar an gComhairle Stáit'.

Taobh amuigh de chás Literally 'outside of a case'. See s26(3) of the Redundancy Payments Act, 1967, for example, regarding the translation of 'save where', 'Save where otherwise specifically provided' being translated as 'Ach amháin mar a bhforáiltear a mhalairt go sonrath'. 'Expenses ... shall, save where it is otherwise provided by order of the Minister ... be charged' is translated as 'Déanfar, ach amháin mar a foráiltear a mhalairt le hordú ón Aire ..., costais ... a mhuirearú' in s50 of the Local Government Act, 1955. In s1(2) of the Social Welfare (Pay-Related Benefit) Act, 1973, the standard phrase in the Acts, 'references in this Act to any enactment shall, save where the context otherwise requires, be construed as references to that Act as amended by any subsequent enactment including this Act' is translated as 'Ach amháin mar a n-éilíonn an comhthéacs a mhalairt, déanfar tagairtí san Acht seo d'aon achtachán a fhorléiriú mar thagairtí don Acht sin arna leasú le haon achtachán iardain lena n-áirítear an tAcht seo'. See further the commentary on Article 34.4.4°.

go ngníomhóidh 'Gníomhaigh' is translated as 'act' in Ó Dónaill; Dinneen translates 'gníomhuighim' as 'I work, act, operate'. 'Gníomhaigid' is formed from 'gním', verbal noun of 'gníid', 'acts, does, makes', and is translated as (I) 'puts into operation, effects, practises' and (II) 'acts, takes effect' in DIL. 'Gníomhaigh' translates 'act' in general in the Acts – see, for example, s15(11) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, where 'in so far as they act separately' is translated as 'a mhéid a ghníomhaíonn siad ar leithligh'. See further the commentary on Articles 14.2.2° and 28.4.2°.

as a chomhairle féin See the commentary on Article 13.2.2°. 'The Resident Physician and Governor thereof may, in his absolute discretion, do either or both of the following' is translated as 'féadfaidh Lia Cónaitheach agus Gobharnóir an Phríomh-Ospidéal sin, dá rogha féin amháin, ceachtar ní nó an dá ní acu seo a leanas a dhéanamh' in s171(2) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú, commenting on the increase of the use of 'amháin' in the translation below as against the Irish text above, recommends 'dá lánrogha féin' here to avoid repetition of 'amháin'. For the same reason, Professor Ó Murchú recommends replacing 'ach amháin mar a bhforáiltear' with 'ach i gcás a bhforáiltear'. Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that it is difficult to avoid repetition of 'comhairle' in the translation, with only this term corresponding to English 'advice-council-counsel'. He suggests substituting 'Faoi threoir an Rialtais' for 'Is ar chomhairle an Rialtais' in the opening clause.

ainmniú This headword is translated as 'nomination, denomination' in Ó Dónaill – see the commentary on Articles 12.4.4° and 13.1.1° regarding 'ainmnigh' expressing 'nominate'. In s20(2)(b) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, 'other than the nomination of the surviving candidates' is translated as 'ach amháin ainmniú na n-iarrthóirí atá fágtha', and in s20(2)(c) 'a fresh nomination' is translated as 'ainmniú úr'. 'Nomination papers', however, is translated as 'páipéar ainmniúcháin' in s21(b) of the same Schedule.

dream See the commentary on Article 10.1. 'Public body' and 'body corporate' are translated as 'comhlacht poiblí' and 'comhlacht corpraithe' respectively in Téarmaí Dlí.

na cumhachtaí See the commentary on Article 13.6. Regarding early Acts, 'all the powers conferred by the said section 1 shall be vested in and exercisable by such member of the Executive Council' is translated as 'gach comhacht dá mbronntar leis an alt 1 roimh-ráite tabharfar í don bhall san den Árd-Chomhairle agus beidh sí infheidhmithe aige' in s1(1) of the Enforcement of Law (Occasional Powers) Act, 1923. In s4(1) of the Industrial Trust Company of Ireland Limited (Acquisition of Capital)

Act, 1926, 'any of the rights and powers from time to time exercisable by the holder of such share capital' is translated as 'aon cheann de sna cearta agus de sna comhachta is infheidhmithe o am go ham ag sealbhóir scair-chaipitail den tsórt san' and 'where any of such rights or powers exercisable by attorney' is translated as 'sa chás ina bhfuil aon chirt no comhachta acu san infheidhmithe tré atúrnae'.

dá socraítear 'Socraigh', literally 'settle', has the sense of 'arrange' and is used in the Acts, with 'foráil', to translate 'provide' – see the commentary on Article 8.3.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Within the constraint/scope of this Constitution further powers and functions may be given to the President by law.

ENGLISH TEXT

Subject to this Constitution, additional powers and functions may be conferred on the President by law.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Subject to this Constitution' is expressed as 'Faoi chuimsiú an Bhunreachta seo' ('Within the constraint/scope of this Constitution') in the Irish text, which phrase is found in other Articles.

tuilleadh 'Cúnant i leith tuilleadh forcinntithe' and 'fógra ag iarraidh tuilleadh eolais' respectively are translated as 'covenant for further assurance' and 'notice requiring further information' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'tuilleadh faoisimh' being translated as 'further and other relief'. 'Tuilleadh' is translated as 'addition, increase; more' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'tuilleadh, a thuilleadh, eolais, additional information' and 'tuilleadh fiosrúcháin, further inquiry'. Dinneen translates this headword as 'act of adding to or increasing; an increase, addition or extension, added measure' and cites 'tá tuilleadh airgid (or a thuilleadh airgead) uaim, I want more money'.

Following Téarmaí Dlí, 'tuilleadh' usually translates 'further' in the Acts – see, for example, s1 of the Air Companies (Amendment) Act, 1978, where 'the Minister for Finance may subscribe for further shares' is translated as 'féadfaidh an tAire Airgeadais suibscriobh le haghaidh tuilleadh scaireanna' (though 'additional shares' is also translated as 'tuilleadh scaireanna' in s13(1) of the First Schedule to the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975). Generally in the Acts 'additional' is translated by the genitive singular form of 'breis', 'breise' – see, for example, s1 of the International Development Association (Amendment) Act, 1971, where 'additional financial resources' is translated as 'sócmhainní breise airgeadais'. It is sometimes used also to translate 'further' – see, for example, s17(2)(a) of the Fisheries Act, 1980, where 'such board may ... extend the said period by such further period as the board thinks proper' is translated as 'féadfaidh an bord sin ... cibé tréimhse breise is cuí leis an mbord a chur mar fhadú leis an tréimhse sin'.

'Additional powers and functions of Bank' is translated as 'Cumhachtaí agus feidhmeanna breise an Bhainc' in the Margin Title of s12 of the Central Bank Act, 1989, and as 'Cumhachtaí agus feidhmeanna breise de chuid an Bhainc' in the Margin Title of s47 of the Central Bank Act, 1971. Looking at early Acts, 'No assessment or additional assessment to excess profits duty may be made' is translated as 'ní féadfar aon cháinnmheas ná cáinnmheas breise i gcóir diúití oll-shochair do dhéanamh' in s32(1) of the Finance Act, 1926. 'Additional and supplementary estimates' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'meastacháin nua agus breise' in the Order Paper of Dáil Éireann, 1927, p. 5. Finally, in Article 34 of the 1922 Constitution, 'the vacancy thus created shall be additional to the places to be filled under Article 32' is translated as 'cuirfear an follamhntas a tharlóidh mar sin i dteanta na n-ionad a bheidh le líona fé Airtíogal 32'.

Faoi chuimsiú See the commentary on Article 12.5. 'Subject to' is translated as 'faoi réir' in Téarmaí Dlí.

a thabhairt See the commentary on the next section regarding 'confer', which is expressed by the verb 'bronn'.

Faoi réir an Bhunreachta seo, féadfar cumhachtaí agus feidhmeanna breise<sup>1</sup> a thabhairt don Uachtarán le dlí.

ARTICLE 13.11 AIRTEAGAL 13.11*TÉACS GAEILGE

Ní cead don Uachtarán aon chumhacht ná feidhm dá mbronnar air le dlí a oibriú ná a chomhlíonadh ach amháin ar chomhairle an Rialtais.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The President is not permitted to operate nor to fulfil any power or function (of those) which are granted to him by law except on the advice of the Government.

ENGLISH TEXT

No power or function conferred on the President by law shall be exercisable or performable by him save only on the advice of the Government.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 Like the previous section but one, Article 13.9, 'Ní cead' focuses the section on what the President 'is permitted' to do, whereas the English text focuses on when the power or function of the President is 'exercisable or performable'.
- 2 The Irish term expressing 'conferred' is 'tabhairt' in the previous section and 'bronn' in this section.

Commentary

dá mbronnar Note that in the previous section we have the verb 'tabhairt' in the same context as 'bronn' here. 'Bronn' is translated as 'grant, bestow' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'rud a bhronnadh ar dhuine' as 'to bestow something on someone'. 'Bronnaim' is translated as 'I give, bestow, grant' in Dinneen. This verb is thought to be an extended application of 'bronnaid', the original sense of which seems to have been 'spends, consumes', along with 'injures, damages' – see DÍL s.v.v. '1 bronnaid' and '2 bronnaid'. In the glossary in the manuscript Egerton 158, 'bronn' is cited together with 'deonuigh', 'aontuigh' and 'tabhairt'. See further the commentary on Article 40.2.1° regarding 'bronn' and see the commentary on Article 12.1 regarding 'confer'. Note, for example, that 'when exercising or performing any power or function conferred on him by Regulation 3' is translated as 'le linn dó bheith ag feidhmiú nó ag comhlíonadh aon chumhacht nó aon fheidhm a thugtar dó le Rialachán 3' in s39(3)(b) of the Finance Act, 1980.

a oibriú agus a chomhlíonadh See the commentary on Article 13.9.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If the President is absent or if (he) is temporarily incapacitated/deranged, or if (he) is permanently incapacitated/deranged and that this is established as provided by section 3 of Article 12 of this Constitution, or if it happens that he dies or he gives up / relinquishes office or (he) is put out of office, or if he fails to operate and fulfil the powers and functions of his office or any one of them, or if the office of the President is vacant, it is a Commission which will be composed as provided in section 2 of this Article that will operate and fulfil the powers and the functions that are bestowed on the President by this Constitution or under it.

ENGLISH TEXT

In the event of the absence of the President, or his temporary incapacity, or his permanent incapacity established as provided by section 3 of Article 12 hereof, or in the event of his death, resignation, removal from office, or failure to exercise and perform the powers and functions of his office or any of them, or at any time at which the office of President may be vacant, the powers and functions conferred on the President by or under this Constitution shall be exercised and performed by a Commission constituted as provided in section 2 of this Article.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 As noted in Article 12.3, 'incapacity' is expressed in the Irish text by a phrase ('ar míthreoir') which today has the sense of 'deranged'/'misguided'.

- 2 As already noted, 'In the event of ... his permanent incapacity established as provided by section 3' is expressed in the Irish text as 'má bhíonn ar míthreoir go buan agus go suítear sin mar a shocraítear le halt 3' ('If he is permanently incapacitated and that is established as provided by section 3'), i.e. another clause is added to the text.
- 3 The style of the English text, with repetition of 'in the event of', followed by 'or at any time at which', is not paralleled in the Irish text which has 'Má bhíonn', 'má tharlaíonn' and then 'nó má bhíonn'.
- 4 'At any time at which the office of the President may be vacant' is expressed simply as 'má bhíonn oifig an Uachtaráin folamh' ('if the office of the President is vacant') in the Irish text.

Commentary

má theipeann air 'Teip' is translated as 'fail' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'má theipeann ort, if you fail' and 'theip orm é a dhéanamh, I failed to do it'. Dinneen also cites 'má theibeann ort, if you fail' (s.v. 'teibim'). Although not included in De Bhaldrathe's Innéacs Nua-Ghaeilge, this word is found in DIL s.v. 'do-eipen' ('excises, cuts' [to-ess-ben-]), where two examples with 'ar' are cited (the earliest being Keating's History of Ireland); DIL translates 'teibid orm' as 'I fail'.

'Mainnigh' specifically translates 'fail' in the Acts – see, for example, s5(1) of the Fuels (Control of Supplies) Act, 1971, where 'Where ... a person fails or refuses or wilfully neglects to comply with a provision in an order made by the Minister under this Act' is translated as 'Más rud é ... go mainneoidh nó go ndiúltóidh nó go bhfaileoidh duine go toiliúil, déanamh de réir forála in ordú ón Aire faoin Acht seo'. In s12(1) of the Wealth Tax Act, 1975, 'in any case where there is failure to disclose material facts' is translated as 'in aon chás ina mainneofar fíorais ábhartha a nochtadh'. In s23(4) of the Finance Act, 1990, 'Section 500 and 503 ... shall apply to a failure to deliver a return' is translated as 'Beidh feidhm ag ailt 500 agus 503 ... maidir le mainneachtain tuairisceán ... a sheachadadh'. 'Or the failure to exercise a right' is translated as 'nó a mhainniú ceart a fheidhmiú' and 'in the case of a disposition which consists of the failure to exercise a right or a power' is translated as 'i gcás diúscartha ar mainneachtain í ceart nó cumhacht a fheidhmiú' in s2 of the Capital Acquisitions Tax Act, 1976, 'by reason of the failure to exercise a power of revocation' being translated as 'mar gheall ar mhainneachtain cumhacht chúlghairme a fheidhmiú' in s21(2)(b). In s56(4) of the Finance Act, 1974, 'a person's abandonment of, or failure to exercise, such a right is to be treated for those purposes as an exercise of the option' is translated as 'measfar chun na gcrictha sin gur feidhmiú na rogha sin ag duine é do thréigean cirt den sórt sin nó é do mhainniú é a fheidhmiú'. See further the commentary on Article 42.5, where 'fail in' is expressed as 'nach ndéanann'.

Looking at early Acts, 'in aineoin aon teipe i gcó-líona aon reachta, riala no orduithe (pe'ca le gníomh no le faillí é)' translates 'notwithstanding any failure (whether by way of commission or omission) to comply with any statute, rule or order' in s9(2) of the District Justices (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. In s30 of the First Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923, however, 'Any failure to publish a document in accordance with these rules shall not invalidate the document' is translated as 'Ní bheidh aon scríbhinn nea-dhleathach de dheascaibh aon fhaill ar í d'fhoillsiú do réir na rialacha so'. 'If any registered proprietor ... fails to keep such register as is required by this section' is translated as 'Má ráiníonn d'aon únaer cláruithe ... gan an clár san a héilítear leis an alt so do chimeád' in s13(3) of the Agricultural Produce (Eggs) Act, 1924. Finally, 'Any of the following shall be a reasonable excuse for failure to comply with this section' is translated as 'Leathscéal réasúnta chun gan an t-alt so do chólíona ísea éinni acu so a leanas' in s4(1) of the School Attendance Act, 1926, and 'beidh an ní seo a leanas leis ina leathscéal réasúnta chun an t-alt so d'fhágaint gan cólíona' translates 'the following shall also be a reasonable excuse for failure to comply with this section' in subsection 3.

Má bhíonn an tUachtarán Literally 'if the President is ...'. 'In the event of ...' is usually translated as 'i gcás ...' in the Acts – see s4(7) of the Dairy Produce (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1973, for example, where 'In the event of the winding up or dissolution of the Society' is translated as 'I gcás an Cumann a fhoirceannadh nó a dhíscaoileadh'. 'The chairman of a review board shall nominate another member of the board to be chairman for a particular sitting of the board in the event of the former being unable to act' is translated as 'Ainmneoidh cathaoirleach boird athbhreithnithe comhalta eile den bhord le bheith ina chathaoirleach ag suí áirithe den bhord mura mbeidh sé féin in ann gníomhú' in s37(5) of the Health (Mental Services) Act, 1981. 'Or insurance of the member's estate in the event of his death' is translated as 'nó árachas ar eastát an chomhalta i gcás a bháis' in s25(1)(a) of the Credit Union Act, 1966. In s21(8)(b) of the Solicitors (Amendment) Act, 1960, 'in the event of his death, insolvency or other disability' is translated as 'i gcás é d'fháil bháis, d'éirí dócmhainneach nó a theacht faoi dhícháilíocht eile'.

Looking at early Acts, 'Má bhíonn Máistir na hArd-Chúirte ... seal as láthair no seal fé mhí-chumas de dheascaibh breoiteachta no má bhíonn oifig an Mháistir ... san folamh, féadfídh an tAire fear ionaid do cheapa chun oifig an Mháistir ... san d'fheidhmiú le linn na nea-láithreachta, an mhí-chumais, no an fholúntais sin' translates 'In the event of the temporary absence or the temporary incapacity through illness of the Master of the High Court ... or in the event of the office of such Master ... being vacant the Minister may appoint a deputy to execute the office of such Master ... during such absence, incapacity, or vacancy' in s27(1) of the Court Officers Act, 1926. 'In the event of any vacancy among the appointed or elected members of the Committee arising otherwise than by effluxion of time' is translated as 'Má thagann aon fholúntas imeasc ball ceaptha no ball tofa an Choiste agus nách tré imeacht aimsire a thiocfa sé' in s3 of the Schedule to the Pilotage Order Confirmation Act, 1927. 'Má thárluionn' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'in event of' in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann.

a bheas comhdhéanta In s58 of the Finance Act, 1990, for example, 'a company which is constituted under any other Act' is translated as 'cuideachta arna comhdhéanamh faoi aon Acht eile'. In Part IV of the Fifth Schedule to the Defence Act, 1954, 'We, the undersigned members of the Commission constituted as provided in section 2 of Article 14 of the Constitution to ...' is translated as 'Déanaimidne, na sínithe thíos, is comhaltaí den Choimisiún a bunaíodh mar forálar in alt 2 d'Airteagal 14 den Bhunreacht chun'. 'The joint committee shall, in lieu of being constituted as provided by subsection (2) ... consist of –' is translated as 'in ionad an comhchoiste a bheith cóirithe mar forálar le fo-alt (2) ... beidh sé comhdhéanta mar leanas –' in s4(1) of the Meath Hospital Act, 1951. 'Is leis na Rialacha atá sa Dara Sceideal ... a regeálfar có-dhéanamh ... bordanna sláinte' translates 'The constitution ... of boards of health ... shall be regulated by the Rules' in s12(2) of the Local Government Act, 1925. 'The number of members necessary to constitute a meeting of either House for the exercise of its powers shall be determined by its Standing Orders' is translated as 'Socróidh Buan-Orduithe gach Tighe an mó ball a dhéanfaidh cruinniú dleathach d'aon Tigh chun a chomachta do chur i bhfeidhm' in Article 22 of the 1922 Constitution.

as láthair 'Cé atá as láthair?' is cited in Ó Dónaill s.v. 'as', where this question is translated as 'Who is absent?' 'Duine a chur as láthair' is translated as 'to displace someone' s.v. 'láthair'. Dinneen cites 'dul as a láthair, to leave him' and 'tamall as láthair, a little distance away' – see further the commentary on Article 28.6.3°. In s16 of the Schedule to the Employment Equality Act, 1977, 'The Minister shall appoint one of the ordinary members of the Agency to be vice-chairman of the Agency with the function of acting as chairman in the absence of the chairman' is translated as 'Ceapfaidh an tAire duine de ghnáthchomhaltaí na Gníomhaireachta le bheith ina leas-chathaoirleach ar an nGníomhaireacht agus é d'fheidhm aige gníomhú mar chathaoirleach nuair a bheidh an cathaoirleach as láthair'. In s7(3)(a) of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1969, 'during his absence or incapacity or during a vacancy in his office' is translated as 'le linn é a bheith as láthair nó faoi éagumas nó le linn a oifig a bheith folamh'.

Looking at early Acts, 'Gníomhóidh an Leas-Uachtarán tar ceann an Uachtaráin, leis, le linn eisean do bheith as láthair go sealadach' translates 'The Vice-President shall also act in place of the President during his temporary absence' in Article 53 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Caillfidh saighdiúir go hátomaitigiúil páigh in aghaidh gach lae ... a bheidh sé as láthair tar éis tréigean do gan cead' translates 'In the case of a soldier, pay shall be automatically forfeited for every day ... of absence on desertion or without leave' in s128 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'Nea-láithreachta gan cead' translating 'Absence without leave' in the Margin Title of s45 of that Act, with 'Bheith as láthair gan cead' translating 'The offence of being absent without leave' in subsection 1. 'Dióláithreachta' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'absence' in Iris an Phuist, 28/12/1927.

ar míthreoir go sealadach See the commentary on Article 12.3 regarding 'ar míthreoir'. Regarding 'temporary incapacity' in the Acts, 'during the temporary absence or temporary incapacity through illness of the acting district probate registrar' is translated as 'le linn an cláraitheoir probháide ceantair gníomhach a bheith as láthair go sealadach nó faoi éagumas go sealadach de dheasca breioiteachta' in s131 of the Succession Act, 1965. In s4(1) of the Court Officers Act, 1951, 'In the event of the temporary absence or the temporary incapacity of any district court clerk or in the event of the office of district court clerk for any district court area being vacant, the Minister may ... appoint a deputy to execute the office of such district court clerk during such absence, incapacity or vacancy' is translated as 'I gcás aon chléireach cúirte dúiche a bheith as láthair go sealadach nó a bheith faoi éagumas sealadach nó i gcás oifig chléirigh chúirte dúiche d'aon cheantar cúirte dúiche a bheith folamh, féadfaidh an tAire ... ionadaí a cheapadh chun oifig an chléirigh chúirte dúiche sin a chomhlíonadh an fhad a mhairfeas an neamhláithreacht, an t-éagumas nó an folúntas sin'.

Turning specifically to 'go sealadach', 'áis sealadach' and 'éagumas sealadach' are translated respectively as 'temporary convenience' and 'temporary incapacity' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Sealadach' is translated as 'temporary, provisional' in Ó Dónaill and as 'alternate, periodical, transitory, temporary, provisional' in Dinneen. This adjective derives from the noun 'sealad', earlier 'selat', which in turn is a derivation of 'sel', 'a turn', 'a while, a spell', 'a certain distance'. See further the commentary on Article 28.6.3°.

As well as 'sealadach', cited above from Article 53 of the 1922 Constitution, we also find 'diombuan' and 'nea-mbuan' translating 'temporary' in early Acts. 'In so far as they are in force in Saorstát Éireann and are temporary in their duration' is translated as 'sa mhéid go bhfuilid i bhfeidhm i Saorstát Éireann agus sa mhéid gur diombuan a ré' in the Preamble to the Expiring Laws Continuance Act, 1922, and 'd'aon oifigeach ... dar deonadh pinsean créachta (buan no nea-mbuan)' translates 'to any officer ... whom a wound pension (whether temporary or permanent) has been granted' in s5(1) of the Army Pension Act, 1923. In s30(1) of the Currency Act, 1927, 'during any temporary absence or any temporary incapacity through ill-health of the Chairman, and during such absence or inability' is translated as 'le linn an Cathaoirleach do bheith as láthair go sealadach aon uair no fé mhí-chumas go sealadach tré easláinte aon uair, agus le linn na nea-láithreachta no an mhí-chumais sin'. In s6(1) of the Army Pensions Act, 1927, 'Whenever the chairman ... of the Army Pensions Board is through ill-health or other sufficient cause temporarily incapacitated from performing his duties as such chairman' is translated as 'Pé uair a bheidh cathaoirleach Bhord na nArm-Phinsean ..., tré easláinte no ar leor-chúis eile, fé mhí-chumas dhiombuan ná leigfidh do a dhualgais mar chathaoirleach ... do chólíona'.

go buan 'Éagumas buan' is translated as 'permanent incapacity' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Buan' is translated as 'enduring, permanent' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'go buan' as 'constantly, always'. Dinneen translates 'go buan' (followed by the abbreviation for 'poetical, poetry') as 'always, constantly', translating 'buan' as 'lasting, enduring, long-lived, certain, fixed'. 'Go buan', in Donlevy's Catechism, 1742, is translated as 'constantly' in DIL s.v. 'búan'.

folamh 'His seat on such board, shall ... become and be vacant' is translated as 'tíocfaidh a ionad ar an mbord sin chun bheith, agus beidh sé, folamh' in s17(1) of the Fisheries Act, 1980. In s19(6) of the Harbours Act, 1946,

'the harbour authority shall forthwith declare his office to be vacant and it shall thereupon become vacant' is translated as 'dearbhóidh an t-údarás áitiúil láithreach a oifig a bheith folamh agus air sin beidh sí folamh'. 'Whenever during the term of office of any board of conservators the seat of any elected member of the board becomes vacant by death, resignation, incapacity, or disqualification' is translated as 'Más rud é, i rith téarma oifige aon bhúird chimeádaithe, go bhfolamhófar ionad aon bhaill thofa den bhord tré bhás, eirghe-as, mí-chumas, no dí-cháiliú' in s11(1) of the Fisheries Act, 1925. In s5(2) of the Local Authorities (Officers and Employees) Act, 1926, 'Whenever an office to which this Act applies becomes vacant' is translated as 'Má dintar oifig le n-a mbaineann an tAcht so d'fholmhú'.

Coimisiún As regards early citations, 'Ciallóidh "Coimisinéirí den Chuard Ard-Chúirte" pé breithimh no daoine eile a hainmnítí go dtí so i gCoimisiúin Ard-Shiosóin' translates "'Commissioners of the High Court Circuit" shall mean such judges or other persons as have been heretofore named in Commissions of Assize' in s3 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924.

é d'éag nó é d'éirí as oifig See the commentary on Article 12.3.3° – note how we have 'éirí as oifig' here as against 'éirí as' in the above Article.

go suifear sin See the commentary on Article 12.3.1°.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'The commission shall consist of the following persons' is expressed as 'Is iad na daoine seo a leanas an Coimisiún' ('The following people are the Commission') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Namely' is again expressed in the Irish text by the Irish abbreviation for Latin 'id est'.
- 3 A comma follows '(An Ceann Comhairle)' in the English text alone.

Commentary

an Príomh-Bhreitheamh This compound is translated as 'the Chief Justice' in Téarmaí Dlí and in Ó Dónaill – it does not appear to be given in Dinneen. 'Justice of the District Council' is translated as 'Breitheamh den Chúirt Dúiche' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Breithem' is found in the Glosses of the eighth century, where it glosses Latin 'iudex' and 'arbiter' – see DIL s.v. 'breithem', 'literally, "maker of judgments", Latin iuris consultus, ... and in legal texts usually in the wider sense of jurist ("brehon" in the published Ancient Laws of Ireland), whose function could include that of adjudicating'. See further the commentary on Article 31.2.

'Agus, ina gceapacháin dóibh, gairmfar "Prímh-Bhreitheamh Shaorstát Éireann" dá n-uachtarán (dá ngairmtear "an Prímh-Bhreitheamh" ina dhiaidh seo anso)' translates 'of whom the president (who is hereinafter called "the Chief Justice") shall be styled in his appointment "Chief Justice of the Irish Free State"' in s5 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924. Note that 'Ard-Bhreitheamh na Cúirte Uachtaraige' translates 'the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court' in s16(2) of the Electoral Act, 1923, and 'Tiarna Prímh-Ghiúistís na hÉireann' translates 'the Lord Chief Justice of Ireland' in s24(a) of the Court Officers Act, 1926.

The word 'giúistís' is not included in Téarmaí Dlí; Ó Dónaill translates that headword as (1) 'Historical:

Justiciar'; (2) 'Justice (of the peace), magistrate' and '(plural) Judiciary, judicature'. According to DIL s.v. 'giústís', this is a Romance loanword, perhaps through English. DIL translates 'giústís' as 'a justiciary, a magistrate' and states that it was used of the Irish Lord Deputy. Pontias Pilate is referred to as 'giústís' in one source. The form 'uistís' is also found, being translated as 'a Justice, justiciary' in DIL, where it is stated that this form is frequent in the annals in reference to 'the Lord Deputy or Lord Justice of Ireland'.

'Prím-' comes from Latin 'primus' and is translated as 'first (in time), primary' and 'foremost, chief, principal' in DIL.

Is iad See the commentary on Article 2 regarding 'consist'. Looking at early Acts, in Form 1 in the Schedule to the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1923, 'Expenditure during the year 1922 on reparation consisting of ...' is translated as 'Caithteachas sa bhliain 1922 le deisiúchán, eadhon ...'. In s19(2) of that same Act, 'The Rules Committee for the purposes of this Act shall consist of –' is translated as 'An Coiste Rialacha a bheidh ann chun crícheanna an Achta so, beidh sé co-dhéanta de –'. 'The Trustees shall consist of six persons' is translated as 'Seisear líon na nÍontaobhaithe' in s3(1) of the Slaughtered Animals (Compensation) Act, 1928.

Cathaoirleach 'Bonus do chathaoirleach Cheathrú Shiosóin' translates 'bonus to chairman of quarter sessions' in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922. 'Fear Ceannais' and 'Ceann Comhairle' are cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'Chairman' in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, 1926/1929. See further the commentary on Article 14.2.3<sup>o</sup>.

.i. See the commentary on Article 7. 'Namely' is simply translated as 'eadhon', without reference to any particular Act, in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms. In s2(2) of the Housing (Private Rented Dwellings) (Amendment) Act, 1983, 'The Tribunal shall consist of the following members, namely, a chairman' is translated as 'Ar an mBinse beidh na comhaltai seo a leanas, eadhon, cathaoirleach'. In s6(1) of the Schedule to the Pier and Harbour Provisional Order Confirmation Act, 1929, 'The First Commissioners shall be the following persons, namely...' is translated as 'Isiad na daoine seo a leanas a bheidh mar chéad Choimisinéirí, eadhon:-'.

We also see in the Constitution how 'namely' in this context is not specifically expressed in the Irish text; Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that 'eadhon' need not be included in the translation below.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'On any occasion that ...' is expressed as 'aon uair a' ('any time that ...') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Unable to act' is expressed in the Irish text as 'gan bheith i gcumas gníomhaithe', literally 'not being in power to act', 'not having the capacity to act', though generally 'gan bheith i gcumas' would be understood as 'not being able to'.

Commentary

gan bheith i gcumas gníomhaithe According to the official standard, the verbal noun 'gníomhú' would not be put into the genitive case coming immediately after this prepositional phrase – see An Caighdeán Oifigiúil, p. 96, where 'i riocht scríobh' is given as an example. 'Bheith i gcumas rud a dhéanamh' is translated as 'to be able, have the capacity, to do something' in Ó Dónaill s.v. 'cumas', which headword is translated as 'capability, power'. Dinneen translates 'cumas' as 'adjustment, control, requisite capability or power; ability; effort; disposition' and cites 'níl sé ar mo chumas, I am not able to do it, I have it not in my power or at my disposal; ar chumas (or gcumas) dom, im' chumas, idem.' Ó Dónaill also cites 'dá mbeadh sé ar, i, mo chumas, if it were in my power' and 'rud a chur ar chumas duine, ar a chumas do dhuine, i gcumas do dhuine, to enable someone to do something'. 'Commus' is the verbal noun of 'con-midethar' (which verb is translated as 'is competent, able; rules, governs, controls' in DIL), translated as (a) 'act of controlling, arranging, directing', (b) 'Usual meaning power, ability, capacity' in DIL – see further the commentary on Article 34.5.1<sup>o</sup>. We find the following in the seventh-century

Cambrai Homily: 'céin bes i comus coirp ocus anme' ('so long as he is in power of body and soul'). De Bhaldraithe translates 'I am unable to do it' as 'ní féidir liom, nílím i riocht, in ann, é a dhéanamh; níl sé ar mo chumas é a dhéanamh'. See further the commentary on Article 31.2 where 'ar cumas dó' expresses 'is able'.

In s18(2) of the Courts Act, 1981, 'If, during any period, the President of the High Court is unable owing to illness ... to transact the business of his office or the office of President of the High Court is vacant' is translated as 'Más rud é, le linn aon tréimhse, nach mbeidh Uachtarán na hArd-Chúirte in ann, de dheasca tinnis ... gnó a oifige a dhéanamh, nó go mbeidh oifig Uachtarán na hArd-Chúirte folamh'. In s10(7) of the Courts of Justice Act, 1947, 'If the President of the Circuit Court is unable to act during any period' is translated as 'Má bhíonn Uachtarán na Cúirte Cuarda éagumasach ar ghníomhú ar feadh aon tréimhse', 'If the President of the District Court is unable to act during any period' being translated as 'Mura féidir le hUachtarán na Cúirte Dúiche gníomhú ar feadh tréimhse ar bith' in s35(3) of the Courts (Supplemental Provisions) Act, 1961.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú recommends 'i gcumas' rather than 'in ann' in the translation below, 'in ann' being too dialectical ("róchanúnach") and of uncertain history.

aon uair Ó Dónaill cites 'aon uair is mian leat, any time you like'. Dinneen translates 'aon uair diobh' as 'on either of these occasions'. To avoid repeating 'aon uair' the final clause is expressed as 'nó a bheas an Príomh-Bhreitheamh gan bheith i gcumas gníomhaithe', 'or (any time) that the Chief Justice will not be in power to act'.

'The maintenance debtor shall, on any occasion on which he becomes employed ... include in his notification ... particulars of his earnings' is translated as 'déanfaidh an féichiúnaí cothabhála, ar aon ócáid ar a rachaidh sé ar fostaíocht ... sonraí a thuillimh ... a chur san fhógra uaidh' in s14(b) of the Family Law (Maintenance of Spouses and Children) Act, 1976. In s22(2) of the Dairy Produce (Price Stabilisation) Act, 1935, 'Every person ... who fails, on any occasion on which such particulars are so required to be sent by him, to send such particulars' is translated as 'Gach duine ... go dteipfidh air, ar aon ócáid gur gá dho san do dhéanamh amhlaidh, na mion-innste sin do chur uaidh'.

'Fé mar is gá é' translates 'as occasion arises' in s6(1) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, and 'as occasion requires' in s7(1) of the Dentists Act, 1928. 'Fé mar eireoidh ócáid chuige' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'as occasion permits' in Iris an Phuist, 22/2/28, 'fé mar a bhéas gá leis' being cited as translating 'as occasion may arise', with 'nuair a fheicfidh sé go bhfuil réasún leis' translating 'when he may see occasion', in translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health.

Gníomhóidh 'Gníomhaigh' is translated as 'act' in Ó Dónaill – see the commentary on Article 28.4.2<sup>o</sup>. 'Gníomh' is translated as 'act' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'The appointment of a person to act as a member of a committee' is translated as 'ceapadh duine chun gníomhú mar chomhalta de choiste' in s16(3) of the Irish Film Board Act, 1980, for example. 'Acting as' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'ag gníomhú mar' in early translations for the Department of Justice.

in ionad This phrase is translated as 'in place of, instead of' in Ó Dónaill s.v. 'ionad' ('place'), where 'in ionad a mhic, instead of his son' is cited. Dinneen translates 'in ionad' as 'in proper place, with genitive, instead of, in the place for, in compensation for'. An early example from the Annals of Ulster is cited in DIL s.v. 'inad': 'coemchludh abad ... .i. Forindan i n-inad Dermota' (i.e. change of abbots). 'In ionad' also has the sense of 'in succession to', as well as 'in place of, instead of', according to DIL. 'The Minister may appoint a person to act in place of the Director during such inability' is translated as 'féadfaidh an tAire duine a cheapadh chun gníomhú in ionad an Stiúirthóra ar feadh tréimhse an éagumais sin' in s9(11)(a) of the Consumer Information Act, 1978, for example.

a bheas The special form of the relative, future, of the substantive verb – see the commentary on Article 6.1. This form is not recorded in the paradigm of 'Táim (B)' in An Caighdeán Oifigiúil and, while Ó Dónaill includes it in his paradigm s.v. 'bí', he cites 'Tá mé go maith, slán a bheidh tú, I am well, thank you' s.v. 'slán', where one would have expected the form 'a bheas'.

Uachtarán na hArd-Chúirte This phrase translates 'the President of the High Court' in s1(1) of the Acquisition of Land (Reference Committee) Act, 1925.

mar chomhalta de See the commentary on Article 12.2.2°. This could also be expressed as 'mar bhall de'.

folamh See the commentary on Article 14.1.

- 2 Like the previous subsection, 'any occasion' is expressed as 'aon uair' ('any time') in the Irish text and 'unable to act' as 'gan bheith i gcumas gníomhú' ('not being in power to act').

Commentary

in ionad Chathaoirleach Dháil Éireann See note 1 above regarding 'Ceann Comhairle'. It is not customary to inflect 'ceann' in this phrase – 'an Ceann Comhairle' becomes 'an Cheann Comhairle' in the genitive singular whereas if the normal grammatical rules were followed, 'an ceann' would become 'an chinn' in the genitive. See Jim O'Donnell and Seán de Fréine, Ciste Cúrsaí Reatha, p. 251, who state (I translate):

Because 'ceann' has not a literal meaning here, no change is made to it in cases such as: 'A Cheann Comhairle' (when he is addressed); similarly, the title of his office is 'Oifig an Cheann Comhairle'. The form 'Cinn Comhairle' should never be used. The same practice is followed in the case of other words when a literal meaning is not involved. For example, 'stór' means wealth, but when used as a term of affection or love, literal use is not involved. Therefore, 'a stór' is said, as is done in the case of the Ceann Comhairle. 'A phobal' or 'A Phobal Dé' is the correct way to address people at Mass or at another religious ceremony.

Practical considerations may also have been involved as regards 'Ceann Comhairle'.

'Cathaoirleach' is translated as 'Chairman' in Téarmaí Dlí, following the ninth Irish Legal Terms Order, 1950 (S.I. No. 291 of 1950 – Terms relating to Company Law) and in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen s.v. 'cathaoirleach', has 'a chairman, a president (recent)'. This is given by Cathal Ó Háinle (in Kim McCone et al., op. cit., p. 766) as one of a very small handful of words which were given a new meaning or were composed during Dinneen's own time which he acknowledges in the first edition of his dictionary

– the other two examples, given by Ó Háinle, being ‘alt’ (“a written article”) and ‘rothar’.

‘Cathaoirleach’ has the advantage over ‘Chairman’ in that it can naturally refer to either a man or a woman: De Bhaldraithe, for example, translates ‘Mr Chairman, Madam Chairman’ simply as ‘a Chathaoirleach’. Incidentally, ‘raicleach’, translated as ‘brawling, obstreperous, woman; vixen, termagant’ in Ó Dónaill (and apparently not given as a headword in Dinneen), would be an example of a noun ending in ‘-leach’ referring to a woman – ‘raic’ is translated as ‘racket, ruction, riot, uproar’ in Ó Dónaill. According to DIL, the second headword ‘echlach’ (‘a prostitute’) therein is evidently a special use of the first headword ‘echlach’, translated as ‘messenger, courier; attendant’ (‘ech’ = Modern Irish ‘each’, ‘a horse’); Dinneen’s entry s.v. ‘eachlach’ is as follows: ‘a horseman, a courier, a cavalryman, hence a messenger, one to tell the tale (after a battle) ... bain-echlach, a woman courier’. This is followed by the headword ‘echlais’, ‘a lazy woman; a slattern (used also of a man)’.

Leas-Chathaoirleach ‘Leaschathaoirleach’ is translated as ‘vice-chairman’ in Ó Dónaill. The prefix ‘leas-’ is translated as (1) ‘vice-, deputy’, (2) ‘step-’ and (3) ‘by-’; an example of the second sense would be ‘leasathair’ (‘stepfather’), with ‘leasainm’ (‘by-name, nickname’) illustrating the third sense. Regarding the second sense, note that the Irish legal term for ‘of the half blood’ is ‘leasghaolmhar’. ‘Leas-ardeaglais’, ‘pro-cathedral’, would appear to be a development of Ó Dónaill’s first sense. Dinneen translates ‘leas-’ as ‘vice-, step-, bye-, acting-, sub-, under-, co-, pseudo-’ and gives the form ‘leis-’ before slender consonants – ‘leis-leanbh’, for example, which he translates as ‘a stepchild, an illegitimate child’. Dinneen translates ‘leas-uachtarán’ as ‘a vice- or acting- superior’; Ó Dónaill translates this term simply as ‘vice-president’. ‘Leascheannaire’ is translated as ‘lance-corporal’ in Ó Dónaill, ‘leasrí’ being translated as ‘regent’, ‘viceroy’. The only examples of ‘les-’ in DIL are with senses (2) and (3) of Ó Dónaill; this ‘les-’ is identical with ‘les’, ‘advantage, good, benefit, profit’ (Modern Irish ‘leas’), the earliest sense of which seems to be ‘relief, redress, remedy’ – see DIL s.v. ‘les’.

‘Déanfaidh gach Tigh a Cheann Comhairle agus a Leas-Cheann Comhairle féin do cheapa’ translates ‘Each House shall elect its own Chairman and Deputy Chairman’ in Article 21 of the 1922 Constitution. ‘Leas-ghníomhairí dá ngairmtear fo-ghníomhairí san Acht so’ translates ‘which deputy agents are in this Act referred to as sub-agents’ in s30(1) of the Prevention of Electoral Abuses Act, 1923. Finally, note that ‘The Paymaster General and Deputy Paymaster for Ireland’ is translated as ‘Págh-mháistir Generála agus Págh-mháistir Ionaid na hÉireann’ in the Schedule to the Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1924.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

ENGLISH TEXT

The Commission may act by any two of their number and may act notwithstanding a vacancy in their membership.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Is dleathach don Choimisiún gníomhú' (It is lawful for the Commission to act) in the Irish text differs greatly in tone from the English text's 'The Commission may act'.

Commentary

Is dleathach This phrase and its negative, 'ní dleathach', are found in other Articles also. In Article 17.2 'Dáil Éireann shall not pass any vote or resolution, and no law shall be enacted' is expressed as 'Ní dleathach do Dháil Éireann vóta ná rún a rith, ná ní dleathach aon dlí a achtú'. In Article 28.3.1° 'War shall not be declared' is expressed as 'Ní dleathach cogadh a fhógairt'. Maolmhaodhóg Ó Ruairc (op. cit., p. 214) asks (I translate): 'Is it that to transgress those articles is a crime because it is said in both cases in the Irish ní dleathach?' In Article 28.7.2°, 'not more than two may be members of Seanad Éireann' is expressed as 'ní dleathach thar beirt acu a bheith ina gcomhaltaí de Sheanad Éireann'.

'Dleathach' is translated as 'lawful' in Téarmaí Dlí and as (1) 'lawful, legal', (2) 'valid, genuine' and (3) 'just, proper' in Ó Dónaill – Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú draws attention to this sense of 'proper' as regards 'dleathach' rather than the sense of English 'lawful'. Dinneen translates 'dleaghtach' in reverse order to Ó Dónaill: 'just, fair'; 'regular, uniform, genuine; normal; lawful, legal, permissible' and, apart from 'airgead dleaghtach, genuine money', the only example cited is 'féach an bhfuil an bhó dleaghtach, see whether the cow is normal (that is, in her udder, whether the paps give the milk with equal freedom and in equal quantity)'. Old Irish 'dligthech' is based on 'dliged', 'law' – see the commentary on Articles 10.1 and 17.2.

'Féadfaidh' – which expresses 'may' in the following section, for example – generally translates 'may' in this context in the Acts. 'The Board may act by any two of their number and notwithstanding a vacancy in their membership', in s3(1) of the First Schedule to the Undeveloped Areas Act, 1952, is translated as 'Féadfaidh an Bord gníomhú trí aon bheirt dá líon agus d'ainneoin folúntais ina gcomhaltas'. 'Féadfaidh an Príomh-Bhord gníomhú d'ainneoin folúntas i measc a chomhaltaí' translates 'the Central Board may act notwithstanding a vacancy among its members' in s18 of the Second Schedule to the Fisheries Act, 1980. 'The Board may act notwithstanding a vacancy in their membership', in s5(3) of the Censorship of Publications Act, 1929, is translated as 'Féadfidh an Bord gníomhú d'ainneoin folúntas do bheith ina mballraíocht'.

d'ainneoin Regarding early translations of 'notwithstanding' in the Acts, 'D'ainneoin éinní atá in aon Acht' translates 'Notwithstanding anything in any Act' in s11 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1923, 'in ainneoin éinní atá in alt 5' translating 'Notwithstanding anything contained in section 5' in s2(1) of the Finance Act, 1923. In s3(7) of the Censorship of Films Act, 1923, 'The Appeal Board may act for all purposes notwithstanding the existence of not more than two vacancies in its membership' is translated as 'Féadfidh an Bord Athchomhairc gníomhú chun gach críche faid is ná beidh thar dhá fholúntas ina bhallraíocht'. See the commentary on Article 37.1 where 'siúd is (nach)' expresses 'notwithstanding that'.

ina gcomhaltas The Long Title of the Constitution (Amendment No. 5) Act, 1927, 'An Act to amend the Constitution by increasing the maximum membership of the Executive Council from seven to twelve members', is translated as 'Acht chun an Bunreacht do leasú tríd an líon is mó dlightear don Ard-Chomhairle do mhéadú ó sheachtar go dtí dáreag ball', 'ball' translating 'member' in the 1922 Constitution – see the commentary on Article 12.10.4°.

folúntais 'Folúntas' is translated as 'vacancy; emptiness, void' in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen gives 'folamhas' ('folús' in Ó Dónaill), 'emptiness, vacuity, poverty', but does not seem to have the headword 'folúntas' (*folamhantas), based on 'folamh', 'empty'.

líon This headword is translated as 'full number, complement' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'líon gnó, quorum' ('córam' in Téarmaí Dlí). 'Líon' is translated as 'fill, complement; full, requisite or due number; all...' in Dinneen. See DIL s.v. 'lín', 'full number, complement'. See the commentary on Articles 16.2.2° and 18.1.

TÉACS GAEILGE

Féadfaidh an Chomhairle Stáit, le tromlach dá gcomhaltáí, cibé socrú is oircheas leo a dhéanamh chun na cumhachtaí agus na feidhmeanna a bhronntar ar an Uachtarán leis an mBunreacht seo nó faoi a oibriú is a chomhlíonadh in aon chás nach ndéantar socrú ina chomhair leis na forálacha sin romhainn den Airteagal seo.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Council of State will be able/may, by/with a majority of its members, to make whatever provision they deem fit/proper to operate and to fulfil the powers and the functions which are bestowed on the President by this Constitution or under it in any case where provision is not made for it by the preceding provisions of this Article.

ENGLISH TEXT

The Council of State may by a majority of its members make such provision as to them may seem meet for the exercise and performance of the powers and functions conferred on the President by or under this Constitution in any contingency which is not provided for by the foregoing provisions of this Article.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'In any contingency' is expressed as 'in aon chás' ('in any case') in the Irish text.
- 2 As in some earlier Articles, 'exercise' is expressed as 'oibriú' ('operate') in the Irish text.
- 3 The Irish text expresses 'by a majority of its members' as 'le tromlach dá gcomhaltáí' ('by a majority of their members'); note 'a vacancy in their membership' in the English text in the preceding section, referring to the Commission.
- 4 'Provision' is expressed as 'socrú' and 'foráil', as in the Acts; 'the preceding provisions' ('na forálacha sin romhainn') appear to be differentiated from 'provision' in 'such provision as to them may seem meet' ('cibé socrú is oircheas leo') and in 'which is not provided for' ('nach ndéantar socrú ina chomhair') in the Irish text.

Note that the original text read simply 'leis an mBunreacht seo', 'by this Constitution' – without 'nó faoi', 'or under'; both texts were amended by the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941.

Commentary

in aon chás 'Cás' is translated as 'case' in Téarmaí Dlí and in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'i gcás mar seo, in a case like this', 'i gcás ... nach mbeimis ann, in case we should not be there', 'sa chéad chás, in the first instance' and 'sa chás céanna, in like circumstances'. Dinneen translates 'i gcás go' as 'so that' s.v. 'cás', 'a cause, a case'. 'Cás' is an English or Romance loanword, according to DIL, who translates this headword as 'case, matter, circumstance' and 'disadvantageous circumstance, plight, straits, predicament'. DIL translates 'i cás co' as 'in the case that'. See further the commentary on Article 49.3.

'Contingent' is translated as 'teagmhasach' in Téarmaí Dlí in 'contingent claim/liability' ('éileamh/dliteanas teagmhasach'). De Bhaldraithe's entry s.v. 'contingency' is as follows:

- (a) Philosophy: Teagmhasacht. (b) Teagmhas, cúrsa gan choinne. Should a contingency arise, in case of a contingency, dá dtarlaiodh rud gan choinne. (b) Commerce: Contingencies, ilchostais teagmhais. He is providing for contingencies, Tá sé ag soláthar in aghaidh na timpiste.

'Whether or not the accrual of the benefits is dependent on any contingency' is translated as 'cibé acu atá nó nach bhfuil faibhriú na sochar sin ag brath ar aon teagmhas' in s18(1) of the Finance Act, 1972. In s283(1) of the Companies Act, 1963, 'the value of such debts ... which may be subject to any contingency or which sound only in damages' is translated as 'luach na bhfiacha ... sin atá faoi réir aon teagmhais nó inchúitithe le damáistí amháin'.

'An Ciste Teagmhais' translates 'the Contingency Fund' in Schedule (B) to the Appropriation Act, 1924, with 'any part of the contingent liability of a bookmaker' being translated as 'aon chuid den bhfiachas teagmhaiseach do bhí ar gheall-ghlacadóir' in s25(1)(e) of the Finance Act, 1926. In s63(4) of the Railways Act, 1924, 'The liability (whether present, future, or contingent) of the several councils of counties in which guaranteeing baronies are situate' is translated as 'An fiachas (atá, a bheidh nó a fhéadfadh teacht chun bheith) ar chomhairlí uile agus fé leith na gcontaethe ina luíonn urra-bharúntachtaí'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks on the translation below that the slightly 'unfamiliar' ("deoranta") term 'teagmhas' is perhaps not absolutely necessary in this case.

is oircheas leo 'As to them may seem meet' seems matched perfectly in tone and faintly old-fashioned style by 'is oircheas leo'. When used with the copula, Ó Dónaill translates 'oircheas' as 'meet, fit, proper', citing 'Is oircheas dom labhairt air, it is right that I should speak about it' and 'B'oirchise duit d'urnaí a rá, it would suit you better to say your prayers'. Dinneen also cites 'oircheas' followed by the preposition 'do' rather than 'le': 'gurbh oircheas dó, that it would be to his advantage to, etc.', 'measaim gurab oircheas dúinn labhairt ar, I deem it meet to speak of, etc.' and 'b'oircheas dóibh cómhaoantughadh le n'a chéile, it behoved them to unite' – the first two examples being taken from Keating's seventeenth-century Forus Feasa ar Éirinn. The indeclinable adjective 'oirches' is translated as 'meet, fitting, right' in DIL, where again the phrase 'is oircheas dom' is translated as 'it is meet for me, I ought'.

In s5(1) of the Public Safety (Punishment of Offences) Temporary Act, 1924, 'may make such order in respect of such goods or money as may seem meet' is translated as 'féadfa sé pé ordú a chífar do bheith oiriúnach do dhéanamh i dtaobh na n-earraí no an airgid sin'. 'In such manner as to him may from time to time seem meet', in s124(1) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, is translated as 'ar pé slí a chífar do o am go ham a bheith oiriúnach'.

ina chomhair According to Ó Dónaill, 'comhair' is only used in the prepositional phrases 'faoi chomhair' and 'i gcomhair', translated by Ó Dónaill as 'for, intended for; to get', citing 'i gcomhair an turais, for the journey'. He also cites 'is cosúil go raibh an bás sin ina chomhair, it seems he was fated to die in that way'. Dinneen translates 'cómhair' as 'presence' and 'i gcómhair' as 'for, in provision or store for', citing 'im' chómhair, for me'. 'Comair' is translated as 'in front of in DIL, where examples are given of its use in the sense of 'for (the purpose of), in preparation for, with a view to'.

socrú 'Socraim' is translated as 'I settle' in Téarmaí Dlí. See the commentary on Article 8.3 regarding 'socraigh' v. 'foráil' in the Constitution and in the Acts. 'I provide that' is translated as 'forálaim go' in Téarmaí Dlí, while 'foráil chaillroinnte' is translated as 'average clause'. The verb 'foráil', used in earlier literature in the sense of 'command, enjoin', is also translated as 'press, urge; commend, offer' in Ó Dónaill, as well as 'Jurisprudence: provide (go, that)'. The verbal noun 'foráil' is also translated as 'Jurisprudence: provision' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'forálacha reachta, provisions of an enactment'. Dinneen translates 'foráil' as 'a command (for foráileamh); a gift, an offer (for ofráil)', while he translates the verb 'forálaim' as 'I command, I offer (as a sacrifice)'. The verb 'foráilid' is translated as 'command' in DIL, and comes from 'eráilid', 'enjoins, urges, incites, instigates, induces' and in general 'commands, enjoins' according to DIL; in one early Irish law-tract cited, for example, we find 'is e sin in darna hinadh ... i n-urailéann dlígedh ar duine a fearand do reic' ('[that is the second place] where the law commands a person to sell his land'). Examples of the verbal noun 'eráil' are cited from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards in DIL, along with the senses of 'enjoining, urging, instigating' and 'commending, recommending, offering'.

le tromlach dá gcomhaltai 'The Council may, by a majority of its members exercising a majority of the total voting power, suspend its membership' is translated as 'féadfaidh an Chomhairle, le tromlach dá baill a fheidhmeoidh tromlach den chumhacht iomlán vótála, ballraíocht an bhaill sin a fhionraí' in Article 52(a) of the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency Act, 1988. See the commentary on Article 13.2.2° regarding early citations of 'majority', translated as 'mór-áireamh' in the early Acts, and note that 'The determination of any question before the railway tribunal shall be according to the opinion of the majority of the members ... of the railway tribunal hearing the case' is translated as 'An bhreith a tabharfar ar aon cheist a bheidh os cóir an bhínse bhóthair iarainn beidh sí do réir barúla an mhóráirimh de sna baill ... den bhínse bhóthair iarainn a éisteoidh an cás' in s21(1) of the Railways Act, 1924. See further the commentary on Articles 26.2.2° and 28.10. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks, regarding the translation below, that 'dá mbaill' / 'dá gcomhaltai', rather than 'dá baill' / 'dá comhaltai', is the more natural form in Irish in this context.

na forálacha sin romhainn See the commentary on Article 40.6.1°iii where 'réamhráite' expresses 'foregoing'. In s5(7) of the Rent Restrictions (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1981, 'otherwise than for a reason specified in the foregoing provisions of this section' is translated as 'ar chúis seachas na cúiseanna a shonraítear sna forálacha sin roimhe seo den alt seo'. 'Má ceannúitear an áirnéis sin fé sna forálacha san roimhe seo den alt' translates 'if the said chattel is purchased under the foregoing provisions of this section' in s12(e) of the Neutrality (War Damage to Property) Act, 1941, and in s27(g) of the Second Schedule to the Electoral (Dublin Commercial) Act, 1930, 'he shall deal with such declaration and ballot paper envelope in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this rule' is translated as 'deighleálfá sé leis an dearbhú agus leis an gclúdach páipéir bhallóide sin de réir na bhforálacha san roimhe seo den riail seo'. See further the commentary on Article 18.10.1°.

Looking at early Acts, 'In the foregoing sub-section the word "Parliamentary" is to be construed as referring ...' is translated as 'Sa bhfo-alt roimhe seo ní foláir an focal "Pháirliminte" do léiriú mar thagairt' in s18(2) of the Adaptation of Enactments Act, 1922, and 'foregoing terms' is translated as 'téarmaí a luaidhtear anso roimhe seo' in Iris an Phuist, 23/2/1927. 'The foregoing provisions of this Part of this Act shall apply in the case of' is translated as 'Bainfidh na forálacha san thuas den Chuid seo den Acht so le cás' in s8 of the National Health Insurance Act, 1923, with 'téarmaí atá thuas-luaidhte' translating 'foregoing terms' in Iris an Phuist, 22/2/1928. Finally, 'any such provisional arrangement as is mentioned in the foregoing section' is translated as 'aon tsocrú sealadach den tsórt atá luaidhte san alt deireannach' in s2 of the Double Taxation (Relief) Act, 1923.

a oibriú See the commentary on Articles 3, 13.5.1° and 13.9. Again, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú favours 'oibriú' in order to avoid 'feidhmiú ... feidhmeanna'.

The provisions of this Constitution that relate to the President operating and fulfilling the powers and the functions that are conferred on him by this Constitution or under it they will relate, within the scope/constraint of the following provisions of this section, to the operation and to the fulfilment of those powers and functions under this Article.

ENGLISH TEXT

The provisions of this Constitution which relate to the exercise and performance by the President of the powers and functions conferred on him by or under this Constitution shall subject to the subsequent provisions of this section apply to the exercise and performance of the said powers and functions under this Article.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The term ‘bain le’ in the Irish text expresses both ‘relate to’ and ‘apply to’ of the English text.
- 2 As we saw earlier, ‘exercise’ is expressed as ‘oibriú’ (‘operation’) and ‘subject to’ as ‘faoi chuimsiú’ (‘within the scope/constraint of’) in the Irish text.

Note that both texts were amended to the same extent as the previous section by the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941.

Commentary

a bhaineas le ... bainfid ... le ‘Bain le’ is translated as (1) ‘touch, interfere with’ and (2) ‘concern, relate to’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘ní bhaineann sé liom, (i) it doesn’t concern me, (ii) he is not connected with me’ and ‘an rud nach mbaineann leat ná bain leis, don’t interfere with what does not concern you’. Dinneen translates ‘bainim le’ as ‘I touch, meddle with, I am connected with’ and cites ‘gach n-aon a bhaineann linn, every one connected or related to, us’. DIL s.v. ‘benaíd’, ‘beats, strikes’, gives examples from the Old Irish Glosses onwards of this figurative use of ‘benaíd fri (la)’, ‘touches, affects; is concerned with, meddles with’.

‘A bhaineann le’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating ‘which relate to or concern’ in the Dáil Order Paper, 1925, p. 6, and in translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health. ‘So far as relates to the verification and stamping of bottles to which this Act applies’ is translated as ‘Chó fada is théigheann fíorú agus stampáil bhuideul le n-a mbaineann an tAcht so’ in s5(1) of the Weights and Measures Act, 1928.

‘A bhaineas’ is the special relative form – see the commentary on Article 6.1. ‘Bainfid’ is the third person plural, synthetic form, future tense, as against the analytic form, ‘bainfidh siad’. In the tables of verbs in An Caighdeán Oifigiúil the analytic forms alone are given for the third person plural of the future tense. The use of the analytic forms instead of the synthetic forms (‘tá mé’ and ‘thriall siad’ instead of ‘táim’ and ‘thrialladar’) was one of the aspects of ‘Revival Irish’ criticised by Richard Henebry in his series of articles in The Leader, 1908-9 (see Cathal Ó Háinle, op. cit., p. 760). Dinneen, in his tables of the forms of the irregular verbs in the 1927 edition of his dictionary, records the synthetic forms, except in the second person plural (leaving aside the past tense) and the third person singular (Cathal Ó Háinle, op. cit., p. 779). In Gramadach na Gaeilge: Caighdeán Rannóg an Aistriúcháin (1953), it is stated that the greatest difficulty regarding the verb was to choose between the synthetic and analytic forms and both forms are recorded in the tables of verbs (see Cathal Ó Háinle, op. cit., p. 784), but in An Caighdeán Oifigiúil, published five years later, the synthetic forms (including that of the third person plural, future tense) were in most cases not acknowledged (see Cathal Ó Háinle, op. cit., p. 787f).

The development of analytic forms of the verb is an important development which began in late Middle Irish, with the third person singular being used with independent pronouns instead of a personal affix to indicate the persons (see Liam Breatnach, ‘An Mheán-Ghailge’, in Kim McCone et al., p. 272 – an example of the analytic form of the third person plural, future tense, in the twelfth-century Book of Leinster is recorded by Professor Breatnach). In Classical Irish synthetic and analytic forms are interchangeable (see Damian McManus, op. cit., p. 419f, who records that the third person plural, future tense, with the pronoun ‘siad’, was allowed in the Bardic Syntactical Tracts, e.g. ‘molfaid siad’). Nevertheless analytic forms of the verb are not the norm to this very day in Cork or Kerry (see Seán Ua Súilleabháin, op. cit., p. 515 – note, however, that both the synthetic forms of the third person plural, future, i.e. ‘-hid’, ‘-fid’, ‘-óid’, and the analytic forms, are found in those two counties). The analytic forms become more frequent as one goes north (see Art Hughes, op. cit., p. 637 – it is noted on p. 638 that the analytic forms of the verb are used throughout in Ulster Irish). The verb in Connacht Irish has analytic forms for the most part (see Ruairí Ó hUiginn, op. cit., p. 579 – it is noted here that Connacht Irish agrees for the most part with the system of An Caighdeán Oifigiúil, with synthetic forms in the first person singular of the present tense, the first and second person singular and third person plural of the imperfect and conditional).

inár ndiaidh Literally ‘after us’. ‘Subsequent’ is generally translated as ‘ina dhiaidh seo/sin’ in the Acts – see below s.v.v. ‘faoi chuimsiú’, for examples. As regards early translations, ‘laistigh den lá is fiche ‘na dhiaidh sin go suidhfidh an Tigh tar éis an t-Ordú san do leaga féna bhráid’ translates ‘within the next subsequent twenty-one days on which that House has sat after such Order is laid before it’ in s19 of the Adaptation of Enactments Act, 1922, ‘mar a leasúidh le reachtúchán ina dhiaidh sin é’ translating ‘as amended by subsequent legislation’ in s3 of the Local Elections Postponement Act, 1925. ‘Shall be deemed ... to have entered into a subsequent purchase agreement for the purchase of the holding’ is translated as ‘tuigfar ... é do bheith tar éis connra ceannaigh déanach do dhéanamh chun an gabháltas do cheannach’ in s28(1) of the Land Act, 1923. On the other hand, ‘ag aon chruinniú nua ina dhiaidh sin’ translates ‘at any subsequent meeting’ in s18 of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925. ‘Within the next subsequent twenty-one days on which such House has sat after the regulation is laid before it’ is translated as ‘laistigh den lá is fiche a shuidhfidh an Tigh sin tar éis an rialachán do chur fé n-a bhráid’ in s36(3) of the Local Government Act, 1925. Finally, ‘iar-únaer’ translates ‘subsequent owner’ in s4(7) of the Local Government (Rates on Small Dwellings) Act, 1928. See further the commentary on Article 22.2.1°.

oibriú ... c(h)omhlíonadh See the commentary on Article 13.9. ‘But such temporary assignment shall be without prejudice to the exercise and performance by him of the privileges' is translated as 'ach beidh an sannadh sealadach sin gan dochar d'é d'fheidhmiú agus do chomhlíonadh na bpríbhleáidí' in s3(1) of the Sixth Schedule to the Courts (Supplemental Provisions) Act, 1961. In s53(1) of the Dublin Port and Docks (Bridges) Act, 1929, 'for the purpose of the exercise and performance by the Minister ... of his powers and duties' is translated as 'chun an tAire ... d'fheidhmiú agus do chóilíona na gcomhacht agus na ndualgas atá aige'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú recommends returning to 'oibriú' in order to avoid 'feidhmeanna ... a fheidhmiú' in the translation below. He also points out that there is a danger that the reader would read 'a fheidhmiú agus a chomhlíonadh' as part of the one clause with 'forálacha', i.e. 'na forálacha ... a fheidhmiú etc.' Also, 'Bunreacht' occurs four times in the translation below as against the two occurrences of 'Constitution' in the English text. Professor Ó Murchú recommends a version such as follows:

Is faoi réir na bhforálacha ina dhiaidh seo den Bhunreacht seo a bheidh feidhm ag na forálacha faoin Uachtarán a oibriú agus a chomhlíonadh na gcumhachtaí agus na bhfeidhmeanna atá á mbronnadh air nó uirthi / a bhronntar air nó uirthi leis an mBunreacht seo nó faoi, i dtaca le hoibriú agus comhlíonadh na gcumhachtaí agus na bhfeidhmeanna sin faoin Airteagal seo.

faoi chuimsiú See the commentary on Article 12.5. 'The provisions applicable to Case 1 ... shall ... have effect subject to the subsequent provisions of this section' is translated as 'beidh éifeacht, faoi réir na bhforálacha ina dhiaidh seo den alt seo, leis na forálacha is infheidhme ar Chás 1' in s29(2)(a) of the Finance Act, 1981, 'subject to the subsequent provisions of this section' being translated as 'fé réir na bhforálacha ina dhiaidh seo den alt so' in s77(5) of the Local Government (Dublin) Act, 1930.

ARTICLE 14.5.2° AIRTEAGAL 14.5.2°

TÉACS GAELIGE

Má theipeann ar an Uachtarán aon chumhacht nó feidhm a oibriú nó a chomhlíonadh nach foláir dó, de réir an Bhunreacht seo nó faoi, í a oibriú nó a chomhlíonadh faoi cheann aimsire a luaitear, ní foláir í a oibriú nó a chomhlíonadh faoin Airteagal seo chomh luath agus is feidir é tar éis na haimsire a luaitear amhlaidh.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If the President fails to operate or to fulfil any power or function that he must, according to this Constitution or under it, operate or fulfil by/within a stated time, it must be operated or fulfilled under this Article as soon as possible after the time so stated.

ENGLISH TEXT

In the event of the failure of the President to exercise or perform any power or function which the President is by or under this Constitution required to exercise or perform within a specified time, the said power or function shall be exercised or performed under this Article, as soon as may be after the expiration of the time so specified.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Which the President is required to exercise' is expressed as 'nach foláir dó ... í a oibriú' ('which the President must exercise') in the Irish text.
- 2 'After the expiration of the time' is expressed simply as 'tar éis na haimsire' ('after the time') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Within a specified time' is expressed as 'faoi cheann aimsire a luaitear' ('by/within a stated time') in the Irish text.
- 4 The English text repeats 'power or function' whereas the Irish text expresses this phrase simply as 'í' ('it') on the second occasion.
- 5 As we have seen in other sections, 'In the event of' and 'exercise' are expressed as 'Má' ('If') and 'oibriú' ('operate') in the Irish text.
- 6 There is no comma in the Irish text after 'Airteagal seo' corresponding to that following 'this Article' in the English text.

Note that, like the preceding subsection and section, this subsection was also amended by the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941, to include 'nó faoi', 'or under it', above.

Commentary

faoi cheann aimsire a luaitear 'Faoi cheann' is translated as 'by, at, the end of' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'faoi cheann míosa, in a month's time'. 'Fá cheann' is translated as 'ere, in about, within (of time)' in Dinneen. In DIL 'fo chenn' is translated as 'of time, within, during' where 'fo chenn aimsire giorra' is translated as 'at the end of a short time'. See the commentary on Article 12.10.1° regarding 'a luaitear', 'luaigh' expressing 'state' in that Article.

Turning to the Acts, 'unless certain repairs are carried out immediately or within a specified time' is translated as 'mura ndéanfar deisiúcháin áirithe láithreach nó laistigh de thréimhse shonraithe' in s32 of the Safety in Industry Act, 1980. In s53 of the Tobacco Act, 1934, 'without limit as to time or quantity or either of them or within a specified time or in a specified quantity' is translated as 'gan teora maidir le ham no le méid no maidir le ceachtar acu no go dteora áirithe maidir le ham no le méid'. 'To export within a specified time a specified quantity of scrap iron' is translated as 'easportáil do dhéanamh, laistigh d'aimsir áirithe, ar chandíocht áirithe de shean-iarann' in s4(1) of the Scrap Iron (Control of Export) Act, 1938. In s19(1) of the Electoral Act, 1923, 'and before the expiration of the time appointed for receiving nominations' is translated as 'agus roimh dheire na haimsire a bheidh ceaptha chun ainmniúcháin do ghlaca', 'at the expiration of one hour after the end of the time appointed for receiving nominations' being translated as 'I gceann uair a chluig tar éis deire na haimsire a bheidh ceaptha chun ainmniúcháin do ghlaca' in s19(2). In s6(1) of the Courts of Justice Act, 1928, 'the sentence shall not in any case be executed until after the expiration of the time within which notice of appeal ... may be given' is translated as 'ní cuirfar an bhreith i bhfeidhm in aon chás go dtí tar éis deire na haimsire in ar féidir fógra athchomhairc ... do thabhairt'.

Focusing on 'specify' in the Acts, 'maidir le hearraí de mhíotál lómhar a bheidh sonraithe amhlaidh' translates 'to the articles of precious metal so specified' in s3(1) of the Hallmarking Act, 1981. 'Remaining upon such quays ... after the expiration of the time so specified' is translated as 'a bheas fágtha ar na céibheanna ... tar éis an t-am a bheas sonraithe amhlaidh a bheith caite' in s5(1) of the Harbours Act, 1947. Turning to the early Acts, in s8(2) of the Local Elections Postponement Act, 1922, 'féadfaidh an t-Aire le hordú an t-atharú a bheidh le déanamh ann do luadh' translates 'the Minister may by order specify the modification which is to be made therein', 'specify class of goods' being cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'din an saghas earraí do luadh' in translations for the Department of Justice and 'certain specified' being cited as being translated as 'luaidhte áirithe' in translations for the Department of Education. 'Confine any such competitive examination to persons belonging to a specified class or being in a particular employment' is translated as 'aon scrúdú comórtais den tsórt san do chimeád ar leithligh i gcóir daoine d'aon aicme áirithe no in aon fhostaíocht áirithe' in s4(3) of the Civil Service Regulation Act, 1924, 'to fill in or otherwise complete the document within a specified time' being translated as 'an scríbhinn do líona no do chríochnú ar shlí eile laistigh d'aimsir áirithe' in s8(1) of the Statistics Act, 1926. Note that 'áireamhachtaí' translates 'specifications' in the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, in s10(3) of which 'The controller may prepare ... indexes, abridgements of specifications, catalogues' is translated as 'Féadfidh an ceannasaí cláir innste, achmaireachtaí ar áireamhachtaí, catalóga ... d'ullamhú'. 'Áireamh' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'specify' in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, 'ordú' also being cited as translating 'specify' in translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health. Finally, in s8 of the Second Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923, 'a notice specifying the mode in which ... claims and objections are to be made' is translated as 'fógra ina neosfar an tslí ina mbeidh ... éilithe agus agóidí le déanamh'. See further the commentary on Article 22.2.6°.

Má theipeann ar See the commentary on Article 14.1. In s85(a) of the Finance Act, 1983, 'the determination of an appeal through the failure of a person who has given notice of appeal to attend before the Appeal Commissioners at the time and place appointed' is translated as 'achomharc a chinneadh trí mhainneachtain ag duine a mbeidh fógra achomhairc tugtha aige láithriú os comhair na gCoimisinéirí Achomhairc ag an am agus san áit a ceapadh'. In s28(1)(b) of the Fisheries Act, 1939, 'and was facilitated by the failure of such owner or occupier to take reasonable precautions against the commission of such offence' is translated as 'agus gur hurasuío dhéanamh tré gan an t-únaer no an sealbhaire sin do ghlacadh réamhchúraim chun ná déanfaí an cionta'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks regarding the translation below that the verb 'mainnigh' is unusual, and also that it would appear to be intransitive, the preposition 'i' with eclipsis preceding the object, e.g. 'mhainnigh sé ina dhualgas'. Professor Ó Murchú therefore suggests retaining 'teip'.

nach foláir dó See the commentary on Articles 11 and 13.3.1° for 'ní foláir do'. 'Is required' is usually translated as 'ceanglaítear ar' in the Acts. In s16(2) of the Capital Acquisitions Tax Act, 1976, 'a person who may be required to exercise his voting powers on the directions of ... another person' is translated as 'duine ar féidir a cheangal air a chumhacht vótála a fheidhmiú ar ordúithe ó dhuine eile'. In s102(5) of the Corporation Tax Act, 1976, 'any rights or powers which another person ... may be required to exercise on his direction' is translated as 'aon chearta nó cumhachtaí ... a bheidh ar an duine eile sin a fheidhmiú ar ordú uaidh'. 'Such person by virtue of such appointment has all the powers and is required to exercise and perform all the functions and duties of the Dublin City Manager' is translated as 'de bhua a cheaptha amhlaidh, go mbeidh comhachta uile Bhainisteoir Cathrach ... Bhaile Átha Cliath ag an duine sin agus go mbeidh air feidhmeanna agus dualgaisí uile Bhainisteoir Cathrach ... Bhaile Átha Cliath d'fheidhmiú agus do chólíona' in s15 of the Electoral (Dublin Commercial) Act, 1930.

de réir This phrase is translated as 'in accordance with' in Téarmaí Dlí and as 'in accordance with, according to' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'de réir dlí, by law'. Dinneen s.v.

'riar', translates 'do réir' as 'agreeable to, according to, after, at the disposal of', and cites the following from the Blasket Islands: 'ag caitheamh Gaedhilge leis do réir nótaí a shinnsir', speaking to him in Irish in the ancestral way'. DIL s.v. 'riar' (primarily 'will, wish, demand, request, decision'), cites examples of 'do réir' in the sense of 'at the will of, obedient to' from the eighth-century Glosses onwards; the examples in the sense of 'on the authority of, according to' are from a later period – DIL cites 'do réir léx 7 chanóine', for example. See further the commentary on Article 18.10.1° and on the Preamble.

THE NATIONAL PARLIAMENT AN PHARLAIMINT NÁISIÚNTA

CONSTITUTION AND POWERS COMHDHÉANAMH AGUS CUMHACHTAÍ

TÉACS GAELIGE

An tOireachtas is ainm don Pharlaimint Náisiúnta, agus sin é a bheirtear uirthi de ghnáth sa Bhunreacht seo.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Oireachtas is the name of the National Parliament, and that is what it is usually called in this Constitution.

ENGLISH TEXT

The National Parliament shall be called and known, and is in this Constitution generally referred to, as the Oireachtas.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'The National Parliament shall be called and known as ... the Oireachtas' is expressed in the Irish text as 'An tOireachtas is ainm don Pharlaimint Náisiúnta' ('The Oireachtas is the name of the National Parliament').
- 2 'And is ... generally referred to as' is expressed as 'agus sin é a bheirtear uirthi de ghnáth' ('and that is what it is usually called') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 12 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

A Legislature is hereby created, to be known as the Oireachtas. It shall consist of the King and two Houses, the Chamber of Deputies (otherwise called and herein generally referred to as "Dáil Éireann") and the Senate (otherwise called and herein generally referred to as "Seanad Éireann"). Bunúitear leis seo Cóir Reacht-úcháin dá ngoirfean an tOireachtas. Beidh ann an Rí agus dhá Thigh, Dáil Éireann agus Seanad Éireann.

Commentary

comhdhéanamh Verbal noun of the compound 'comhdhéan' ('comh' + 'déan', 'make up, constitute'), translated as 'constitution, structure, composition' in Ó Dónaill. 'Comhdhéanamh' does not appear to be given as a headword in Dinneen. Only three examples are cited in DIL, the earliest of which comes from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms: 'hi comdenum pectha friu' ('in doing sin equally with them').

Looking at the earlier Acts, 'Constitution of the Currency Commission', in the Margin Title of s14 of the Currency Act, 1927, is translated as 'Có-dhéanamh Choimisiún an Airgid Reatha'. 'Córú' was the earlier translation of this term, 'The convening and constitution of Courts-Martial' being translated as 'Có-ghairm agus córú Arm-Chúirteanna' in s125(1)(b) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, for example, 'Agus de bhrí gur dineadh Córú na hEaglaise Methodistighe in Éirinn do chur ar an rolla go cuibhe' translating 'And whereas the Constitution of the Methodist Church in Ireland has been duly enrolled' in the Preamble to the Methodist Church in Ireland Act, 1928. 'The constitution of local joint committees representing traders' is translated as 'bunú có-choistí áitiúla a bheidh ionadach do thrádálaithe' in s50(i) of the Railways Act, 1924. 'Any substance of the same chemical composition and constitution' is translated as 'aon tsubstaint ina bhfuil an có-mhianachas agus an có-dhéantús ceimiciúil céanna atá sa tsubstaint nua' in s55(1) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927. Finally, 'coimpleasc' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'constitution (physical)' in early translations for the Department of Justice.

Looking at later Acts, in s1(1) of the Prices (Amendment) Act, 1965, 'The Minister may from time to time by order provide for the establishment, constitution and powers of bodies of persons to advise him' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an tAire ó am go ham, le hordú, socrú a dhéanamh le haghaidh bunú, comhdhéanamh agus cumhachtaí daoine chun comhairle a thabhairt dó'. 'Do shainiú comhdhéanamh, cumhachtaí agus dualgais an Bhoird' translates 'to define the constitution, powers and duties of the Board' in the Long Title of the Bord na Gaeilge Act, 1978, and in s19 of the Dublin General Cemetery Company's Act, 1933, 'the constitution, operation, internal government and powers of the Company' is translated as '(ar) chó-dhéanamh, ar oibriú, ar rialú inmheánach ná ar chomhachta na Cuideachtan'. See further the commentary on Article 36iii and note that 'comhshuíomh' expresses 'constitution' in Article 41.1.2<sup>o</sup>.

An tOireachtas This term is translated as 'the Legislature' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill's entry s.v. 'oireachtas' is as follows: (1)(a) 'Deliberative assembly. Jurisprudence: An tOireachtas, the Legislature ... (2) Gathering for business and pastime, festival. Oireachtas na Gaeilge, Gaelic League annual festival'. Dinneen translates 'oireachtas' as 'an assembly, a convocation, conference or synod; annual assembly and festival of the Gaelic League; the combined legislatures of Dáil and Seanad; a decision of a court or council, public business, any preoccupation, e.g. playing cards, etc.' The earlier form, 'airechtas', is translated in DIL as (a) 'assembly, gathering, meeting' and (b) 'sovereignty, power'. It is based on 'airecht', defined in DIL as a 'name given to the public assembly of freemen and later of the more important families in the territory whose functions included the transaction of certain important legal business'; DIL cites many examples from early Irish law-tracts, some in the more general sense of 'gathering, assembly'. DIL also cites examples in the sense of a collective name for the leading nobles of a territory, as well as 'patrimony, territory' itself. 'Airecht' refers to the Roman Senate in one text and to the Jewish Sanhedrin in another, while 'Oireacht Mhaoise' is cited in DIL, where this phrase is translated as 'the children of Israel'. Finally note that 'Oireachtas' translates 'Parliament' in s2 of the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922, where 'the Parliament and the Executive Council of the Irish Free State' is translated as 'Oireachtas agus Ard-Chomhairle Shaorstáit Éireann'.

de ghnáth This phrase translates 'usually', 'ordinarily' and 'commonly' in the Acts. In s1(6) of the Local Government (Financial Provisions) Act, 1978, for example, 'In case any building ... belonging to and usually enjoyed with a dwelling is a hereditament' is translated as 'I gcás ar oidhreachtán aon fhoirgneamh ... a bhaineann le teach cónaithe agus a theachtar de ghnáth in éineacht leis an teach cónaithe'. In s1(1) of the Liability for Defective Products Act, 1991, 'ordinarily intended for private use' is translated as 'a bheartaítear de ghnáth a úsáid go príobháideach' and 'commonly exposed for sale' is translated as 'ar taispeáint de ghnáth lena ndíol' in s26(d) of the Diseases of Animals Act, 1966.

'Generally' is usually translated as 'i gcoitinne' in the Acts – see, for example, s5(2) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1990, where 'whereby prisoners generally may earn remission of sentence' is translated as 'faoinar féidir le príosúnaigh i gcoitinne loghadh pianbhreithe a thuilleamh'. 'The functions of the Council shall be generally to encourage, facilitate, promote, co-ordinate and develop technical ... education' is translated as 'Is iad feidhmeanna na Comhairle i gcoitinne oideachas teicniúil ... a spreagadh, a éascú, a fhothú, a chomheagrú agus a fhorbairt' in s3(1) of the National Council for Educational Awards Act, 1979. 'Any person generally or specifically authorised by the Board for that purpose' is translated as 'aon duine ... a bheidh údaraithe go ginearálta nó go speisialta ag an mBord chuige sin' in s19 of the Irish Film Board Act, 1980. While 'na doiciméid is gnáth a chur i bhfios don chúis' translates 'the documents which are generally communicated to the accused' in Article 105 of the Third Schedule to the Geneva Conventions Act, 1962, in s15(1) of the Housing (Loans and Grants) Act, 1962, 'the appropriate rates of wages or conditions of labour generally recognised by trade unions' is translated as 'na rátaí pá nó na coinníollacha oibre a aithnítear i gcoitinne ag ceardchumainn'.

Note above that the phrase 'otherwise called and herein generally referred to as the "Oireachtas"' is not translated in the 1922 Constitution; note also how Article 4 reads:

Nothing in this Article shall prevent special provisions being made by the Parliament of the Irish Free State (otherwise called and herein generally referred to as the "Oireachtas") for districts or areas in which only one language is in general use. Ní choiscfidh éinní san Airtíogal so ar an Oireachtas forálacha speisialta do dhéanamh do cheanntair no do líomatáistí ná fuil ach teanga amháin i ngnáth-úsáid ionta.

Looking at early Acts, 'in relation to customs duties generally' is translated as 'maidir le diuitéthe custum i gcoitinne' in s3(1) of the Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1927, for example.

a bheirtear According to the official standard this would be written as 'a thugtar' – see the commentary on Article 12.1. Note how we have 'ar a dtugtar' in the following subsection and that 'hereinafter called the President' is expressed as 'ar a dtugtar an tUachtarán sa Bhunreacht seo feasta' in Article 12.1. 'Tabhair ar' is translated as 'call, name' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'tugadh Brian air' as 'he was called Brian' and 'thug sé amadán orm' as 'he called me a fool'.

Turning to the Acts, 'gair' (literally 'call') is generally used in the Acts to translate 'refer'. In s23(4) of the Finance Act, 1990, 'The return to which this subsection applies shall be identified and referred to as the "1990 Income Tax Return"' is translated as 'Gairfear "Tuairisceán Cánach Ioncaim 1990" den tuairisceán lena mbaineann an fo-alt seo agus is mar sin a shainaitheofar é'. In s5 of Part 1 thereof, 'hereinafter in this proviso referred to as "the exempt income"' is translated as 'dá ngairtear "an t-ioncam diolmhaithe" feasta sa choinníoll seo'. In s15(6) of the Value-Added Tax (Amendment) Act, 1978, 'in this section referred to as "a farmer credit note"' is translated as 'dá ngairtear "nóta sochair feirmeora" san alt seo'. Finally, in s15(1) of the Pensions Act, 1990, 'who shall be known, and is referred to in this Act, as ...' is translated as 'ar a dtabharfar, agus dá ngairtear san Acht seo'.

ainm 'Brian is ainm dó' is translated as 'his name is Brian' in Ó Dónaill, for example. In s43(2)(a) of the Local Government Act, 1991, 'A regional authority shall be called and known by such title as may be specified in the establishment order concerned' is translated as 'Gairfear d'údarás réigiúnach agus tabharfar air cibé teideal a shonrófar san ordú bunaithe lena mbaineann'. Section 3(5) of the Local Government Services (Corporate Bodies) Act, 1971, reads as follows:

A body established under the said subsection (1) shall be called and known by such title as may be specified in the establishment order. Is é cibé teideal a shonrófar san ordú bunaithe a thabharfar ar chomhlacht, agus a ghairfear de chomhlacht, a bhunófar faoin bhfo-alt sin (1).

In s2 of the Defence Act, 1954, 'the expression "the Permanent Defence Force" means the constituent part of the Defence Forces which is to be called and known by that name' is translated as 'ciallaíonn an abairt "na Buan-Óglaigh" an chomhchuid d'Óglaigh na hÉireann dá ngairmfear agus ar a dtabharfar an ainm sin'. In s3(3) of the International Health Bodies (Corporate Status) Act, 1971, 'A body to which a corporate status order relates shall ... be called and known by the title specified in the order ...' is translated as 'Aon chomhlacht lena mbaineann ordú um stádas corpraithe, tabharfar air agus gairfear de ... an teideal a shonrófar san ordú'. In s2(2) of the Ministers and Secretaries (Amendment) Act, 1966, 'The member of the Government who is in charge of the Department of Labour shall be styled and known as An tAire Saothair ...'

is translated as ‘An tAire Saothair ... a thabharfar mar theideal ar an gcomhalta den Rialtas a bheidh i mbun na Roinne Saothair agus a ghairfear de’. Finally, in s6(3) of the Road Transport Act, 1978, ‘Each of the following areas shall be known as a new area’ is translated as ‘Gairfear limistéar nua de gach limistéar díobh seo a leanas’.

Looking at earlier Acts, in s1(1) of the Adaptation of Enactments Act, 1922, ‘The Fund ... shall be called and known as “The Central Fund of Saorstát Éireann,” and may for brevity be referred to ... as “The Central Fund”’ is translated as ‘An Ciste ... glaofar “Prímh-Chiste Shaorstáit Éireann” air agus is mar sin aithneofar é, agus féadfar mar chomhgar “An Prímh-Chiste” do ghairm de’. Section 6(1) of the Constitution (Consequential Provision) Act, 1937, reads as follows:

The fund ... shall be called and known as the Central Fund and is in this section ... referred to ... as the Central Fund of Ireland. An ciste ... bhéarfáir an Prímh-Chiste mar ainm agus mar theideal air agus, san alt so ... gairmtear Prímh-Chiste na hÉireann de.

‘Dá ngairtear’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating ‘called and known as’ in early translations for the Department of Fisheries.

is The form of the copula which denotes non-past tense, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú commenting that ‘is’ = ‘non-past, immediate’ with ‘ba’ = ‘past, remote’.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Oireachtas consists of the President and two Houses: a House of Representatives which is called Dáil Éireann, and a Senate which is called Seanad Éireann.

ENGLISH TEXT

The Oireachtas shall consist of the President, and two Houses, viz.: a House of Representatives to be called Dáil Éireann and a Senate to be called Seanad Éireann.

Divergences between the official texts

- ‘Shall’ is expressed as a simple present in the Irish text, as we have seen in the case of ‘ní cead’, ‘ní foláir’, etc. – ‘The Oireachtas shall consist of’ is expressed as ‘atá san Oireachtas’ (‘the Oireachtas consists of’) in the Irish text and ‘to be called’ is expressed as ‘ar a dtugtar’, ‘that is called’.
- ‘Viz.’ of the English text is not specifically expressed in the Irish text – one would perhaps have expected the abbreviation ‘i.’ found in other Articles.

Commentary

atá See the commentary on Article 11 regarding both ‘ní foláir’ and ‘ní cead’ expressing ‘shall’. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that while ‘shall’ relates to statements about the future, the future in the usual grammatical sense is not involved. Máirtín Ó Murchú refers to the Grammar of Contemporary English where this is termed ‘volitional’ mood, and three grades of usage are outlined (s3.46, p. 99):

- weak volition: ‘he shall get his money’ – restricted use;
- intermediate volition: ‘we shall let you know’ – normal British English use;
- strong volition: ‘you shall do as I say’ – restricted use ‘the vendor shall maintain the equipment’ – legal and quasi-legal use.

It is this latter usage which is involved in the Constitution, which is often expressed as ‘ní cead’, ‘ní foláir’, etc. in the Irish text.

ionadóirí ‘Ionadaí’ is translated as ‘representative’ in Téarmaí Dlí, where ‘representative capacity’ and ‘personal representative’ are translated respectively as ‘cáil ionadaí’ and ‘ionadaí pearsanta’. Ó Dónaill gives ‘ionadaí’ as the form of the headword, which he translates as ‘representative; substitute, deputy, locum tenens’. Dinneen does not appear to give either ‘ionadaí’ or ‘ionadóir’ as a headword. This agency noun is based on ‘ionad’, ‘place, position’, ‘ined’ being cited in the Annals of Ulster, s.a. AD 803. The verb ‘inadaid’/‘inaided’ is translated as ‘places, appoints’ in DIL where ‘is esside ro hinaided uait-siu’ (‘he has been appointed by you’) is cited from the Leabhar Breac (compiled in 1411 or earlier).

‘Ionadaithe dlí’ translates ‘legal representatives’ in s26(6) of the Pensions Act, 1990, for example, and ‘Teach na nIonadaithe’ translates the Belgian ‘House of Representatives’ on the Dáil Order Paper of 4/2/1969. Looking at early Acts, ‘Ionadaí na Coróinneach’ translates ‘the Representative of the Crown’ in Article 17 of the 1922 Constitution, with ‘teachta’ translating ‘representative’ in reference to the Dáil in Article 27, where ‘Each University ... shall be entitled to elect three representatives to Dáil Éireann’ is translated as ‘Beidh de cheart ag gach Príomh-sgoil i Saorstát Éireann ... trí teachtaí do thogha do Dháil Éireann’. ‘Ionadaithe consalta Shaorstáit Éireann’ translates ‘the consular representatives of Saorstát Éireann’ in s1(2) of the Executive Authority (External Relations) Act, 1936, ‘ionadaithe puiblí’ translating ‘public representatives’ in the Long Title of the Oireachtas (Allowances to Members) Act, 1938.

Seanad This headword is simply translated as ‘senate’ in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen s.v. ‘seanaid’, gives (1) ‘a senate, a synod; Shanid (Limerick)'; (2) 'a record, a chronicle; an event, a happening' – (1) comes from 'senatus', according to Dinneen, and (2) perhaps comes from 'senatus consultum'. Ó Dónaill has a headword 'seanadh', examples of which come from earlier Irish literature and which is translated by Ó Dónaill as (1) 'synod' and (2) 'gathering, assembly'. 'Sionad' in Ó Dónaill is translated as '(Ecclesiastical) synod'. Dinneen translates 'seanadh' as 'a synod, a senate' and cites 'Ráith na Seanadh, the Rath of Synods (a site at Tara)'. Old Irish 'senod' comes from Latin 'synodus', according to DIL s.v. 'senad', which is translated as (a) 'a synod' and (b) 'assembly, gathering', an example of sense (b) being cited from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles.

viz. 'Eadhon' generally translates 'viz.' in the Acts. See the Margin Title of s2 of the Appropriation Act, 1981, where 'Appropriation of sums voted for supply services, viz., £4,366,583,040' is translated as 'Suimeanna a vótádh le haghaidh seirbhísí soláthair, eadhon, £4,366,583,040, a leithreasú'. In the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922, 'Schedule of Sums Granted ... during the year ending 31st day of March, 1923, viz.:-' is translated as 'Sceideal de Shuimeanna do Deonadh ... i rith na bliana a chríochnóidh ar an 31adh lá de Mhárta, 1923, eadhon:-'. Dinneen has the following entry:

eadhon, eadhón, to wit, namely, that is, i.e., viz, that is to say; commonly written i.; originally eadh-ón, eadh and ón, or, són, old neuter pronoun, literally it is it.

'Eadhón' is given as a variant form in Ó Dónaill, this being the more correct form according to Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú. However, as this form is long since gone from normal usage, Máirtín Ó Murchú recommends 'is é sin' or '.i.', this subsection to read 'Is é a bheidh san Oireachtas (ná) an tUachtarán agus dhá Theach, is é sin / .i. Teach Ionadaithe, etc.'

atá san Oireachtas 'Of inner parts, components, contents' is given by Ó Dónaill as one of the senses of the preposition 'i' with the substantive verb, citing 'tá ocsaigin san aer, air contains oxygen', 'bhí líneáil bhog sa chóta, the coat had a soft lining' and 'tá céad leathanach sa leabhar'. 'Comhdhéanta de' generally translates 'consist of' in the Acts – see, for example, s39(2) of the Redundancy Payments Act, 1967, where 'The Tribunal shall consist of the following members' is translated as 'Beidh an Binse comhdhéanta de na comhaltaí seo a leanas'. Note that 'comhdhéanamh' is found in the heading of this Article. See the commentary on Articles 2 and 14.2.1° for other translations of 'consist of' in the Acts.

Divergences between the official texts

Note that Article 13 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows, with lower-case 'c' in both texts:

The Oireachtas shall sit in or near the city of Dublin or in such other place as from time to time it may determine. Suidhfidh an t-Oireachtas i gcathair Bhaile Átha Cliath nó 'na haice nó i pé áit eile a shocróidh sé ó am go ham.

Commentary

ar a gcinnfid ... a shuífid The synthetic forms of the verbs, third person plural, future tense – these would generally be written today as 'ar a gcinnfidh siad' agus 'a shuífidh (siad)' – see the commentary on Article 14.5.1°. As regards 'cinn', see the commentary on Article 1; see also, for example, s101(2)(b) of the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, where 'the trial shall be continued until its result is determined' is translated as 'leanfar leis an triail nó go gcinnefar a toradh'.

Regarding the verb 'suigh' with an inanimate subject, Ó Dónaill cites 'suidhfidh an chúirt go raibh an cás pléite, the court will sit until the case has been considered'. Dinneen translates 'suidhim' as 'I sit, go into session, sit (as a court) ...' – illustrating the disadvantage of using the first person singular of the verb as the form of the headword! – citing 'suidhfe an chuideachta ar thubaist na tíre, the council [translated as 'company'/'assembly' by Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú] will sit to take measures concerning the troubles of the country', from Merriman's Midnight Court, and 'sul do suidheadh an ríogh-dháil, before the royal assembly sat', from Keating's seventeenth-century History of Ireland.

Turning to the early Acts, in the Preamble to the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922, 'Dáil Éireann sitting as a Constituent Assembly in this Provisional Parliament' is translated as 'Dáil Éireann 'na suidhe mar Dháil Bhunaidh sa Phárlimint Shealadach so'. 'Days when the Dáil would normally sit' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'laetheannta 'nar ghnáth leis an Dáil suidhe do bheith aice' in a translation of a 1928 Report of a Committee of the Houses of the Oireachtas. Note finally that in s146(1) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'if the House sits until that hour' is translated as 'má bhíonn an Teach ina shuí go dtí an t-am sin', 'on the third ... occasion ... on which the Dáil shall sit' being translated as 'ar an tríú hócáid ... ar a suífidh an Dáil' in s61(2) thereof. See further the commentary on Article 15.7.

cibé 'Cibé áit a rachaimid' is translated as 'wherever we go' in Ó Dónaill, 'cibé' simply being translated as 'whoever, whatever' in Dinneen. As nasalisation generally follows the preposition 'i' there might have been a reluctance to use the phrase 'i cibé', although examples of that phrase are found in the Acts. In s3(11) of the Huguenot Cemetery Dublin (Peter Street) Act, 1966, 'in the place of re-interment of the remains or in such other place as the High Court may direct' is translated as 'san áit a athadhlacfar na taisí nó i cibé áit eile a ordóidh an Ard-Chúirt', 'nó i cibé áit eile le haghaidh siamsaíochta poiblí laistigh a bheidh sonraithe' translating 'or in such other place of indoor public entertainment as may be specified' in s2(2)(e) of the Tobacco (Health Promotion and Protection) Act, 1988. In s39(17)(c) of the Redundancy Payments Act, 1967, 'The Tribunal may ... require such person to attend at such time and place as is specified in the notice' is translated as 'féadfaidh an Binse ... a cheangal ar an duine sin freastal cibé tráth agus i cibé áit a shonrófar san fhógra'. See above for 'i pé áit' in the 1922 Constitution. 'I mBaile Átha Cliath nó i pé áit eile ar a gcomhaontóidh an Bord' translates 'in Dublin or in such other place as may be agreed upon by the Board' in s11(1) of the Second Schedule to the Sea Fisheries Act, 1952.

ar a cóngar See the commentary on Article 12.11.1°.

ENGLISH TEXT

The sole and exclusive power of making laws for the State is hereby vested in the Oireachtas; no other legislative authority has power to make laws for the State.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Sole and exclusive power' is expressed as 'an t-aon chumhacht' ('the only power') in the Irish text, with 'Oireachtas' being qualified by 'amháin' ('alone').
- 2 The Irish legal term for 'legislative' is 'reachtach', 'údarás reachtaíochta' literally being 'an authority of legislation', though a noun in the genitive singular functions as an attributive adjective in Irish.
- 3 'Vest' is expressed by 'bheir' ('give') in the Irish text, as in some other Articles.
- 4 'Power to make laws' and 'power of making laws' are expressed as 'cumhacht chun dlíthe a dhéanamh' ('power to make laws') in the Irish text.
- 5 The Irish 'ar bith eile' is stronger in tone than 'no other'.
- 6 The English text has a colon, while the Irish has a semi-colon.

Note that Article 12 of the 1922 Constitution concludes as follows:

The sole and exclusive power of making laws for the peace, order and good government of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) is vested in the Oireachtas. Is ag an Oireachtas amháin a bheidh an t-aon-chomhacht chun dlíthe i dtaobh síochána, rialtacha agus dea-riartha Shaorstáit Éireann do dhéanamh.

Commentary

an t-aon chumhacht 'For the exclusive use of either of the said languages' is expressed as 'd'fhonn ceachtar den dá theanga sin a bheith ina haonteanga' in Article 8.3. 'Aonghuth' expresses 'single vote' in Articles 12.2.3°, 16.2.5° and 18.5, while 'aon-toghchán' expresses 'same election' in Article 12.4.3°.

Ó Dónaill gives 'one only' as one of the senses of 'aon', citing 'an t-aon iníon (amháin) atá acu, the only daughter they have' and 'an t-aon lá (amháin) a bhí mé saor, the only day on which I was free'. 'Sole corporation' is translated as 'corparáid aonair' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'exclusive right' is translated as 'ceart eisiatach'; according to Ó Dónaill 'eisiach' is the standard form of 'eisiatach' – see the commentary on Article 8.3. In s5 of the Fisheries (Amendment) Act, 1978, for example, 'within the exclusive fishery limits of the State' is translated as 'laistigh de theorainneacha iascaigh eisiatacha an Stáit'.

'Sole' is sometimes translated as 'aon' in the Acts – see, for example, s80(2) of the Pensions Act, 1990, where 'The sole or principal reason for the dismissal' is translated as 'An t-aon chúis nó an phríomhchúis a bhí leis an difhostú'. 'Aon-', compounded with the noun, more regularly translates 'sole' in the Acts – see, for example, s2(1)(a)(ii)(C) of the Insurance (Amendment) Act, 1978, where 'the said payment ... being the sole obligation of the person under the contract' is translated as 'arb é an t-íoc ... sin aon-oibleagáid an duine faoin gconradh' and s5 of Part 1 of the Finance Act, 1990, where 'the sole or main income of the individual' is translated as 'aon-ioncam nó príomh-ioncam na pearsan aonair'. In the Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 40), 'the Court shall have sole jurisdiction' is translated as 'is ag an gcúirt amháin a bheidh dlínse'.

Looking at the early Acts, 'The Oireachtas has the exclusive right to regulate ...' is translated as 'Is ag an Oireachtas amháin atá an t-aon cheart chun rialú do dhéanamh' in Article 46 of the 1922 Constitution. In s154(1) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, "'Copyright" means the sole right to produce or reproduce the work' is translated as 'cialluíonn "cóip-cheart" an t-aon-cheart chun an obair ... do thabhairt amach no d'ath-thabhairt amach'. In s28(1) thereof, 'to confer on the person ... the full, sole and exclusive right, power and authority' is translated as 'chun an ceart, an comhacht agus an t-údarás iomlán, aonda agus ar leithligh do bhronna ar an té'. Finally, 'subject to the exclusive control of the Conference' is translated as 'fé réir smacht na Códhála amháin' in subsection (b) of the Schedule to the Methodist Church in Ireland Act, 1928. See further the commentary on Article 15.6.1°.

Note that while 'cumhacht chun ...' translates 'power of ...' in some Acts, we find 'Cumhachtaí an Aire truailliú a chosc' translating 'Powers of Minister to prevent pollution' in s26 of the Sea Pollution Act, 1991. 'Cumhacht cheapacháin ghinearálta' translates 'general power of appointment' in Téarmaí Dlí. Note finally that the first Article of the Constitution of Dáil Éireann, 1919, commences as follows:

reachtaíochta 'Reachtaíocht' is translated as 'legislation' in Ó Dónaill. It does not appear to be given as a headword in Dinneen nor in DIL. 'Legislative' is translated as 'rechtach' in Téarmaí Dlí; 'rechtach' is translated as 'law-giving, legislative' in Ó Dónaill and as 'legal, lawful, constitutional' in Dinneen. DIL s.v. 'rechtach', translated as 'just, equitable, law-giving', cites this adjective only as a sobriquet in 'Fedelmed Rechtach' ('Fedelmed the Lawgiver'), cited from Leabhar na hUidhre (written before 1106). See the commentary on Article 20.1.

In s5 of the Higher Education Authority Act, 1971, 'the legislative measures required in relation to their establishment' is translated as 'na bearta reachtaíochta is gá maidir lena mbunú'. In s4 of Article 9 of the Bretton Woods Agreement Act, 1957, however, 'any other form of seizure by executive or legislative action' is translated as 'aon tsórt eile urghabhála trí ghníomhú feidhmiúcháin nó gníomhú rechtach'. 'All authority, legislative, executive, and judicial' is translated as 'gach údarás reachtúcháin, feidhmiúcháin agus breithiúntais' in Article 2 of the 1922 Constitution, 'rechtúchán' translating 'legislation' in s2 of the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922.

ar bith This phrase is translated as 'any; (with negative) no' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'níl ciall ar bith aige, he has no sense' and 'níl baint ar bith agam leo, I have nothing to do with them'. DIL cites 'na Ulltach eli for bith' ('or any Ultonian'). See the commentary on Article 9.1.3°.

Bheirtear This would generally be written as 'tugtar' today – see the commentary on Article 12.1. As regards 'vest', see the commentary on Articles 10.1 and 13.4.

níl See the commentary on Article 13.8.1°.

ENGLISH TEXT

Provision may however be made by law for the creation or recognition of subordinate legislatures and for the powers and functions of these legislatures.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The Irish text adds 'a leagan amach' ('to lay out') to the English text's 'for the powers and functions of these legislatures', i.e. as if the English text were to read 'for the laying out / prescription of the powers and functions of these legislatures'.
- 2 'Creation or recognition' is expressed as 'a chur ar bun nó (chun) glactha leo' ('establishment or acceptance') in the Irish text, the term expressing 'create' in the Irish text expressing 'establish' in the following section.

- 3 While the 'subordinate legislatures' are referred to simply as 'legislatures' at the end of the subsection in the English text, they are referred to as 'fo-reachtas' ('subordinate legislatures') throughout the Irish text.
- 4 'However' is expressed as 'Ach' ('but') in the Irish text, as in some other Articles.

Note that Article 44 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

The Oireachtas may create subordinate legislatures with such powers as may be decided by law. Féadfaidh an t-Oireachtas cóireanna íochtaracha reachtúcháin do bhunú agus pé comhachta a socrófar le dlí do thabhairt dóibh.

Commentary

Ach 'Ach', literally translated as 'but', expresses 'however' in Articles 8.3, 13.7.3°, 13.8.2°, 15.8.2°, 28.3.2°, 40.4.6°, 40.4.6°i, 40.4.6°iii, 42.3.2° and 43.2.1°. 'Ag féachaint go cuí, áfach, do chearta tuistí' expresses 'with due regard, however, for the rights of parents' in Article 42.4, 'áfach' being the specific general translation of 'however'. As regards the Acts, see, for example, s9 of Article 4 of the Schedule to the Bretton Woods Agreement Act, 1957, where 'It shall, however, be open to a member to declare ...' is translated as 'féadfaidh an comhalta, áfach, a fhógairt ...'. In the Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 683), 'It may, however, form two Chambers' is translated as 'Féadfaidh sí, áfach, eagar dhá Dhlisheomra a chur uirthi féin'.

fo-reachtas Note that 'fo-reachtas' is the form in the original text. 'Reachtas' is translated as 'legislature' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill, however, translates 'rechtas' as (1) 'administration, stewardship', (2) 'rechtas, talamh reachtais, rented land (for dairying); conacre' and (3) '= oireachtas', which, as we have seen, is translated there as 'deliberative assembly', with 'An tOireachtas' translated as 'the Legislature'. Dinneen translates 'rechtas' as 'stewardship; legislation'. DIL translates 'rechtas' as (a) 'authority, administration', citing 'rechtus na Temrach' (i.e. (the) administration of Tara) among the examples, and (b) 'stewardship', citing just one example, from Keating's seventeenth-century Three Shafts of Death.

The prefix 'fo-' is translated as (1) 'under-, sub-, hypo-, secondary, subsidiary', (2) 'minor, lesser; light, trivial' and (3) 'odd, occasional' in Ó Dónaill and as 'under, below, sub-; occasional, odd, rare, few, slow, light' in Dinneen. 'Fodhualgais' translates 'subordinate duties' in s55(2)(d) of the Agricultural Credit Act, 1947, for example – note, however, that this is translated as 'iosdualgais' in s18(2)(d) of the Agricultural Credit Act, 1978. In Article 3 of the 1985 Anglo-Irish Agreement, 'in subordinate groups' is translated as 'i bhfo-bhuíonta'.

'Cóir reachtúcháin' was the earlier translation of 'Legislature'. In the Preamble to the Methodist Church in Ireland Act, 1928, 'And Whereas the Methodist Church in Ireland, being one united body with members and property throughout the whole of Ireland desires to have such purposes carried into effect by Acts of the respective Legislatures having jurisdiction' is translated as 'Agus de bhri gur mian leis an Eaglais Mhethodistigh in Éirinn, agus í ina cólucht aontuithe amháin agus baill agus maoin aice ar fuaid na hÉireann uile, go gcuirfí na cricheanna san in éifeacht tré Achtanna de sna Cóireacha Reachtúcháin fé seach 'na bhfuil údarás aca'. Note that 'lucht reachtúcháin' translates 'the legislature' in s152(6) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, where 'that the legislature of any British dominion, protectorate or territory has made satisfactory provision for ...' is translated as 'go bhfuil lucht reachtúcháin aon tiarnais Bhriotáinighe, tíre fé choimirce Briotáinighe no críche Briotáinighe tar éis socrú sásúil do dhéanamh chun...'. In s1 of the Second Schedule to the Defamation Act, 1961, in conformity with the Constitution, 'A fair and accurate report of any proceedings in public of a house of any legislature (including subordinate or federal legislatures) of any foreign sovereign State' is translated as 'Tuairisc chothrom chruinn ar aon imeachtaí poiblí ag teach aon reachtais (lena n-áirítear fo-reachtas nó reachtais chónaidhme) le haon Stát ceannasach iasachta'.

'Bunú focheart agus foleasanna agus a n-éifeacht' translates 'Creation and effect of subordinate rights and interests' in the Margin Title of s68 of the Registration of Title Act, 1964, 'mar aon le fo-ranna áirithe' translating 'including certain subordinate departments' in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922. We find 'mion-' along with 'íochtarach' (see above) translating 'subordinate' in the 1922 Constitution, 'subordinate matters incidental to those subjects' being translated as 'mion-chúrsaí ag baint leis na habhair seo' in Article 35 thereof.

socrú See the commentary on Article 8.3, regarding 'socrú', 'arrangement', with the sense of 'provision' in the Acts, 'foráil' also translating 'provision' in the Acts. The Long Title of many Acts begin with the phrase 'An Act to make provision for ...', which phrase is usually translated as 'Acht do dhéanamh socrú chun / le haghaidh / maidir le' – see, for example, the Telecommunications (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1996:

An Act to make provision for the establishment of the office of Director of Telecommunications Regulation ... and to provide for related matters .... Acht do dhéanamh socrú chun oifig Stiúirthóra Rialála Teileachumarsáide a bhunú ... agus do dhéanamh socrú i dtaobh nithe gaolmhara.

Outside of this context we find 'foráil' – see, for example, s8(2) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, where 'Where the terms of the lease include provision for the determination of the lease by notice given by the lesser' is translated as 'I gcás foráil chun léas a fhoirceannadh trí fhógra ón léasóir a bheith ar théarmaí an léasa'. In s2(4) of the same Act, 'Any provision in this Act introducing the assumption that assets are sold' is translated as 'aon fhoráil san Acht a chuirfidh i gcás go bhfuil sócmhainní á ndíol'. In Téarmaí Dlí 'I provide that' is translated as 'foráilaim go'. In s32(2) of the Misuse of Drugs Act, 1977, 'Where regulations under section 14 ... provide that a substance ... is to be regarded ...' is translated as 'Nuair a fhoráilann rialacháin faoi alt 14 ... go bhfuil substaint ... le háireamh'; on the other hand, in s12(2) of the Value-Added Tax (Amendment) Act, 1978, 'Regulations may make provision for remitting ... the tax' is translated as 'féadfar a fhoráil le rialacháin go ndéanfar ... an cháin ... a loghadh'. In s18(3) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1992, '(Féadfar le rialacháin faoin alt seo) foráil a dhéanamh maidir le cibé ábhair iarmhartacha ... (a mheasfaidh an tAire is gá)' translates 'make provision for such consequential ... matters'.

In the present Article 15.2.2<sup>o</sup> both the verbal nouns 'the creation or recognition of' and the nouns 'powers and functions' are qualified by 'provision may be made for'. The drafters of the Irish version of this Article therefore introduced a new verbal noun in the final clause. However, we see from the above Long Title how, while we have 'Acht do dhéanamh socrú chun' plus verbal noun at the beginning of the title this alters to 'do dhéanamh socrú i dtaobh' at the end of the title, before 'related matters'.

chun glactha leo 'Glacaim le' is translated as 'I accept' in Téarmaí Dlí – see the commentary on Article 8.2. According to An Caighdeán Oifigiúil, 'glacadh', as verbal noun of 'glac', would not be put into the genitive case after 'chun' – see s5(a) of the chapter entitled 'The Form of the Nominative instead of the Genitive' ([I translate:] 'when it [i.e. the verbal noun] comes immediately after a preposition which takes the genitive'), 'chun dul abhaile' being cited as example. Note how 'glacadh leo' is not in the genitive case in the following subsection (Article 15.3.1<sup>o</sup>), even though this is also subject to 'chun'.

See the commentary on Article 8.2 regarding 'recognise'. Note that 'arrange for ... the recognition of certificates' is translated as 'socrú a dhéanamh ... chun aitheantas a thabhairt do theastais' in s15(3)(b) of the Fire Services Act, 1981, for example. 'Which provides for the recognition of passenger steamers' certificates' is translated as '(alt) le n-a ndeintear socrú chun deimhniú gáltán paisnéara ... d'aithint' in s21(2) of the Merchant Shipping (Safety and Load Line Conventions) Act, 1933.

a leagan amach 'Leag amach' is translated as (1) 'lay out, arrange' and (3) 'lay down, prescribe; allot, allocate' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'obair, dualgas, a leagan amach do dhuine, do allot work, a duty, to someone' and 'damáistí a leagan amach, to prescribe damages'.

In Article 15.9.1<sup>o</sup>, 'and [each House of the Oireachtas] shall prescribe their powers and duties' is expressed as 'agus leagfaidh amach dóibh a gcumhachtaí agus a ndualgais'. In Article 29.4.6<sup>o</sup> (as amended) 'atá leagtha amach sa chonradh sin' renders 'set out in the said Treaty' and in Article 45 'atá leagtha amach san Airteagal seo' expresses 'set forth in this Article'. In Article 34.1, 'ar an modh atá leagtha amach sa Bhunreacht seo' expresses 'in the manner provided by this Constitution'. Neither Dinneen nor DIL appear to give examples of 'leag amach'. According to the late Professor David Greene, Old Norse 'leggja' is the source of Irish 'leag' – see DIL s.v. 'lecaid', translated as (a) 'lays out, sets, places; lowers, lets down; extends, stretches'.

a chur ar bun Ó Dónaill translates 'ar bun' as 'established', citing 'gnó, scoil, a chur ar bun, to establish a business, a school'. Dinneen translates 'ar bun' as 'afoot, set up, established', citing 'Tá an teanga ar bun, the language is alive', and translates 'cuirim ar bun' as 'I set up, found, set going'. Note how 'a chur ar bun' expresses 'establish' in the following section (Articles 15.3.1<sup>o</sup> and 15.3.2<sup>o</sup>), as it does in Article 6.2. In the Second Schedule to the Ombudsman Act, 1980, 'Bodies set up under the Health (Corporate Bodies) Act, 1961' is translated as 'Comhlachtaí a cuireadh ar bun faoin Acht Sláinte (Comhlachtaí Corpraithe), 1961'. 'A chur ar bun' usually translates 'to set up' in translations of European legislation. However, 'the creation of a European Social Fund' is translated as 'Ciste Sóisialach Eorpach a chur ar bun' in the Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 180). On p. 749, 'have decided to create a Single Council and a Single Commission of the European Communities' is translated as 'tar éis cinneadh ar Chomhairle Aonair agus Coimisiún Aonair de na Comhphobail Eorpacha a bhunú'. 'Bunaigh' usually translates 'establish' in the Acts, but sometimes translates 'create' – see, for example, s7(1)(c) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, where 'any form of property created by the person disposing of it, or otherwise becoming owned without being acquired' is translated as 'aon chineál maoine a bhunaigh duine a diúscartha nó a tháinig ar úinéireacht ar shlí eile gan í a fháil'. 'To the creation of any option or consent or embargo affecting the disposition of any property or right' is translated as 'le haon rogha nó toiliú nó lánchosc a bhunú a dhéanann difear do dhiúscairt aon mhaoine nó aon chirt' in s29(3) of the Finance Act, 1981.

In Article 29.7.2<sup>o</sup>, introduced by the 19th Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1998, 'create' and 'establish' are found in association with each other, with 'cruthaigh' rendering 'create' in a relatively similar context to that in this Article 15.2.2<sup>o</sup>:

... notwithstanding any other provision of this Constitution conferring a like power or function on any person or any organ of State appointed under or created or established by or under this Constitution....
d'ainneoin aon fhorála eile den Bhunreacht seo lena dtugtar cumhacht nó feidhm dá samhail d'aon duine nó d'aon organ Stáit arna cheapadh faoin mBunreacht seo nó arna chruthú nó arna bhunú leis an mBunreacht seo nó faoin mBunreacht seo.

In s10(1)(a) of the Fisheries Act, 1980, 'the Minister may by order create ... such regions (each of which is in this Act referred to as a "fisheries region") as appear to him to be appropriate' is translated as 'féadfaidh an tAire le hordú cibé réigiúin (a ngairtear "réigiúin iascaigh" de gach ceann díobh san Acht seo) is dóigh leis is iomchuí ... a chruthú'.

'Trí sna có-ghléasanna a bunófar do réir an Bhunreachta' translates 'through the organisations established by ... this Constitution' in Article 2 of the 1922 Constitution, for example. 'Cruthnaigh' was the form of 'cruthaigh' in earlier Acts. 'Unless the Land Commission certify that the creation of the tenancy was in the interests of the country' is translated as 'mara ndeimhneoidh Coimisiún na Talmhan gur chuaidh cruthnú na tionóntachta chun leasa don tír' in s73(2)(b) of the Land Act, 1923. In s6(2) of the Harbours Act, 1946, 'any other matters supplemental or ancillary to the creation of the new authority' is translated as 'aon nithe eile is nithe forlíontacha nó fo-ghabhálacha maidir le cruthnú an údaráis nua'.

Standardised Irish text

Ach féadfar socrú a dhéanamh le dlí chun fo-reachtais a chur ar bun nó chun glacadh leo, agus chun cumhachtaí agus feidhmeanna na bhfo-reachtas sin a leagan amach.

Féadfar socrú a dhéanamh le dlí, áfach, chun fo-reachtais a chruthú nó chun aitheantas a thabhairt dóibh agus i dtaobh chumhachtaí agus feidhmeanna na reachtas sin.

Tig leis an Oireachtas socrú a dhéanamh chun comhairlí feidhmeannais is gairme beatha, a ionadaíos ranna de shaol chomhdhaonnach agus de shaol gheilleagrach an phobail, a chur ar bun nó glacadh leo.

The Oireachtas can make provision for the establishment or acceptance of / to establish or accept executive and vocational councils, which represent sections of the social/societal life and of the economic life of the people.

ENGLISH TEXT

The Oireachtas may provide for the establishment or recognition of functional or vocational councils representing branches of the social and economic life of the people.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The English text refers to 'functional or vocational councils', the Irish text on the other hand refers to 'comhairlí feidhmeannais is gairme beatha' ('functional and vocational councils').
- 2 'Comhdhaonnach', the term expressing 'social' in the Irish text, has, in the meaning relevant here, been generally superseded today by 'sóisialta'/'sóisialach'.
- 3 'Branches of the social and economic life of the people' is expressed as 'ranna de shaol chomhdhaonnach agus de shaol gheilleagrach an phobail' ('sections/divisions of the social life and of the economic life of the people'), 'ranna' perhaps expressing more structured units than 'branches'.
- 4 As in the previous subsection, 'recognition' is expressed by 'glacadh le' ('acceptance') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 45 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

The Oireachtas may provide for the establishment of Functional or Vocational Councils representing branches of the social and economic life of the Nation. Féadfaidh an tOireachtas soláthar do dhéanamh chun Comhairlí Feidhme nó Gairm-bheatha do bhunú a ionadóidh brainsí de bheatha cho-mhuinteartha agus chó-ionmhasach an Náisiúin.

Commentary

a ionadaíos For the special form of the relative, see the commentary on Article 6.1, and note that 'a ionadóidh' is the form of this phrase in the 1922 Constitution.

'Ionadaigh' is translated as (1) 'place, position', (2)(a) 'appoint as representative', (b) 'represent' and (3) 'substitute' in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen translates 'ionadaim' merely as 'I occupy, also place, set, fix, situate'. DIL cites only two examples of the verb 'inadaid'/'inaidid', translated as 'places, appoints'. This verb is based on 'inad' (Modern Irish 'ionad'), basically 'place'. See the commentary on Article 15.1.2<sup>o</sup>.

Turning to the Acts regarding 'represent', in s7(1)(a)(i) of the Importation of Duties (Dumping and Subsidies) Act, 1968, 'by a trade association representing such producers' is translated as 'ó chomhlachas trádála a ionadaíonn táirgeoirí den sórt sin'. In s2 of Article 15 of the Schedule to the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, 1957, however, 'by a decision of the Board of Governors carried by a majority of the governors representing a majority of the total voting power' is translated as 'trí chinneadh ón mBórd Rialtóirí a rithfeas tromlach na rialtóirí a bheas ina n-ionadaithe do thromlach na cumhachta iomláine vótála'. On the other hand, in s4(2)(c) of the Health Act, 1970, 'appointments made on the nominations of bodies which ... are representative of the medical and ancillary professions or of particular branches thereof' is translated as 'daoine a cheapfar ar na n-ainmniú ag comhlachtaí atá ... ionadaitheach do ghairm agus do ghairmeacha coimhdeacha nó do bhrainsí áirithe den chéanna'. In s1 of the Worker Participation (State Enterprises) Act, 1977, 'negotiations between any ... other body of persons representative of employers on the one hand ...' is translated as 'caibidlí idir ... aon chomhlacht eile daoine atá ionadaitheach d'fhostóirí ar thaobh amháin'. Finally, in the Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 1002), 'the Economic and Social Committee shall be enlarged by the appointment of forty-two members representing the various categories of economic and social activity in the new Member States' is translated as 'comhlánófar an Coiste Eacnamaíoch agus Sóisialach trí daichead is dhá chomhalta a bheidh ionadaíoch do na hearnálacha éagsúla de ghníomhaíocht eacnamaíoch agus shóisialach na mBallstát nua'. See further the commentary on Article 16.2.1<sup>o</sup>.

Note that neither 'ionadaitheach' nor 'ionadaíoch' are given as a headword in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'ionadach' principally as 'substitute, vicarious', with the secondary sense of 'out of the way, inaccessible' (in relation to a place).

comhairlí feidhmeannais Note that 'aon chomhlacht nó comhairle feidhme nó gairme beatha' expresses 'any functional or vocational group or council' in Article 19 and that 'Comhairlí Feidhme' translates 'Vocational Councils' in the 1922 Constitution cited above.

'Feidhmeannas' is translated as 'function, service; office, capacity; position, employment' in Ó Dónaill. 'Feidhmeannas', the form in the original text, is translated as 'office, position, stewardship; superintendence, a commission; service, employment; a legacy' in Dinneen. DIL translates 'feidhmannas' as 'acting as agent or minister; office of an overseer, stewardship (in wide sense)', the first of four examples given there being 'sechain ... beth ic fédmándus don diabul' ('avoid being an agent of the devil'), from the Passions and Homilies from the Leabhar Breac (compiled in 1411 or earlier). A seventeenth-century example from Keating is followed by two examples from Caithréim Thoirdealbhaigh in the loose sense of 'employment', the first being 'do bi ... co tindesnagh ag indsaighe in fhedhmannuis sin', translated as 'hasted to perform that duty'. Four examples of a late form of 'fedmannas', 'fedmantas', are also cited, including, from the Annals of Ulster, 'Iarla Cille Dara do thoighecht i nErinn ... 7 fedhmannus in righ do thabairt dó' ('i.e. office of judiciary').

Looking at 'functional' in the Acts, 'functional area', for example, is translated both as 'limistéar feidhmíúcháin' and 'limistéar feidhme' – see s13(1) of the Consumer Information Act, 1978, where 'if ... an officer of a council or of a county or corporation of a county or other borough in whose functional area the publisher has a place of business so requests' is translated as 'i gcás oifigeach do chomhairle contae nó do bhordas contae-bhuirge nó buirge eile a bhfuil áit ghnó ag an bhfoilsitheoir ina limistéar feidhmíúcháin á iarraidh sin'. In s9(3) of the Fire Services Act, 1981, on the other hand, 'The functional area of a fire authority shall be ... its administrative area' is translated as 'Is é an limistéar feidhme a bheidh ag údarás dóiteáin ... a limistéar riaracháin'. Note that 'Líomataíste feidhmíúcháin' is found in s2(6) of the Damage to Property (Compensation) Act, 1923.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that 'feidhme' is preferable here as it connotes 'ranges of work' ("réimsí oibre"), 'feidhmíúchán' having the sense of what they themselves would be doing.

gairme beatha 'Gairm' is translated as 'call', with the secondary sense of 'calling', in Ó Dónaill; the latter sense is divided into (a) 'divine call, vocation', and (b) 'profession, occupation', Ó Dónaill citing 'do ghairm bheatha, one's mission in life, one's occupation' as an example of sense (b). Other examples cited are 'tá gairm dochtúra aige, he is a doctor by profession', 'na gairmeacha léannta, the learned professions' and 'do ghairm a chleachtadh, to follow one's trade'. Dinneen translates 'gairm' as 'act of calling, appealing to, naming, summoning; call, summons, name, title, praise, reputation, honour, fame; calling, avocation or condition of life, vocation', and then continues: 'gairm bheathadh, id.' DIL gives four examples of 'gairm' (verbal noun of 'gairid', 'call') in the sense of 'a calling, employment, profession', including 'd'fior do gharma' ('for one of your calling'), from the seventeenth-century 'Contention of the Bards'.

'Gairm' alone usually renders 'vocational' in the Acts and is generally compounded with the noun it qualifies. 'Vocational education committee', for example, is translated as 'coiste gairmoideachais' in s9(1)(e) of the Industrial Relations Act, 1969; this was translated as 'coiste oideachais ghairme beatha' in s2(2)(c) of the Local Government Act, 1941, for example. In s9(1)(f) of the above-mentioned Industrial Relations Act, 'in a national, secondary, vocational or comprehensive school or in any similar school' is translated as 'i scoil náisiúnta, i meánscoil, i scoil ghairmoideachais, i scoil chuimsitheach nó in aon scoil dá samhail'. In the Programme for a Partnership Government 1993-97, 'to provide 1 year of community vocational service' is translated as '1 bhliain a chaitheamh i mbun gairm-sheirbhíse pobail' (p. 29).

'Vocational training or retraining' is translated as 'oilíúint nó athoilíúint ghairmiúil' in the Schedule following s24 of the Value-Added Tax (Amendment) Act, 1978, and we also find 'maoiniú na hathoilíúna gairmiúla' translating 'the financing of vocational retraining' in the Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 150). 'Gairmiúil' generally renders 'professional' and is so found in the Acts (see for example, 'guilty of professional misconduct', which is translated as 'ciontach i mí-iompar gairmiúil' in s5(a) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978). 'Vocational' is the primary sense of 'gairmiúil' in Ó Dónaill, however, who cites 'oideachas gairmiúil, vocational education'. Finally, we see above that 'gairm-bheatha' translates 'vocational' in the 1922 Constitution; 'tréineáil ghairme', however, translates 'vocational training' in s5(2) of the Army Pensions Act, 1923.

de shaol chomhdhaonnach ... agus de shaol gheilleagrach Neither of these adjectives would be lenited following the masculine noun 'saol' preceded by a preposition today – the dative form of the adjective following a masculine noun is the same as that of the nominative according to An Caighdeán Oifigiúil (p. 25) – see the commentary on Article 45. See the commentary on Article 1 as regards 'geilleagrach'.

'Comhdhaonnach' expresses 'social' in the Preamble and in Articles 18.7.1<sup>o</sup>v, 40.1, 41.1.2<sup>o</sup>, 43.2.1<sup>o</sup>, 45 and 45.1, with the genitive singular of 'comhdhaonnacht' with adjectival function, 'comhdhaonnachta', expressing 'social' in Articles 42.1 and 42.3.2<sup>o</sup>. 'An chomhdhaonnacht' expresses 'Society' in Article 41.1.1<sup>o</sup>. Ó Dónaill translates the compound adjective 'comhdhaonnach' as 'social, companionable', citing 'saol ceart comhdhaonnach, true social order'. Dinneen does not have this headword, translating 'cómhdaoine' as 'contemporaries, one's fellows'. The prefix 'comh-' is translated as (1) 'mutual, joint, common; co-', (2) 'fellow-', (3) 'equal', (4) 'close, near' and (5) 'full, complete, uniform' in Ó Dónaill. 'Daonna' is translated as 'human', 'humane', with 'daonnachas' translated as 'humanism'.

L. Mc Cionnaith translates 'social history' and 'social system' respectively as 'stair chomhdhaonnachta' and 'córás comhdhaonnach', and 'socialism' as 'comhdhaonnachas', all followed by the abbreviation for 'Terms published by the Department of Education'. L. Mc Cionnaith gives no citation of the term 'sóisialta' s.v. 'social'. De Bhaldraithe, on the other hand s.v. 'social', cites 'social problems, ceisteanna sóisialta', 'social reformer, leasaitheoir sóisialta' and 'social services, seirbhísí sóisialta'. De Bhaldraithe does, however, give 'comhdhaonnach' as a secondary translation of 'social' – which, incidentally, is followed by 'man is an essentially social animal', translated as 'ar scáth a chéile a mhaireas na daoine'. Dinneen does not appear to give 'sóisialta'/'sóisialach' as a headword.

Probably echoing the Constitution, 'economic and social discrimination' is translated as 'leithcheal eacnamaíoch agus comhdhaonnach' in Article 5 of the 1985 Anglo-Irish Agreement, with 'to promote the economic and social development ...' translated as 'chun dlús a chur le forbairt eacnamaíoch agus chomhdhaonnach' in Article 10. Similarly, in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 250), 'aid having a social character' is translated as 'cabhair de chineál comhdhaonnach'.

In general usage, however, 'social' is rendered as 'sóisialta', with 'sóisialach' also being used in the Acts, these terms having almost completely superseded 'comhdhaonnach'. While 'public administration and social services, including voluntary social activities' is translated as 'riarachán poiblí agus seirbhísí comhdhaonnacha, agus obair chomhdhaonnach dheontach d'áireamh' in s3(1) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1947 – almost exactly corresponding to Article 18.7.1<sup>v</sup> of the Constitution – in s5(1)(e) of the Institute for Advanced Studies Act, 1940, 'the study of Irish social history and of all branches of Irish history which require for their investigation a knowledge of the Irish language' is translated as 'staidéar do dhéanamh ar stair shóisialta na hÉireann agus fós ar gach brainse de stair na hÉireann gur gá eolas ar an nGaedhlig chun lorgaireachta ina thaobh' and in s5(1)(f) '(of) the cultural and social background of Celtic civilisation' is translated as 'ar chúlradh chultúrtha agus shóisialta na sibhialtachta Ceiltighe'. 'Sóisialta' translates 'social' in the Official Report of Dáil Debates, 29/5/23. We find 'sóisialta' in the New Ireland Forum Report (1984: 'these social realities' is translated as 'na réaltachtaí sóisialta seo' [4.14]), in the 1993 Joint Declaration ('the right to equal opportunity in all social and economic activity' being translated as 'an ceart ar chomhdhaiseanna i ngach gníomhaíocht shóisialta agus eacnamaíoch' [p. 4]), in the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97 (the 'Social Partners' being translated as 'na Comhpháirtithe Sóisialta' [p. 6]) and in the Treaty on European Union (Maastricht, 1992, where 'a policy in the social sphere comprising a European Social Fund' is translated as 'beartas sa réimse sóisialta lena n-áirítear Ciste Sóisialta na hEorpa' [p. 12]).

Generally in the modern Acts, however, 'sóisialach' rather than 'sóisialta' translates 'social', although to differentiate from the general use of 'social welfare' we find "welfare" comprises the religious and moral, intellectual, physical and social welfare of the children', in s3(2)(b) of the Judicial Separation and Family Law Reform Act, 1989, translated as 'foilaíonn "leas" leas creidimh agus morálta na leanaí, mar aon lena leas intleachta, lena leas coirp agus lena leas sóisialta'. 'The Social Welfare Act, 1950' is cited in Irish as 'an tAcht Leasa Shóisialaigh, 1950', for example, the 'Minister for Social Welfare' being styled 'an tAire Leasa Shóisialaigh'. In s164(1)(a) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, 'the social welfare officer' is translated as 'an t-oifigeach leasa shóisialaigh'. 'The Revenue and Social Insurance (RSI) Number' is translated as 'An Uimhir Ioncaim agus Árachais Shóisialaigh (IAS)' in s22(1)(a3) of the Finance Act, 1983. In s5(f) of Article 5 of the Schedule to the Bretton Woods Agreement Act, 1957, 'because of the domestic social or political policies of the member proposing the change' is translated as 'mar gheall ar bheartais shóisialacha nó pholaitíochta intíre an chomhalta a mholfas an t-athrú'.

Finally, looking at early translations, we see above that 'co-mhuinteartha' translates 'social' in the 1922 Constitution. 'Vital, social and educational matters' is translated as 'cúrsaí buaine beatha, cúrsaí saoil na ndaoine, agus cúrsaí oideachais' in s2(b) of the Statistics Act, 1926. 'Social amenities' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'aoibhneas cuideachtanaí' in 'Dáil Reports (Oir. Accom.)'.

ranna Plural of 'roinn'. 'Príosúnacht sa chéad roinn, imprisonment in the first division' is cited in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Roinn' is translated as I(1) 'share, portion' and II(2) 'Administration: Department' in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen translates 'roinn(t)' as 'act of dividing, sharing, distributing, dealing out, having to do with, imparting to, assigning, allotting; a portion, share, division (of soldiers, etc.), grant (of land), legacy; food, rations; a paragraph; a continent; in pl. legs, members, territories'. DIL translates 'rann' as 1(a) 'a part (of a whole)', with 'rann airegda inna anme' ('the superior part of the mind') glossing Latin 'spiritus' in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles.

Looking at the Acts as regards 'branch', in s4(2)(c) of the Health Act, 1970, 'representative of the medical and ancillary professions or of particular branches thereof' is translated as 'ionadaitheach do ghairm an leighis agus do ghairmeacha coimhdeacha nó do bhraínsí áirithe den chéanna'. In s4(2)(a) of the Law Reform Commission Act, 1975, 'different branches of the law' is translated as 'braínsí éagsúla den dlí'. In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 247), 'in the various branches of the economy' is translated as 'i gcás braínsí éagsúla an gheilleagair'. Finally, in the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97, 'there will be intensive consultation with all branches of the industry' is translated as 'rachfar i gcomhairle go mion le gach brainse den tionscal' (p. 57).

Looking at the early Acts, in s1(iii) of the Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1924, 'the business, powers, duties and functions of the branches and officers of the public service' is translated as 'gnó, comhachta, dualgaisí agus feidhmeanna na mbraínsí agus na n-oifigeach den tseirbhís phoiblí', 'braínsí' translating 'branches' is the 1922 Constitution, as we see above. Ó Dónaill cites 'brainse léinn, branch of learning' and 'tá braínsí (eolais) aige, he is acquainted with a variety of subjects', while Dinneen includes 'a branch, as of education' s.v. 'brainse'. Finally, note incidentally that 'rannóg' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'branch' in Iris an Phuist, 25/8/27, 'brainsí-oifig' translating 'branch post-office' in Iris an Phuist, 1/2/28.

Tig leis This phrase is one of the ways in which 'may' is expressed in the Constitution – see the commentary on Article 12.4.4°.

socrú a dhéanamh See the commentary on Article 8.3.

glacadh leo See the commentary on Article 15.2.2°.

Standardised Irish text

Tig leis an Oireachtas socrú a dhéanamh chun comhairlí feidhmeannais is gairme beatha, a ionadaíonn ranna de shaol comhdhaonnach agus de shaol geilleagrach an phobail, a chur ar bun nó glacadh leo.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Dlí ar bith lena gcuirtear comhairle den sórt sin ar bun nó faoina nglactar léi ní foláir léiriú a bheith ann ar chearta, ar chumhachtaí agus ar dhualgais na comhairle sin, agus fós ar a comhbhaint leis an Oireachtas agus leis an Rialtas.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Any law establishing such a council or under which it is accepted must have/contain an interpretation/clarification/illustration of the rights, the powers and the duties of that council, and moreover of its mutual relationship with the Oireachtas and with the Government.

ENGLISH TEXT

A law establishing or recognising any such council shall determine its rights, powers and duties, and its relation to the Oireachtas and to the Government.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Determine' is expressed as 'léiriú a bheith ann' ('have/contain a clarification/specification of') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Fós' ('moreover') precedes 'comhbhaint' ('relation') in the Irish text alone.
- 3 As in the previous subsection, 'recognize' is expressed by 'glac le' ('accept') in the Irish text.
- 4 'A law' is expressed as 'Dlí ar bith' ('any law') in the Irish text.
- 5 'Shall' is again expressed as 'ní foláir' ('must') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 45 of the 1922 Constitution concludes as follows:

A law establishing any such Council shall determine its powers, rights and duties, and its relation to the government of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann). Déanfaidh an dlí le n-a mbunófar Comhairle dá sórt a comhachta, a cearta agus a dualgaisí agus an bhaint a bheidh aice le rialtas Shaorstáit Éireann do shocrú.

Commentary

fós This adverb is translated as 'yet, still' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'agus fós' as 'and moreover'. Dinneen cites 'agus féach leat fós, and see, further'. 'Beus' was the form of this adverb in Old Irish, 'beos' glossing Latin 'adhuc' in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. DIL cites 'agus fós do budh eagal liom' from O'Curry's edition of the Battle of Magh Léana, Jackson translating 'fós, bheós' as 'also, yet, too' in his edition of that text. See further the commentary on Articles 29.2 and 40.3.1<sup>o</sup>.

As in the present Article, we find 'fós' in Article 15.10 with no corresponding adverb in the English text, 'agus fós é féin agus a chomhaltaí a dhéan ar aon duine' expressing 'and to protect itself and its members against any person'. 'Agus fós chun aon fheidhmeanna eile ... a chomhlíonadh' expresses 'and to exercise such other functions' in Article 31.1. 'Dearbhaíonn Éire fós' expresses 'Ireland affirms' in Article 29.2, 'Dearbhaíonn Éire' expressing 'Ireland affirms' in the preceding section. In repeating 'ráthaíonn', '[the State] guarantees', in Articles 40.3.1<sup>o</sup> and 40.3.3<sup>o</sup>, we find 'agus ráthaíonn fós' in the Irish text with no corresponding adverb in the English text. In Article 40.6.1<sup>o</sup>ii, on the other hand, 'and to prevent or control meetings' is expressed simply as 'agus fós ar thionóil' (lit. 'and meetings also'), the earlier occurrence of 'prevent or control' having been expressed as 'cosc a chur nó rialú a dhéanamh ar'.

We find a corresponding adverb in the English text of Article 38.4.1<sup>o</sup> where 'agus fós chun broic le heisith' expresses 'and also to deal with a state of war'. Note finally, that in Article 41.3.3<sup>o</sup> 'agus an pósadh sin, agus bail dlí air, a bheith fós ann faoin dlí a bheas i bhfeidhm in alt na huaire' expresses 'but is a subsisting valid marriage under the law for the time being in force'.

léiriú The verbal noun of 'léirigh' ('make clear, explain, illustrate'), 'léiriú', is translated as 'clarification, illustration; representation' in Ó Dónaill (with secondary senses of 'order, arrangement, preparation' and 'production'), who cites 'léiriú a thabhairt ar rud, to clarify something' and 'léiriú grafach, graphic illustration'. Dinneen translates 'léiriughadh' as 'act of explaining, making clear, an explanation ...'. DIL translates the verb 'léirigid(ir)' as 'is diligent about, tends, attends to; makes clear (?)', citing 'léirig do laego, care for thy calves' from the commentary on the Amra Choluimb Chille, a poem in praise of Colm Cille written c. 597. This verb is based on 'léir', which is translated in DIL as 'assiduous, earnest, careful, zealous', but later much more commonly with meaning 'visible, perceptible'.

'Léiriú' translates 'interpretation' in particular in the Acts, which single term is found as a Margin Title in very many of the modern Acts – see s157 of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example. 'Na conspóidí go léir de dhroim an Choinbhinsiúin seo a léiriú nó a chur chun feidhme' translates 'All differences arising out of the interpretation or application of the present Convention' in s32 of Article IX of the Fourth Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967.

'I determine (issue, etc.)' is translated as 'cinnim' in Téarmaí Dlí, and 'determine' is generally translated as 'cinn' in the Acts. 'The Tribunal shall determine its procedure' is translated as 'cinnfidh an Binse a nós imeachta féin' in s4(e) of Annex II to the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency Act, 1988, for example. See the commentary on Article 1 regarding 'determine' in the Acts.

comhbhaint This word is not given as a headword either in Ó Dónaill or in Dinneen, but is readily understandable as a compound of 'comh-' (which prefix is translated by Dinneen s.v., 'cómh-', as 'accompaniment', 'equality', 'mutuality', 'correspondence' and 'intensity') and 'baint', which headword is translated as 'connection, relationship; relevance' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'nil baint aige sin leis, that has nothing to do with it'. 'Comhbhaint' would therefore render 'mutual relationship'.

We see above that 'baint' expresses 'relation' in this context in the 1922 Constitution. 'Caidreamh' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'relation (between one country and another)' in early translations for the Department of Education. We find 'gaol', 'gaolmhaireacht' and 'coibhneas' in the Acts. 'But for the relationship of the person to whom it passes' is translated as 'mara mbeadh gaolmhaireacht an té gur thuit an mhaoin chuige' in s33 of the Finance Act, 1924. 'To create or imply the relation of master and servant' is translated as 'chun coibhneas máistir agus seirbhísigh ... a chruthnú' in s54(7)(a) of the Health Act, 1953. In s156(6)(d) of the Corporation Tax Act, 1976, 'Where one of the owners in a series owns a fraction of the ordinary share capital of the company to which it is directly related' is translated as 'Má tá ceann de na húinéirí i sraith ina úinéir ar chodán de ghnáth-scairchaipiteal na cuideachta a bhfuil gaol díreach aige léi'.

dualgais 'Dualgas' is translated as 'duty (of office, etc.)' in Téarmaí Dlí – see the commentary on Articles 12.8 and 42.5. Note in passing that the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms cites 'obair tighis' as translating 'home duties' in early translations for the Department of Industry and Commerce, 'obair chléireachais' being cited as translating 'clerical duties' in early translations for the Department of Justice.

ar bith See the commentary on Article 15.2.1°.

Direct translation

Déanfar cearta, cumhachtaí agus dualgais aon chomhairle den sórt sin, maille lena gaol leis an Oireachtas agus leis an Rialtas, a chinneadh le dlí lena mbunófar an chomhairle sin nó lena dtabharfar aitheantas di.<sup>2</sup>

Variants

- 1 Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that 'leis an dlí' would be more natural here, though this diverges from the English text.
- 2 'Cinnfeadh le dlí lena mbunófar aon chomhairle den sórt sin nó lena dtabharfar aitheantas di cearta, cumhachtaí agus dualgais na comhairle sin, maille lena gaol leis an Oireachtas agus leis an Rialtas.'

ARTICLE 15.4.1° AIRTEAGAL 15.4.1°

TÉACS GAEILGE

Ní cead don Oireachtas aon dlí a achtú a bheadh ar aon chuma in aghaidh an Bhunreachta seo nó in aghaidh aon fhorála den Bhunreacht seo.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Oireachtas is not permitted to enact any law which would be in any way against this Constitution or against any provision of this Constitution.

ENGLISH TEXT

The Oireachtas shall not enact any law which is in any respect repugnant to this Constitution or any provision thereof.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Repugnant to' is expressed simply as 'in aghaidh' ('against') in the Irish text, 'aimhréireach (le)' translating 'repugnant (to)' in Téarmaí Dlí.
- 2 'In any respect' is expressed as 'ar aon chuma', which phrase is generally translated as 'at any rate'.
- 3 'Thereof' is expressed as 'den Bhunreacht seo' ('of this Constitution') in the Irish text.
- 4 Again, 'shall not' is expressed as 'Ní cead' ('it is not permitted') in the Irish text.

Commentary

ar aon chuma In Téarmaí Dlí s.v. 'cuma', 'gan a chuma air cóir mhaireachtála a bheith aige' is translated as 'with no visible means of subsistence'. Ó Dónaill translates 'ar aon chuma, ar chuma ar bith' as 'at any rate', Dinneen translating 'ar aon chuma' as 'at any rate, in any case'. 'Foróenchummi' glosses Latin 'identidem' in the ninth-century St Gall Glosses on Priscian; Old Irish 'cummae' is the verbal noun of 'con-ben' and is translated in DIL as (1) 'act of cutting, carving, hacking, destroying', (2) 'act of shaping, fashioning, composing' and 'shape, form, appearance' – the principal sense of 'cuma' in Modern Irish. See the commentary on Article 26.2.1° where this phrase expresses 'at any rate'.

We see below that 'in aon tslí' translates 'in any respect' in the Preamble to the 1922 Constitution. 'The method and manner in all or any respects of testing eggs' is translated as 'an módh agus an chaoi chun uibhe do thástáil ar gach slí nó ar aon tslí' in s14(1) of the Agricultural Produce (Eggs) Act, 1924. Ó Dónaill translates 'ar gach slí' as 'in every way' and 'ar aon slí' as 'in any event', citing 'ar shlí go, i slí is go, in such a way that'. Dinneen cites 'ar slighidh (with genitive), in the way of, ready or open to, i slighidh, id.' The early history of 'slí' parallels that of 'cuma' – 'slige' is the verbal noun of 'sligid', 'cuts, fells, strikes down, clears', developing the sense of 'way'.

Turning to the modern Acts, in s16(1) of the Redundancy Payments Act, 1979, 'If in any respect any difficulty arises in bringing into operation this Act' is translated as 'Má éiríonn aon deacracht in aon slí i ndáil leis an Acht seo ... a chur i ngníomh'; 'Má tharlaíonn aon deacracht i slí ar bith agus an tAcht seo á chur i ngníomh' translates this phrase in s17(1) of the Social Welfare (Pay-Related Benefit) Act, 1973, with 'Má éiríonn, ar shlí ar bith, aon deacracht maidir leis an Acht so do chur i ngníomh' being found in s64(1) of the Widows' and Orphans' Pensions Act, 1935. In s21(1) of the Social Welfare (Amendment) Act, 1978, 'If in any respect any difficulty arises in the administration of this Act' is translated as 'Má tharlaíonn aon deacracht ar aon dóigh ag riaradh ... an Achta seo'.

in aghaidh Note that 'to the extent to which they are not inconsistent therewith' is expressed as 'sa mhéid nach bhfuilid ina choinne' in Article 50.1. 'In aghaidh' is translated as 'against' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'ag cur in aghaidh duine, ruda, opposing, contradicting someone, something' and 'tá sin in aghaidh an dlí, that is against, an infringement of, the law'. Dinneen translates 'i n-aghaidh' as 'against, before'. DIL cites examples of 'agad'/'aged' with 'i' in the sense of 'against', from Leabhar na hUidhre (completed before 1106) onwards.

In Téarmaí Dlí 'repugnant (to)' is translated as 'aimhréireach (le)'; in Ó Dónaill, 'aimhréireach' is simply translated as 'repugnant', following the abbreviation for 'Jurisprudence'. This does not appear to be given as a headword in Dinneen. De Bhaldraithe translates 'repugnant' as 'in aghaidh (ruda); contrártha (to, le), aimhréireach (to, le)' – note that 'repugnant' is defined as 'contrary to, or inconsistent with' in A Dictionary of Irish Law. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that the original sense of 'aimhréireach' is 'disobedient, rebellious' (see DIL s.v. 'aimríarach') and would therefore recommend 'contrártha' as a translation of 'repugnant'.

In s2 of the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922, 'if any provision of the said Constitution ... or of any law made thereunder is in any respect repugnant to any of the provisions of the Scheduled Treaty, it shall, to the extent only of such repugnancy, be absolutely void and inoperative' is translated as 'má bhíonn aon fhoráil den Bhun-reacht roimh-ráite ... ná d'aon dlí a déanfar fé buinisciann in aon tslí le aon cheann d'fhorálacha an Chonnartha Sgeidealta, beidh sé, i méid na buiniscionntachta san amháin, gan brí gan feidhm ar bith'. 'Buinisciann ... leis na tailte sin ... d'aistriú' translates 'repugnant to ... the transfer ... of such lands' in s112 of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925. In s3 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924, 'In the construction of this Act, unless there is anything in the subject or context repugnant, the several words and expressions hereinafter mentioned shall have or include the meanings following' is translated as 'I léiriú an Achta so, mara bhfuil éinní san abhar no sa chó-théacs ina choinnibh, beidh leis na focail agus leis na habairtí a luaidhtear ina dhiaidh seo anso, no folóid, na brionna so a leanas'. Finally, 'Every provision of the Merchant Shipping Acts ... which is inconsistent with or repugnant to the foregoing section of this Act is, to the extent of such inconsistency or repugnancy only, hereby repealed' is translated as 'Gach foráil de sna Merchant Shipping Acts ... atá buinisciann leis an alt san roimhe seo den Acht so ath-ghairmtear leis seo í sa mhéid go bhfuil sí buinisciann amhlaidh agus sa mhéid sin amháin' in s3 of the Merchant Shipping (Helm Orders) Act, 1932.

Looking at the modern Acts, in s20(2)(i) of the Judicial Separation and Family Law Reform Act, 1989, 'if that conduct is such that in the opinion of the court it would in all the circumstances be repugnant to justice to disregard it' is translated as 'más iompar de chineál é nach mbeadh sé, i dtuairim na cúirte, agus sna himthosca go léir, ag teacht le ceartas dá ndéanfaí neamhshuim de'. In s9(3) of the Fisheries (Consolidation) Act, 1959, 'No bye-law shall be made under this Act which is repugnant to any law in force in the State' is translated as 'ní dhéanfar faoin Acht seo aon fhodhlí a bheidh in aghaidh aon dlí atá i bhfeidhm sa Stát'. 'Aon ordachán a bhéarfai faoin alt seo ... ní bheidh sé i gcodarsnacht ná ar neamhréir le haon rialachán' translates 'A direction given under this section shall not ... be repugnant to or inconsistent with any regulation' in s67(2) of the Harbours Act, 1946.

den Bhunreacht seo See the commentary on Article 8.3 regarding 'thereof'.

TÉACS GAELIGE

I gcás aon dlí dá n-achtóidh an tOireachtas a bheidh ar aon chuma in aghaidh an Bhunreacht seo nó in aghaidh aon fhorála den Bhunreacht seo beidh sé gan bhail sa mhéid go mbeidh sé in aghaidh an Bhunreacht seo agus sa mhéid sin amháin.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the case of any law (of those) which the Oireachtas enacts being in any way against this Constitution or against any provision of this Constitution it will be without validity to the extent that it will be against this Constitution and to that extent alone.

ENGLISH TEXT

Every law enacted by the Oireachtas which is in any respect repugnant to this Constitution or to any provision thereof, shall, but to the extent only of such repugnancy, be invalid.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Such repugnancy' is expressed as 'go mbeidh sé in aghaidh an Bhunreacht seo' ('that it will be repugnant to this Constitution') in the Irish text, 'repugnant to' being expressed as 'in aghaidh' ('against'), as in the previous subsection.
- 2 'Every law enacted' is expressed as 'I gcás aon dlí dá n-achtóidh' ('In the case of any law of those enacted') in the Irish text.
- 3 The Irish legal term for 'invalid' is 'neamhbhailí', although the phrase above, 'gan bhail', also renders 'invalid'.
- 4 As in the previous subsection, the phrase expressing 'in any respect' in the Irish text, 'ar aon chuma', usually has a sense other than that here.

Note the following in s2 of the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922:

If any provision of the said Constitution ... or of any law made thereunder is in any respect repugnant to any of the provisions of the Scheduled Treaty, it shall, to the extent only of such repugnancy, be absolutely void and inoperative ... má bhíonn aon fhoráil den Bhun-reacht roimh-ráite ... ná d'aon dlí a déanfar fé buinisciann in aon tslí le aon cheann d'fhorálacha an Chonnartha Sgeidealta, beidh sé, i méid na buiniscionntachta san amháin, gan brí gan feidhm ar bith.

J.M. Kelly, op. cit., p. 205, reports as follows on reference made to this subsection by the courts:

In Murphy v Attorney General ([1982] IR 241) Henchy J., in asserting that an unconstitutional measure was void from the moment of enactment and not merely voidable, said:

'In its dictionary literary or colloquial connotation in modern Irish, "gan bhail" means "worthless, void, ineffective" ... In this context "gan bhail" means "without legal effect", and not "voidable" or "liable to be deprived of legal effect".'

Commentary

gan bhail 'Nothing in this Constitution shall operate to invalidate the exercise of ...' is expressed as '... ní bheidh an t-oiriú sin gan bhail dlí de bhíthin aon ní sa Bhunreacht seo' in Article 37.1. 'Nothing in this Constitution shall be invoked to invalidate any law enacted by the Oireachtas', however, is expressed as 'Ní cead aon ní dá bhfuil sa Bhunreacht seo a agairt chun aon dlí dá n-achtaíonn an tOireachtas a chur ó bhail' in Article 28.3.3° and 'No provision of this Constitution invalidates laws enacted, acts done or measures adopted by the State' is rendered as 'Ní dhéanann aon fhoráileamh atá sa Bhunreacht seo aon dlíthe a d'achtaigh, gníomhartha a rinne nó bearta lenar ghlac an Stát ... a chur ó bhail dlí' in Article 29.4.5° following the Eleventh Amendment of the Constitution, 1992. Similarly, in Article 37.2 of the Constitution, following the Sixth Amendment of the Constitution (Adoption) Act, 1979, 'invalid' is not rendered by the corresponding Irish legal term 'neamhbhailí', but by 'ó bhail dlí':

No adoption of a person ... was or shall be invalid ....

Note that in Article 40.4.3°, following the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941, 'but that such law is invalid having regard to the provisions of this Constitution' is expressed as 'ach an dlí sin a bheith neamhbhailí ag féachaint d'fhorálacha an Bhunreacht seo'.

'Bailí' is translated as 'valid' in Téarmaí Dlí and 'déanaim bailí' as 'I validate', with 'bailíocht' translated as 'validity'. Ó Dónaill translates 'gan bhail' as 'invalid, void'. Dinneen translates 'gan bhail' as 'void, ineffective (of a sacrament)', citing Donlevy's Irish Catechism, 1742. DIL s.v. 'bal', cites 'gan buil ná éifeachd do bheith san bhreith' (of the efficacy of a judgement) from Mac Aingil's Scáthán Shacramuinte na hAithridhe (1618), and translates 'gan bhail' (in 'bhar bhfreagra do-bhir gan bhail', from O'Rahilly's Measgra Dánta) as 'ineffective'.

'Invalid' is translated as 'neamhbhailí' in Téarmaí Dlí and is so translated in the modern Acts. In the Long Title of the Rent Restrictions (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1981, 'declaring certain provisions of the Rent Restrictions Act, 1960, to be invalid' is translated as 'á dhearbhuí forálacha áirithe den Acht Srianata Ciosa, 1960, a bheith neamhbhailí'. 'Ní bheidh aon ní a dhéanfaidh an Bord ... neamhbhailí dá bhíthin sin amháin' translates 'nothing done by ... the Board shall be invalid solely by reason of that fact' in s26(3)(b) of the National Agricultural Advisory, Education and Research Authority Act, 1977.

'Gan brí' and 'gan éifeacht' translates 'invalid' in early Acts. In s26(4) of the Electoral Act, 1923, 'At a Dáil or Seanad election any ballot paper ... shall be invalid and not counted' is translated as 'Raghaidh gan brí gan comhreamh i dtoghchán Dála nó Seanaid aon pháipéar ballóide'. In s3(1) of the Third Schedule thereto, 'the returning officer shall, rejecting any that are invalid, cause the ballot papers to be arranged in parcels' is translated as 'déanfaidh an ceann comhrimh, tar éis diúltú d'aon chuid aca a bheidh gan éifeacht, féachaint chuige go ndéanfar beartanna de sna páipéirí ballóide'. In s30 of the First Schedule thereto, 'Any failure to publish a document in accordance with those rules shall not invalidate the document' is translated as 'Ní bheidh aon scríbhinn nea-dhleathach de dheascaibh aon fhaillí ar í d'fhoillsiú do réir na rialacha so' and 'shall not in anywise invalidate the act or thing done' is translated as 'ní bhainfidh san pioc ó dhleathacht an ghnímh nó an ní a déanfar' in s53 of the Fifth Schedule thereto. Finally, 'provided that annulment of any such rule ... shall not prejudice or invalidate anything done thereby' is translated as 'ach ní dhéanfaidh nea-mbriochaint na riala ... san díth éifeachta ná dochar d'éinní a déanfar triotha' in s64(1) of the same Electoral Act, 1923. 'Valid' is translated as 'éifeachtach', 'éifeachtúil' and 'dleathach' in Acts of 1923, with 'dlísteanach' translating 'valid' in Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution. The phrase 'le n-a bhfuil brí' translates 'valid' in some early official translations. See further the commentary on Articles 34.3.2° ('bail a bheith'), 37.2 ('ó bhail') and 41.3.3° ('bail dlí air').

sa mhéid Ó Dónaill translates 'sa mhéid sin' as 'to that extent' and 'sa mhéid go' as 'in as much, in so far, as'. DIL s.v. 'méit, mét', gives examples from the Old Irish Glosses onwards of 'méit' as a relative adverb introducing a subordinate clause, translated there as 'as much as, as far as, to the extent that', citing 'beith mar bhím a mhéad as meise mé féin' ('as long as I myself am me [i.e. alive]) from a miscellaneous collection of religious poetry (Dán Dé), along with examples from the later language of 'méit', with the article, followed by subordinate clause, translated as 'in so far as, in as much as, because'. See the commentary on Article 10.2.

'Subsections (1) and (2) ... shall apply to the business of an associated enterprise to the extent only that the information and returns ... are materially relevant' is translated as 'ní bheidh feidhm ag fo-ailt (1) agus (2) ... maidir le gnó fiontraíochta comhlachaithe ach amháin a mhéid a bheidh baint ábhartha ... ag an bhfaisnéis agus na tuairisceáin' in s37(3) of the Central Bank Act, 1989. We see above that 'i méid na' translates 'to the extent of' in the 1922 Constitution. 'Every provision of the Merchant Shipping Acts ... which is inconsistent with or repugnant to the foregoing section of this Act is, to the extent of such inconsistency or repugnancy only, hereby repealed' is translated as 'Gach foráil de sna Merchant Shipping Acts ... atá buiniscionn leis an alt san roimhe seo den Acht so ath-ghairmtear leis seo í sa mhéid go bhfuil sí buiniscionn amhlaidh agus sa mhéid sin amháin' in s3 of the Merchant Shipping (Helm Orders) Act, 1932. Looking at early Acts, 'To what extent, if at all, the competition ... is unfair' is translated as 'Maidir leis an gcomórtas ..., a mhéid atá sé, má tá sé, éagcórach' in s9 of the Schedule to the Tariff Commission Act, 1926. 'To an extent not exceeding one per cent.' is translated as 'i méid nach mó ná aon per cent.' in s17 of the Finance Act, 1926. 'Extent of Repeal' is translated as 'Méid na hAthghairme' in the Fourth Schedule to the Finance Act, 1924. Note finally in passing that 'the extent or incidence of any authority' is translated as 'leithe no achar aon údaráis' in s3 of the Interpretation Act, 1923. See further the commentary on Article 49.2.

aon dlí dá n-achtóidh 'Taking effect ... under laws enacted by the Oireachtas' is rendered as 'do ghlac éifeacht ... faoi dhlighthe d'achtuigh an tOireachtas' in the original and enrolled version of Article 37.2, following the Sixth Amendment of the Constitution (Adoption) Act, 1979. 'Outside the area of application of the laws enacted by the Oireachtas' is translated as 'lasmuigh den limistéar ina bhfuil feidhm ag na dlíthe a d'achtaigh an tOireachtas' in s4 of the Firearms Act, 1971 – i.e. without 'dá'. See the commentary on Article 13.3.2<sup>o</sup> regarding 'dá' and on Articles 13.3.1<sup>o</sup> and 50.1 regarding 'achtaigh'.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Ní cead don Oireachtas a rá gur sárú dlí gníomhartha nár shárú dlí iad le linn a ndéanta.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Oireachtas is not permitted to say that acts which were not an infringement of law while they were being done are an infringement of law.

ENGLISH TEXT

The Oireachtas shall not declare acts to be infringements of the law which were not so at the date of their commission.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Declare' is expressed by 'abair' ('say') in the Irish text.
- 2 'At the date of their commission' is expressed as 'le linn a ndéanta' ('while they were being done') in the Irish text.
- 3 Again 'ní cead', 'is not permitted', in the Irish text, differs in tone from 'shall not'.

Note that Article 43 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

The Oireachtas shall have no power to declare acts to be infringements of the law which were not so at the date of their commission. Ní bheidh de chomhacht ag an Oireachtas a fhógairt gur brise dlí gníomhartha nár bhrise dlí iad le linn a ndéanta.

Commentary

sárú This headword is translated as 'breach', 'contravention, infringement' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill translates 'sárú dlí' as 'contravention of law' and 'dlí a shárú' as 'to transgress a law'. Dinneen translates 'sárughadh' as 'act of forcing, compelling, getting the better of, overtaking, excelling, subduing, attacking, offending, contradicting, taking precedence of, trespassing, violating, ravishing, rescuing (from legal seizure); trespass, transgression'. DIL translates 'sáraigid' as (1) 'violates, outrages, transgresses', citing 'in rect rósárichset' ('the Law which they have outraged') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, with 'recht' (Modern Irish 'reacht', 'statute') in place of 'dlí' of the Constitution in that phrase. DIL cites the following example of the verbal noun 'sárugud' in reference to 'commands, ordinances, etc.' of the people of Ireland, from the early twelfth-century manuscript Leabhar na hUídhre: 'cech smacht ... 7 cech recht no ortaigtheá ó feraib Herend ... ní laimthea a sarugud' (i.e. they used not dare be transgressed). This verb and verbal noun are based on 'sár', having the senses of 'outrage, insult, humiliation', along with 'discomfiture, defeat'; used in composition, however, it has the sense of 'exceeding, excellent, very', 'sárpher' being 'a hero' and 'Mac Ragnaill' being referred to as a 'sárthoisech' (excellent leader, Modern Irish 'taoiseach') in the Annals of Connacht, s.a. 1384. It is this sense which survives today, 'sárduine' being, as Ó Dónaill states, an 'exceedingly good person'.

We see above that 'brise' expresses 'infringement' in the 1922 Constitution. 'I dtaobh a mbriste' translates 'for their (i.e. Rules and Standing Orders) infringement' in Article 20 also. We also find 'brise isteach ar' in early Acts. 'Any proceedings respecting the validity or infringement of a patent' is translated as 'aon imeachta i dtaobh dleathacht paitinne no brise isteach uirthé' in s1(3)(d) of the Indemnity Act, 1923. We find the above translated as 'Aon imeachta i dtaobh dleathacht no sarú paitinne' in s1(5)(d) of the Indemnity Act, 1924. 'Sarú sicreáchtá' translates 'Infringement of secrecy' in the Margin Title of s28 of the Electoral Act, 1923. Note that 'or any actual or anticipated infringement or violation of the same' (in relation to 'rights') is translated as 'no aon bhrise isteach no sárú a dineadh no a meastar a déanfar ar an gcéanna' in s6(7) of the Dublin Reconstruction (Emergency Provision) Act, 1924.

In s4(5) of the Plant Varieties (Proprietary Rights) Act, 1980, 'infringements of plant breeders' rights shall be actionable at the suit of the holder of the rights' is translated as 'beidh sárúithe ar chearta póraitheoirí plandaí inchaingne ar agra shealbhóir na gceart'. 'Gníomhartha ar sárúithe iad ar chóipchirt' translates 'acts constituting infringements of copyrights' in s3(3) of the Copyright Act, 1963, 'gur sárúithe cóipchirt iad' translating 'that they are infringements of copyright' in s183 of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927.

le linn a ndéanta 'Lena linn sin' is translated in Ó Dónaill as 'during that time; at that point, thereupon', citing 'le linn na hoíche, in the course of the night' and 'le linn a bháis dó, when he was dying'. Dinneen translates 'le linn' as 'while, during the time, reign or lifetime of', citing 'le linn iad do bheith ag dul thar bhrághaid, just as they were passing' and 'thug iomarca gradaim do'n dragan le linn fillte, which brought much honour to the hero on his return'. DIL translates 'fri (re) linn' as 'during, in the lifetime or reign of' and as 'while' with verbal noun clause, citing 'ré linn Phápa do dhéanamh' from Keating's seventeenth-century Three Shafts of Death.

See the commentary of Article 12.3.1° regarding 'date' in the Constitution. In s119 of the Finance Act, 1990, 'the value of the shares redeemed at the date of their redemption' is translated as 'luach na scaireanna a fuaclaíodh ar dháta a bhfuascailte'. 'Ar dháta na diúscartha' translates 'at the date of the disposition' in s46(1) of the Finance Act, 1981. In s7 of the Emergency Powers (Continuance and Amendment) Act, 1942, however, 'the making of any amendment which would cause acts to be infringements of the law which were not so at the date of their commission' is translated as 'aon leasú do dhéanamh do bhéarfadh gur sárú dlí gníomhartha nár shárú dlí le linn a ndéanta'. Note, also, that in s2(2) of the Foyle Fisheries (Amendment) Act, 1976, 'Provided that nothing in this Act shall have the effect of making or declaring any acts to be unlawful which were not unlawful at the time of their commission' is translated as 'Ar choinníoll nach mbeidh d'éifeacht le haon ní san Acht seo aon ghníomhartha nach raibh neamhdhleathach tráth a ndéanta a dhéanamh neamhdhleathach ná a dhearbhu iad a bheith neamhdhleathach'.

Looking at early Acts regarding 'commission', in s7(1) of the Beet Sugar (Subsidy) Act, 1925, 'Every person who contravenes or commits a breach (whether of commission or omission) of any regulation' is translated as 'Gach éinne a dhéanfaidh sárú no aon bhrise (le gníomh no le failli) ar aon rialachán'. As regards 'déan' translating 'commit' note that 'in respect of offences done, committed, made or continued in or upon the public river' is translated as 'i dtaobh ciontaí a dineadh no dar leanadh in no ar an abhainn phuibli' in s82 of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925.

gníomh This headword is translated as 'act' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill gives 'act, deed' as one set of senses of 'gníomh', citing 'gníomh nirt a dhéanamh, to perform a feat of strength'. Dinneen translates 'gníomh' as 'act of doing deeds; an act, action or deed', and cites 'is mór an gníomh a dhein sé, he has accomplished a great feat' and 'déanfaidh sé gníomh muna goisctear é, he will do something terrible unless he is checked'. DIL translates 'gním' as (a) 'doing, performing, executing', (b) 'acting, action, activity, work ... a definite act, deed' – Fergus says of Cú Chulainn in the Táin: 'mac bec doringni in gním sin' ('a little boy who did that deed'), for example. See further the commentary on Article 40.4.6°. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that 'gníomhartha' is a development of the old collective noun 'gníomhradh'. Regarding the phrase 'gníomh a dhéanamh' note that the verb 'déan' is from the same root as 'gní', 'act', verbal noun 'gníomh', its derivation being from 'do-gní'/di-gní', verbal noun 'dénum'/déanamh'. See further the commentary on Article 13.8.1°.

a rá See the commentary on Articles 12.8 and 12.10.7° regarding 'declare' in the Constitution. 'If any law ... shall declare acts committed by a prisoner of war to be punishable' is translated as 'Má dhearbhaíonn aon dlí ... go mbeidh gníomhartha a dhéanfaidh príosúnach inphionóis' in Article 82 of the Third Schedule to the Geneva Conventions Act, 1962, for example. In s5(4)(b) of the Safety, Health and Welfare (Offshore Installations) Act, 1987, 'Regulations under this Act ... may declare that contravention of a condition specified in the regulations shall be an offence' is translated as 'Féadfaidh rialacháin faoin Acht seo ... a dhearbhu gur cion é coinníoll a shonraítear sna rialacháin a shárú'. 'The Minister may by order declare that this Act shall apply to a specified class of employee' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an tAire a dhearbhu le hordú go mbainfidh an tAcht seo le haicme shonraithe fostaithe' in s7(3)(b) of the Protection of Employment Act, 1977. Note finally that the Long Title of the Coroners (Qualifications) Act, 1924, 'An Act to declare certain persons ... to be qualified to be appointed to be coroners' is translated as 'Acht chun faisnéis do dhéanamh ar dhaoine áirithe ... do bheith cáilithe chun a gceaptha ina gcoróinéirí'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that this is a case where the simple future tense in Irish is not really satisfactory as a translation of English 'shall' as it involves the declaration of something which is not appropriate to do rather than of something which will not be done. Professor Ó Murchú recommends 'Ní cead/cuí/féidir don Oireachtas a dhearbhu gur sárú dlí aon ghníomhartha nárbh amhlaidh dóibh le linn a ndéanta'.

(It is) The Oireachtas alone (that) has the right to establish and maintain military forces or armed forces.

ENGLISH TEXT

The right to raise and maintain military or armed forces is vested exclusively in the Oireachtas.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Exclusively' is expressed as 'amháin' ('alone') in the Irish text, the term for 'exclusive' being 'eisiatach' according to Téarmaí Dlí.

- 2 'To raise forces' is expressed as 'fórsaí a bhunú' ('to establish forces') in the Irish text.
- 3 The term expressing 'maintain' in the Irish text, 'chothabháil', is more generally used today in the sense of maintaining a car, engine, road, etc., although this is also the term given in Téarmaí Míleata, perhaps based on this Article; 'maintain' can also have the sense of 'keep', particularly in this context.
- 4 'Vested in' is expressed as 'is ag' ('has') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 46 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

The Oireachtas has the exclusive right to regulate the raising and maintaining of such armed forces as are mentioned in the Scheduled Treaty in the territory of the Irish Free State .... Is ag an Oireachtas amháin atá an t-aon cheart chun rialú do dhéanamh i dtaobh tógaint agus cothú na bhfórsaí armtha san i gcríocha Shaorstáit Éireann atá luaithe sa Chonnradh Sgeidealta.

Commentary

a chothabháil 'Cothabháil' is translated as 'sustenance, maintenance' in Ó Dónaill, 'cothú' being given as the standard form of the secondary sense. 'Cothú' is the verbal noun of 'cothaigh', translated as 'feed, nourish, sustain' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'duine, ainmhí, planda, a chothú, to feed a person, an animal, a plant' and 'tine, inneall, a chothú, to feed a fire, an engine'. Dinneen translates 'cothabháil' as 'act of supplying, feeding, maintaining'. 'Coth' is translated as 'food, sustenance' in DIL, with 'cothaigid' translated as (a) 'supports, sustains, preserves', (b) 'feeds, nourishes'. 'Cothaigid', and the verbal noun 'cohad'/'cothugad', are used frequently of battles – DIL cites 'co rochothaighis co calma fri Laitinaib' ('that they should bravely withstand ...') from Imtheachta Aeniasa, The Irish Aeneid, along with 'rochothaigset na curaid ... is in chath-lathair' ('... maintained the field') and 'ag cohad ar a cind is in cathgleo sin' ('pressing on the combat'), both these examples coming from the Banquet of Dún na nGedh and the Battle of Magh Rath.

As we see above, 'cothú' translates 'maintaining' in Article 46 of the 1922 Constitution. In s8(2) of the Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1924, however, 'control and maintenance of the Defence Forces' is translated as 'stiúru agus coinneáil-suas na bhFórsaí Cosanta'. In s2(1) of the Garda Síochána (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'to ... pay and maintain in Saorstát Éireann a force of police' is translated as 'fórsa póilinteachta ... d'íoc agus do choinneáil suas i Saorstát Éireann'. 'Fórsa armtha do chó-ghléasa no do chimeád ar bun' translates 'to organize or maintain an armed force' in s4(1)(b) of the Public Safety Act, 1927.

'Údarás chun Óglaigh na hÉireann a bhunú agus a chothabháil' translates 'Authority to raise and maintain the Defence Forces' in the Margin Title of s16 of the Defence Act, 1954, which section reads as follows:

It shall be lawful for the Government to raise ... and maintain defence forces to be called and known as Óglaigh na hÉireann or (in English) the Defence Forces. Is dleathach don Rialtas fórsaí cosanta dá ngairmfear agus ar a dtabharfar Óglaigh na hÉireann nó (i mBéarla) the Defence Forces a bhunú ... agus a chothabháil.

We find 'cothabháil' used in the Acts in the sense of maintaining a prosecution ('ionchúiseamh ... a chothabháil', in s16(3) of the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, for example), maintaining an institution (see, for example, s7(2) of the Social Welfare Act, 1977: 'while he is an inmate of any institution maintained wholly or partly out of public moneys', 'le linn dó bheith ina iostaí in aon fhoras a chothabháiltear go hiomlán nó go páirteach as airgead poiblí'), maintaining of accounts ('all accounts maintained by the person', 'na cuntais go léir a bhí á gcothabháil ag an duine sin', in s18(2)(b)(ii) of the Finance Act, 1983), maintaining a fund ('to establish and maintain ... any contributory ... pension ... funds', 'aon chistí pinsean ... ranníocach a bhunú agus a chothabháil', in s17(h) of the Dublin Cemeteries Committee, 1970), maintaining a person ('the beneficiary is living with or wholly ... maintaining his wife', '[aon tréimhse a bheidh] an tairbhí in aontíos lena bhanchéile nó a chothabháil go hiomlán', in s8 of the Social Welfare Act, 1970) and maintaining a building ('to build ... and maintain buildings', 'foirgnimh ... a fhoirgníú agus a chothabháil' in s17(i) of the previous Act but one).

In s5(1) of the International Health Bodies (Corporate Status) Act, 1971, on the other hand, 'The Minister shall maintain a register of bodies to which corporate status orders relate' is translated as 'Coimeádfaidh an tAire clár de chomhlachtaí lena mbaineann orduithe um stádas corpraithe'. In Article 5(e) of the Second Schedule to the Radiological Protection Act, 1991, 'establish and maintain liaison with relevant international organizations' is translated as 'ceangal a bhunú agus a choinneáil ar bun le heagraíochtaí idirnáisiúnta iomchuí'. In the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97, 'to maintain and improve the capacity of the Defence Forces' is translated as 'cumas na bhFórsaí Cosanta a choinneáil ar bun agus a fheabhsú'.

'To maintain forces' is translated as 'fórsaí a chothabháil' in Téarmaí Míleata, 'I maintain' being translated as 'cothabhálaim, cothaím, coinním, coimeádam'. De Bhaldráithe includes 'coinním (arm)' s.v. 'maintain'. Finally, note that the Shorter Oxford Dictionary gives as one set of senses of 'maintain': 'to pay or furnish the means for the keeping up of; to keep supplied or equipped (e.g. a ship, a garrison); to keep (a road, a building) in repair'.

Looking at 'maintain' in general in early Acts, 'Liability of soldier to maintain wife and children' is translated as 'Oblagáid ar shaighdiúir chun a bhean agus a chlann do chothú' in the Margin Title of s141 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, where 'and also to the maintenance of any bastard child of which he may be proved to be the father' is translated as 'agus fós chun aon leanbh tabhartha do chothú na gruthófar gurb é a athair é'. 'Receive, harbour, assist and maintain the said H.C.' is translated as 'H.C. sin do ghlaca, do shólású, do chimeád fé n-a choimirce agus cabhair agus cothú do thabhairt do' in the 'Appendix to Rules' in the Criminal Justice (Administration) Act, 1924. 'Do choinneáil ar siúl' translates 'maintenance' in relation to 'works, machinery, plant' in s5 of the Sligo Lighting and Electric Power Act, 1924, with 'do choinneáil i dtreo' translating 'maintain' in relation to electric generating stations in s20(3) of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1927.

a bhunú Literally 'to establish'. The term used in the 1922 Constitution was ‘tógáil’ (literally ‘raise’), as we see above. ‘It shall be lawful for the Executive Council to raise and maintain an armed force to be called Óglaigh na hÉireann’, in s4 of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, is translated as ‘Beidh sé dleathach don Ard-Chomhairle fórsa armtha do thógáil agus do choinneáil suas, fórsa dá ngairmtear Óglaigh na hÉireann’. ‘Tógáil’ is used in relation to ‘raising’ the Defence Forces in s8(2) of the Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1924. De Bhaldraithe also translates ‘to raise an army’ as ‘arm a thógáil’. In s2(1) of the Garda Síochána (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, on the other hand, ‘It shall be lawful for the Executive Council of Saorstát Éireann to raise ... and maintain in Saorstát Éireann a force of police to be called and known as “The Garda Síochána”’ is translated as ‘Beidh sé dleathach d’Ard-Chomhairle Shaorstáit Éireann fórsa póilíneachta dá ngairmfear “An Garda Síochána” do chruinniú ... agus do choinneáil suas i Saorstát Éireann’. This is the term used in relation to raising money – see, for example, s14(4) of the Health Tax Act, 1975, where ‘raising the amount of the tax’ is translated as ‘méid na cánach a chruinniú’. Note finally that in s19(1) of the Offences Against the State Act, 1939, ‘raises or attempts to raise or maintain a military or armed force in contravention of the Constitution’ is translated as ‘a dhéanfaidh no thriallfaidh fórsa armtha no míleata do chur le chéile no do chothabháil contrárdha don Bhunreacht’.

amháin See the commentary on Article 45. In the Joint Declaration of December 1993, ‘that from now on their differences can be negotiated and resolved exclusively by peaceful means’ is translated as ‘gur féidir na difríochtaí eatarthu a chaibidil agus a réiteach feasta trí mhodhanna polaitiúla síochánta amháin’. ‘Exclusively’ is usually translated as ‘go heisiatach’ in the Acts – see the commentary on Articles 8.3 and 15.2.1<sup>o</sup> regarding ‘eisiatach’ (standard form ‘eisiach’ according to Ó Dónaill) translating ‘exclusive’. In s73(b) of the Finance Act, 1973, for example, ‘a capital company whose objects are exclusively cultural, charitable or educational’ is translated as ‘cuideachta chaipitiúil ar cuspóirí cultúir, carthanais nó oideachais go heisiatach a cuspóirí’. ‘Machinery designed ... to be used exclusively or principally for the extraction of turf for fuel’ is translated as ‘innealra atá deartha ... lena úsáid go heisiatach nó go príomha chun móin a bhaint le haghaidh breosla’ in s8(1) of the Turf Development Act, 1981. In s12(4) of the Corporation Tax Act, 1976, ‘there may be deducted any sums disbursed by the company wholly, exclusively and necessarily as expenses of management’ is translated as ‘féadfar aon suimeanna a asbhaint a chaith an chuideachta go hiomlán, go heisiatach agus de riachtanas mar chaiteachas bainistí’. Note, finally, that ‘all members of any particular class of such citizens or such inhabitants are exclusively entitled to take advantage’ is translated as ‘ag gach duine d’aon aicme áirithe de sna cathrúitheoirí sin no de sna háititheoirí sin a bheidh an teideal ar fad chun tairbhe do bhaint asta’ in s28(2) of the Local Government (Dublin) Act, 1930.

Commenting on the translation below, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that ‘eisiatach’ is a slightly strange/unfamiliar (“saghas deoranta”) term and recommends ‘Is don Oireachtas amháin a dhílsítear ...’ rather than ‘Dílsítear don Oireachtas go heisiatach ...’.

armtha Ó Dónaill gives this headword as a variant past participle of ‘armáil’ (‘arm’), citing ‘long armáilte, armed ship’, as against ‘long armtha’ s.v. ‘armáil’. L. Mc Cionnaith translates ‘armed men’ as ‘lucht airm; fir armtha [Munster], armáilte [Connacht]’. He cites ‘1,000 men armed and accoutred, míle fear i n-arm ’s i n-éideadh’ and ‘armed revolt, forces &c., éirghe amach, na fórsaí, 7c. armtha’, followed by the abbreviation for ‘Terms from Staff of Dáil, Foclóir Oifigeamhail’. Dinneen translates ‘armtha’ as ‘armed’. DIL gives ‘armtha(e)’ (‘armed’) as participle of ‘armaid’, and cites ‘ind armthi’ from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms, where it glosses Latin ‘armati’. The verb ‘armaid’ is based on ‘arm’, which comes from the Latin ‘arma’.

In Téarmaí Dlí ‘armed rebellion’ is translated as ‘ceannairc faoi airm’ and we find ‘even in the case of armed conflict’ translated as ‘fiú amháin i gcás coinbhleacht faoi arm’ in s2 of Article 39 of the Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967. In s3 of the Red Cross Act, 1954, ‘the Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked Members of Armed Forces at Sea’ is translated as ‘Coinbhinsiún na Geinébhe le Foirthin ar Chomhaltá Gonta, Tinne agus Longbhriste d’Fhórsaí Armtha ar Muir’. ‘By means of armed attacks on the Military Forces of Saorstát Éireann’ is translated as ‘tré fhoghna armtha do thabhairt fé Fhórsaí Míleata Shaorstáit Éireann’ in the Preamble to the Public Safety (Emergency Powers) Act, 1923, ‘An armed revolt against the Government of Saorstát Éireann’ being translated as ‘Éirghe Amach armtha i gcoinnibh Rialtais Shaorstáit Éireann’ in s1 of the Schedule thereto.

fórsaí ‘Fórsa’ is translated principally as ‘force’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites the secondary sense of ‘na fórsaí, the forces, troops’. Dinneen translates the plural form of ‘fórsa’ as ‘military forces, troops’. DIL does not appear to give this headword but cites ‘biocunt ... fórsalach’ (‘forceful, ruthless’) from the Poems on the Butlers.

Turning to the Acts, ‘in respect of any disability incurred in the armed forces of the State’ is translated as ‘i leith aon mhíchumais a bhain dó i bhfórsaí armtha an Stáit’ in s131(2) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example, and ‘chosen from the regular military forces ... of the Detaining Power’ is translated as ‘a thoghfar as fórsaí míleata rialta ... na Cumhachta Coinneála’ in Article 99 of the Fourth Schedule to the Geneva Conventions Act, 1962.

We see above that ‘fórsaí armtha’ translates ‘armed forces’ in the 1922 Constitution. Looking at ‘force’ in general in the early Acts, in s5 of the Prevention of Electoral Abuses Act, 1923, ‘Every person who shall ... make use of or threaten to make use of any force, violence, or restraint’ is translated as ‘Gach éinne a dhéanfaidh ... aon fhórsa, éigean, no cosc d’imirt no do bhagairt ar dhuine’. ‘To use force’ is translated as ‘foirneart do chur i bhfeidhm’ in the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, ‘le lámh láidir’ translating ‘by force’ in the Preamble to the Public Safety (Emergency Powers) Act, 1923, ‘neart claidhimh’ translating ‘force of arms’ in the Treasonable Offences Act, 1925. ‘Le héigean nó le hainneoin’ translates ‘by force or duress’ in the latter Act, ‘le foirneart’ translating ‘forcibly’ in the 1922 Constitution. Finally, ‘foiréigean’ translates ‘force’ in s25 of the Enforcement of Court Orders Act, 1926, where ‘peaceably and without force’ is translated as ‘go síochánta agus gan foiréigean’.

Is ag As regards 'vest', see the commentary on Articles 10.1 and 13.4.

de cheart See the commentary on Article 12.2.2°.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Ní dleathach fórsa míleata ná fórsa armtha ar bith, seachas fórsa míleata nó fórsa armtha a bhunaítear agus a chothabháiltear ag an Oireachtas, a bhunú ná a chothabháil chun críche ar bith.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is not / shall not be lawful to establish or maintain for any purpose any military force or armed force whatsoever, apart from a military force or an armed force which is established and which is maintained by the Oireachtas.

ENGLISH TEXT

No military or armed force, other than a military or armed force raised and maintained by the Oireachtas, shall be raised or maintained for any purpose whatsoever.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'No ... shall' is expressed as 'Ní dleathach' ('it shall not be lawful to') in the Irish text.
- 2 As we saw in the previous subsection, 'bunaigh' ('establish') expresses 'raise' in the Irish text.

Commentary

ar bith See the commentary on Articles 9.1.3° and 15.2.1°. In s51 of the Income Tax Act, 1967, for example, 'the public revenue of any Government whatsoever' is translated as 'ioncam poiblí Rialtais ar bith'. 'Iasc a thógáil as iascach ar dhóigh ar bith' translates 'take fish from a fishery by any means whatsoever' in s18(1)(a) of the Fisheries Act, 1980. 'From funds provided by the Oireachtas for any purpose whatsoever' is translated as 'ó chistí a sholáthróidh an tOireachtas chun críche ar bith' in s153(5) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981. In s16(1) of the Local Loans Fund Act, 1935, 'any money payable to such local authority by any Minister for any purpose whatsoever' is translated as 'aon airgead is infioctha ag aon Aire leis an údarás áitiúil sin chun críche ar bith', with 'agus ní húsáidfe sé iad chun aon chríche eile in aon chor' translating '... and for no other purpose whatsoever' in s3(2) of the Finance (Customs and Stamp Duties) Act, 1929.

Ní dleathach See the commentary on Article 14.3. Commenting on the translation below, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that the future in the Irish text does not succeed as an expression of the English text's 'shall' – the simple future being more in the nature of prophecy – and that it is difficult to avoid using a phrase such as 'ní dleathach' or 'ní cead' in this context.

a bhunaítear agus a chothabháiltear See the commentary on the previous subsection.

fórsa míleata nó fórsa armtha See the commentary on the previous subsection.

Ní foláir don Oireachtas suí uair sa bhliain ar a laghad.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Oireachtas must sit at least once a year.

ENGLISH TEXT

The Oireachtas shall hold at least one session every year.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'To hold a session' is expressed as 'suí' ('to sit') in the Irish text.
- 2 Again the Irish text expresses 'shall' as 'Ní foláir' ('must').

See the Report of the Constitution Review Group (May 1996), p. 43:

The Irish version 'suí' appears to favour the interpretation of 'session' in the English version as 'sitting' but this hypothesis is negated by the differential use of the form 'sittings' in section 8. If a consecutive series of individual sittings is intended by the use of the word 'session', the Irish version should be amended as follows:

Ní foláir do Thithe an Oireachtais suí tréimhse amháin sa bhliain ar a laghad.

'Oireachtas' should be replaced by 'The Houses of the Oireachtas' in the English version.

Note that Article 24 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

The Oireachtas shall hold at least one session each year. Tionólfaidh an t-Oireachtas siosón amháin ar a luighead gach bliain.

Commentary

suí The verbal noun of 'suigh', 'sit' – see the commentary on Article 15.1.3°. Ó Dónaill cites 'suí ar choiste, to sit on a committee' and 'suífidh an chúirt go raibh an cás pléite, the court will sit until the case has been considered'. Dinneen cites 'gan rígh do shuidhe i dTeamhair' ('that no king should settle down in Tara') from Keating's seventeenth-century History of Ireland.

In s149(3) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'enquiring into in public session' is translated as 'a fhiosrú i seisiún poiblí'. In the Preamble to the Dublin Cemeteries Act, 1970, 'Whereas by an Act passed in the Session of Parliament held in the ninth and tenth years of Queen Victoria' is translated as 'De bhri go ndearnadh le hAcht a ritheadh sa Seisiún Parlaiminte a tionóladh sa naoú agus sa deichiú bliain den Bhanríon Victoria'. In the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97, 'it will meet in plenary session periodically' is translated as 'tionólfar seisiún iomlán den Fhóram ó am go chéile'. In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 799), 'the Council shall hold its sessions in Luxembourg' is translated as 'is i Lucsamburg a bheidh a cruinnithe ag an gComhairle'. In the Treaty on European Union (Maastricht, 1992, p. 65) 'before the opening of the session of the European Parliament' is translated as 'roimh oscailt sheisiún Pharlaimint na hEorpa'.

'Is í an Chúirt féin amháin, ina suí i seisiún iomlánach di, a bheidh inniúil ar dhíolúine bhreithiúna a tharscaoileadh' translates 'The Court alone, sitting in plenary session, shall be competent to waive the immunity of judges' in Article 6 of the Fourth Protocol annexed to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, 'whether or not the assembly is itself in session at such time' being translated as 'cibé acu a bheidh nó nach mbeidh an Comhthionól féin ina shuí an tráth sin' in Article 3 of the First Protocol. See Article 24 of the 1922 Constitution above, 'na Cúirteanna Ceathrú Shiosóin' translating 'Courts of Quarter Sessions' in Article 75. 'Siosón agus Caibideal' translates 'Session and Chapter' in the Schedule to the Juries (Amendment) Act, 1924. Finally, note that 'Coiste Roghnathóireachta an tSiosóin' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'Sessional Committee of Selection' on the Dáil Order Paper, 1925 (p. 174).

sa bhliain Ó Dónaill translates 'sa bhliain, in aghaidh na bliana' as 'per annum'. DIL cites three examples of 'bliain' with 'gach' s.v. 'bliadain', the earliest being from Leabhar na hUidhre (completed before 1106): 'oénach dognithe la Ultu cecha bliadna', translated as 'every year' in DIL (i.e. an assembly used be held every year by the Ultonians).

Looking specifically at 'every year', in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 1354), 'This percentage is to be 3% in 1973 and shall increase each year by one point to reach 14% in 1984' is translated as '3% a bheidh sa chéatadán sin i 1973 agus méadófar é pointe amháin gach bliain go sroichfidh sé 14% i 1984'. 'The accounts of the Council shall be audited at least once in every year by an auditor ...' is translated as 'Déanfar cuntais na Comhairle a iniúchadh uair ar a laghad gach bliain ag iniúcháir' in s21(1) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978. 'Regulations for the purposes of this section shall provide ... for the holding by the Society at least once in every year of ... a first examination in the Irish language' is translated as 'Forálfaidh rialacháin chun críoche an ailt seo ... go gcuirfidh an Cumann ar siúl uair amháin ar a laghad gach bliain ... an chéad scrúdú sa Ghaeilge' in s40(3) of the Solicitors Act, 1954.

Ní foláir See the commentary on Article 11 regarding 'ní foláir' ('must') expressing 'shall'. Again Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that the simple future in the translation below is not a completely satisfactory translation of 'shall'.

Commentary

a shuifidh See the commentary on the previous section regarding 'suigh', 'sit'. In the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97 (p. 17), 'there will be Friday sittings to deal with Reports from Committees' is translated as 'suifear ar an Aoine chun déileáil le Tuarascálacha ó Choistí'. 'Sitting' is translated as 'suí' in Téarmaí Dlí, where, for example, 'Michaelmas Sittings' is translated as 'Suíonna na Féile Michil'. In s3(1) of the School Attendance (Amendment) Act, 1967, 'to procure the attendance of the child at a sitting of the District Court at a time and place specified in the warrant' is translated as 'a chur faoi deara go mbeidh an leanbh i láthair ag suí den Chúirt Dúiche tráth agus in áit a shonrófar sa bharántas'. In the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), the heading for s21, 'Sittings of the Dáil', is translated as 'Suíonna na Dála'. 'Late sittings' is translated as 'Suíonna déanacha' in s22 and 'authorised representatives of the Press may be present at sittings of the Dáil' is translated as 'féadfaidh ionadaithe údaraithe Nuachtán bheith i láthair ag suíonna na Dála'. 'The Commissioner ... shall hold the sittings otherwise than in public' is translated as 'tionólfaidh an Coimisinéir na suíonna seachas go poiblí' in s12(2) of the Criminal Law (Jurisdiction) Act, 1976. 'Suidheanna príobháideacha den Choimisiún' translates 'private sittings of the Commission' in s23(b) of the Control of Prices Act, 1932. 'The adjournment, dissolution and sittings of Courts-Martial' is translated as 'Arm-Chúirteanna do chur ar athló, a scur agus a suidheanna' in s125(1)(c) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. See further the commentary on Article 22.2.2°.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks in passing that 'suíochán' also has the sense of 'sitting', citing 'd'ólfadh sé fiche píunt in aon tsuíochán amháin' ('he would drink twenty pints at one sitting').

go poiblí 'Poiblí' translates 'public' in such terms as 'beartas poiblí' ('public policy'), 'ceart slí poiblí' ('public right of way') and 'údarás poiblí' ('public authority') in Téarmaí Dlí, but is also found in the terms 'an mhaitheas phoiblí' ('the common good') and 'bóthar poiblí' ('highway'). Ó Dónaill translates 'go poiblí' as 'publicly, openly' and Dinneen translates 'poiblidhe' as 'public, common, well-known'. DIL translates 'puiplide'/'puiblide' as 'pertaining to the people, public' and cites 'da cluinter na comraiti sea co puipligi', '... publicly' (i.e. if these conversations were heard publicly) from the Yellow Book of Lecan, part of which was written at the end of the fourteenth century. DIL also cites 'go poiplidhi' from Ó Cianáin's Flight of the Earls. See further the commentary on Articles 34.1 and 40.6.1°.

In s149(2)(b) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'the Committee shall have power to take evidence in public' is translated as 'beidh an chumhacht ag an gCoiste fianaise a ghlacadh go poiblí'. In s149(3), 'The Committee shall refrain from enquiring into in public session ... confidential information' is translated as 'Staonfaidh an Coiste ó fhaisnéis rúnda ... a fhiosrú i seisiún poiblí'. In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 688), 'The hearing in court shall be public' is translated as 'Is i gcúirt oscailte a éistfear cásanna'; the heading of that Article, 'Hearing to be public', is translated as 'Suíonna poiblí'.

'Courts-martial shall be public' is translated as 'is go poiblí a shuífeas armchúirteanna' in s194(1) of the Defence Act, 1954. Looking at early translations, 'public sitting' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'suidhe poiblí' in translations for the Department of Industry and Commerce. Note that 'for the purpose of holding a public meeting' is translated as 'Chun cóthlán poiblí do chomóra' in s30(3) of the Electoral Act, 1923; 'Bank Holidays and days declared by statute or proclamation to be public holidays' is translated as 'Banc-shaoireanna agus laethanta a bheidh fógartha ina saoireanna poiblí le reacht no le fúrogra' in s60(2).

TÉACS GAEILGE

Ach i gcás práinn speisialta a bheith ann, tig le ceachtar den dá Theach suí go príobháideach ach dhá thrian de na comhaltai a bheas i láthair do thoiliú leis.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

But in the case of there being a special exigency, either of the two Houses can sit privately provided that two thirds of the members (who will be / are) present consent to it.

ENGLISH TEXT

In cases of special emergency, however, either House may hold a private sitting with the assent of two-thirds of the members present.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 While 'práinn speisialta' would be understood as 'emergency', 'práinn' usually renders 'urgency', with 'éigeandáil' rendering 'emergency'.
- 2 'In cases' is expressed as 'i gcás ... a bheith ann' ('in the case of there being') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Assent' is expressed by the term translated as 'consent' in Téarmaí Dlí ('toiliú'), 'assent' being translated there as 'aontú'.
- 4 'Hold a private sitting' is expressed as 'suí go príobháideach' ('sit privately') in the Irish text.
- 5 'Either House' is expressed as 'ceachtar den dá Theach' ('either of the two Houses') in the Irish text.
- 6 'However' is again expressed as 'Ach' ('but') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 25 of the 1922 Constitution concludes as follows:

In cases of special emergency either House may hold a private sitting with the assent of two-thirds of the members present. Ar ócáidí de riachtanas speisialta féadfaidh aon Tigh suidhe príobháideach do bheith aige ach dhá thrian na mball a bheidh láithreach do thoiliú leis.

Commentary

práinn This headword is translated as 'hurry, rush; urgent need, exigency' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'tá práinn leis, it is urgent', 'má tá práinn ort, if you are pressed for time' and ‘ar uair na práinne, in an exigency, in a time of emergency’. Dinneen translates ‘práidhinn’ as ‘urgency, a difficulty, need; trepidation, hurry, flurry, rush ...’, citing ‘tá gábhadh agam leis acht ní’l aon phráidhinn mar sin orm leis, I want it but not in such a hurry as that’. DIL has ‘mod.’ in parenthesis after the headword ‘práidhinn’, where it is translated as ‘urgency, difficulty, strait’. See further the commentary on Article 24.1, where ‘práinn’ expresses ‘urgency’, and 28.3.3<sup>o</sup>, where ‘staid phráinne náisiúnta’ expresses ‘state of national emergency’.

In s21 of the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, ‘in any case where it appears to him that there is an emergency or special difficulty’ is translated as ‘in aon chás inar dóigh leis go mbaineann práinn nó deacracht speisialta leis’. ‘Práinn’ specifically translates ‘urgency’ in the Acts, however – in s26(2) of the Health Act, 1953, for example, ‘Except in cases of urgent necessity’ is translated as ‘Ach amháin i gcásanna lena ngabhann práinn agus riachtanas’. ‘Liúntas leasa forlíontach a dheonú i gcásanna práinne’ translates ‘Grant of supplementary welfare allowance in cases of urgency’ in the Margin Title of s213 of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981. In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 541), ‘In cases of urgency’ is translated as ‘I gcásanna práinne’ and in the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 45) ‘in case of urgency’ is translated as ‘i gcás práinne’.

‘Éigeandáil’ is translated as ‘dangerous situation, emergency’ in Ó Dónaill, ‘éigean’ having the sense of ‘necessity, compulsion’ and ‘strait, difficulty; want, distress’. Dinneen translates ‘éigeandáil’ as ‘necessity, distress’. DIL translates the compound ‘éicendál’ as ‘a stiff encounter; a distressing position, dangerous strait’, citing an example from the Táin and from later sources. In s94 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), which specifically refers to the present Article 15.8.2<sup>o</sup> of the Constitution, ‘In case of special emergency, a member of the Government may move ... that all visitors and Press representatives be excluded from the Chamber’ is translated as ‘I gcás éigeandáil speisialta a bheith ann, féadfaidh comhalta den Rialtas a thairiscint ... go ndúnfar gach cuairteoir agus ionadaí Nuachtán amach as an Seomra’. The title of the Second Schedule to the Radiological Protection Act, 1991, ‘Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency’, is translated as ‘An Coinbhinsiún um Chúnadh i gcás Taisme Núicléach nó Éigeandáil Raideolaíoch do Tharlú’. In s39(5) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, ‘in an actual or supposed emergency at those premises’ is translated as ‘in éigeandáil iarbhir nó cheaptha san áitreabh sin’. ‘Through circumstances attributable directly or indirectly to the national emergency’, in s17 of the First Schedule to the Corporation Tax Act, 1976, is translated as ‘de dhroim imthosca is inchurtha, go díreach nó go neamhdhíreach, i leith na héigeandála náisiúnta’.

do thoiliú ‘Toilim’ is translated as ‘I consent’ in Téarmaí Dlí, ‘toiliú’ being translated as ‘consent’. Ó Dónaill translates ‘toiligh’ as ‘will, consent, agree’, citing ‘toiliú le rud, to consent to something; to accept something’ and ‘thoiligh siad le chéile, they accepted each other, they agreed to marry’. Dinneen translates ‘toilighim’ as ‘I will, assent, agree to’. DIL translates ‘toiligid’ (which is based on Old Irish ‘tol’, ‘will’) as (a) ‘wills’ and (b) ‘consents, agrees’. See the commentary on Articles 12.9 and 46.5.

In s94 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), which specifically refers to the present Article 15.8.2<sup>o</sup> of the Constitution, ‘this shall be done by direction of the Ceann Comhairle, with the assent of two-thirds of the members present’ is translated as ‘déanfar amhlaidh le hordú ón gCeann Comhairle, má thoilíonn dhá thrian de na comhaltaí a bheidh i láthair leis an tairiscint sin’. See, however, s10(4) of the Companies Act, 1963, for ‘toiligh’ translating ‘consent’: ‘Any person who has consented to or voted in favour of the alteration’, ‘Aon duine a thoiligh nó a vótáil leis an athrú. ‘Assent’ is translated as ‘aontú’ in Téarmaí Dlí, with ‘aontaím’ translating ‘I assent’. In Article 26.2.2<sup>o</sup> of the Constitution, ‘and no other opinion, whether assenting or dissenting, shall be pronounced’, is expressed as ‘agus ní cead tuairim ar bith eile, ag aontú nó ag easaontú leis an mbreith sin, a chraoladh’. We find ‘ag aontú nó ag easaontú’ again expressing ‘whether assenting or dissenting’ in Article 34.4.5<sup>o</sup>. In Article 28.3.1<sup>o</sup>, ‘save with the assent of Dáil Éireann’ is expressed as ‘ach amháin le haontú Dháil Éireann’ – see further the commentary thereon.

In s3(1) of the Succession Act, 1965, “conveyance” includes a mortgage, charge, lease, assent, transfer, disclaimer, release and every other assurance of property by any instrument except a will’ is translated as ‘folaíonn “tíolacas” morgáiste, muirear, léas, aontú, aistriú, séanadh, scaoileadh agus gach forcintú eile maoine le haon ionstraim seachas uacht’. In the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 31), ‘the assent of the European Parliament shall be required’ is translated as ‘is gá do Pharlaimint na hEorpa aontú’, and on p. 62, ‘by giving its assent or delivering advisory opinions’ is translated as ‘trí aontuithe agus trí thuairimí comhairleacha a thabhairt’. In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 151), ‘by decision of the High Authority with the assent of the Council’ is translated as ‘má thugann an tArd-Údarás cinneadh dá réir sin tar éis dó aontú na Comhairle a fháil’. On p. 32, ‘Wherever this Treaty requires a unanimous decision or unanimous assent, such decision or assent shall have been duly given if all the members of the Council vote in favour’ is translated as ‘In aon chás ina n-éilíonn an Conradh seo cinneadh d’aontoil nó aontú d’aontoil, beidh an cinneadh nó aontú sin arna thabhairt go cúí má vótálann comhaltaí uile na Comhairle ar a thaobh’.

Finally, regarding ‘do thoiliú’, while the preposition ‘do’ is so found in the Acts, connecting a ‘preceding noun or pronoun, which is virtual subject or object, with verbal noun’ – see, for example, s2(1) of the Criminal Law (Rape) Act, 1981, where ‘if ... he is reckless as to whether she does or does not consent to it’ is translated as ‘más cuma leis i do thoiliú nó gan toiliú leis’ – according to Ó Dónaill the standard form is ‘a’. See Ó Dónaill s.v. do<sup>3</sup>(7) and a<sup>4</sup>.

Igcás Literally ‘in a case’ – see, for example, s173(2)(b) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, where ‘other than, in a case where payment of the pension is resumed under paragraph (c)’ is translated as ‘ach amháin, i gcás ina n-atosófar faoi mhír (c) ar an bpinsean a íoc’. We have some examples in the Acts of ‘i gcás’ translating ‘in cases’, however – see, for example, s58(1) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, where ‘the candidate or candidates shall in cases of exclusion be excluded in the order in which their names are drawn, and, in cases of surplus, the surplus shall be transferred ...' is translated as 'déanfar an t-iarrthóir nó na hiarrthóirí, i gcás eisiama h a bheith le déanamh, a eisiama h san ord ina dtarraingeofar a n-ainmneacha, agus i gcás barrachas, déanfar na barrachais a aistriú ...'. In s20 of the Finance Act, 1971, however, 'Interest on income tax and sur-tax in cases of fraud or neglect' is translated as 'Ús ar cháin ioncaim nó ar fhorcháin i gcásanna calaoise nó failli'. 'Provided that in cases of charge the notice of charge shall be duly served' is translated as 'Ar choinníoll i gcásanna muirir go ndéanfar an fógra muirir a sheirbheáil go cuí' in s537(2) of the Income Tax Act, 1967. 'Ireland may ... take the necessary measures in cases of extreme urgency' is translated as 'féadfaidh Éire ... na bearta is gá a ghlacadh í féin i gcás fíorphráinne' in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 995). On p. 541 of the same work, 'In cases of urgency, the Commission shall issue a directive' is translated as 'I gcásanna práinne, eiseoidh an Coimisiún treoir ...'. 'I gcás' also translates 'where' and 'in the event of' in the Acts. See the commentary on Article 14.4 regarding 'cás'.

go príobháideach In Téarmaí Dlí, following the eighth Irish Legal Terms Order, 1950 (Terms relating to Bankruptcy), 'first private sitting' is translated as 'an chéad suí príobháideach'. 'Príobháideach' translates 'private' in 'ceart slí príobháideach' ('private right of way') and 'cuideachta phríobháideach' ('private company'), but is also found in 'faisnéisí príobháideach' ('common informer'), in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill translates 'príobháideach' simply as 'private' but Dinneen adds 'secret' and 'of a person, secret-keeping, reliable'. DIL s.v. 'príobháideach' ('private, secret'), gives just two late citations, 'príobháid-' coming from English 'private'.

ach Followed by a verbal noun, 'ach' has the sense of 'if, provided that' – see Ó Dónaill s.v. 'ach' (3), who cites 'tá sé maith go leor ach gan fearg a chur air, he is all right if he is not angered'. See the commentary on Article 40.4.5° where 'with' is rendered as 'faoi réir'.

TÉACS GAEILGE

Toghfaidh gach Teach ar leith den Oireachtas a Chathaoirleach agus a Leas-Chathaoirleach féin as a chomhaltas féin, agus leagfaidh amach dóibh a gcumhachtaí agus a ndualgais.

LITERAL TRANSLATION

Each individual House of the Oireachtas will elect its own Chairman and Vice-Chairman from its own membership, and will lay out for them their powers and their duties.

ENGLISH TEXT

Each House of the Oireachtas shall elect from its members its own Chairman and Deputy Chairman, and shall prescribe their powers and duties.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The Irish text does not read simply as 'each House of the Oireachtas' but as 'gach Teach ar leith den Oireachtas' ('each individual/separate House of the Oireachtas').
- 2 'From its members' is expressed as 'as a chomhaltas féin' ('from its own membership') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Prescribe' is expressed as 'leag amach' ('lay out') in the Irish text.
- 4 The English text has no corresponding prepositional pronoun to the Irish text's 'dóibh' ('for them' – i.e. for the 'Cathaoirleach' and 'Leas-Chathaoirleach').

Note that Article 21 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

Each House shall elect its own Chairman and Deputy Chairman, and shall prescribe their powers, duties, remuneration, and terms of office. Déanfaidh gach Tigh a Cheann Comhairle agus a Leas-Cheann Comhairle féin do cheapa agus a gcomhachta, a ndualgaisí, a luach saothair, agus a dtéarmaí oifige do leaga amach.

Article 3 of the 1919 Constitution commences as follows:

Ceann Comhairle toghtha ag an Dáil i naghaidh na bliadhna ... a bheidh i gceannas gach tionóil den Dáil.

Commentary

leagfaidh amach The absence of the pronoun here makes for brevity and avoids having to render 'House' with a pronoun, 'House' being in the singular but with plural sense. We also find this omission of pronoun in other Articles but it would not generally be practised in the modern Acts.

'Leag amach' is translated literally as 'lay out, arrange' in Ó Dónaill, who gives the secondary sense of 'lay down, prescribe; allot, allocate', citing 'obair, dualgas, a leagan amach do dhuine, to allot work, a duty, to someone' – see the commentary on Article 15.2.2°. 'Forordaigh' generally translates 'prescribe' in the Acts – see, for example, s27 of the Health Act, 1970, where 'Accounts shall be kept by a health board in such form ... as may be prescribed by the Minister' is translated as 'Coimeádfaidh bord sláinte cuntas i cibé foirm ... a fhorordóidh an tAire'. In s2 of the Agricultural Produce (Meat) (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1978, 'requiring fresh meat ... to be classified according to prescribed systems of description and ... to have prescribed marks applied to such meat' is translated as ‘á cheangal ... go ndéanfar í a aicmiú de réir chórais chaighdeánacha fhorordaithe tuairisce, agus ... go gcuirfear marcanna forordaithe ar an bhfeoil sin’. In s4 of the Social Welfare (Pay-Related Benefit) Act, 1973, ‘but does not exceed such limit as stands prescribed for the time being’ is translated as ‘ach nach dtéann thar an teorainn sin a bheidh forordaithe de thuras na huaire’.

In Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973) we find ‘ordaigh’ rather than ‘forordaigh’ – see, for example, p. 779, where ‘in a form prescribed by the Council’ is translated as ‘i bhfoirm a ordóidh an Chomhairle’. In s3(b) of Article II of Part II of the Schedule to the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, 1957, ‘The Bank shall prescribe rules laying down the conditions’ is translated as ‘Ordóidh an Banc rialacha a leagfas síos na coinníollacha’, with ‘Na rialacha a déanfar chun críocha an ailt seo ordóid na fátha ...’ translating ‘The rules made for the purpose of this section shall prescribe the causes’ in s45(3) of the Nurses Act, 1950.

Looking at the earlier Acts, we see above that ‘leag amach’ translates ‘prescribe’ in the corresponding Article in the 1922 Constitution also. ‘Each University ... shall be entitled to elect three representatives to Dáil Éireann upon a franchise and in a manner to be prescribed by law’, in Article 27 thereof, however, is translated as ‘Beidh de cheart ag gach Príomh-sgoil ... trí teachtaí do thogha do Dháil Éireann ar reacht-shaoirse agus ar nós a socrófar le dlí’. ‘He shall record such refusal in the prescribed manner’ is translated as ‘breaca sé síos an diúltú san ar an slí ordúithe’ in s7(5) of the Censorship of Films Act, 1923. ‘Chun fógraí do thabhairt, chun fuirmeacha do cheapa’ translates ‘to give notices, to prescribe forms’ in s11(3) of the Interpretation Act, 1923.

as a chomhaltas féin Literally, ‘from its own membership’. In order to use ‘comhaltai’ (‘members’), one could perhaps translate as ‘as measc a chomhaltai’, reading the English as ‘from among its members’ – see, for example, The Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 177), where ‘The President shall be selected from among persons of recognized standing and professional experience in monetary or banking matters’ is translated as ‘Roghnófar an tUachtarán as measc daoine a bhfuil gradam agus taithí ghairmiúil aitheanta acu i réimsí airgeadaíochta nó baincéireachta’. See s134(4) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997) where ‘The Standing Joint Committee shall elect from its members as Chairman a member of either House’ is translated as ‘Déanfaidh an Buan-Chomhchoiste comhalta de cheachtar Teach a thoghadh as a líon féin chun bheith ina Chathaoirleach nó ina Cathaoirleach’.

Turning to the Acts, in s8 of Article 20 of the Schedule to the International Common Fund for Commodities Act, 1982, ‘the Governing Council shall elect a Chairman from among the Governors’ is translated as ‘toghfaidh an Chomhairle Rialaithe Cathaoirleach as líon na Rialtóirí’. ‘The board of directors of a credit union shall elect by secret ballot from their number four persons who shall be ... chairman ...’ is translated as ‘déanfaidh bord stiúthóirí chomhar creidmheasa, trí rúnbhallóid, ceathrar as a líon a thoghadh mar chathaoirleach ...’ in s18(1) of the Credit Union Act, 1966. ‘Toghfaidh na toghthóirí a bheidh i láthair ag an gcuinníú duine dá líon ina chathaoirleach ar an gcuinníú’ translates ‘the electors present at the meeting shall elect from their number a Chairman of the meeting’ in s27(4)(c) of the Fisheries (Consolidation) Act, 1959. ‘Toghfaidh an Comhlachas duine de chomhaltai an Choiste ina Chathaoirleach ar an gComhlachas’ translates ‘the Association shall elect from amongst the members of the Committee a person to be Chairman of the Association’ in s3(1) of the Second Schedule to the Sea Fisheries Act, 1952. ‘Toghfaidh an bord cathaoirleach ... as a mbaill’ translates ‘the board shall elect a chairman ... from among its members’ in s15 of the Public Assistance Act, 1939, with ‘The extraordinary members electorate shall ... elect from amongst its members seven extraordinary members’ being translated as ‘Déanfaidh lucht toghtha na mball nea-ghnáthach ... seacht mbaill nea-ghnáthacha do thoghadh as a mbaill féin’ in s12(2) of the Dublin Fever Hospital Act, 1936. Finally, ‘the members of the committee shall at every meeting elect from amongst their number the chairman for that meeting’, in s9(4) of the Local Authorities (Combined Purchasing) Act, 1925, is translated as ‘déanfaidh baill an choiste, ag gach cruinniú, cathaoirleach do thogha as a líon féin don chruinniú san’.

ar leith ‘Each House’ is expressed as ‘gach Teach ar leith’ in Articles 15.10 and 15.11.1° and ‘of each House’ is expressed as ‘gach Tí ar leith’ in Article 15.9.2°. ‘Ar leith’ is not found, however, in Article 15.15, where ‘the members of each House’ is expressed simply as ‘comhaltai gach Tí’ and in Articles 24.1, 27.5.1° and 27.6 ‘Cathaoirleach gach Tí den Oireachtas’ expresses ‘the Chairman of each House of the Oireachtas’. In Article 28.3.3° ‘gach Teach den Oireachtas’ expresses ‘each of the Houses of the Oireachtas’ and ‘i ngach Teach den Oireachtas’ expresses ‘in each House of the Oireachtas’ in Article 28.8. See the commentary on Article 12.3.3°.

‘Ar leith, faoi leith’ is translated as ‘apart, separate; several, distinct; remarkable, special’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘gach ball ar leith, each individual member’. Dinneen translates ‘ar (or fá) leith’ as ‘apart, separately, severally’. DIL gives examples of ‘fo’ with ‘leith’ in the sense of ‘separately, severally, individually’ from the Old Irish Glosses onwards, citing ‘cách fo leith’ (‘every one severally’) from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, where this phrase glosses Latin ‘singuli’, and states that sometimes you get ‘leith’ with ‘for’ in this sense, citing ‘don oenfer for leith’ (‘for one man only’), from a document connected with the Monastery of Tallaght and the Church reform movement of the eighth/ninth century, along with ‘gach pearsa ar leith ‘na Dhia dhibh’, referring to each of the three Persons in the Trinity being a God, from a later collection of religious poetry. See the commentary on Article 38.3.1° regarding ‘faoi leith’.

It is by law that the salary of the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of each separate House will be decided.

ENGLISH TEXT

The remuneration of the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of each House shall be determined by law.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Remuneration' is translated as 'luach saothair', rather than 'tuarastal', in Téarmaí Dlí – 'luach saothair' is found in the corresponding Article in the 1922 Constitution.
- 2 As in the previous subsection, 'of each House' is expressed as 'gach Tí ar leith' ('of each separate House') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 21 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

Each House shall elect its own Chairman and Deputy Chairman, and shall prescribe their powers, duties, remuneration, and terms of office. Déanfaidh gach Tigh a Cheann Comhairle agus a Leas-Cheann Comhairle féin do cheapa agus a gcomhachta, a ndualgaisí, a luach saothair, agus a dtéarmaí oifige do leaga amach.

tuarastal The earlier form, 'tuarastal', is based on 'frestal' ('attending') and in early Irish laws had the primary sense of 'description of a crime, evidence of an eye-witness' and, collectively, 'witness' – see DIL s.v. 'tuarastal'. In some of the examples cited in DIL, it would appear to refer to evidence given voluntarily by an eye-witness, and for which payment is made. It had the secondary sense of 'stipend, retaining fee (paid by an overlord to a subordinate chief in return for tribute, military service, etc.)' and 'stipend, wages, reward, remuneration in general', an example of this latter sense being cited in DIL from the

Táin, along with the following example of 'tuarastal' as quasi verbal noun from the fifteenth-century poet Pilib Bocht Ó hUiginn: 'uirrim ó gach éanfhosdadh / mac Dé a-tá gá tuarastal' (which Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú translates as 'indulgence/mercy [is earned] from every single engagement, it is the son of God who is paying it').

Historically, according to Ó Dónaill, 'tuarastal' was the 'overlord's stipend to retainer; payment to subordinate'. The secondary ecclesiastical sense of the word is 'prebend', Ó Dónaill citing 'Canónach tuarastail, prebendary'. The general sense of the word today is 'salary, wages', but it also has the sense of 'hire' according to Ó Dónaill. Dinneen translates 'tuarastal' as 'wages, salary, stipend, fee, gift, reward', citing 'fear tuarastail do thuilleamh, a day-labourer' and 'ar tuarastal an riogh, in the king's pay'.

As we see above, 'luach saothair' translates 'remuneration' in Article 21 of the 1922 Constitution. Turning to the Acts, in s22(4) of the Social Welfare Act, 1950, 'Where an officer or employee of the Society has remuneration comprising a scale of annual increments' is translated as 'I gcás luach saothair a bhfuil scála breisiócht bliantúla ar áireamh ann a bheith ag oifigeach nó fostaí don Chumann'. In s243(2) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, 'Where an insured person receives wages or other pecuniary remuneration from his employer' is translated as 'Má fhaigheann duine árachaithe pá nó luach saothair airgid eile óna fhostóir'. In the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97, 'Chairpersons will be remunerated' is translated as 'iocfar luach saothair leis na Cathaoirligh'. We do, however, have the following cited from a Dáil Order Paper: 'Convention No. 100 concerning Equal Remuneration for Men and Women Workers for Work of Equal Value', 'Coinbhinsiún Uimh. 100 i dtaobh Tuarastal Comhionann d'Fhear-Oibrithe agus do Bhan-Oibrithe ar Obair le Luach Comhionann'. Generally, however, 'tuarastal' translates 'salary' in the Acts – 'a salaried officer', for example, is translated as 'oifigeach tuarastail' in the Turf Development Act, 1946. In s20 of the Finance Act, 1990, 'The amount of the salary, fees, wages, perquisites, and profits of the year of assessment' is translated as 'Méid tuarastail, táillí, pá, peircisí, agus brabús na bliana measúnachta'.

le dlí 'Cibé daoine eile sa Stát a cinnfear le dligheadh' renders 'such other persons in the State as may be determined by law' in Article 16.1.2<sup>o</sup>, following the Ninth Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1984.

'Dlí' is translated as 'law' in Téarmaí Dlí and Ó Dónaill translates 'de réir dlí' as 'according to law, legally', neither source citing 'le dlí'. Dinneen translates 'dligheadh' as 'deserving, being entitled to; law, a law, a regulation, ordinance; a principle; ordinary practice; duty; dues, tribute', citing 'do réir dlighidh, legal'. DIL cites examples of 'dliged' from the eighth-century Glosses onwards.

Turning to the Acts, 'or other matters determined by law as coming within the duties of the Controller' is translated as 'nó i leith nithe eile a gcinnfear le dlí iad a theacht faoi réim dhualgas an Cheannasaí' in s80(1) of the Patents Act, 1964. In s46 of the First Schedule to the Companies Act, 1963, 'in any manner and with and subject to any incident authorised, and consent required, by law' is translated as 'i slí ar bith agus i dteannta agus faoi réir aon teagmhais a údaraítear, agus aon toilithe a cheanglaítear, le dlí'. See, however, s26(7) of the Redundancy

Payments Act, 1967, where ‘in any securities in which trustees are for the time being by law empowered to invest trust funds’ is translated as ‘in aon urrúis a bhfuil cumhacht dlí de thuras na huairé ag iontaobhaithe cisti iontaobhais a infheistiú iontu’. In the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97, ‘all Government Departments and State Agencies ... will be required by law to comply in general with the information procedures’ is translated as ‘beidh ceangal dlí ar na Ranna Rialtais agus ar na gníomhaireachtaí Stáit go léir ... na nósanna imeachta faisnéise ... a chomhlíonadh go ginearálta’. ‘Provisions laid down by law’ is translated as ‘forálacha reachtaíochta’ in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973) – see, for example, p. 226, where ‘The provisions of this Chapter ... shall not prejudice the applicability of provisions laid down by law, regulation or administrative action providing for special treatment of foreign nationals’ is translated as ‘Ní rachaidh forálacha na Caibidle seo ... chun dochair d’infheidhmeacht fhorálacha reachtaíochta nó rialúcháin nó riaracháin lena bhforáiltear cóir speisialta do náisiúnaigh choigríche’. ‘Principles laid down by law’ is translated as ‘prionsabail reachtaíochta’ in the Treaty on European Union (1992) – see, for example, p. 18, where ‘amendment of the existing principles laid down by law governing the professions’ is translated as ‘leasú a dhéanamh ar na prionsabail reachtaíochta atá ann cheana a bhaineann le córas rialú na ngairmeacha’.

See the commentary on Articles 1 and 12.11.2° for ‘determine’ in early Acts.

tuarastal Chathaoirleach is Leas-Chathaoirleach gach Tí Note that we find ‘tuarastal Chathaoirligh is Leas-Chathaoirligh gach Tighe’ in the original text. Unlike the many cases we have seen earlier, the rule of (lenited) nominative in place of the genitive has been applied here in the Stationery Office text.

ar leith See the commentary on the foregoing subsection.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Each particular House will make its own standing orders and rules, and each House of them will have the power to fix a penalty for those who transgress them; it will have in addition to that the power to secure freedom of argument and to protect its own official writings/ documents and the private papers of its members, and moreover to protect itself and its members from any person or any group of people who would interfere with or inhibit its members or who would try to corrupt them while they are doing their duties.

ENGLISH TEXT

Each House shall make its own rules and standing orders, with power to attach penalties for their infringement, and shall have power to ensure freedom of debate, to protect its official documents and the private papers of its members, and to protect itself and its members against any person or persons interfering with, molesting or attempting to corrupt its members in the exercise of their duties.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 The phrase expressing ‘interfere with’ in the Irish text, ‘cuir isteach ar’, is translated as ‘molest’ in Téarmaí Dlí, and the term expressing ‘molesting’, ‘toirmeasc’, is translated as ‘inhibition’ in Téarmaí Dlí, while the term expressing ‘to corrupt’, ‘a éilliú’, is translated as ‘to suborn’ in Téarmaí Dlí; the general usage of both ‘cur isteach ar’ and ‘a éilliú’, however, is that found in the corresponding English text; ‘toirmeasc’, on the other hand, is generally understood as ‘hinder, prohibit’ rather than ‘molest’, though the use of this noun with ‘déan’ rather than ‘cuir’ would alert the reader to a new usage being made of the word.
- 2 The word expressing ‘debate’ in the Irish text, ‘aighneas’, as well as having the sense of ‘argument, discussion’, has the sense of ‘trouble, contention’; ‘debate’ is translated directly as ‘díospóireacht’ in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, for example.
- 3 ‘Documents’ is expressed as ‘scríbhinní’ (‘written documents’) in the Irish text.
- 4 The Irish text has a semicolon after ‘a sáráithe sin’ corresponding to the comma after ‘infringement’ in the English text and commences a new statement, while the English text runs on, linked with ‘and’.
- 5 The literal sense of the Irish term expressing ‘to protect’, ‘a dhéan’, is ‘to shelter’; Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú would, however, not include this as a divergence.
- 6 ‘With power to attach penalties for their infringement’ is expressed as ‘agus beidh sé de chumhacht ag gach Teach acu pionós a cheapadh do lucht a sáráithe sin’ (‘and each House will have (the) power to fix a penalty for those who transgress them’) in the Irish text.
- 7 As in the previous section, ‘each House’ is expressed as ‘gach Teach ar leith’ (‘each particular House’) in the Irish text.

- 8 'In the exercise of their duties' is expressed as 'agus iad ag déanamh a ndualgas' ('while doing their duties') in the Irish text.
- 9 'A chur in áirithe' usually expresses 'reserve' rather than 'ensure', which is usually translated as 'a áiritiú' in the Acts, although the sense in the context is clear.

Note that while the English text of Article 20 of the 1922 Constitution is (apart from initial capitals and commas) exactly the same as the current Article, the Irish text reads as follows:

Déanfaidh gach Tigh a rialacha agus a Bhuan-Orduithe féin agus beidh de chomhacht aige pionós do chur i bhfeidhm i dtaobh a mbriste agus beidh de chomhacht aige saoirse dhíospóireachta do chur in áirithe, a scríbhinní oifigiúla agus páipéirí príobháideacha a bhall do chosaint agus é féin agus a bhaill do chosaint ar aon duine nó daoine a bhainfidh le n-a bhaill no a chuirfidh isteach ortha no a thabharfaidh fé iad do bhreaba le linn dóibh a ndualgaisí do chó-líona.

Commentary

á éilliú 'Éillim' is translated as 'I suborn' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'eilliú' translated as 'subornation' and 'cleachtas éillitheacha' translated as 'corrupt practices'. 'Éilligh' is translated as 'corrupt; pollute, defile' in Ó Dónaill, with the secondary sense of 'suborn' in Jurisprudence. 'Éilnighim' is translated as 'I corrupt, contaminate, destroy, defile' in Dinneen. DIL cites two examples of the verb 'éilnigid', 'defiles, pollutes', the earliest being from the Leabhar Breac (written in 1411, or earlier), the other being 'gurub amhlaid ellnigher a n-ingina' ('their maidens are deflowered') from the Gaelic abridgment of the book of Ser Marco Polo. This verb is based on 'éilned', which is the verbal noun of earlier 'as-lena'; DIL gives examples of both 'as-lena' ('pollutes, defiles, violates') and 'éilned' ('pollution, corruption, defilement [physical or moral]') from the eighth-century Glosses onwards. In early Irish laws, this verb is used frequently of 'the besmirching of a man's honour and resulting cancellation of any legal privileges due to his position', according to DIL. In the ninth-century Sanas Cormaic we find another sense: 'arná héilnet a cairphtiu oc dul for cáí' ('that they may not dirty their chariots when going on a visit').

In the Margin Title of s158 of the Defence Act, 1954, 'Bribery, corruption and fraud' is translated as 'breabair-eacht, éilliú agus calaois'. The Margin Title of s95 of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, 'Corrupt withdrawal of petition', is translated as 'Achainí a tharraingt siar go héillitheach'. In s2 of the Radiological Protection Act, 1991, 'Radioactive contamination of foodstuffs' is translated as 'Éilliú radaighníomhach ar earraí bia'.

'Suborn' is explained in the Shorter Oxford Dictionary as 'to bribe, induce, or procure (a person) by underhand or unlawful means to commit a misdeed'. Note above that in Article 20 of the 1922 Constitution, 'attempting to corrupt its members' is translated as 'a thabharfaidh fé iad do bhreaba', literally 'attempting to bribe them'. Note finally that 'corrupt practices' is translated as 'cleachtanna cuirpe' in s51(2)(d) of the Electoral Act, 1923.

a dhídean 'Dídean' is translated as 'cover, shelter; refuge, protection' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'duine a dhídean, to shelter, protect, someone' and 'Dia ár ndídean, God protect us' as examples of 'dídean' as a verbal noun. Dinneen translates 'dídean' as 'act of protecting, sheltering; protection, shelter, safety; refuge, abode'. The verb 'dítinid' is translated as 'shelters, protects' ('with accusative + ar [for]') in DIL. This verb is based on 'dítíu', verbal noun of 'do-eim', and is translated as 'covering, cover, shelter' in DIL, this seeming to be the original meaning, hence in general 'covering, protecting, defence'. DIL cites 'bid dídiu láedhi is leabhor' ('... a protection for songs and books'). Examples of the verb 'do-eim', translated as (a) 'covers, shelters, hides' and (b) 'protects, defends', are cited in DIL from the Old Irish Glosses onwards; we see how the two senses are closely connected in the following example from the Táir: 'a lám clé doet in sciath' (his left hand 'which the shield covered, i.e. protected'). 'Do-eim' glosses Latin 'defendere' in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. DIL also cites examples followed by 'ar', 'protects from, against'.

In s54(1) of the Health Act, 1953, 'shelter and maintenance in a county home' is translated as 'dídean agus cothabháil i dteaghlach contae'. 'Protect' is generally translated as 'cosain' in the Acts, however, as we find in Articles 28.3.2° and 41.3.1°, for example. In s9(6)(g) of the Consumer Information Act, 1978, 'the provisions of any legislation providing for the protection of consumers' is translated as '(ar) fhorálacha aon reachtaíochta a dhéanann socrú le tomhaltóirí a chosaint'. The Margin Title of s22 of the Succession Act, 1965, 'Protection of persons acting on probate or administration' is translated as 'Cosain daoine a ghníomhóidh ar phrobháid nó ar riarachán'. In s28(9)(d) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, 'to the protection or promotion of the interests of its members in the carrying out of their trade or profession' is translated as 'chun leasanna a chomhaltáí i mbun a dtrádála nó a ngairme dóibh a chosaint nó a chur ar aghaidh'. 'Cosain' is the verb found in the corresponding Article 20 of the 1922 Constitution, where we find 'a scríbhinní oifigiúla agus páipéirí príobháideacha a bhall do chosaint agus é féin agus a bhaill do chosaint ar aon duine ...'. Note finally that 'caomhnaigh' expresses 'protect' in Article 41.1.2°.

cur isteach Note that this phrase is hyphenated in the original text. 'Cuirim isteach ar' is translated as 'I molest' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Cur isteach ar dhuine' is translated as 'to interfere with, to inconvenience, someone; to interrupt someone' in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen translates 'cuirim ar' as 'I impose as an injunction on, ascribe to, accost, challenge, play on, overbear, interrupt, annoy (generally, cuirim isteach ar)'.

In s75(4) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, 'A person shall be guilty of an offence if ... he ... interferes with ... a voter' is translated as 'Beidh duine ciontach i gcion más rud é ... go gcuirfidh sé isteach ar vótálaí'. In s54(17) of the Fisheries Act, 1980, 'where ... a person by trespass, fishing or otherwise interferes with anything done pursuant to an aquaculture licence' is translated as 'I gcás ... a ndéanfaidh duine trí fhoghail, iascaireacht nó eile, cur isteach ar ní a bheidh déanta de bhun ceadúnais do bharshaothraithe'. In s18(1)(e) of the same Act, 'dig, break or otherwise temporarily close, cross, extend, divert or otherwise interfere with or alter any navigable waterway' is translated as 'aon uiscebhealach inseolta ... a thochailt, a bhriseadh nó a dhúnadh go sealadach ar aon slí eile, a thrasnú, a shíneadh, a chlaonadh nó baint leo nó iad a athrú ar aon slí eile'. This is also the phrase used in the corresponding Article 20 of the 1922 Constitution: 'agus é féin agus a bhaill do chosaint ar aon duine no daoine a bhainfidh le n-a bhaill'.

In Article 40.4.6°, 'to prohibit, control or interfere with' is expressed as 'a thoirmeasc, nó a rialú nó a bhac' and we find 'bac' translating 'interfere with' in many Acts. In s515(1) of the Income Tax Act, 1967, 'If any person ... obstructs, molests or hinders ... an officer' is translated as 'Má dhéanann duine ar bith ... cosc, cur isteach, nó bac ... ar oifigeach'. In s4(3) of the Fuels (Control of Supplies) Act, 1971, 'gives that other person any assistance with intent thereby to prevent, hinder, or interfere with the detection of that offence' is translated as 'aon chabhair a thabhairt don duine eile sin le hintinn fionnadh an chiona sin a chosc nó a bhac nó a thoirmeasc'. In s94(g) of the Finance Act, 1983, 'obstructs or interferes with any officer' is translated as 'go gcuirfidh sé bac nó treampán ar aon oifigeach'. In s15(1) of the Consumer Information Act, 1978, 'A person shall not ... prevent another person from, or interfere with, or obstruct another person who is ... entering a place ...' is translated as 'Ní dhéanfaidh duine ... cosc, bac, ná araoid a chur ar dhuine eile ... a bheidh ag dul isteach in áit ...'. In s1(7) of the Air Navigation (Eurocontrol) Act, 1971, 'A person who obstructs or interferes with an officer ... when he is exercising a power' is translated as 'Aon duine a choisfidh nó bhacfaidh oifigeach ... nuair a bheidh sé ag feidhmiú cumhachta'. See the commentary on Article 40.4.6° for early translations of 'interfere' in the Acts.

toirmeasc This headword is translated as 'inhibition' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'ordú toirmisc' is translated as 'prohibition order' and 'toirmiscim' is translated as 'I prohibit'. Ó Dónaill translates 'toirmeasc' as 'prohibition; prevention, hindrance', citing 'níl aon duine ag cur toirmisc ort, nobody is stopping you' and 'an rud atá ag déanamh toirmisc dom, what is holding me back'. Dinneen translates 'toirmeasc' as 'act of hindering, prohibiting, forbidding; hindrance, prohibition, opposition, obstruction, dissension, mischief, row, mishap, set-back', citing 'do-ghníim toirmeasc, I cause mischief' and 'cuirim toirmeasc ar, I obstruct, challenge'. DIL s.v. 'tairmesc', 'hindering, restraining, preventing, prohibiting', cites 'guide dée cen nach tairmesc ó dethidin in betho .i. ó sétchi' ('to pray God without any interruption from the care of the world, that is, from a wife') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles.

'Toirmeasc' translates 'prohibit(ion)' in the Acts. See, for example – noting how 'a chur' follows this noun, rather than 'a dhéanamh', which qualifies 'rialáil' – s10 of the Sea Pollution Act, 1991, where 'prohibiting or regulating the discharge anywhere at sea' is translated as 'toirmeasc a chur nó rialáil a dhéanamh ar aon ... a scaoileadh amach aon áit ar farraige'. The Margin Title of s10 of the Road Traffic (Amendment) Act, 1978, 'Prohibition on driving vehicle while under influence of intoxicant' is translated as 'Toirmeasc ar dhuine faoi bhrí meiscigh feithicil a thiomáint'.

'I molest' is translated as 'cuirim isteach ar' in Téarmaí Dlí. In s515(1) of the Income Tax Act, 1967, as we saw above, 'If any person ... obstructs, molests or hinders ... an officer' is translated as 'Má dhéanann duine ar bith ... cosc, cur isteach, nó bac ... ar oifigeach'. In s90(6)(e) of the Road Traffic Act, 1961, 'provisions prohibiting persons from interfering with, obstructing or molesting a licensed parking attendant in the performance of his duties' is translated as 'forálacha á thoirmeasc ar dhaoine cur isteach ar fhreastalaí loctha ceadúnaithe nó é a bhac nó é a bhuaireamh agus é ag comhlíonadh a dhualgas'. Note that in the corresponding Article 20 of the 1922 Constitution, we find 'no a chuirfidh isteach ortha'. In s22(3) of the Family Law (Maintenance of Spouses and Children) Act, 1976, 'where a person ... molests or puts in fear his spouse' is translated as 'i gcás duine ... do chur ... araoid nó eagla ar a chéile'. Looking at early Acts, 'The offence of forcing, striking, or wilfully molesting any soldier acting as sentry' is translated as 'Aon tsaighdiúir atá ag gníomhú mar fhairtheoir d'fhórsáil no do bhuala, no toirmeasc do dhéanamh air go toiliúil' in s34(3) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. 'If any person shall at any time obstruct, hinder or molest the Commissioners ... in the performance of their duty' is translated as 'Má dhineann éinne aon uair na Coimisinéirí ... do bhac, do chosc no do bhuaireamh agus iad ag có-líona a ndualgais' in s78 of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925.

a cheapadh 'Ceapaim' is translated as 'I appoint' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill gives 'appoint, assign' as one of the senses of 'ceap', citing 'an lá a cheapadh, (on) the appointed day'; 'ar an uair a bhí ceaptha, at the appointed hour' and 'cheap sé aimsir chuige, he fixed a time for it'. Dinneen cites 'do cheapas lá don chruinniughadh, I fixed upon a day for the assembly'. DIL only cites five examples of the verb 'ceppaid', which is translated as 'shapes, forms, fashions' and 'confines, restricts'. See the commentary on Article 6.1.

Turning specifically to 'attach', 'I attach (for contempt, etc)' is translated as 'astaím' in Téarmaí Dlí. We find the following entry in A Dictionary of Irish Law s.v. 'attachment':

An order which directs that a person be brought before the court to answer the contempt in respect of which the order is issued e.g. the failure of a witness without lawful excuse to attend court having been served with a subpoena and having been paid or offered a reasonable sum for his expenses.

The Shorter Oxford Dictionary has the following entry s.v. 'attach':

Law. To place or take under control of a court; to arrest or seize by authority of a writ of attachment.

Ó Dónaill translates 'astaigh' as (1) (Jurisprudence) 'attach' and (2) '= fostaigh', which headword is translated as 'catch, hold fast, grip', with the secondary sense of 'engage ... , hire, employ'. Dinneen refers the reader to 'fostuighim', 'I stop, hold, moor, fasten ...' s.v. 'astuighim'. In s176(6)(c)(iv) of the Corporation Tax Act, 1976, 'the allowance shall attach or remain attached to that trade' is translated as 'rachaidh an liúntas in astú, nó fanfaidh sé in astú, sa trádáil sin'. In s28(1) of the Family Law (Maintenance of Spouses and Children) Act, 1976, 'the liability for the payment of such periodical sum shall attach to his estate as a civil debt' is translated as 'rachaidh dliteanas an tsuim thréimhsiúil sin a íoc in astú dá eastát mar fhiach sibhialta'. In s26(4) of the Landlord and Tenant (Ground Rents) (No. 2) Act, 1978, 'any condition specified in the instrument ... shall attach to the fee simple' is translated as 'aon choinníoll a shonraítear san ionstraim ... rachaidh sé in astú san fheo simplí'. Note that 'A licensee who does not comply with a condition attached to the licence' is translated as 'Aon cheadúnaí nach ndéanfaidh de réir coinnill a bheidh i gceangal leis an gceadúnas' in s6(2) of the Free Ports Act, 1986.

In the corresponding Article 20 of the 1922 Constitution we find 'beidh de chomhacht aige pionós do chur i bhfeidhm i dtaobh a mbriste', literally, 'it will have the power to enforce a penalty for their breaking'. The Margin Title of s10 of the Damage to Property (Compensation) Act, 1923, 'Attachment of re-instatement conditions to decrees in respect of buildings', is translated as 'Coinníollacha ath-shuidhimh do chur le haitheanta i dtaobh foirgintí'. 'The Circuit Judges shall have powers of attachment, injunction, garnishee, interpleader' is translated as 'Beidh ag na Breithimh Chuarda comhachta ceangail, stop, garnisé, idirphléideála' in s57 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924.

saoirse aighnis 'Aighneas' is translated as (1) 'argument, discussion', (2) 'submission (in argument, lawsuit)' with 'cead aighnis' translated as 'leave to speak (in course of argument)' in Ó Dónaill, where 'talkedness' and 'address' are given as two further secondary senses. Dinneen translates 'aighneas' as 'discussion, trouble, contention, argument, conversation'. 'Aignes' is translated as 'arguing, pleading; argument' in DIL, being based on 'aigne', 'one learned in law or in the practice of law; lawyer, advocate, pleader', found in the modern compound 'Ard-Aighne', 'Attorney General' – see the commentary on Article 30.1.

'Trade dispute' is translated as 'aighneas ceirde' in the Industrial Relations Act, 1946, and in subsequent Acts. In s5(4) of the Industrial Relations Act, 1969, 'If any dispute arises as to the claim of any person to ... any pension' is translated as 'Má éiríonn aon aighneas maidir le héileamh aon duine ag éileamh ... aon phinsin'. In s541 of the Income Tax Act, 1967, 'at the time when any matter in controversy in any such proceedings arose' is translated as 'an tráth a bhí aon ní faoi aighneas in aon imeachtaí den sórt sin'.

The sections headed 'Rules of Debate' in the current Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann are entitled 'Rialacha Díospóireachta', and 'debate' is translated as 'díospóireacht' in the sections themselves. The Margin Title of s48, 'Debating of motions and amendments', is translated as 'Díospóireacht ar thairiscintí agus ar leasuithe' and 'A motion or amendment shall not be debated until ...' is translated as 'Ní dhéanfar díospóireacht ar thairiscint ná ar leasú go dtí ...'. 'Díospóireacht' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'debate' in the 1926 Standing Orders. Note how we find 'saoirse dhíospóireachta' in the corresponding Article 20 of the 1922 Constitution.

scribhinní We also find 'scribhinní' in the corresponding Article 20 of the 1922 Constitution, 'the custody of ... all public archives and records and of papers and documents of State' being translated as 'cimeád na n-annálacha agus na mbreacachán bpuiblí go léir agus cimeád páipéirí agus scribhinní Stáit' in s1(i) of the Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1924. 'Scribhinn' is translated as 'script' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'scribhinn na fianaise' is translated as 'transcript of evidence'. Ó Dónaill translates 'scribhinn' as 'writing, written document', Dinneen translating this headword as 'handwriting, screeving; a manuscript or document, a literary composition, evidence or authority in writing, a writ, bill or bond, superscription or inscription'. Old Irish 'scribend' comes from Latin 'scribendum' and is translated as (1) (as verbal noun of 'scribaid'), 'act of writing' and (2) 'of that which is written, (a) of books, manuscripts, etc.' in DIL, where 'scribinnd ind libuir so' ('[the day] of writing this book') is cited from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. See further the commentary on Article 27.2.

'Document' is translated as 'doiciméad' in Téarmaí Dlí. In s89 of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, 'Unauthorised inspection of documents' is translated as 'Iniúchadh neamhúdaraithé ar dhoiciméid'. In s22(4) of the Health Act, 1970, 'he shall forthwith hand over to the board all books, deeds, contracts, accounts, vouchers, maps, plans and other documents in his possession' is translated as 'seachadfaidh sé láithreach don bhord na leabhair, na gníomhais, na conarthaí, na cuntais, na deimhneithe, na léarscáileanna, na pleananna agus na doiciméid eile go léir a bheidh ina sheilbh'. In s42(1)(b) of the Succession Act, 1965, 'copies of all wills the originals of which are to be preserved in district probate registries' is translated as 'cóipeanna de gach uacht a mbeidh a scribhinn bhunaidh le caomhnú i gclárlanna probháide ceantair'. In s14(1)(b) of the Decimal Currency Act, 1970, 'wills, documents and all other writings of a formal legal kind' is translated as 'uachtanna, doiciméid agus gach scribhinn eile de ghné dhlíthiúil fhoirmiúil'. Note, finally, that 'páipéar' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'document' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1922/23.

a chur in áirithe We also find this phrase in the corresponding Article 20 of the 1922 Constitution (as 'do chur in áirithe'). 'In áirithe' is translated as 'reserved, engaged' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'suíochán a chur in áirithe, to book a seat' and 'culaith a chur in áirithe, to bespeak a suit'. Dinneen translates 'cuirim i n-áirithe' as 'I engage, secure'. See the commentary on Article 28.3.3°.

In s5 of the Judicial Separation and Family Law Reform Act, 1989, 'safeguards to ensure applicants' awareness of alternatives to ...' is translated as 'cosaintí chun a áirithiú go bhfuil iarratasóir eolach ar roghanna seachas ...'. In s4(5) of the Charities Act, 1973, 'in such manner as the Board consider most effectual for ensuring publicity thereof' is translated as 'i cibé slí is fearr dar leis an mBord chun a phoibliú a áirithiú'. In s118(1) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, 'in order to ensure the smooth and efficient holding of the election and to secure uniformity of procedure in regard thereto' is translated as 'chun a áirithint go ndéanfar an toghchán a stiúradh go réidh agus go héifeachtach agus chun comhionannas a nós imeachta ina leith a chur in áirithe'.

a dhéanfadh iarracht ar See, for an example of this construction in the Acts, s75(1)(b) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, where 'if ... he attempts to ascertain ... the number on the back of any ballot paper' is translated as 'má dhéanann sé ... iarracht chun a fháil amach ... cad é an uimhir atá ar chúl aon pháipéir bhallóide'. Note how this phrase is translated as 'a thabharfaidh faoi' in the corresponding Article 20 of the 1922 Constitution, 'tabhair faoi' being more usual in the Acts. Note finally that in s25(2)(a) of the Misuse of Drugs Act, 1977, for example, 'that an offence under this Act ... has been committed or attempted' is translated as 'go ndearnadh cion faoin Acht seo ... nó féachadh lena dhéanamh'.

pionós See the commentary on Article 13.6. This headword is translated as 'penalty' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'pionós báis, capital punishment' is cited. In the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97 (p. 7), for example, 'coupled with penalties for failure' is translated as 'agus san am céanna pionóis i gcás loiceadh'. Note that while we find 'pionós' in the 1922 Constitution both 'fineáil' and 'peannaid' were also used in early Acts to translate 'penalty'. 'Shall be liable to the penalty imposed by section 107' is translated as 'beidh sé i mbaol na fineála atá gearrtha amach le halt 107' in s6(4) of the Finance Act, 1923, with 'affect any penalty, forfeiture, or punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed against any enactment so repealed' being translated as 'baint le haon pheannaid, cailliúint, ná pionós a tuilleadh mar gheall ar aon chionta a dineadh i gcoinnibh aon achtachán a hathghairmeadh amhlaidh' in s13(2)(d) of the Interpretation Act, 1923. Finally, 'i bpéin fineála' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'under a penalty of ...' in translations for the Department of Industry and Commerce.

saoirse This headword is translated as 'freedom' in Ó Dónaill, where 'saoirse cainte' is translated as 'freedom of speech' and 'saoirse coinsiasa' is translated as 'liberty of conscience'. The secondary sense of 'immunity, exemption' is also given in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'saoirse fónaimh, exemption from service'. Dinneen translates 'saoirse' as 'freedom, liberty, independence, franchise, immunity, freedom from restriction, "rights" ...'. DIL translates 'sairse' as (a) 'freedom, liberty, the status of a freeman' and (b) 'exemption, immunity' – see the commentary on Article 40.4.1°.

a bhuan-orduithe 'Buanorduithe' is translated as 'standing orders' in Ó Dónaill, where this compound is unhyphenated. It does not seem to be given as a headword in Dinneen. Note that in Article 20 of the 1922 Constitution, this was given in initial capitals in the English text. 'Buanordaithe' is hyphenated in the title Buan-Orduithe i dtaobh Gnó Phoiblí / Standing Orders relative to Public Business (1997). Note how 'moltóir seasaimh' translates 'standing arbitrator' in the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923 (Continuance and Amendment) Act, 1924 (reference in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms), with 'buan-mholtóir' being found in s8(4) of the Railways (Existing Officers and Servants) Act, 1926.

de chumhacht See s11(3)(c) of the Health Act, 1970, for example, where 'the board shall have power to hold and dispose of land' is translated as 'beidh cumhacht ag an mbord talamh a shealbhú agus a dhíúscairt'. See further the commentary on Articles 13.6 and 13.9.

do lucht a sáraithe 'Sárú' is translated as 'breach', 'contravention' and 'infringement' in Téarmaí Dlí. See the commentary on Article 15.5.

TÉACS GAELGE

Taobh amuigh de chás dá socraítear a mhalairt leis an mBunreacht seo is é slí a dtabharfar breith ar gach ceist i ngach Teach ar leith ná le formhór vótaí na gcomhaltáí a bheas i láthair agus a dhéanfas vótáil ach gan an Cathaoirleach nó an comhalta a bheas i gceannas a áireamh.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Apart from a case for which an alternative is provided for by this Constitution the way judgement will be given on each question in each particular House is by a majority of the votes of the members (who will be) present and voting but not including the Chairman or the member who will be / is in charge.

ENGLISH TEXT

All questions in each House shall, save as otherwise provided by this Constitution, be determined by a majority of the votes of the members present and voting other than the Chairman or presiding member.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'All questions shall be determined by a majority ...' is expressed in the Irish text as 'is é sli a dtabharfar breith ar gach ceist ná le formhór ...' ('the way each question will be judged/decided is by a majority'); 'I determine (issue, etc.)' is translated as 'cinnim' in Téarmaí Dlí.
- 2 'Other than the Chairman' is expressed as 'gan an Cathaoirleach ... a áireamh' ('not including the Chairman') in the Irish text.
- 3 As in some other sections, 'each House' is expressed as 'gach Teach ar leith' ('each particular House') in the Irish text.

Note how a great effort was made to adhere to the wording of the current Article, which is specifically referred to, in s72 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), and yet 'foráiltear' is substituted for 'socráitear', 'cinnfear' is substituted for 'tabharfar breith' and 'tromlach' is substituted for 'formhór':

Questions in the Dáil or in a Committee of the whole Dáil, shall, save as otherwise provided by this Constitution, be determined by a majority of the votes of the members present and voting, other than the Ceann Comhairle, or presiding member, who shall have and exercise a casting vote in the case of an equality of votes [See Article 15.11 of the Constitution]. Taobh amuigh de chás dá bhforáiltear a mhalairt leis an mBunreacht, is é sli ina gcinnfear ceisteanna sa Dáil nó i gCoiste den Dáil uile ná le tromlach vótaí na gcomhaltaí a bheidh i láthair agus a dhéanfaidh vótáil, ach gan an Ceann Comhairle, nó an comhalta a bheidh i gceannas, a áireamh, agus beidh vóta cinniúna aige nó aici sin nach foláir dó nó di a thabhairt más ionann líon na vótaí ar an dá thaobh [Féach Airteagal 15.11 den Bhunreacht].

Note also that Article 22 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

All matters in each House shall, save as otherwise provided by this Constitution, be determined by a majority of the votes of the members present other than the Chairman or presiding member ... Socrófar gach ceist i ngach Tigh, ach amháin mar a bhfuil a mhalairt de shocrú sa Bhun-reacht so, le mór-áireamh de vótanna na mball atá láithreach, lasmuich den Cheann Chomhairle no den bhall atá i gceannas.

Commentary

Taobh amuigh de chás Literally 'outside of a case'. For a translation of a version of this standard phrase in the Acts, see s1(4) of the Health Act, 1970, where 'Save as otherwise specifically provided for, this Act shall come into operation ...' is translated as 'Ach amháin mar a bhforáiltear go sonrach dá mhalairt, tiocfaidh an tAcht seo i ngníomh ...'. In s146(6) of the Mines and Quarries Act, 1965, 'Save as otherwise expressly provided by this Act' is translated as 'Ach amháin mar a fhoráiltear a mhalairt go sainráite leis an Acht seo'. In s498 of the Income Tax Act, 1967, 'Save as otherwise expressly provided by any provision of this Act' is translated as 'Acht amháin mar a bhforáiltear a mhalairt go sainráite le haon fhoráil den Acht seo'. We find '... mar a fhoráiltear' in Treaties establishing the European Communities (1973, p. 935); 'mar a bhforáiltear' is also cited in a translation of 'European' legislation. In the Treaty on European Union (1992) 'mura bhforáiltear a mhalairt' translates 'save as otherwise provided'. See the commentary on Article 13.9 for early translations and note that 'in contract and tort (save matrimonial and criminal conversation actions)' is translated as 'i gcás connartha agus tort (lasmuich d'aicsein i gcúrsaí pósa agus comhráidh choiriúla)' in s48(ii) of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924.

formhór This headword is translated as 'greater part, majority' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'formhór na ndaoine, the majority of the people' and 'formhór an lae, most of the day'. Dinneen translates 'urmhór' as 'very many, very much, majority or greater part', citing 'urmhór an airgid, the greater part of the money'. The earlier form, 'airmór', based on 'mór' and translated as 'very great', 'most of' and 'the greater part of' in DIL, is cited in the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms.

We find 'formhór' translating 'the greater part' in s4(8)(a) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, where 'their value or the greater part of their value' is translated as 'a luach nó formhór a luacha'. 'Formhór' is mainly found in the Acts in the phrases 'd'aontoisc / go haonarach nó go formhór' and 'go hiomlán nó go formhór' translating 'solely or principally/mainly' and 'wholly or mainly' respectively. 'Tromlach' generally translates 'majority' in the Acts and replaces 'formhór' in the version of the current Article in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann. See the commentary on Articles 13.2.2° and 14.4 regarding 'majority' in the Acts.

breith This headword is translated as 'decision' in Téarmaí Dlí and as 'judgment, decision' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'breith a thabhairt ar chás' as 'to decide a case' and 'is réidh agaibh breith a thabhairt orm' as 'it is easy for you to judge me'. Dinneen translates 'breith' as 'judgment, decision, sentence; doom, fate'. 'Act of judging, deciding; judgment, legal ruling, interpretation' is just one of the senses of Old Irish 'breith', the verbal noun of 'beirid', the others being 'act of carrying', 'act of bearing, birth', 'taking (with one)', 'winning', 'act of carrying off, away' and 'act of catching up on, overtaking' – see DIL s.v. 'breith'. 'Tabhairt' is the prototonic form of 'do-beir'; therefore, in 'breith a thabhairt' you have the verbal noun of 'beir' along with a form of 'do-beir'. Examples of 'breith' with the simple verb 'beirid' itself ('figura etymologica') are found in the Old Irish Glosses: in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, for example, we find 'berid cách brith for arele' ('each gives judgement on the other') glossing Latin 'suspicionem malae'. See further the commentary on Article 34.3.1°.

In s8(4) of the Dublin Cemeteries Committee Act, 1970, 'every question at a meeting of the Committee shall be determined by a majority of the votes of the members present and voting' is translated as 'Déanfar gach ceist ag cruinniú den Choiste a chinneadh le tromlach vótaí na gcomhaltaí a bheidh i láthair agus a vótáilfaidh ar an gceist', the same text (with 'Board' replacing 'Committee') being translated as 'is le tromlach vótaí na gcomhaltaí a bheidh i láthair agus a vótáilfaidh a chinnfear gach ceist ag cruinniú den Bhord' in s15 of the Second Schedule to the Fisheries Act, 1980. 'Cinn' expresses 'determine' in Article 1.

i gceannas Ó Dónaill translates 'dul i gceannas' as 'to assume authority, command', translating 'i gceannas airm' as ‘in command of an army’ and ‘i gceannas cruinnithe, ar chruinniú’ as ‘presiding at a meeting’. ‘Lucht ceannais’ is translated as ‘persons in authority’ and ‘an fear ceannais’ as ‘the man in charge’. Dinneen translates ‘ceannas’ as ‘headship, authority, power, superiority; importance’. DIL translates ‘cennas’, based on ‘cenn’ (‘head’) as ‘headship, leadership, superiority, precedence’.

‘Presiding officer’ is translated as ‘oifigeach ceannais’ in s1(e) of the Referendum (Amendment) Act, 1968, and in s16(7) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977. ‘The presiding member of the Board may administer oaths’ is translated as ‘féadfaidh an comhalta den Bhord a bheidh i gceannas daoine a chur faoi mhionn’ in s27(1)(a) of the Midwives Act, 1944. ‘Exclusive of the Chairman or presiding member’ is translated as ‘gan an Ceann Comhairle nó an ball i gceannas d’áireamh’ in Part II of the Schedule to the Constitution (Amendment No. 24) Act, 1936. ‘The Chairman if present shall preside at every meeting’ is translated as ‘Beidh an Cathaoirleach i gceannas gach tionóil den Choiste má bhíonn sé i láthair’ in s6(1) of the Pilotage Orders Confirmation Act, 1924.

a áireamh ‘Áireamh’ is the verbal noun of ‘áirigh’, ‘count, reckon’; Ó Dónaill translates ‘rud ar bith is fiú a áireamh’ as ‘anything worth counting, including’. Dinneen translates ‘áirmhim’ as ‘I count, reckon, consider, record; I speak of, mention, take into account’, citing ‘ní fiú iad d’áireamh, they are not worth considering’. Old Irish ‘áram’, verbal noun of ‘ad-rími’, is translated as ‘act of counting, reckoning, estimating; number, numeral’ in DIL s.v. ‘áiream’. See further the commentary on Article 18.7.1<sup>iv</sup>.

In the Acts generally ‘a áireamh’ translates ‘including’, the negative translating ‘exclude’/ ‘disregard’ – see, for example, s49(d) of the Finance Act, 1990, where ‘Any tax ... may be included in one assessment’ is translated as ‘Féadfar aon cháin ... a áireamh in aon mheasúnacht amháin’ and s60(1) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, where ‘any fractional remainder being disregarded’ is translated as ‘gan aon fhuilleach codánach a áireamh’. On the other hand, in s34(2)(a) of the Finance Act, 1990, ‘an amount so specified or implied, other than a distribution’ is translated as ‘ar mhéid a bheidh sonraithe nó intuigthe amhlaidh, seachas dáileadh ...’. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú, commenting on the translation below, favours ‘ach gan an Cathaoirleach ... a áireamh’ to ‘seachas an Cathaoirleach ...’.

a dhéanfas vótáil For the special form of the relative in ‘-s’, see the commentary on Article 6.1. ‘I vote’ is translated as ‘vótálaim’ in Téarmaí Dlí.

ar leith See the commentary on Articles 12.3.3<sup>o</sup> and 15.9.1<sup>o</sup>.

Taobh amuigh de chás dá socráitear a mhalairt leis an mBunreacht seo is é slí a dtabharfar breith ar gach ceist i ngach Teach ar leith ná le formhór vótaí na gcomhaltaí a bheidh i láthair agus a dhéanfaidh vótáil ach gan an cathaoirleach nó an comhalta a bheidh i gceannas a áireamh.

TÉACS GAELGE

Más ionann líon na vótaí ar an dá thaobh beidh ag an gCathaoirleach, nó ag an gcomhalta a bheas i gceannas, vóta cinniúna nach foláir dó a thabhairt.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If the number of votes on the two sides is the same the Chairman, or the member (who will be) in charge, will have a deciding vote which he must give.

ENGLISH TEXT

The Chairman or presiding member shall have and exercise a casting vote in the case of an equality of votes.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 ‘A casting vote’ is expressed in the Irish text as ‘vóta cinniúna’, literally ‘a deciding vote’; ‘vóta réitigh’ translates ‘casting vote’ in Téarmaí Dlí and in the 1922 Constitution.
- 2 ‘In the case of an equality of votes’ is expressed as ‘Más ionann líon na vótaí ar an dá thaobh’ (‘If the number of votes on both sides is the same’) in the Irish text.
- 3 ‘(He) shall ... exercise a casting vote’ is expressed as ‘vóta cinniúna nach foláir dó a thabhairt’ (‘he must give a casting vote’) in the Irish text, with ‘shall’ again being expressed as ‘(nach) foláir’ (‘must’) in the Irish text, as we have seen in some other sections.

Note that Article 22 of the 1922 Constitution contains the following:

... other than the Chairman or presiding member, who shall have and exercise a casting vote in the case of an equality of votes .... lasmuich den Cheann Chomhairle nó den bhall atá i gceannas, ag a mbeidh vóta réitigh agus ar a mbeidh é chaitheamh má’s ionann vótanna an dá thaobh.

Commentary

ionann This headword is translated as ‘same, identical; alike, equal’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘is ionann iad, they are identical’. Dinneen translates ‘ionann’ as ‘the same, identical; equal, equivalent, similar, alike; uniform, even, level’. DIL cites examples from the Old Irish Glosses onwards, including the following from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles: ‘ar is innon iress nodonfríanigedar’ (‘for it is the same faith that justifies us’). See further the commentary on Article 22.2.3<sup>o</sup>.

In s24(6) of the Health Act, 1970, 'in case of equality of votes on any question, the chairman shall have a second or casting vote' is translated as 'i gcás comhionannas vótaí ar aon cheist, beidh an dara vóta nó vóta cinniúna ag an gcathaoirleach'. In s17(4) of the Second Schedule to the same Act, 'Whenever ... there is an equality of votes for two or more persons' is translated as 'Aon uair a tharlóidh ... gur comhionann an uimhir vótaí do bheirt daoine nó níos mó'. In s61 of the First Schedule to the Companies Act, 1963, 'When there is an equality of votes' is again translated as 'I gcás comhionannas vótaí'. Note, finally, that 'in the case of an equality of votes' is translated as 'i gcás có-ionannas vótanna' in Article 35 of the 1922 Constitution.

vóta cinniúna Literally 'deciding vote', here expressing 'casting vote', which phrase is translated as 'vóta réitigh' (literally 'settling vote') in Téarmaí Dlí. Unlike the latter term, 'vóta cinniúna' does not seem to be cited in Ó Dónaill. 'Cinniúna' is the genitive singular of 'cinniúint'. Ó Dónaill gives 'fate' as the basic sense of 'cinniúint' but has 'cinneadh' as the standard form of the second headword 'cinniúint' therein, 'cinneadh' being the verbal noun of 'cinn', 'fix, determine, decree'. 'Cinnemain' is the late verbal noun of 'cinnid' (based on 'cenn', 'head'), translated as 'defines, fixes, settles; completes, finishes' and 'decides (on a course of action), makes a decision', in DIL.

We see above s.v. 'ionann', that 'vóta cinniúna' translates 'casting vote' in s24(6) of the Health Act, 1970, but in the above-mentioned s61 of the First Schedule to the Companies Act, 1963, 'the chairman of the meeting at which the show of hands takes place ... shall be entitled to a second or casting vote' is translated as 'beidh teideal ag cathaoirleach an chruinniúna, a ndéanfar an taispeáint lámh ... aige, chun an dara vóta nó vóta réitigh a thabhairt'. In s15 of the Second Schedule to the Fisheries Act, 1980, 'the chairman shall have a casting vote' is translated as 'beidh vóta réitigh ag an gcathaoirleach'. We also find 'an vóta réitigh' in the Treaty on European Union (1992, p. 153).

vóta ... a thabhairt Ó Dónaill cites 'do vóta a thabhairt do dhuine, to give one's vote to someone' and 'do vóta a chaitheamh, to record one's vote'. In s2(g) of Article XI of Part 2 of the Schedule to the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, 1957, 'all territories in respect of which they exercise a mandate' is translated as '(chun na) gcríoch uile a bhfuil mandáid á feidhmiú ag an rialtas sin ina leith'. In s74(d) of the First Schedule to the European Elections Act, 1977, 'to impede or prevent the free exercise of the franchise by any Assembly elector' is translated as 'saorchleachtadh an toghchórais ag aon toghthóir Tionóil a bhac nó a chosc'. 'The Governor may ... exercise a second or casting vote' is translated as 'féadfaidh an Gobharnóir ... vóta breise no réitigh do chaitheamh' in s32(4) of the Central Bank Act, 1942, 'exercise a casting vote' being translated as 'vóta réitigh do thabhairt uaidh' in s16(3) of the Agriculture Act, 1931. Note that 'The directors may exercise the voting powers' is translated as 'Féadfaidh na stiúrthóirí na cumhachtaí vótála ... a fheidhmiú' in s8 of Part II of the First Schedule to the Companies Act, 1963. See further the commentary on Article 16.1.4° and see the commentary on Article 3 regarding 'exercise' in the Acts. Note that 'vóta a thabhairt' expresses 'cast a vote' in Article 47.1.

ag an gcomhalta a bheas i gceannas See the commentary on the foregoing subsection s.v. 'i gceannas'.

a bheas On the special form of the relative in '-s', see the commentary on Article 6.1.

Commentary

cén méid Ó Dónaill s.v. 'méid', cites 'cad é an méid, cén méid, airgid a chaill tú? How much money did you lose? See, however, s.v. 'méad', 'cá mhéad duine atá ann? How many persons are there?' 'Cá mhéad míle a shiúil tú? How many miles did you walk?' and 'Cá mhéad uair? How many times?' Old Irish 'mét' is translated as 'greatness, magnitude' in DIL s.v. 'méit', where 'cia méit?' is translated as 'how much (many)', 'cia mmeeit' glossing Latin 'quanta' and 'quantum' in the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms, while 'ce mét aimmser' ('how many times') is cited from the St Gall Glosses on Priscian. Note that 'cia an méid comhalta' is the form of this phrase in the original text.

In s78 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), for example, 'Such motion shall ... fix the number of members to serve on it' (i.e. on a Committee) is translated as 'Sa tairiscint sin ... socrófar an líon comhaltaí atá le fónamh air'.

do thionól 'Tionól neamhdhleathach' is translated as 'unlawful assembly' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill translates 'tionól' as 'gathering, assembly', while Dinneen translates this headword as 'act of assembling, mobilising, convening, collecting; an assembly, a gathering, a crowd, an army, a gang; marriage gifts or goods'. DIL translates 'tinól' as (a) 'act of collecting, gathering', (b) 'an (armed) assembly; band, company' and (c) 'that part of the marriage contribution which consisted of cattle'. 'Tinól' is the verbal noun of 'do-inóla', translated in DIL as 'gathers, collects; (of armies) musters, assembles', citing 'do-thionóilsíod a n-oireachtas un an áird-righ' from the Battle of Magh Leana and 'is na h-aimsir rotineoilid in seanad i Constantin' from the Irish version of the Historia Britonum of Nennius. See further the commentary on Articles 18.8 and 40.6.1<sup>ii</sup>.

In s19 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), for example, 'The quorum necessary to constitute a meeting of the Dáil shall be twenty members' is translated as 'Fiche comhalta an córam is gá chun tionól den Dáil a bheith ann'. 'In order to constitute a meeting of a committee' is translated as 'D'fhonn cruinniú coiste a bheith ann' in s5 of the Fifth Schedule to the Industrial Relations Act, 1990, with 'Chun cruinniú de choiste a bheith ann' in s5 of the Second Schedule to the Industrial Relations Act, 1946. See the commentary on Articles 13.2.3<sup>o</sup> and 16.5 regarding 'meeting' and on Article 14.1 regarding 'constitute'.

i gcumas Ó Dónaill translates 'bheith i gcumas rud a dhéanamh' as 'to be able, have the capacity, to do something'. Dinneen translates 'níl sé ar mo chumas' as 'I am not able to do it, I have it not in my power or at my disposal', with 'ar chumas dam, im' chumas' having the same sense. 'Commus', verbal noun of 'con-midethar', is translated in DIL as (a) 'act of controlling, arranging, directing' and (b) 'power, ability, capacity', this being the usual sense, according to DIL. See the commentary on Article 14.2.2<sup>o</sup>.

a chinnfear 'Cinnim' is translated as 'I determine (issue, etc.)' and 'I find', in Téarmaí Dlí – see the commentary on Article 1.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Gach tuarascáil agus foilseachán oifigiúil ón Oireachtas agus ó gach Teach de, maille le caint ar bith dá ndéantar in aon Teach díobh, táid saor ar chúrsaí dlí cibé áit a bhfoilsítear.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Every official publication and report from the Oireachtas and from each of its Houses, along with any statement made in any of those Houses, they are free from matters of law wherever (they are) published.

ENGLISH TEXT

All official reports and publications of the Oireachtas or of either House thereof and utterances made in either House wherever published shall be privileged.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Shall be privileged' is expressed as 'táid saor ar chúrsaí dlí' ('they are free from matters of law') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Utterances' is expressed as 'caint ar bith' ('any utterance') in the Irish text; the term 'caint' (lit. 'talk') renders 'utterance' in the Acts also.
- 3 The English is syntactically ambiguous, in that 'publications' may, or may not, be governed by 'official'; the Irish here is equally, though divergently, ambiguous in that 'tuarascáil' ('report') may, or may not, be governed by 'oifigiúil'.
- 4 'Of either House' is expressed as 'ó gach Teach' ('of each House') in the Irish text.
- 5 'Shall be' is expressed by the present tense 'táid' ('they are') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 19 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

All official reports and publications of the Oireachtas or of either House thereof shall be privileged, and utterances made in either House wherever published shall be privileged. Beidh gach tuairisc agus foillsiúchán oifigiúil den Oireachtas no d'aon Tigh de fé phribhléid agus beidh gach ní adéarfair in aon Tigh de fé phribhléid is cuma cá bhfoillseófar é.

J.M. Kelly (op. cit., p. 206) reports as follows regarding reference to Article 15.12 in the courts:

In Attorney General v Hamilton (No. 1) ([1993] 2 IR 250; [1993] IRLM 81) McCarthy J referred to the Irish version of the concluding sentence of Article 15.12 (‘táid saor ar chúrsaí dlí’) and said that this emphasised that the word ‘privileged’ had the same connotation in the law of defamation. This view was not, however, accepted by the Supreme Court in Attorney General v Hamilton (No. 2) ([1993] IRLM 821) where Finlay CJ stressed that the literal translation of the phrase – táid saor ar chúrsaí dlí – was ‘free from legal proceedings’. This ‘very clearly indicate[d] that there are a great variety of legal proceedings which could follow upon the making of an utterance over and beyond a claim for damages for defamation, were it not for the privilege and immunity granted by Article 15.12’.

Commentary

saor ar chúrsaí dlí ‘Saoraim’ is translated as ‘I exonerate’ in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill translates ‘saor’ as ‘free’, giving as secondary senses ‘blameless, innocent (ar, ó, of)’, citing ‘saor ar choir; innocent of an offence’, ‘saor ó locht, free from fault’ and ‘tá mise saor air; I have nothing to do with it’, along with ‘immune, exempt (ar, ó, from)’, citing ‘saor ar ghabháil, free from arrest’, ‘saor ó chíos, free from rent’ and ‘táimid saor ar an dream sin, we are under no obligation to those people’. Dinneen includes ‘exempt’ among his list of senses of ‘saor’ and translates ‘saor ar’ as ‘free of, free from’, followed by ‘saor ó, id.’ DIL translates ‘saor ar/for’ as ‘independent (of), not bound (by)’, citing ‘is saor e ar a cinaid’ (‘he is free from responsibility for damage done by them’ [of cows]) and ‘is saer iat ar cinaid a mbid’ (‘exempt from the liability of [supplying] food’) from commentaries on early Irish law-tracts.

‘Privileged’ is translated as ‘faoi phribhléid’ in Téarmaí Dlí, as in Article 19 of the 1922 Constitution. ‘Faoi phribhléid’ replaces the phrase of the present section in s2(2) of the Committee of Public Accounts of Dáil Éireann (Privilege and Procedure) Act, 1970 and of the Committee of the Houses of the Oireachtas (Privilege and Procedure) Act, 1976. Note how closely s2(2) of the Committee of Public Accounts of Dáil Éireann (Privilege and Procedure) Act, 1970, adheres to the present section of the Constitution in other respects:

... all official reports and publications of the committee, and (c) the utterances in the committee of the members ... of the committee, wherever published shall be privileged. ... beidh tuarascálacha agus foilseacháin oifigiúla uile an choiste, agus (c) beidh cibé caint a dhéanfaidh comhaltaí ... sa choiste, cibé áit a bhfoilséofar an céanna, faoi phribhléid.

In s2(1) of the Committees of the Houses of the Oireachtas (Privilege and Procedure) Act, 1976, the same English text (with ‘a committee’ replacing ‘the committee’ in the first two occasions above) is translated as follows:

Beidh ... gach tuarascáil oifigiúil agus gach foilseachán oifigiúil ó choiste agus (c) an chaint i gcoiste ... a dhéanfaidh ... comhaltaí an choiste, faoi phribhléid cibé áit a bhfoilséofar iad.

‘And such publication shall be privileged’ is translated as ‘agus beidh an foilseachán sin faoi phribhléid’ in s47(3) of the Building Societies Act, 1989.

caint This headword is translated as ‘speech, talk’ in Ó Dónaill, with secondary sense of ‘address, discourse’,

Ó Dónaill citing ‘caint a dhéanamh ar, faoi, rud, to speak about something’. Dinneen translates ‘cainnt’ as ‘talk, speech, conversation, style; an expression’. DIL s.v. ‘cainnt’, cites ‘caint ard do denum, to talk loudly’, from Rosa Anglica. ‘Cainnt’ is apparently the verbal noun of ‘canaid’ (‘sing’) – see DIL s.v. ‘cainnt’. DIL gives ‘speaks, tells, announces, utters’ as the secondary sense of ‘canaid’ (primarily ‘sings, chants, recites’), citing ‘ní chanuit gó tria bhithu’ (‘they never tell a lie’) from the Gaelic abridgment of the book of Ser Marco Polo. Note, incidentally, that the word ‘insce’ (the general meaning of ‘inscne’ today being ‘gender’), translated in DIL as ‘a saying, speech, statement, word (in sense the Word [of God, etc.]); a language’, is translated as ‘utterance’ in the following gloss from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles: ‘is menand is dind insci rian lenid’ (‘that he adheres to the previous utterance’). ‘I utter (a forgery)’ is translated as ‘rithim (brionnú)’ in Téarmaí Dlí.

The Margin Title of s58 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), ‘Privilege: utterances in the nature of being defamatory’, is translated as ‘Pribhléid: caint de chineál clúmhillteach’, ss(1) reading as follows:

A member shall not make an utterance in the nature of being defamatory. Ní dhéanfaidh comhalta caint de chineál clúmhillteach.

Note how ‘utterances made in either House’ is translated as ‘gach ní adéarfáir in aon Tigh den Oireachtas’ in Article 19 of the 1922 Constitution. ‘In respect of any utterance in either House’ is translated as ‘i dtaobh éinní dá ndéarfá sé in aon Tigh den dá Thigh’ in Article 18. Note further that Article 15.12 is very closely followed in the Committee of Public Accounts of Dáil Éireann (Privilege and Procedure) Act, 1970, and in the Committees of the Houses of the Oireachtas (Privilege and Procedure) Act, 1976, ‘cibé caint a dhéanfaidh comhaltaí’ translating ‘the utterances of the members’ in the former, and ‘an chaint ... a dhéanfaidh comhaltaí’ being found in the latter.

táid The more conservative synthetic third person plural, present tense, form of the substantive verb – see the commentary on Article 14.5.1° regarding the synthetic and analytic forms (‘tá siad’ in this case) of the verb in the Constitution. As against the numerous instances of ‘beidh’, we find ‘tá’ only in the following Articles: 15.13, 16.1.1°, 16.1.2°, 28.4.1°, 28.8, 29.7.3° (Article 2 of the 1998 Amendment), 44.2.5°, 45.2.i, 47.3; where it occurs, ‘tá’ usually expresses ‘shall’, as it does in the present section.

cúrsaí dlí ‘Matter, affair; circumstance’ is given as a secondary sense of ‘cúrsa’ in Ó Dónaill who translates ‘cúrsaí dlí’ as ‘legal matters’, Dinneen translating ‘cúrsaí dlíghidh’ as ‘legal proceedings (or matters)’. ‘Cúrsa’ is originally an English loanword, translated simply as ‘course’ in DIL, but which has undergone many developments of sense in Irish. See Article 37.1 where ‘cúrsaí coireachta’ expresses ‘criminal matters’.

cibé áit a bhfoilsítear ‘Foilsím’ is translated as ‘I publish’ in Téarmaí Dlí, the secondary sense of ‘foilsigh’ in Ó Dónaill, its primary sense being ‘reveal, disclose, make manifest’. Dinneen translates ‘foillsighim’ as ‘I show, reveal, exhibit, publish, explain; illustrate, describe’. The verb ‘foillsigid’ is based on ‘follus’ (‘clear’, ‘manifest’) and examples from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards are cited in DIL in the sense of ‘shows, reveals, discloses, makes manifest or known’.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Tá comhaltaí gach Ti den Oireachtas saor ar ghabháil le linn bheith i dtéarmann ceachtar den dá Theach nó ag teacht chuige nó ag imeacht uaidh, ach amháin i gcás tréasa, mar a mhínear sa Bhunreacht seo é, nó i gcás feileonachta nó briseadh síochána agus cibé caint a dhéanfaidh comhalta in aon Teach díobh ní inchúisithe é mar gheall uirthi in aon chúirt ná ag údarás ar bith ach amháin an Teach féin.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The members of each House of the Oireachtas are free from arrest while in the sanctuary of either of the two Houses or (while) coming to it or going from it, except in the case of treason, as it is defined in this Constitution, or in the case of felony or breaking the peace and, whatever statement a member will make in any of those Houses, he is not chargeable because of it in any court or by any authority except the House itself.

ENGLISH TEXT

The members of each House of the Oireachtas shall, except in case of treason as defined in this Constitution, felony or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest in going to and returning from, and while within the precincts of, either House, and shall not, in respect of any utterance in either House, be amenable to any court or any authority other than the House itself.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 ‘Shall not be amenable to any court or any authority’ is expressed as ‘ní inchúisithe é mar gheall uirthi in aon chúirt ná ag údarás ar bith’ (‘is not chargeable/prosecutable because of it in any court or by any authority’) in the Irish text.

- 2 ‘Be privileged from arrest’ is expressed as ‘saor ar ghabháil’ (‘be exempt from arrest’) in the Irish text.
- 3 ‘Within the precincts of’ is expressed as ‘i dtéarmann’ (‘in the sanctuary of’) in the Irish text.
- 4 In the original Irish text a semicolon follows ‘briseadh síochána’, which semicolon is not found in the later editions of the Stationery Office text. After this semi-colon, the Irish text begins an independent clause, but has as subject the singular ‘comhalta’ (‘a member’) as against ‘comhaltaí’ (‘the members’) in the first half of the section; the English text has two co-ordinate clauses governed by a single subject, ‘The members’.
- 5 The Irish text has ‘i dtéarmann ceachtar den dá Theach nó ag teacht chuige nó ag imeacht uaidh’ (‘in the precincts of either House or coming to it or going from it’) while the English text has ‘in going to and returning from, and while within the precincts of, either House’.
- 6 ‘In respect of any utterance’ is expressed as ‘cibé caint a dhéanfaidh ... mar gheall uirthi’ (‘because of whatever statement a member makes’) in the Irish text.
- 7 We find ‘Tá comhaltaí’ (‘Members are’) in the Irish text, as against ‘The members shall be’ in the English text.

Note that Article 18 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

Every member of the Oireachtas shall, except in case of treason, felony, or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest in going to and returning from, and while within the precincts of either House, and shall not, in respect of any utterance in either House, be amenable to any action or proceeding in any Court other than the House itself. Beidh de phribhléid ag gach ball den Oireachtas, ach amháin i gcás tréasa, feileonachta nó brise síochána, go mbeidh sé saor ó thógaint le linn do bheith ag dul chun aon Tighe den dá Thigh nó ag teacht uaidh, nó le linn do bheith fé ia aon Tighe den dá Thigh, agus ní féadfar aon aicsean ná aon imeachta in aon Chúirt ach sa Tigh féin do thabhairt na choinne i dtaobh éinní dá ndéarfá sé in aon Tigh den dá Thigh.

J.M. Kelly (op. cit., p. 206) reports as follows regarding reference to Article 15.13 in the courts:

In Attorney General v Hamilton (No.2) ([1993] ILRM 821) a case concerning the entitlement of a Dáil Deputy to refuse to disclose the source of the information on which utterances made by him in the Dáil Geoghegan J accepted that the Irish expression ‘amenable’ as used in Article 15.13 ‘inchúisithe’ connoted ‘something like “chargeable”’. This did not necessarily lead to a conflict between the Irish and English texts, since he did not consider that the expression was not necessarily confined to a criminal context:

‘It seems clear that when used in the Constitution it is not so confined having regard to the wide scope of the expression ‘any court or any authority other than the House itself.’ But the word probably does connote the rendering of a person to some liability or sanction ... If upon refusal at a Tribunal [of Inquiry] established [under the Tribunals of Inquiry Act 1921] to answer a question certain legal consequences can flow adverse to the person so refusing ... it follows that, in my view, that a member of the Dáil questioned about utterances made by him in the Dáil cannot be made subject to those legal consequences. In the context of a Tribunal that is what is meant by 'inchúisithe' and that is what is meant by 'amenable'. As I have already indicated, therefore, I do not believe that there is any conflict between the English and Irish versions."

Commentary

inchúisithe The prefix 'in-' plus the participle of the verb 'cúisigh'. 'Cúisim' is translated as 'I accuse; I charge (with a crime, etc.)' in Téarmaí Dlí and as 'I accuse, charge, prosecute' in Dinneen. 'Cúisigh' is translated as 'accuse; charge, prosecute' in Ó Dónaill. 'Cúis' comes from Latin 'causa' and examples of the secondary sense of 'cause, case; dispute, controversy' and more specifically 'law, (law) case, suit, charge', etc., are cited in DIL from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards. The prefix 'in-' has the sense of 'capable of, fit for, proper for, worthy of' according to DIL.

Note that 'ionchúisim' translates 'I prosecute' in Téarmaí Dlí and 'ionchúisitheoir' translates 'prosecutor', both terms also being found in Ó Dónaill. In the enrolled version of the Constitution, we find 'ní hionchúisighthe é' as against modern standard 'ní inchúisithe é' of the Stationery Office's text. The prefix 'in-' in the sense of 'capable of, fit for, fit to be' remains 'in-' before a broad vowel or consonant – see, for example, 'inphósta' in 'cailín inphósta' ('girl of marriageable age').

In s2(1) of the Committee of Public Accounts of Dáil Éireann (Privilege and Procedure) Act, 1970, 'The members of the committee shall not, in respect of any utterance in the committee, be amenable to any court or any authority other than Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'Cibé caint a dhéanfaidh comhaltaí an choiste sa choiste ní inchúisithe iad mar gheall uirthi in aon chúirt nó ag údarás ar bith ach amháin Dáil Éireann féin'. In s2(1) of the Committees of the Houses of the Oireachtas (Privilege and Procedure) Act, 1976, 'A member of either House of the Oireachtas shall not, in respect of any utterance in or before a committee, be amenable to any court or any authority other than the House or the Houses of the Oireachtas by which the committee was appointed' is translated as 'Ní bheidh comhalta de cheachtar Teach den Oireachtas inchúisithe, mar gheall ar aon chaint i goiste nó os comhair coiste, in aon chúirt ná ag údarás ar bith ach amháin an Teach nó na Tithe den Oireachtas a cheap an coiste'.

'Freagrach do' translates 'amenable to' in s1 of Article 43 of the Second Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, where 'Consular officers and consular employees shall not be amenable to the jurisdiction of the judicial or administrative authorities of the receiving State in respect of acts performed in the exercise of consular functions' is translated as 'Ní bheidh oifigigh chonsalachta nó fostaithe consalachta freagrach do dhlínse údarás breithiúnach nó údarás riaracháin an Stáit ghlacaidh i leith gníomhartha acu i bhfeidhmiú feidhmeanna consalachta'. This literally renders 'answerable to'. 'Amenable', which comes from Latin 'minare' ('to drive cattle by minatory [threatening] shouts'), is defined in the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary as follows:

- (1) Liable to answer (to a tribunal, etc., or absol.); responsible: ... (3) loosely, liable (to a charge, etc.).

'Freagrach do' corresponds to sense (1) above and 'inchúisithe' corresponds to sense (3). We see from the 1922 Constitution that 'amenable to any action or proceeding' is intended here, this being translated as 'ní fhéadfar aon aiscean ná aon imeachta in aon Chúirt ... do thabhairt 'na choinne', i.e. literally, 'no action or proceeding can be taken against him in any Court'.

'Freagarthach' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'amenable' in 'Miscellaneous' translations, with 'to make amenable to justice' being translated as 'do thabhairt chun breithiúntais' in translations for the Department of Justice. 'A citizen of the United States ... shall not be amenable to the jurisdiction of the judicial or administrative authorities of the State' is translated as 'Saoránach de na Stáit Aontaithe ... ní bheidh sé faoi réir dhlínse údaráis bhreithiúnacha nó riaracháin an Stáit' in s6(1) of the Air Navigation and Transport (Preinspection) Act, 1986.

i dtearmann 'Tearmann' is translated as 'protection' in Téarmaí Dlí and 'tearmannaí' as 'I harbour'. Ó Dónaill translates 'tearmann' as 'sanctuary, place of refuge' and 'refuge, protection', along with the historical sense of 'church land affording right of sanctuary'. Dinneen translates 'tearmann' as 'a termon or glebe, applied only to Church of Ireland glebes in Antrim, a refuge, sanctuary or asylum; protection or patronage', citing 'Tearmann Féichín' [Feicín], Termonfeckin, 'i.e. the glebe of St Feichin'. 'Termonn', from Latin 'terminus', was originally 'the lands of a church or monastic settlement within which rights of sanctuary prevailed', according to DIL, who gives 'sanctuary, refuge, safe place in general' as the secondary sense, citing 'go ndeachtar do chaithem a dtearmainn ... [go] Mag ... nEo' ('sought refuge in Mag nEo') from the late text Cathréim Thoirdealbhaigh.

In s60(1) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), 'Members ordered to withdraw ... shall forthwith withdraw from the precincts of the Dáil' is translated as 'Comhaltáí a n-ordófar dóibh imeacht as an Dáil ..., imeoidh siad láithreach ó mhaighin na Dála'. 'Precinct' is one of the senses given by Dinneen s.v. 'maighean', 'a place; ground, precinct, messuage, curtilage', and he cites 'Maighean Teamhrach, the curtilage of Tara'. 'In the house or houses or within the precincts thereof' is translated as 'sa teach nó ina mhaighean nó sna tithe nó ina maighne' in s26 of the Housing Act, 1988, while in s19(1) of the Housing Act, 1966, 'for the accommodation ... in the house or houses or within the precincts thereof, of persons providing welfare or caretaker services for elderly persons' is translated as 'mar chóiríocht ... sa teach nó ina mhaighne nó sna tithe nó ina maighne, do dhaoine a sholátraíonn seirbhísí leasa nó áirigh do dhaoine scothaosta'. In s6 of the Racing Board and Racecourses (Amendment) Act, 1975, 'Where an authorised officer of the Board observes that a person is engaged in or carrying on the business of bookmaker on any authorised racecourse or in the precincts thereof' is translated as 'Má fheiceann oifigeach údaraithe don Bhord gnó geall-ghlacadóra á dhéanamh nó ar siúl ag duine ar aon rás-chúrsa údaraithe nó ina mhaighean'. In Ó Dónaill, 'maighean', plural 'maighne', is glossed 'place, steading', and marked as no longer in current use.

Finally, note that 'so much of the buildings and premises commonly known as Dublin Castle and of the precincts thereof as shall for the time being be appropriated' is translated as 'na foirgintí agus an t-áitreabh dá ngairmtear go coitianta Caisleán Bhaile Átha Cliath, agus a ngar-chomhursanacht san, oiread díobh agus cuirfar i leithreas de thurus na huairé in s98 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924.

tréasa See the commentary on Article 39 regarding ‘tréas’, genitive singular ‘tréasa’, the established term in Irish for ‘treason’. ‘Tréas’ is translated as ‘treason’ in Téarmaí Dlí, where ‘folach tréasa’ is translated as ‘misprison of treason’. Ó Dónaill translates ‘tréas’ as ‘treason; disloyalty, rebellion’, while Dinneen translates ‘tréas’ as ‘treason, treachery, wrong-doing, a treacherous deed’. DIL only cites Ó Bruadair’s seventeenth-century poetry s.v. ‘traos’. It may have had an earlier form ‘tréis’ (DIL), with ‘tréas’ emerging through association with ‘treas’ (‘strife’) and the infrequent English loanword ‘treason’, according to Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú.

feileonachta ‘Feileonacht’, genitive singular ‘feileonachta’, is a straightforward equivalent of English ‘felony’, according to Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú. ‘Feileonacht’ is translated as ‘felony’ in Téarmaí Dlí, where ‘imshocráim feileonacht’ is translated as ‘I compound a felony’. Ó Dónaill simply translates ‘feileonacht’ as ‘felony’. This word does not seem to be given as a headword in Dinneen. DIL cites ‘filún’ (‘a felon’) from Caithréim Thoirdealbhagh. Note that ‘feileontacht’ is the form in the original text, as in the 1922 Constitution.

teacht chuige Literally ‘coming to it’. See s43(4) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, where ‘persons being prevented by violence from going to any polling station’ is translated as ‘daoine a choimeád le foréigean ó dhul isteach in aon stáisiún vótaíochta’.

briseadh síochána This phrase is translated in Téarmaí Dlí as ‘breach of the peace’. Ó Dónaill cites ‘an dlí, an tsíocháin, a bhriseadh’, to break the law, the peace’ and ‘briseadh conartha, síochána, breach of contract, of peace’. Dinneen translates ‘briseadh ar an síoth’ as ‘violation of the peace-compact’. Earlier ‘síthcháin’ is a compound of ‘síd’ and ‘cáin’, translated as ‘peace, a state of peace, a compact of peace’ in DIL. ‘Bris(ed)’ in the more abstract sense of ‘breaking/violating laws’, etc., is found in early Irish laws – see DIL s.v. ‘bris(s)ed’. See further the commentary on Article 40.6.1<sup>ii</sup>.

ar ghabháil Throughout the history of Irish, ‘arrest’ has been one of the established meanings of the verb ‘gabh’. ‘Gabháil’ is translated as ‘arrest’ in Téarmaí Dlí, with the verb ‘gabhaim’ translated as ‘I apprehend (i.e. a person), I arrest’. Ó Dónaill translates ‘gabháil’ as ‘catch, seizure, capture’, translating ‘gabháil duine’ as ‘capture, arrest, of person’ and ‘faoi ghabháil’ as ‘under arrest’. Dinneen includes ‘arrest’ among the senses of ‘gabhaim’. DIL cites ‘do leigthea gan lan-gabail’ (‘without being taken prisoner’), from the Banquet of Dun na nGedh and the Battle of Magh Rath s.v. ‘gabál’, verbal noun of ‘gaibid’, ‘lays hold of, grasps’.

mar a mhínítear ‘Mínigh’ regularly translates ‘define’ in the Acts – see, for example, s352(1)(a) of the Companies Act, 1963, where ‘or any other instrument constituting or defining the constitution of the company’ is translated as ‘d’aon ionstraim eile lenar comhdhéanadh an chuideachta nó lena mínítear a comhdhéanamh’. ‘Míniú’ translates ‘definition’ in the Acts. See the commentary on Article 12.4.2<sup>o</sup>. ‘Has been delivered for registration to the registrar of companies as defined in this Act’ is translated as ‘a sheachadadh lena chlárú do chlárúitheoir na gcuideachtaí, mar a mhínítear san Acht seo’ in s364(1) of the above-mentioned Act.

saor ar See the commentary on the previous section. Note how we find ‘saor ó thógaint’ in the 1922 Constitution, but it is preceded by ‘Beidh de phribhléid ag gach ball den Oireachtas’ – both constructions are used in conjunction to express ‘shall be privileged from’.

tá comhaltaí To express the sense of English ‘shall’, as against the numerous instances of ‘beidh’, we find ‘tá’ here, as in the previous section, and in the following Articles: 16.1.1<sup>o</sup>, 16.1.2<sup>o</sup>, 28.4.1<sup>o</sup>, 28.8, 29.7.3<sup>o</sup> (Article 2 therein), 44.2.5<sup>o</sup>, 45.2.i, 47.3; we find the corresponding negative ‘níl’ in Article 13.8.1<sup>o</sup>.

ARTICLE 15.14 AIRTEAGAL 15.14

TÉACS GAELGE

Ní cead d’aon duine bheith ina chomhalta de dhá Theach an Oireachtas san am chéanna, agus aon duine a bheas ina chomhalta de Theach díobh agus go ndéanfar comhalta den Teach eile de, ní foláir a mheas láithreach go bhfuil éirithe aige as an gcéad ionad.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No person is permitted to be a member of (the) two Houses of the Oireachtas at the same time, and anybody who will be a member of one of those Houses and (who) will be made a member of the other House, it must be immediately deemed that he has given up the first place.

ENGLISH TEXT

No person may be at the same time a member of both Houses of the Oireachtas, and, if any person who is already a member of either House becomes a member of the other House, he shall forthwith be deemed to have vacated his first seat.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'No person may' is expressed as 'Ní cead d'aon duine' ('no person is permitted to') and 'he shall' is expressed as 'ní foláir do' ('he must') in the Irish text, as in some other Articles.
- 2 'To have vacated his first seat' is expressed as 'go bhfuil éirithe aige as an gcéad ionad' ('to have given up his first position') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Becomes a member' is expressed as 'go ndéanfar comhalta ... de' ('will be made a member') in the Irish text.
- 4 A comma follows 'and' with no corresponding comma in the Irish text.

Note that Article 16 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

No person may be at the same time a member both of Dáil Éireann and of Seanad Éireann, and if any person who is already a member of either House is elected to be a member of the other House, he shall forthwith be deemed to have vacated his first seat. Ní fhéadfaidh éinne bheith 'na bhall de Dháil Éireann agus de Sheanad Éireann in aonacht, agus má toghar aon duine atá 'na bhall cheana d'aon Tigh chun bheith 'na bhall den Tigh eile, tuigfear feasta a chéad shuidheachán do bheith follamhuithe.

Commentary

go ndéanfar comhalta de Literally 'he is made a member'. See s14(5) of the Higher Education Act, 1971, where 'Where a person who is either an officer or servant in the employment of An tÚdarás becomes a member of either House of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'I gcás duine is oifigeach nó seirbhíseach i bhfostaíocht faoin Údarás teacht chun bheith ina chomhalta de cheachtar Teach den Oireachtas'. In s30(1) of the Industrial Development Act, 1969, the same text (with 'a servant' and 'the Authority' replacing 'servant' and 'An tÚdarás') is translated as 'Má thagann duine is oifigeach nó seirbhíseach i bhfostaíocht faoin Údarás chun bheith ina chomhalta de cheachtar Teach den Oireachtas'. See the commentary on Article 25.4.1<sup>o</sup> regarding 'déan de'.

ionad See Article 12.6.2<sup>o</sup> where 'he shall be deemed to have vacated his seat in that House' is expressed as 'ní foláir a mheas go bhfuil scartha aige le comhaltas an Tí sin'.

'Ionad' is translated as 'place' in Ó Dónaill, with the secondary sense of 'station, rank, post', Ó Dónaill citing 'tá ionad sa Dáil aige, he has a seat in the Dáil'. Dinneen translates 'ionad' as 'place, position, stead, room, station, site, location, berth ...'. DIL cites examples of 'inad', in the sense of 'position or office held by anyone', from earlier literature. Note that in Article 16 of the 1922 Constitution 'he shall forthwith be deemed to have vacated his first seat' is translated as 'tuigfear feasta a chéad shuidheachán do bheith follamhuithe'.

éirithe aige as Literally 'he (has) risen out of'. See the commentary on Article 12.6.2<sup>o</sup> and note how in Article 16 of the 1922 Constitution, as we have just seen, 'he shall forthwith be deemed to have vacated his first seat' is translated as 'tuigfear feasta a chéad shuidheachán do bheith follamhuithe'.

'Baill do chur as a suideacháin' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'vacate the seats of members' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1922/23, and 1927, p. 697. See the commentary on Article 12.6.2<sup>o</sup> for other early translations of 'vacate'. 'Be deemed to have been duly so elected and to vacate his seat immediately after the commencement of his term of office' is translated as 'tuigfear ... gur toghadh go cuibhe amhlaidh é agus gur fhág sé a shuidheachán díreach tar éis tosach a théarma oifige' in s9(2) of the Electoral (Dublin Commercial) Act, 1930. 'And has vacated his seat by death, resignation, or disqualification' is translated as 'agus gur fágadh a shuidheachán folamh tré n-a éag, a eirghe as no a dhí-cháiliú' in s3 of the Seanad Electoral (University Members) Act, 1937.

san am céanna For lenition of the adjective in the dative following a masculine noun, see the commentary on Article 45 – this would be written as 'san am céanna' in standard Irish. In s44 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), for example, 'Should more than one member rise at the same time' is translated as 'Má éiríonn níos mó ná aon chomhalta amháin san am céanna'. Note that 'at the same time' is translated as 'in aonacht' in Article 16 of the 1922 Constitution. This would be written as 'in éineacht' in standard Irish today; this phrase is translated as 'at the same time, at once; together, altogether' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'dhá rud a dhéanamh in éineacht, to do two things simultaneously'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that he doubts whether 'céanna' can be used in this sense, preferring 'in éineacht' or 'in aon am'.

a mheas Ó Dónaill translates the verb 'meas' as 'estimate, value, judge; deem, consider', citing 'measaim go bhfuil an ceart agat, I think you are right' and 'mheas mé go dtiocfá, I concluded that you would come'. Old Irish 'mess', translated as (a) 'the act of judging; a judgement, opinion', (b) 'appraisal, estimate, valuation' and 'esteem, respect, regard' in DIL, is itself the verbal noun of 'midithir', which originally had the sense of 'weighs, measures', hence 'judges'. See the commentary on Article 12.6.2<sup>o</sup>.

Ní cead Literally, 'it is not permitted', this phrase expressing 'may not' in some Articles – see the commentary on Article 9.1.3°.

Ní foláir Literally '(he) must', but expresses 'shall' in some Articles – see the commentary on Article 11.

láithreach See the commentary on Article 46.5.

- 1 'For the grant to them of free travelling and such other facilities' is expressed in the Irish text as 'chun go ndeonfaí dóibh ... saoráid chun taisteal in aisce agus cibé saoráid eile' ('that they would be granted facility to travel gratis and whatever other facility').

- 2 'Their duties as public representatives' is expressed in the Irish text as 'a ndualgas (gen. pl.) i gcáil ionadóirí poiblí' ('their duties in the capacity of public representatives').
- 3 The Irish text expresses more clearly perhaps than the English text, that 'maidir lena ndualgais' ('in connection with their duties') covers the free travelling as well as the other facilities, by bringing this before 'saoráid chun taisteal in aisce' ('free travelling').
- 4 'In connection with those duties' is expressed as 'maidir lena ndualgais' ('in connection with their duties') in the Irish text.
- 5 'Le comhaltaí gach Tí' could be read either as 'to members of each House' or as 'to the members of each House', since Irish syntax does not make the distinction.
- 6 'If any' is expressed in the Irish text as 'má chinneann', 'if they decide' – to grant any other facility.

Note that Article 23 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

The Oireachtas shall make provision for the payment of its members, and may in addition provide them with free travelling facilities to any part of Ireland. Déanfaidh an t-Oireachtas soláthar chun a bhaill do dhiol agus féadfaidh sé fós saor-thaisteal do sholáthar dóibh in aon pháirt d'Éirinn.

Note also that the words 'fairis sin taisteal i n-aisce agus cibé áiseanna eile a bhaineas le n-a ndualgasaibh, mar' were deleted by the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941, and the words 'chun go ndeonfaí dhóibh, maidir le n-a ndualgasaibh, saoráid chun taisteal i n-aisce agus cibé saoráid eile a' inserted in their place, with no corresponding amendment being made to the English text.

Commentary

saoráid This headword is translated as 'ease, facility' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'saoráidí a bheith agat le rud a dhéanamh, to have facilities for doing something' and 'gach áis agus saoráid, every convenience and facility'. Ó Dónaill gives the secondary sense of 'ease, freedom from constraint'. Dinneen translates 'saoráid' as 'cheapness, ease, facility, fluency, easy route'.

In s2(c) of Article 1 of the Third Schedule to the Radiological Protection Act, 1991, 'radioactive waste management facility' is translated as 'saoráid bhainistíochta dramhaíola radaighníomhaí'. In s1(1) of the Consumer Information Act, 1978, "provide" in relation to a service or facility includes "render" is translated as 'foláionn "cur ar fáil", i ndáil le seirbhís nó saoráid, an tseirbhís nó an tsaoráid a thabhairt' and in s46(1) of the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, 'A person who wilfully hinders, restricts or prevents the enjoyment or exercise of inviolability or an exemption, facility, immunity, privilege or right conferred by this Act' is translated as 'Aon duine a bhacfaidh, a shrianfaidh nó a choisfidh go toiliúil dosháraitheacht, sairseacht, saoráid, díolúine, pribhléid nó ceart a thugtar leis an Acht seo a theachtadh nó a fheidhmiú'.

The Long Title of the Oireachtas (Payment of Members) Act, 1923, reads as follows:

An Act to provide for the payment of allowances to Members of the Oireachtas and to authorise the provision of certain free travelling facilities for such Members. Acht chun soláthar do dhéanamh chun liúntaisí d'íoc le baill den Oireachtas agus chun a údarú go soláthrófar saoráidí áirithe do sna baill sin chun taisteal do dhéanamh gan íoc as.

'Free postal facilities' is translated as 'saoráidí poist in aisce' in s2(b) of the Oireachtas (Allowances to Members) Act, 1962. See further the commentary on Article 42.4 where 'facility' is expressed as 'áis'.

taisteal in aisce Téarmaí Dlí translates 'earbadh in aisce' as 'gratuitous bailment'. Ó Dónaill translates 'in aisce' as 'for nothing, gratis', citing 'rud a fháil, a thabhairt, in aisce, to get, give, something for nothing'. Dinneen translates 'i n-aisce' as 'for nothing, gratis, as a free gift', also 'with no advantage, uselessly', along with 'unavenged, unrequited'. DIL cites examples of the phrase 'i n-aiscid', translated as 'without payment, gratis, for nothing', from commentaries on early Irish law-tracts and from later literature. 'Aiscid' is the verbal noun of 'ad-saig', and is translated as (a) 'act of seeking, requesting; request, boon, favour' and (b) 'gift, present' in DIL.

Note that we find 'saor-thaisteal' in Article 23 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Saorthaisteal' is given as a headword in Ó Dónaill and translated as 'free travel'.

go ndeonfaí dóibh 'Deonaim' is translated as 'I grant' in Téarmaí Dlí. Ó Dónaill translates 'deonaigh' as 'grant, consent; vouchsafe, condescend', citing 'rud a dheonú do dhuine, to grant something to someone' and 'an phribhléid a deonaidh dúinn, the privilege which was accorded to us'. Dinneen translates 'deonuighim' as 'I vouchsafe, permit, consent; condescend; I command, order, enjoin'. DIL gives one example from a commentary on an early Irish law-tract of 'deóinid', 'consent', and two examples of 'deónaid', 'grants, allows'; over ten examples are given of the verbal form 'deónaigid', 'grants, vouchsafes, permits (in later texts especially of Divine will)', including 'do dheónaigh Dia Gaoidhil do dhealughadh ré hard-fhlaitheas Éireann' ('God permitted that the Irish should be separated from the sovereignty of Ireland'), from Keating's seventeenth-century Three Shafts of Death. All these verbal forms are based on the noun 'deóin', translated as 'will, pleasure, consent' in DIL.

Turning to the Acts, in s3(b)(i) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975, 'by way of consideration for the grant of the part of the sub-lease covered by the period ...' is translated as 'i modh comaoine as an gcuid den fholéas a dheonú lenar bhain an tréimhse'. In s1(1) of the Agricultural Produce (Cereals) (Amendment) Act, 1969, 'contributory schemes for the granting of pensions, gratuities and other allowances on retirement to ... such wholetime officers ...' is translated as 'scéimeanna ranníocacha chun pinsin, aiscí agus liúntais eile a dheonú do cibé oifighilán niamsire ...'.

maidir lena ndualgais Téarmaí Dlí translates the phrase 'maidir le' as 'in the matter of', translating 'dlinse maidir le pósadh' as 'matrimonial jurisdiction' and 'maidir le maoin' as 'in the goods of'. Ó Dónaill translates 'maidir le' as 'as to, as for, about, regarding, considering; along with; like', citing 'maidir le culaith nua de, since we are talking about a new suit'. DIL cites only one example of the phrase 'maidir le' s.v. 'maidir', followed by the abbreviation for 'modern', in sense of 'along with, as well as', referring the reader to Ériu ix, pp. 12-15, for the secondary meaning 'as for, as regards'.

We sometimes find 'maidir le' translating 'in respect of' in the Acts – see, for example, s61(6) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, where 'ascertained in respect of each candidate' is translated as 'a fuarthas amach maidir le gach iarrthóir'. This phrase is generally now translated as 'i leith' – see, for example, s39(4)(a) of the Finance Act, 1990, where 'so as to be within the charge to corporation tax in respect of that trade' is translated as 'sa chaoi go mbeidh sí laistigh den réim cánach corpraithe i leith na trádála sin'. 'In connection with' is now generally translated as 'i ndáil le' in the Acts. See the commentary on Article 29.4.1°.

má chinneann 'If any', in this context, is usually translated as 'más ann' in the modern Acts – see, for example, s25(1) of the Dublin Cemeteries Committee Act, 1970, where 'subject to all incumbrances, charges, superior interests and other rights (if any) affecting the same' is translated as 'faoi réir na n-iontaobhas, na muirear, na n-uasleasanna agus na gcearta eile (más ann) go léir a dhéanann difear don chéanna'. In s17 of the Value-Added Tax (Amendment) Act, 1978, 'the total amount of tax payable by the person was greater than the total amount of tax (if any) paid by him' is translated as 'gur mhó an méid iomlán cánach ab iníoctha ag an duine ná an méid iomlán cánach (más ann) a d'íoc sé'. See further the commentary on Article 29.4.2°.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú questions whether 'más ann' is comprehensible, in the translation below, without the phrase being in agreement with the syntax of the sentence, citing 'má tá punt aige, níl ann ach sin', for example. According to Professor Ó Murchú, in order to express the sense involved here, the verb is usually repeated – Máirtín Ó Murchú cites 'tháinig Seán, má tháinig aon duine' and 'tá an t-eolas aige, má tá ag aon duine' as examples. Hence the use of 'má chinneann' above.

i gcáil ionadóirí 'Cáil ionadaí' is translated as 'representative capacity' in Téarmaí Dlí. See the commentary on Article 15.1.2° regarding the variant form 'ionadóir'.

Tig leis an Oireachtas Literally 'the Oireachtas can' – for 'tig le' expressing 'may' in the Constitution, see the commentary on Article 14.4.2°.

DÁIL ÉIREANN

TÉACS GAELGE

Gach saoránach, cibé acu fear nó bean, ag a bhfuil bliain agus fiche slán agus nach gcuirtear faoi mhíchumas nó faoi mhíthreoir leis an mBunreacht seo ná le dlí, tá sé intofa ar chomhaltas Dháil Éireann.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Every citizen, whether man or woman, who has completed/reached twenty-one years and who is not put under disability or incapacity/derangement by this Constitution nor by law, he is electable to (the) membership of Dáil Éireann.

ENGLISH TEXT

Every citizen without distinction of sex who has reached the age of twenty-one years, and who is not placed under disability or incapacity by this Constitution or by law, shall be eligible for membership of Dáil Éireann.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Without distinction of sex' is expressed as 'cibé acu fear nó bean' ('whether man or woman') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Who has reached the age of twenty-one years' is expressed as 'ag a bhfuil bliain agus fiche slán' ('who has completed/reached twenty-one years') in the Irish text, the same phraseology being employed in Article 12.4.1<sup>o</sup> in expressing 'who has reached his thirty-fifth year of age'.
- 3 'Incapacity', as we first saw in Article 12.3.1<sup>o</sup>, is expressed by 'míthreoir' in the Irish text, a term which is now principally understood as 'misguidedness'/ 'derangement', 'éagumas' translating 'incapacity' in Téarmaí Dlí.
- 4 'Disability' is expressed in the Irish text by 'míchumas', which is translated as 'disablement' in Téarmaí Dlí; this term also translates 'incapacity' in some Acts.
- 5 'Eligible for membership' is expressed as 'intofa ar chomhaltas' ('electable to (the) membership') in the Irish text, the term 'intofa' expressing 'eligible for election' in Article 12.4.1<sup>o</sup>.
- 6 'Shall be' is expressed as 'tá sé' ('he is') in the Irish text.
- 7 'Or by law' is expressed as 'ná le dlí' ('nor by law') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 15 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

Every citizen who has reached the age of twenty-one years and who is not placed under disability or incapacity by the Constitution or by law shall be eligible to become a member of Dáil Éireann. Gach saoránach go mbeidh aois bhliana is fiche slán aige, agus ná beidh curtha fé mhí-ábaltacht ná fé mhí-chumas ag an mBunreacht ná ag an ndlí beidh sé iontoghtha chun bheith 'na theachta de Dháil Éireann.

Commentary

cibé acu fear nó bean Literally 'whether man or woman', 'cibé acu fir nó mná' expressing 'without distinction of sex' in subsection 2<sup>o</sup>, with 'toisc gur fear nó toisc gur bean an saoránach sin' expressing 'on the ground of sex' in subsection 3<sup>o</sup>. In Article 9, 'by reason of the sex of such person' is expressed as 'toisc gur fireann nó toisc gur baineann an duine sin', with 'unsuited to their sex' expressed as 'nach n-oireann dá ngné' in Article 45.4.2<sup>o</sup>. A form based on 'gné', i.e. 'gnéas', today generally translates 'sex'. See the commentary on Article 9.1.3<sup>o</sup> regarding 'sex' in the Constitution and in early Irish official documents.

DIL cites 'amal dombeir in ben airmitin féith don fiur' ('as the woman gives due respect to the man') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. While De Bhaldraithe translates 'sex' as 'gnéas', note how 'sex appeal' is translated as 'mealladh fear, ban', with 'she has no sex-appeal' translated as 'is fada siar searc fir óig inti'.

Section 2(1) of the Local Government (Extension of Franchise) Act, 1935, reads as follows:

Every person (without distinction of sex) who ... is a citizen of Saorstát Éireann and who has attained the age of twenty-one years and is not subject to any legal incapacity shall be entitled to be registered in the register of electors .... Gach duine (idir fhireann agus baineann) a bheidh ... ina shaoránach de Shaorstát Éireann agus bliain is fiche slán aige agus gan é fé aon mhí-chumas dlíthiúil beidh sé i dteideal a chlárúithe sa chlár de thoghthóirí.

Note that Article 14 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

All citizens of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) without distinction of sex, who have reached the age of twenty-one years and who comply with the provisions of the prevailing electoral laws, shall have the right to vote for members of Dáil Éireann .... Beidh de cheart ag gach saoránach de Shaorstát Éireann idir fireann agus buineann go mbeidh aois bhliana is fiche slán aige agus a chó-líonfaidh forálacha uile dlíthe toghacháin na haimsire, vótáil le teachtaí de Dháil Éireann.

Turning specifically to 'distinction', 'The vessels ... shall afford relief and assistance to the wounded, sick and shipwrecked without distinction of nationality' is translated as 'Tabharfaidh na háirtheáil ... fóirithint agus cabhair don lucht créachtaithe, breoite agus longbhriste gan idirdhealú ó thaobh náisiúntachta' in Article 30 of the Second Schedule to the Geneva Conventions Act, 1962. 'Where necessary for the making of any distinction required by this section in any account to be shown thereunder' is translated as 'I gcás ar gá é chun aon idirdhealú a dhéanamh a cheanglaítear leis an alt seo a dhéanamh in aon chuntas a bheidh le taispeáint faoin alt seo' in s44(6) of the Building Societies Act, 1976.

Looking at earlier legislation, 'Laws regulating ... shall contain no political, religious or class distinction' is translated as 'Na dlíthe a rialóidh ... ní dhéanfaid aon leithreachas i dtaobh polaitíochta ná creideamh ná aicme' in Article 9 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Oiread de thuairisc gach iarrthóra dhiobh ... agus a dhéanfadh idirdhealú éifeachtúil eatorro' translates 'so much of the description of each of such candidates ... as will ... effectively distinguish such candidates' in Part III, 7, of the Fifth Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923. 'Any other distinctive mark' is translated as 'aon mharc idirdhealuitheach eile' in s82(1)(e) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, where 'except upon evidence of its distinctiveness' is translated as 'ach amháin de bharr fianaise ar a idirdhealuitheacht'.

Note regarding the present context that 'idirdhealú' is also the term used today in the Acts to translate 'discrimination', Ó Dónaill also giving 'discrimination' as one of the senses of 'idirdhealú', verbal noun of 'idirdhealaigh', 'differentiate, discriminate, distinguish'. 'Idirdhealú' expresses 'discrimination' in Article 44.2.3° where 'make any discrimination on the ground of religious profession, belief or status' is expressed as 'aon idirdhealú a dhéanamh mar gheall ar chreideamh nó admháil chreidimh nó céim i gcúrsaí creidimh'. L. Mc Cionnaith cites 'ní raibh idirdheal[bh]ú eatortha' from Connacht and Munster as a translation of the phrase 'no distinction between them, as equals'. DIL gives examples of 'deiligidir' ('separates') from the ninth-century St Gall Glosses on Priscian onwards, citing 'deliugad itir maith 7 olc' from the Yellow Book of Lecan as an example of the verbal noun 'deiliugad' in the sense of 'act of distinguishing'.

faoi mhíchumas 'Míchumas' is translated both as 'disability' and 'disablement' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'sochar míchumais', for example, translated as 'disablement benefit'. See the commentary on Article 44.2.3°.

We see above that 'curtha fé mhí-ábaltacht' translates 'place under disability' in Article 15 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Or to maim, disfigure, or disable him' is translated as 'no é bhasca, no máchail do chur air, no é chur ar mí-chumas' in the 'Appendix to Rules' appended to the Criminal Justice (Administration) Act, 1924. Looking at modern Acts, 'Necessary party to deed, etc., under disability or failing to act' is translated as 'Páirtí riachtanach sa ghníomhas, etc., a bheith faoi mhíchumas nó é d'fhailli gníomhú' in the Margin Title of s76 the Landlord and Tenant (Amendment) Act, 1980, 'Daoine faoi mhíchumas nó daoine nár fionnadh' translating 'Persons under disability or unascertained' in the Margin Title of s6 of the Minerals Development Act, 1979. 'A person shall be entitled to disability benefit in respect of any day of incapacity for work' is translated as 'beidh duine i dteideal sochair mhíchumais maidir le haon lá éagumais chun oibre' in s18(1) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, this same text being translated as 'beidh teideal ag duine chun sochair mhíchumais in aghaidh aon lae éagumais chun oibre' in s15(1) of the Social Welfare Act, 1952. 'Go raibh páirtí sa chomhaontú eadrána ... faoi éagumas éigin' translates 'a party to the arbitration agreement was ... under some incapacity' in s9(2)(a) of the Arbitration Act, 1980, '(go raibh an páirtí sin) faoi éagumas dlíthiúil éigin' translating 'was under some legal incapacity' in s56(2)(b) of the Arbitration Act, 1954.

We see above that 'mí-chumas' translates 'incapacity' in Article 15 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Ar aon chúis seachas mí-iompar, míchumas, no easláinte' translates 'for any reason other than misconduct, incapacity, or ill-health' in s63(5)(d) of the Court Officers Act, 1926, 'that any such summons-server has misconducted himself or displayed gross incapacity in the performance of his duties', however, in s44(3) thereof, being translated as 'gur dhin aon tseirbheálaí gairme den tsórt san é féin do mhí-iompar no ró-mhí-ábaltacht do thaisbeáint agus é ag cólíona a dhualgaisí'. Finally, 'If and whenever the Commissioner is incapacitated by illness from performing his duties' is translated as 'Má bhíonn agus nuair a bheidh an Coimisinéir gan bheith in án a dhualgaisí do chó-líona toisc é do bheith breoite' in s4(3) of the Gárda Síochána (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. See the commentary on Article 16.1.3° regarding early citations of 'incapacity for membership'.

intofa ar chomhaltas See the commentary on Articles 12.3.2° and 12.4.1° regarding 'intofa' and the commentary on Articles 12.6.2° and 12.10.4° regarding 'comhaltas'. 'A person shall not be eligible for membership of the Council' is translated as 'Ní bheidh duine i dteideal bheith ina chomhalta den Chomhairle' in s7 of the National Council for Educational Awards Act, 1979. In s4(4) of the Credit Union Act, 1966, 'the majority of the members of which are ... eligible for membership of a credit union' is translated as 'a bhfuil teideal ag tromlach a chomhaltaí ... chun comhaltas i gcomhar creidmheasa' in s4(4) of the Credit Union Act, 1966. 'There shall be eligible for membership of the Society such persons' is translated as 'Beidh cáilíocht chun bheith ina gcomhaltaí den Chumann ag na daoine sin' in s9 of the National Health Insurance Act, 1947. Finally, Article 31 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

A person to be eligible for membership of Seanad Éireann must be a person eligible to become a member of Dáil Éireann .... Chun go mbeidh saoránach iontoghtha chun bheith 'na bhall de Sheanad Éireann caithfe sé bheith 'na dhuine iontoghtha chun bheith 'na theachta de Dháil Éireann.

We see above that 'beidh sé iontoghtha chun bheith 'na theachta' translates 'shall be eligible to become a member' in Article 15 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Eligible for', followed by verbal noun, is usually translated as 'in-', compounded with the past participle of the verb or the genitive of the verbal noun, 'ionchlárúithe' and 'incheaptha' respectively translating 'eligible for registration' and 'eligible for appointment' in Acts from 1924 and 1927. 'Every member of the Board shall ... be eligible for re-election or renomination' is translated as 'beidh gach ball den Bhord ion-aththoghtha no ion-athainmnithe' in s4(3) of the Dentists Act, 1928, 'agus beidh sé ion-aththofa' translating 'and be eligible for re-election' in s65 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924. Note, however, that 'The members of the Appeal Board shall hold office for five years from the date of their appointment and shall, at the end of any such term of office, be eligible for re-appointment' is translated as 'beidh baill an Bhúird Athchomhairc in oifig go ceann chúig mbliain o dháta a gceaptha agus, i ndeire aon téarma oifige den tsórt san, féadfar iad d'athcheapa' in s3(2) of the Censorship of Films Act, 1923.

'Eligible candidates' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'iarrthóirí ag a bhfuil cead dul i gcomórtas' in Iris an Phuist, 29/2/1928. Finally, in s8 of the 'Limerick County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'all other children eligible for Glin District School' is translated as 'gach leanbh eile atá san aois chun dul go Scoil Cheanntair Ghleann Chorbhraigh', with 'a list of such cases as are deemed eligible for admission' being translated as 'liost de pé cásanna a meastar is ceart a leigint isteach' in s21 of the 'Mayo County Scheme'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that literally 'i dteideal a bheith ina chomhalta nó ina comhalta de Dháil Éireann', in the translation below, means that it is the right of everyone, without any process or other obstacle, to be a member of Dáil Éireann. Professor Ó Murchú recommends 'i dteideal a thofa nó a tofa' or simply 'intofa mar chomhalta', commenting that 'inroghnaithe mar iarrthóir ar a bheith ina chomhalta nó ina comhalta' (i.e. 'selectable as a candidate to become a member') is what is intended.

slán See the commentary on Article 12.4.1°, where 'Gach saoránach ag a bhfuil cúig bliana triochad slán' expresses 'Every citizen who has reached his thirty-fifth year of age'.

faoi mhíthreoir See the commentary on Article 12.3.1°.

Note that this subsection was introduced following the Ninth Amendment of the Constitution, 1984, and the original Article 16.1.2° read as follows:

Gach saoránach, cibé aca fear nó bean, ag a bhfuil bliadhain agus fiche slán agus ná cuirtear fá dhícháilídeacht le dlítheadh, agus a choimhlíonas coingheallacha an dlítheadh i dtaobh toghcháin comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann, tá ceart bhótála aige i dtoghchán comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann. Every citizen without distinction of sex who has reached the age of twenty-one years who is not disqualified by law and complies with the provisions of the law relating to the election of members of Dáil Éireann, shall have the right to vote at an election for members of Dáil Éireann.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'All citizens' is expressed as 'Gach uile shaoránach' ('every citizen' / 'every last citizen') in the Irish text, thereby keeping as closely as possible to the original wording of the subsection, 'Gach saoránach' being amended only by the addition of 'uile', with the English version's 'Every citizen' being amended to 'All citizens'.
- 2 'Without distinction of sex' is expressed as 'cibé acu fir nó mná' ('whether men or women') in the Irish text, again adhering as closely as possible to the original 'cibé acu fear nó bean', this only being amended by putting that phrase into the plural, just as 'Every citizen' of the English text was amended to 'All citizens'.
- 3 'Who have reached the age of eighteen years' is expressed in the Irish text as 'ag a bhfuil ocht mbliana déag slán' ('who have completed/reached eighteen years'), as in the original text, in line with the construction in subsection 1°.
- 4 'Who are not disqualified' is expressed as 'agus ná cuirtear faoi dhícháilíocht' ('and who are not put under disqualification') in the Irish text, with a dialectical variant of the negative particle – i.e. 'ná' – replacing the original standard Irish negative particle of the earlier popular editions – i.e. 'nach' – which standard - form is also found in the previous subsection.

- 5 'Provisions' is expressed as 'coinníollacha' ('conditions') in the Irish text; the special relative form of the original subsection, 'a chomhlionas' (literally, 'who fulfil', expressing 'comply with'), is brought into conformity with standard Irish, and a comma precedes 'agus a chomhlionann' ('and who fulfil / comply with') in the Irish text which is not found in the English text.
  - 6 'Relating to the election of members of Dáil Éireann' is expressed as 'i dtaobh toghcháin comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann' ('relating to an election of members to Dáil Éireann') in the Irish text, the noun 'toghchán' rather than the verbal noun 'toghadh' being employed in the Irish text; in the final clause, 'at an election for members of Dáil Éireann' is expressed as 'i dtoghchán comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann' ('in an election of members for Dáil Éireann').
  - 7 'The right to vote' is expressed as 'ceart vótála' ('a right to vote') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 14 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

All citizens of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) without distinction of sex, who have reached the age of twenty-one years and who comply with the provisions of the prevailing electoral laws, shall have the right to vote for members of Dáil Éireann .... Beidh de cheart ag gach saoránach de Shaorstát Éireann idir fireann agus buineann go mbeidh aois bhliana is fiche slán aige agus a chó-líonfaidh forálacha uile dlíthe toghcháin na haimsire, vótáil le teachtaí de Dháil Éireann.

Commentary

Gach uile shaoránach Note that 'Gach saoránach' expresses 'every citizen' in the previous subsection. 'Gach uile dhuine' is translated as 'everybody' by Ó Dónaill, who translates 'gach duine' as 'every person'. Dinneen translates 'an uile dhuine' and 'gach uile dhuine' as 'everyone'. DIL translates 'uile' as 'all, every, the whole', citing examples from the Old Irish Glosses onwards. 'Á huili duini .i. a cach duini' ('O all man, i.e. O everyman!'), glosses Latin 'o homo omnis' in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. DIL also cites 'do gach uili arm' from Stair Ercuil ocus a Bhás, the late fifteenth-century translation of Caxton's translation of Raoul Lefevre's Recueil des Histoires de Troyes. Note that De Bhaldraithe translates 'every single day' as 'an uile lá riamh' and 'every single inch of it' as 'gach uile mhíle orlach de'.

Turning to the Acts, 'The term "nationals" ... means ... all citizens of Ireland' is translated as 'Ciallaíonn an téarma "náisiúnaigh" ... gach saoránach d'Éirinn' in s2 of Article XXI of the Eighth Schedule to the Income Tax Act, 1967, and in s2 of Article XXI of the Second Schedule to the Finance Act, 1950. The Margin Title of s29 of the Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act, 1956, 'Extension to all citizens of statutory rights conferred on persons born in Ireland' is translated as 'Na cearta reachtúla a bronntar ar dhaoine a rugadh in Éirinn a thabhairt do gach saoránach'. 'Of which all citizens or all inhabitants of the City or all members of any particular class of such citizens or such inhabitants are exclusively entitled to take advantage' is translated as 'a bhfuil teideal eisiach ag caitheoirí uile nó áitreafóirí uile na Cathrach nó ag comhaltaí uile aon aicme áirithe de na caitheoirí sin nó de na háitreafóirí sin chun leas a bhaint astu' in s11(1) of the First Schedule to the Local Government Provisional Orders Confirmation Act, 1950, the same English text, with the substitution of 'such district' for 'the City' being translated as 'gur ag cathruitheoirí uile no ag áititheoirí uile an cheanntair sin nó ag gach duine d'aon aicme áirithe de sna cathruitheoirí sin no de sna háititheoirí sin a bheidh an teideal ar fad chun tairbhe do bhaint asta' in s28(2) of the Local Government (Dublin) Act, 1930.

On the other hand, 'agus beidh sé ina cheangal ar an Stát agus ar gach uile dhuine' translates 'and shall be binding on the State and on all persons whatsoever' in s54(10)(e) of the Fisheries Act, 1980, 'a inseoidh an méid ioncam a d'eascair chuici ó gach uile bhunadh' translating 'setting out the amount of income arising to her from each and every source' in s11(2) of the Finance Act, 1976. Note that 'the Revenue Commissioners ... may ... do all such acts and things as they might have done' is translated as 'féadfaidh na Coimisinéirí Ioncaim ... gach uile bheart agus ní a dhéanamh ab fhéidir dóibh a dhéanamh' in s188(1) of the Income Tax Act, 1967. Note, finally, that 'The Vendors agree to sell ... ALL THAT AND THOSE' is translated as 'Có-aontuionn na Díoltóirí AN MÉID SEO UILE, eadhon, ... do dhíol' in the 'Form of Agreement' in the First Schedule to the Creamery Act, 1928.

a cinnfear le dlí One would expect lenition to follow 'a' here. 'All the powers of the Controller under this Act and as otherwise determined by law', in s78(6) of the Patents Act, 1964, for example, is translated as 'cumhachtaí uile an Cheannasaí faoin Acht seo agus mar a chinnfear ar dhóigh eile le dlí'. Note that 'sa mhéid agus fé réir aon choinníollacha cinnfear le dlí' translates 'to the extent and subject to any conditions which may be determined by law' in the Schedule to the Constitution (Amendment No. 27) Act, 1936.

i dtaobh 'Relating to' is generally translated as 'a bhaineann le' in the Acts. 'To amend the law relating to the election of such Members' is translated as 'do leasú an dlí a bhaineann le toghadh na gComhaltaí sin' in the Long Title of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1980, and of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1974, 'do leasú an dlí a bhaineas le toghadh na gComhaltaí sin' translating that Long Title in the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1947. 'Every ... statute ... relating to the election of members of Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'gach reacht ... a bhainfidh le comhaltaí Dháil Éireann do thogha' in s1 of the General Elections (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1943. 'An Dlí Bhaineas le Baill de Dháil Éireann do Thoghadh' translates 'the Law Relating to the Election of Members of Dáil Éireann' in the Long Title of the Electoral (Revisions of Constituencies) Act, 1935.

'A bhaineann le' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'which relate to or concern' on the Dáil Order Paper of 1925, p. 6. Note finally that 'So far as relates to the verification and stamping of bottles' is translated as 'Chó fada is théigheann fiorú agus stampáil bhuideul' in s5(1) of the Weights and Measures Act, 1928.

ná cuirtear Note that we have 'nach cuirtear' in the popular edition of the original subsection, as in the previous subsection, this being in conformity with the official standard. 'Ná', with neither lenition nor eclipsis of the following initial consonant, is found in Munster Irish as a negative relative, interrogative and imperative particle and also as a negative particle in indirect speech – see Seán Ua Súilleabháin, 'Gaeilge na Mumhan', in Kim McCone et al., op. cit., p. 527. 'Ná cuirtear fá dhícháilidheacht le dligheadh' is found in the original Article 16.1.2°, just as 'ná cuirtear fá mhíchumas ... le dligheadh' is found in the original Article 16.1.1°, this being written as 'nach cuirtear faoi mhíchumas ... le dlí' in the popular edition.

faoi dhícháilíocht Note that 'disqualifying any citizen' is expressed as 'a dhícháileadh saoránach ar bith' in the next subsection. 'Dícháilíocht' is translated as 'disqualification' in Ó Dónaill, 'dícháilim' being translated as 'I disqualify' in Téarmaí Dlí. Dinneen does not appear to give this compound of the negative prefix 'dí-' and 'cáilíocht', but includes 'qualification', along with 'a quality', among the senses of 'cáilidheacht'. DIL translates 'cáilidheacht' simply as 'quality, nature', no examples being cited from the earlier sources. 'Cáilidheacht'/'cáilíocht' is based on 'cáil', which come from Latin 'qualitas'.

'Being a person approved of by the Court and not disqualified by law' is translated as 'is duine a cheadóidh an Chúirt agus nach mbeidh dícháilíthe de réir dlí' in s34(1) of the Intoxicating Liquor Act, 1962. 'Any person who is disqualified by any such disqualification' is translated as 'aon duine a bheidh dícháilíthe mar gheall ar aon dícháilíocht den sórt sin' in s21(1) of the Worker Participation (State Enterprises) Act, 1977. 'Where a person is disqualified by this Act for holding any driving licence whatsoever' is translated as 'I gcás ina mbeidh duine dícháilíthe ag an Acht seo chun aon cheadúnas tiomána d'aon sórt a shealbhú' in s22(4)(a) of the Road Traffic Act, 1961. Finally, in s32(2) of the Road Traffic Act, 1933, 'authorise the person disqualified by such order to apply for a certificate' is translated as 'a údarú don té dhícháileofar leis an ordú san deimhniú ... d'iarraidh'.

'Murab éag, éirí as nó teacht faoi dhícháilíocht roimhe sin dó' translates 'unless he sooner dies, resigns or becomes disqualified' in s29 of the Fisheries (Consolidation) Act, 1959, with 'mura dtarlóidh roimhe sin é d'fháil bháis nó é d'éirí as oifig nó é d'éirí éagumasach nó a theacht faoi dhícháilíocht' translating 'unless he sooner dies, resigns or becomes incapable or disqualified' in s39(2)(b) thereof.

'To disqualify for appointments' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'cur fé mhí-cháilíocht maidir le ceapanna' in the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1923 (the reference does not appear to be correct, however), 'I gcás teachta de Dháil Éireann ... do theacht fé mhí-cháilíocht' translating 'In case of ... disqualification of a member of Dáil Éireann' in Article 29 of the 1922 Constitution. The Margin Title of s4 of the Juries (Amendment) Act, 1924, 'Disqualification of persons who are not electors', is translated as 'Nea-cháilíocht dhaoine ná choghthóirí', with 'In addition to the persons now disqualified for serving on juries' being translated as 'I dteanta na ndaoine atá gan cáilíocht anois chun fónamh ar choistí dháréag' in the section. In s1(2) thereof, 'bheith nea-cháilíthe chun fónamh amhlaidh' translates 'to be disqualified ... from so serving'. 'Dí-cháilíú' translates 'disqualification' in s19(4) of the Public Safety Act, 1927. 'Forálacha i dtaobh mícháilíochanna' translates 'Provisions as to disqualifications' in the Margin Title of s4 of the Electoral Act, 1923, where 'Ní cuirtear éinne as teideal a chlárúithe' translates 'A person shall not be disqualified from being registered'. 'Beidh sé gan teideal chun dul i mbun a oifige mar bhreitheamh' translates '... shall be disqualified from entering on ... his office of judge' in s99 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924.

a chomhlíonann coinníollacha 'Comhlíonaim' is translated as 'I comply with; I conform with; I perform' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'coinníoll' being translated as 'condition; proviso; stipulation'. Ó Dónaill translates 'coinníoll a chomhlíonadh' as 'to comply with a condition', translating the verb 'comhlíon' as 'fulfil'. Dinneen translates 'cómhlíonaim' as 'I fulfil, finish, fill up; execute (a command); perform (a duty); observe (a law); perform (a penance, etc.); fulfil (a prophecy, promise, etc.)', translating the noun 'cómhlíon' as 'an equal number' and 'coingheall' as 'a condition, covenant, obligation; a pledge, bargain'. DIL cites examples of 'comlin' ('equal number, as many'; based on 'lín', principally 'full number, complement [in numbers]') from the ninth-century Milan Glosses onwards, Togail na Tebe (The Thebaid of Statius) providing the earliest citation of 'comlínaid', 'fills up, completes, fulfils' – see the commentary on Articles 12.1, 13.9 and 14.5.1°. 'Coingell' (Modern Irish 'coinníoll') is a compound of 'com' plus 'gell', and is translated principally as 'condition, stipulation, terms' in DIL, with no citations given from the earlier sources.

'Foráil' generally translates 'provision' in the Acts. 'Any corresponding provisions of the law of any other country' is translated as 'aon fhorálacha comhréire i ndlí aon tíre eile' in s19 of the Finance Act, 1981, for example. 'Under provisions of the law therein corresponding with section 41' is translated as 'faoi fhorálacha an dlí ansin atá i gcomhréir le halt 41' in s42(7) of the Corporation Tax Act, 1976. Finally, 'A mhéid is féidir é do réir forál dlí Cheanada i dtaobh cáin ... a bhaint' translates 'As far as may be in accordance with the provisions of the law of Canada regarding the deduction ... of tax' in s1 of Article XIII of the Finance Act, 1955. See the commentary on Article 8.3 s.v. 'socru'.

Note that 'coinníoll' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'provision' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1922/23, 'riail' also being cited as translating 'provision' in the same journal. Finally, 'All rules, regulations ... or provisions made or framed by the Minister for Finance' is translated as 'Gach riail, rialachán ... no foráil dá ndéanfaidh no dá gcúmfaidh an t-Aire Airgid' in s64(1) of the Electoral Act, 1923. See the commentary on Article 36ii where 'coinníoll' expresses 'term'.

i dtoghchán comhaltá do Dháil Éireann This phrase also expresses 'at an election for members of Dáil Éireann' in the next subsection. 'Whether a person has the right to vote at an election for members of Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'an bhfuil ceart ag duine vótáil i dtoghchán comhaltá do Dháil Éireann' in s4(3) of the Age of Majority Act, 1985, in agreement with the above. In s9(1) of the Electoral Act, 1963, 'The expression "General Election" shall mean a general election for members of the Dáil' is translated as 'Ciallóidh an abairt "Olltoghchán" olltoghchán do chomhaltá don Dáil' with 'the expression "general election” means a general election for members of Dáil Éireann’ being translated as ‘cialluíonn an focal “olltoghchán” olltoghchán comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann’ in s1 of the General Election (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1943. ‘That it contested the then next preceding general election for members of Dáil Éireann as an organised party’ is translated as ‘go ndearna sé an t-olltoghchán deiridh roimhe sin do chomhaltaí de Dháil Éireann a chomhrac mar pháirtí comheagraithe’ in s12 of the Oireachtas (Allowances to Members) and Ministerial and Parliamentary Offices (Amendment) Act, 1960, following s9(1)(c) of the Ministerial and Parliamentary Offices Act, 1938, in subsection 2(b)(ii) of which ‘at general elections for members of Dáil Éireann’ is translated as ‘in olltoghchán do bhí ann roimh an olltoghchán deiridh roimhe sin do chomhaltaí de Dháil Éireann’. See the commentary on Article 12.2.2° for ‘toghchán do’.

ag a bhfuil ocht mbliana déag slán See the commentary on the previous subsection where ‘ag a bhfuil bliain agus fiche slán’ expresses ‘who has reached the age of twenty-one years’.

cibé acu fir nó mná See the commentary on the previous subsection, where ‘cibé acu fear nó bean’ expresses ‘without distinction of sex’.

ceart vótála See the commentary on Article 12.2.2°.

TÉACS GAEILGE

Ní cead aon dlí a achtú a chuirfeadh saoránach ar bith, toisc gur fear nó toisc gur bean an saoránach sin, faoi mhíchumas nó faoi mhithreoir maidir lena bheith ina chomhalta de Dháil Éireann nó a dhícháileadh saoránach ar bith nó duine ar bith eile, ar an bhforas céanna sin, ó bheith i dteideal vótála i dtoghchán comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is not permitted to enact any law which would put any citizen, because that citizen is a man or a woman, under disability or incapacity/derangement as regards his being a member of Dáil Éireann or which would disqualify any citizen or any other person, or that same ground, from being entitled to vote in an election of members to Dáil Éireann.

ENGLISH TEXT

No law shall be enacted placing any citizen under disability or incapacity for membership of Dáil Éireann on the ground of sex or disqualifying any citizen or other person from voting at an election for members of Dáil Éireann on that ground.

Note that ‘or other person’ was inserted in the English text by the Ninth Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1984, ‘a dhícháileadh saoránach ar bith nó duine ar bith eile, ar an bhforas céanna sin’ being inserted in the Irish text.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 As noted above, the clause ‘a dhícháileadh saoránach ar bith nó duine ar bith eile, ar an bhforas céanna sin’ has been added to the original subsection following the Ninth Amendment of the Constitution, 1984; the English text, however, was amended only by the addition of ‘or other person’. In the original text, ‘disqualifying’ was expressed simply as ‘ó bheith i dteideal’ (‘put from being entitled’); the verb ‘dícháiligh’ was added to the Irish text, which retained ‘ó bheith i dteideal’, hence ‘disqualifying ... from voting’ is expressed as ‘a dhícháileadh ... ó bheith i dteideal vótála’ (‘disqualifying ... from being entitled to vote’) in the Irish text.
- 2 ‘On the ground of sex’ is expressed as ‘toisc gur fear nó toisc gur bean an saoránach sin’ (‘because that citizen is a man or [is] a woman’) in the Irish text, this coming after ‘a chuirfeadh saoránach ar bith’ (‘placing any citizen’) in the Irish text rather than after the text expressing ‘membership of Dáil Éireann’ as in the English text.
- 3 As in the previous subsection, ‘under disability or incapacity' is expressed by terms which can be read as 'under disablement or misguidance' in the Irish text, with 'for membership' being expressed following this in the present subsection as 'maidir lena bheith ina chomhalta' ('as regards his being a member') in the Irish text.

- 4 'On that ground' is expressed as 'ar an bhforas céanna sin' ('on that same ground') in the Irish text.
- 5 'Placing' is expressed as 'a chuirfeadh' ('which would put') in the Irish text.
- 6 'No ... shall be' is expressed as 'Ní cead' ('It is not permitted') in the Irish text, as we have seen in some earlier Articles also.
- 7 'Other person' is expressed as 'duine ar bith eile' ('any other person') in the Irish text.
- 8 'At an election for members of Dáil Éireann' is expressed as 'i dtoghchán comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann' ('in an election of members for Dáil Éireann') in the Irish text, as in the previous subsection.

Note that Article 14 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

All citizens of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) without distinction of sex, who have reached the age of twenty-one years and who comply with the provisions of the prevailing electoral laws, shall have the right to vote for members of Dáil Éireann .... Beidh de cheart ag gach saoránach de Shaorstát Éireann idir fireann agus buineann go mbeidh aois bhliana is fiche slán aige agus a chó-lionfaidh forálacha uile dlíthe toghacháin na haimsire, vótáil le teachtaí de Dháil Éireann.

Commentary

a dhícháileodh Note that in subsection 2 of this section, 'who are not disqualified' is expressed as 'ná cuirtear faoi dhícháilíocht'. The clause 'nó a dhícháileodh saoránach ar bith nó duine ar bith eile' was added to the original subsection following the Ninth Amendment of the Constitution, 1984.

'Dícháilim' is translated as 'I disqualify' in Téarmaí Dlí, 'dícháiligh' being translated as 'disqualify' in Ó Dónaill. This verb does not appear to be given as a headword in Dinneen nor in DIL – see the commentary on the previous subsection regarding the composition of the compound 'dícháilíocht'. 'Dícháiligh' is generally followed by 'chun' before the verbal noun, rather than 'ó', in the Acts. 'Disqualify the person from holding such a certificate or licence' is translated as 'an duine sin a dhícháilíú chun deimhniú nó ceadúnas den sórt sin a shealbhú' in s75(1) of the Wildlife Act, 1976. 'The Court ... may disqualify him from keeping any animals' is translated as 'féadfaidh an Chúirt ... é a dhícháilíú chun ainmhithe ar bith ... a choimeád' in s26(2) of the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Act, 1965. 'Membership of Board not to disqualify Judge from hearing charity cases' is translated as 'Ní bheidh Breitheamh is comhalta den Bhord dícháilíthe chun cásanna carthanais a éisteacht' in the Margin Title of s13 of the Charities Act, 1961. Finally, 'the Board ... may ... disqualify such greyhounds from any one or more of the following' is translated as 'féadfaidh an Bord ... na coin sin a dhícháilíú i leith aon ní nó nithe acu seo a leanas' in s45(1) of the Greyhound Industry Act, 1958. See further the commentary on Article 18.9.

faoi mhíchumas nó faoi mhíthreoir See the commentary on subsection 1 of this section. Note that 'incapacity for membership' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'mí-chumas do bhallraíocht' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 1926, p. 275, with 'mí-chumas do bhallraíocht an Oireachtais' being cited as translating 'incapacity for membership of the Oireachtas' on the Dáil Order Paper, 1926, p. 400.

i dteideal vótála This would be written as 'i dteideal vótáil' according to the official standard, 'vótáil' being a verbal noun coming at the head of a prepositional phrase – see An Caighdeán Oifigiúil, 'Foirm an Ainmnigh in ionad an Ghinidigh', s5(b).

toisc gur fear nó toisc gur bean See the commentary on subsection 1 of this section, where 'cibé acu fear nó bean' expresses 'without distinction of sex'.

ar an bhforas See the commentary on Articles 40.4.2° and 18.4.2°. Note that 'on that ground' was not specifically expressed in the original text, 'ar an bhforas céanna sin' being added by the Ninth Amendment of the Constitution, 1984.

Ní cead Literally 'it is not permitted' – see the commentary on Article 9.1.3°.

Standardised gender-proofed Irish text

Ní cead aon dlí a achtú a chuirfeadh saoránach ar bith, toisc gur fear nó toisc gur bean an saoránach sin, faoi mhíchumas nó faoi mhíthreoir maidir le bheith ina chomhalta nó ina comhalta de Dháil Éireann nó a dhícháileodh saoránach ar bith nó duine ar bith eile, ar an bhforas céanna sin, ó bheith i dteideal vótáil i dtoghchán comhaltaí do Dháil Éireann.

Direct gender-proofed translation

Ní dhéanfar aon dlí a achtú lena gcuirfeadh aon saoránach faoi mhíchumas nó faoi éagumas maidir le comhaltas Dháil Éireann ar fhoras gnéis nó lena ndícháileofar aon saoránach nó aon duine eile chun vótáil i dtoghchán do chomhaltaí Dháil Éireann ar an bhforas sin.

ENGLISH TEXT

No voter may exercise more than one vote at an election for Dáil Éireann, and the voting shall be by secret ballot.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Voter' is expressed as 'toghthóir' ('elector') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Exercise (a) vote' is expressed as 'vóta ... a thabhairt' ('give (a) vote') in the Irish text.
- 3 'The voting shall be' is expressed as 'a dhéanfar an vótáil' ('the voting will be done') in the Irish text.
- 4 'Ní cead' ('It is not permitted') expresses 'No ... may' in the Irish text.

Note that we find the following in Article 14 of the 1922 Constitution:

No voter may exercise more than one vote at an election to either House, and the voting shall be by secret ballot. Ní chaitheamh aon vótálaí níos mó ná aon vóta amháin i dtoghchán d'aon cheann den dá Thigh, agus is le ballóid shicréideach a déanfar an vótáil.

Note also that s2 of the Constitution (Amendment No. 6) Act, 1928, contains the following:

The voting at such election shall be by secret ballot and no elector may exercise more than one vote thereat. Is tré bhallóid sheicréideach a déanfar an vótáil ag na toghcháin sin agus ní féadfaidh aon toghthóir níos mó ná aon vóta amháin do thabhairt ionta.

This same English text appears in s1 of the Constitution (Amendment No. 11) Act, 1929, with 'Is le ballóid shicréideach' replacing 'Is tré bhallóid sheicréideach'.

Commentary

do thoghthóir 'Toghthóir' is translated as 'elector' in Ó Dónaill, 'toghadóir' being translated as 'a selector, a chooser, an elector' in Dinneen. 'Toghthóir' = 'toghth(a)' + 'óir', and 'toghadóir' = 'toghth(a)' + 'adóir', according to Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú, the Old Irish suffix '-tóir' coming originally from Latin '(a)tor' – see Rudolf Thurneysen, op. cit., s269(5), who cites 'senatóir' for example. Professor Ó Murchú remarks that one would expect 'toghadóir' < 'togh' + 'adóir', Ó Dónaill giving 'toghdóir' as an unstandardized form of the headword 'toghthóir'. See the commentary on Article 12.2.1° regarding 'togh'.

Turning to the Acts, in s2(1) of the Referendum (Amendment) Act, 1979, 'each voter at the poll shall record his vote in the constituency' is translated as 'déanfaidh gach vótálaí sa vótaíocht a vóta a thaifeadh sa dailcheantar', the same text being translated as 'déanfaidh gach vótálaí sa vótaíocht a vóta do chaitheamh sa dailcheantar' in s11(e) of the Referendum Act, 1942, and as 'déanfaidh gach vótálaí sa vótaíocht a vóta do thabhairt uaidh sa dailcheantar' in s20(e) of the Presidential Elections Act, 1937. 'Not less than one-twentieth of the voters' is translated as 'an fichiú cuid ar a luighead de sna vótáilithe' in Article 47 of the 1922 Constitution, 'liostaí vótáilithe' being cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'voters' lists' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 11/1/1924. 'An Clár de Thoghthóirí um Rialtas Áitiúil', on the other hand, translates 'the Register of Local Government Electors' in the Preamble to the Local Elections Postponement Act, 1922.

vóta ... a thabhairt See the commentary on Article

15.11.2°. 'Do vóta a thabhairt do dhuine' is cited by Ó Dónaill and translated as 'to give one's vote to someone', also citing 'do vóta a chaitheamh, to record one's vote'. As we saw earlier on, Dinneen has 'bóta' as a headword, including 'bhóta' in his entry. Dinneen includes 'a vote' among the senses of 'guth'. Ó Dónaill gives 'expressed opinion' as one of the senses of 'guth', citing 'guth a thabhairt ar son ruda, to voice an opinion in favour of something', with 'voice, vote' as another sense, citing 'do ghuth a thabhairt, to vote'. See the commentary on Article 12.2.1°.

Turning to the Acts, 'The Governor may ... exercise a second or casting vote' is translated as 'féadfaidh an Gobharnóir ... vóta breise no réitigh do chaitheamh' in s32(4) of the Central Bank Act, 1942, 'caith' being used to translate 'exercise', in relation to a vote, in Article 14 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Féadfaidh an Cathaoirleach vóta réitigh do thabhairt uaidh' translates 'the Chairman may ... exercise a casting vote' in s3(4) of the Approved Investments Act, 1933. 'Who shall have and exercise a casting vote' is translated as 'ag a mbeidh vóta réitigh agus ar a mbeidh é chaitheamh' in Article 22 of the 1922 Constitution. See the commentary on Articles 3 and 13.5.1° regarding 'exercise' in general.

Ní cead do Literally 'it is not permitted to' – see the commentary on Article 9.1.3° regarding this phrase in the Constitution. Again Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú finds difficulty with the future 'ní chaitheamh' below, remarking that 'no voter will exercise ...' would not suffice in the English version – that many a voter 'has' and 'will'!

rúnbhallóid See the commentary on Article 12.2.3°.

TÉACS GAEILGE

Ionadóirí do dháilcheantair a shocraítear le dlí comhaltas Dháil Éireann.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The membership of Dáil Éireann (is/comprises) representatives for constituencies that are provided/arranged by law.

ENGLISH TEXT

Dáil Éireann shall be composed of members who represent constituencies determined by law.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Dáil Éireann shall be composed of members' is expressed in the Irish text as 'comhaltas Dháil Éireann' ('the membership of Dáil Éireann'), the copula 'is' ('is') in a regular Irish construction being omitted; the sentence might equally have had the form 'Is ionadóirí ...'.
- 2 'Who represent constituencies' is expressed as 'Ionadóirí do dháilcheantair' ('representatives for constituencies') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Determined by law' is expressed as 'a shocraítear le dlí' ('arranged/provided by law') in the Irish text, 'a cinnfear le dlí' rendering '(as) may be determined by law' in Article 16.1.2<sup>o</sup>ii, following its amendment, 'cinnim' translating 'I determine (issue, etc.)' in Téarmaí Dlí.

Note that Article 26 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

Dáil Éireann shall be composed of members who represent constituencies determined by law. Beidh i nDáil Éireann comhaltá agus iad ag ionadú dáilcheantar a socrófar le dlí.

Commentary

Ionadóirí See the commentary on Article 15.1.2<sup>o</sup>, where 'a House of Representatives' is expressed as 'Teach Ionadóirí'. 'Ionadaí' is the form found in Téarmaí Dlí. As regards the verb 'represent' in the Acts, 'He shall be deemed to have been elected to represent the constituency in which he received the greatest number of first preference votes' is translated as 'measfar gurb é an dáilcheantar ina bhfuair sé an líon is mó vótaí céadrogha is rogha leis a ionadú' in s35(1) of the Electoral Act, 1992, the same English text, with the substitution of 'first preferences' for 'first preference votes', being translated as follows in s55(1) of the Electoral Act, 1923: 'tuigfear gurb é an dáilcheantar ina bhfuair sé an uimhir is mó de chéad-roghanna is rogha leis a ionadú'. Following the wording of the Constitution, 'The members of Dáil Éireann shall ... represent the constituencies specified in the schedule' is translated as 'beidh comhaltá Dháil Éireann ina n-ionadóirí do na dáilcheantair a shonraítear sa Sceideal' in s3(1) of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1980, and in s3(1) of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1974, 'a sonraítear' in place of 'a shonraítear' being found in s3(1) of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1947. See further the commentary on Article 15.3.1<sup>o</sup>.

'Baill, ionadaithe don Dáil', is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'members representing the Dáil' on the Dáil Order Paper, 1926, p. 341. 'In aon áit 'na meastar nách leor an méid ionadaithe atá ann fé láthair' translates 'where it is considered the existing representation is inadequate' in s27 of the 'Laoighis County Scheme' in the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, with 'beidh teideal aige ... chun ionadaíochta tré atúrnae' translating '(the person) shall be entitled ... to be represented by solicitor' in s34(3) of the Dentists Act, 1928. 'A person who represents a shipping company' is translated as 'duine a ionaduinn cuideachta loingséoireachta' in s4(a) of the Pilotage Orders Confirmation Act, 1924.

As regards 'compose' in the Acts, 'The Administrative Council shall be composed of one representative of each Contracting State' is translated as 'Ionadaí amháin ó gach Stát Conarthach a bheidh ar an gComhairle Riaracháin' in s1 of Article 4 of the Second Schedule to the Arbitration Act, 1980. 'The Governing Committee shall be composed of all members of the Fund, which shall be represented by senior financial officials' is translated as 'Beidh an Coiste Rialaithe comhdhéanta de chomhaltá uile an Chiste agus beidh oifigigh airgeadais sinsearacha mar ionadaithe acu' in s2(b) of Article XVI of the Schedule to the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (Financial Support Fund) (Agreement) Act, 1976. 'Coistí comhairleacha réigiún ... a bheidh comhdhéanta de tháirgeoirí bainne' translates 'regional advisory committees composed of milk producers' in s35(1) of the Dairy Produce Marketing Act, 1961. 'The yearly conference of the Church composed of representatives in accordance with the Constitution of the Church' is translated as 'códháil bhliantúil na hEaglaise agus í códhéanta d'ionaduithe do réir chóru na hEaglaise' in s1 of the Methodist Church in Ireland Act, 1928. Finally, note that 'the Medical Staff to be composed of the present M.D. of the Workhouse at Tullamore and the Surgeon of the County Infirmary' is translated as 'an Dochtúir Oifigiúil atá i dTigh Oibre na Tulaighe Móire fé láthair agus Máin-liaigh na hOtharlainne Contae do bheith ina bhFuirinn Leighis' in s14(a) of the 'Offaly County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923.

Commenting on the use of the future 'beidh' in the translation below, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that, while it suffices, it is not very satisfactory as regards corresponding to English 'shall', that what is being declared is not what 'will be' in Dáil Éireann, in some time in the future, but what is being ordered for it. He would therefore prefer 'Is é atá ...', remarking that by leaving out the copula the drafters of the Irish text left the declaration free of tense.

do dháilcheantair The headword 'dáilcheantar', with lower case 'd', is translated as 'constituency' in Ó Dónaill, this compound of 'Dáil' and 'ceantar' ('district' in Ó Dónaill and in Téarmaí Dlí) not appearing as a headword in Dinneen, where 'Dáil Éireann, the representative assembly of Ireland' is followed by the abbreviation for 'recent'.

'Dáilcheantar' translates 'constituency' in the 1922 Constitution, as we see above, and in the Acts to this day, 'the constituency of Donegal South-West', for example, being translated as 'dáilcheantar Dhún na nGall Thiar Theas' in s5 of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1980. 'In the case of a borough constituency' is translated as 'I gcás dáilcheanntair bhuirge' in s23(1)(a) of the Electoral Act, 1923, 'I gcás dáilcheanntair chontae' translating 'In the case of a county constituency' in s23(1)(b), with 'dáilcheanntar Príomh-scoile' translating 'University Constituency' in s23(1). Note that the first section/article of the 1919 Constitution concludes as follows:

agus isé bheidh san Dáil ná teachtaí toghtha ag muintir na hÉireann ó sna dáilcheanntair atá san tír fé láthair.

'Toghlach' translates 'constituency' outside the context of the Dáil. 'Is toghlach chun críocha na Coda seo gach limistéar díobh seo a leanas' translates 'Each of the following areas shall be a constituency for the purpose of this Part' in s29(1) of the Údarás na Gaeltachta Act, 1979, for example. In s25 of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, 'Where any constituency comprises the whole or any part of any Dáil constituency' is translated as 'Nuair a chuimsítear in aon toghlach an t-iomlán nó aon chuid d'aon dáilcheantar'.

Note, finally, that 'Dáil Éireann sitting as a Constituent Assembly in this Provisional Parliament', in the Preamble to the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922, is translated as 'Dáil Éireann 'na suidhe mar Dháil Bhunaidh sa Pháirlimint Shealadach so'.

a shocraítear See the commentary on Article 8.3 regarding 'socraigh' as 'provide' and the commentary on Article 1 as regards 'cinn', 'determine'.

comhaltas See the commentary on Articles 12.6.2° and 12.10.4°. We find the reverse situation in Article 16.1.3°, where 'faoi mhíthreoir maidir lena bheith ina chomhalta de Dháil Éireann' expresses 'incapacity for membership of Dáil Éireann'.

TÉACS GAEILGE

Socrófar líon comhaltai Dháil Éireann le dlí ó am go ham ach ní cead a lánlíon a bheith faoi bhun comhalta in aghaidh gach tríocha míle den daonra, ná os cionn comhalta in aghaidh gach fiche míle den daonra.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The complement of members of Dáil Éireann will be arranged by law from time to time but their full complement is not permitted to be under a member for every thirty thousand of the population, nor over a member for every twenty thousand of the population.

ENGLISH TEXT

The number of members shall from time to time be fixed by law, but the total number of members of Dáil Éireann shall not be fixed at less than one member for each thirty thousand of the population, or at more than one member for each twenty thousand of the population.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'The number of members' is expressed as 'líon comhaltai Dháil Éireann' ('the number of members of Dáil Éireann') in the Irish text, with 'the total number of members of Dáil Éireann' then being expressed as 'a lánlíon' ('its/their full/total number/complement').

- 2 'Ní cead' ('it is not permitted') again expresses 'shall not', as we have seen in the previous section and in some earlier Articles, with 'shall not be fixed at' (which echoes the earlier 'be fixed by law') expressed in the Irish text as 'ní cead ... a bheith' ('it is not permitted to be').
- 3 'Be fixed by law' is expressed as 'socrófar le dlí' ('be arranged by law') in the Irish text, 'determined by law' in the previous subsection being similarly expressed.
- 4 'One member' is expressed as 'comhalta' ('a member') on two occasions in the Irish text.
- 5 'Less than' is expressed as 'faoi bhun' ('under'/'less than') and 'more than' as 'os cionn' ('over'/'more than') in the Irish text.
- 6 In accord with Irish syntax, 'or' is expressed as 'ná' ('nor') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 26 of the 1922 Constitution contains the following:

The number of members shall be fixed from time to time by the Oireachtas, but the total number of members of Dáil Éireann ... shall not be fixed at less than one member for each thirty thousand of the population, or at more than one member for each twenty thousand of the population. Socróidh an tOireachtas uimhir na dteachtaí ó am go ham, ach ní socrófar lán-uimhir theachtaí Dháil Éireann ... fé bhun teachta in agha gach deich míle fichead den líon tíre, ná os cionn teachta in agha gach fiche míle den líon tíre.

Commentary

lánlíon This headword is translated as 'full complement' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'cathlán a thabhairt ar lánlíon, to bring a battalion up to strength'. Dinneen does not seem to have this compound of 'lán' ('lán-', in compounds, being translated as 'full, perfect, complete, quite, wholly') and 'líon', translated in Dinneen as 'fill, complement; full, requisite or due number ...', citing 'líon na bhFiann, all the Fianna'. 'Lánchleithiúnaí', 'lánghaolmhar' and 'lán-úinéir' are translated respectively as 'total dependant', 'of the whole blood' and 'full owner' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Iomlán' usually translates 'total', 'míchumas iomlán' and 'praghas iomlán ceannaigh' respectively translating 'total disablement' and 'total purchase price' in Téarmaí Dlí. DIL translates 'imlán' as 'very full, whole, complete, perfect' as against 'lán', 'full, full (of), filled (with)'.<sup>1</sup>

'An application is made to the Registrar ... by not less than one-tenth of the total number of members of the society' is translated as 'go ndéanfaidh líon nach lú ná an deichiú cuid de líon iomlán comhaltai an chumainn, iarratas chun an Chláraitheora' in s29(1)(a) of the Building Societies Act, 1976. 'The members of the joint committee ... shall not exceed in number one-third of the total number of members of the joint committee' is translated as 'nach rachaidh líon na gcomhaltai den chomhchoiste ... thar trian méid iomlán comhaltai an chomhchoiste' in s110(2) of the Housing Act, 1966. 'Is é is córam do chomhbhord ná an ceathrú cuid de líon iomlán comhaltai an bhuird' translates 'The quorum of a joint board shall be one-fourth of the total number of members of the board' in s13 of the Third Schedule to the Mental Treatment Act, 1945. 'Total number of members for Constituency' is translated as 'Uimhir iomlán ballra an Dáilcheantair' in the Eighth Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923. In s4(a) of the Third Schedule thereto, 'If the surplus is less than the total number of transferable papers' is translated as 'Más lú an barrachas ná lán-uimhir na bpáipéirí ionaistrithe', with 'líon na vótanna go léir' translating 'the total number of the votes' in s12(8) thereof. See also the commentary on Article 12.10.4°.

in aghaidh This prepositional phrase, literally 'in face of', translated principally as 'against' by Ó Dónaill, has the secondary sense of 'per, for each', with 'in aghaidh an lae, daily' cited by Ó Dónaill and 'ubh i n-aghaidh an lae, an egg for each day' cited by Dinneen. DIL cites 'bliadhain i n-aghaidh na h-uaire a maireann an t-éiclips uirre féin' ('a year for every hour ...') from the Irish Corpus Astronomiae.

We may note here that 'agad' is not found either in the Old Irish Glosses or in the early Irish law-tracts (as against early commentaries on the laws), 'enech', the original sense of which was evidently 'brows' or 'cheeks' according to DIL, expressing 'face' in earlier sources. By transition of meaning, 'apparently connected with the tendency for feelings of shame to be reflected in the countenance', according to DIL, 'enech' comes to be used in the sense of 'honour, repute, good name', this being the principal sense of Modern Irish 'oíneach', the secondary sense being 'generosity, hospitality, bounty, favour', honour being maintained by 'open-handedness, bountifulness' – see DIL s.v. 'enech'. As D.A. Binchy states in his 'Legal Glossary' to Críth Gablach (1979, p. 84f.), 'From the original meaning "face, countenance" ... the technical legal meaning "honour, dignity" is a natural transition for which there are parallels in other languages' – in English, for example, the phrase 'to save face' comes to mind.

Turning to the Acts, 'for each one hundred pound of that security held by him' is translated as 'in aghaidh gach céad punt faoi leith den urrús sin a bhí ar seilbh aige' in s25(1)(a) of the Transport Act, 1950, for example. 'The sum of one penny for each two-thirds of a mile' is translated as 'pingin in aghaidh gach dhá dtrian de mhíle' in s3(d) of the Dublin United Tramways (Omnibus Services) Act, 1925.

daonra This term is translated as 'population' in Ó Dónaill; it does not appear to be given as a headword in Dinneen nor in DIL. The collective suffix '-ra' (earlier '-radh') is compounded with 'daon', earlier 'doén', a poetic term for 'human being' corresponding to 'duine', according to DIL, where it is cited in a number of compounds.

'Daonra ceantair uirbigh' translates 'the population of an urban district' in s156(2) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981. We see above that 'líon tíre' translated 'population' in the 1922 Constitution. 'The size and populations vary' is translated as 'Tá ana-dhifríochtaí idir na ceantair, leis, maidir lena méid agus maidir le líon na ndaoine ionta' in s24 of the 'Offaly County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'ár gcuid-ne de sna tuarastail sin d'íoc do réir méid na líomatáistí agus do réir líon na ndaoine ionta' translating 'to pay on the area population basis our part of such salaries'. 'Is do réir "líomatáiste agus daoiniúlacht"

a áireófar an cion a bheidh len'íoc' translates 'the proportion payable ... is to be calculated on an "area and population" basis' in s86 of the 'Tirconail County Scheme'. 'Líonmhaireacht na ndaoine' translates the single term 'population' in s2(a) of the Statistics Act, 1926. Finally, 'population' is also translated as 'pobal' in the 1922 Constitution, 'the civilian population' being translated as '(chun) an phobail shibhialta' in Article 70.

faoi bhun This phrase is translated as 'beneath' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'faoi bhun pingine, under a penny'. Dinneen translates 'fá bhun' as 'under, less than', citing 'fá bhun scillinge, under a shilling' and 'tríocha nó fá n-a bhun, thirty or under'. 'In an establishment normally employing more than 20 and less than 50 employees' is translated as 'i mbunáocht a fhostaíonn de ghnáth líon is mó ná 20 agus is lú ná 50 fostaí' in s6(1)(a) of the Protection of Employment Act, 1977. 'If at the date of the appointment there are less than four judges permanently assigned to that circuit' is translated as 'más rud é ar dháta an cheaptha gur lú ná ceathrar an líon breithiúna a bheidh buansannta don chuaird sin' in s2(2)(a) of the Courts Act, 1977. 'Is set opposite the name of more than one candidate' is translated as 'curtha air os coinne ainm níos mó ná iarrthóir amháin' in s58(2)(c) of the First Schedule to the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977.

os cionn This phrase is translated as 'above' by Ó Dónaill, with the secondary sense of 'more than', translating 'os cionn céad' as 'more than a hundred'. Dinneen translates 'ós cionn' as 'over, on top of, above, exceeding, in front of'. 'Cionn' is the old dative singular of 'ceann', following the preposition 'os' ('over, above'), earlier 'ós'/'úas' glossing 'super' in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. We find 'os cionn' in a more or less literal sense in 'in tituil robóí huas ciunn Crist isin chroich' (i.e. the title which was 'over Christ's head' on the cross) from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms.

líon comhaltáí Dháil Éireann 'Comhaltáí' would be lenited here, according to the official standard, with the lenited nominative form being in place of the genitive before 'Dáil Éireann' – see the commentary on Article 1 regarding the (lenited) nominative in place of the genitive. See the commentary on Article 14.3 regarding 'líon'.

'Number of members to be returned for a constituency', in the Margin Title to s4 of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1980, is translated as 'An líon comhaltáí a thoghfar do dháilcheantar', as in the Margin Title to s4 of the Electoral (Amendment) Acts, 1969 and 1947. 'The number of members to be elected ... for each electoral area ... shall ... be' is translated as 'Is é an líon comhaltáí a bheidh le toghadh ... do gach toghlimistéar' in s87(1) of the Electoral Act, 1963, and as 'Is í an uimhir de chomhaltáí bheas le toghadh ... do gach togh-liomatáiste fé leith' in s3(7) of the Local Government (Dublin) Act, 1945. Note, finally, that 'The Minister shall appoint such persons to be officers of the Official Censor ... subject to the sanction of the Minister for Finance as to number' is translated as 'Ceapfidh an t-Aire chun bheith ina n-oifigigh don Scrúdóir Oifigiúil ... pé daoine ... ach a líon do bheith fé mar a chheadóidh an t-Aire Airgid' in s4(2) of the Censorship of Films Act, 1923.

Socrófar ... le dlí Note that 'a shocráitear le dlí' expresses 'determined by law' in the previous subsection. On the other hand, 'for the election on a franchise and in the manner to be provided by law, ... of so many members of Seanad Éireann as may be fixed by law' is translated as 'chun go dtoghfar de réir toghchórais, agus ar an modh, a shocrófar le dlí, ... an líon sin comhaltaí de Sheanad Éireann a shocrófar le dlí' in Article 18.4.2°, following the Seventh Amendment of the Constitution, 1979.

We find 'ceap' and 'cinn', along with 'socraigh' and forms of 'socair', translating 'fix' in the Acts. 'An officer or servant (whether male or female) remunerated at a salary fixed at a rate per annum' is translated as 'oifigeach nó seirbhíseach (firinneach nó baineanach) lena n-íoctar tuarastal atá socair do réir ráta sa bhliain' in s2(1)(a) of the Schedule to the Great Southern Railways Company (Superannuation Scheme) Act, 1947. 'Until the date when such compensation is so fixed' is translated as 'go dtí dáta an chúitimh sin do cheapadh amhlaidh' in s15(1) of the Unemployment (Relief Works) Act, 1940.

'Socróidh an Chúirt Dúiche méid an rannioca' translates 'the District Court shall fix the amount of the contribution' in s215(4) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, 'cinnfidh an Chúirt méid an rannioca a bheas le déanamh aige' translating 'the Court shall fix the amount of the contribution to be made by him' in s232(c) of the Mental Treatment Act, 1945, 'ceapfaidh an Chúirt méid an rann-ioca bheidh le déanamh ag an duine dliteach' translating 'the Court shall fix the amount of the contribution to be made by the person liable' in s29(c) of the Public Assistance Act, 1939.

In s2 of the Criminal Justice (Community Service) Act, 1983, 'but does not apply where any such sentence is fixed by law' is translated as 'ach níl feidhm aige i gcás aon phianbhreith den sórt sin a bheidh socraithe le dlí'. 'During any time which is for the time being fixed by laws as the close time for eels', in s34 of the Fisheries Act, 1925, is translated as 'i rith aon aimsire a bheidh ceaptha de thuras na huaire do réir dlí mar aimsir choiscthe i gcóir eascon'. In Article 63 of the 1922 Constitution, 'The terms and conditions of his tenure of office shall be fixed by law' is translated as 'socrófar le dlí téarmaí agus coinníollacha sealbhuíochta a oifige'. 'The rent ... shall be fixed at such sum' is translated as 'An cíos ... socrófar iad do réir pé suim' in s3(2) of the University Education (Agriculture and Dairy Service) Act, 1926.

'Féadfaidh an tAire dáta, am agus áit an chéad chruinnithe den Bhord a shocrú' translates 'The Minister may fix the date, time and place of the first meeting of the Board' in s17(8) of the Nurses Act, 1950, 'Féadfaidh an tAire dáta, tráth agus ionad an chéad chruinnithe den Bhord a shocrú' being found in s17(8) of the Opticians Act, 1956, 'Féadfaidh an tAire dáta, am agus ionad chéad chruinnithe an Bhord a shocrú' being found in s12(2) of the Voluntary Health Insurance Act, 1957, with 'tráth' replacing 'am' and 'chéad-chruinnithe' replacing 'chéad chruinnithe' in s10(2) of the Schedule to the Agricultural Produce (Cereals) (Amendment) Act, 1958. We find 'Féadfaidh an tAire an dáta, an tráth agus an t-ionad do chéad chruinniú an Bhoird a shocrú' in s11(2) of the Nuclear Energy (An Bord Fuinnimh Núicléigh) Act, 1971, with 'Féadfaidh an tAire dáta, am agus ionad chéad chruinniú an Choimisiúin a shocrú' in s7(2) of the Schedule to the Radio and Television Act, 1988. See further the commentary on Article 40.4.3°.

'Ceap' in particular translated 'fix' in early Acts. The Margin Title of s7 of the State Harbours Act, 1924, for example, 'Public Works Commissioners may fix amount of tolls, etc.' is translated as 'Féadfidh Coimisinéirí na nOibreacha Puiblí méid custum, etc., do cheapa'. 'Pé custuim réasúnta a cheapfid agus a shocróid do réir a dtuille féin ó am go ham' translates 'such reasonable tolls as the Commissioners shall from time to time in their discretion fix and determine' in s52 of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925. Note, finally, that 'entertainment in dumb show the scenic arrangement or acting form of which is fixed in writing or otherwise' is translated as 'siamsa geáitsíochta go bhfuil riara na radharc no fuirm na haicteála ann socruithe i scríbhinn no ar aon tslí eile' in s177(1) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927.

TÉACS GAEILGE

An chomhréir a bheas idir an líon comhaltaí a bheas le toghadh aon tráth le haghaidh gach dailcheantair ar leith agus daonra gach dailcheantair ar leith, de réir an daonáirimh is déanaí dá ndearnadh roimhe sin, ní foláir í a bheith ar cothrom, sa mhéid gur féidir é, ar fud na dúiche uile.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The proportion that there will be between the number of members who will be elected / for election at any time for each particular constituency and the population of each particular constituency, according to the latest census made before that, it must be in balance / at par, in as far as possible, throughout the whole region/district.

ENGLISH TEXT

The ratio between the number of members to be elected at any time for each constituency and the population of each constituency, as ascertained at the last preceding census, shall, so far as it is practicable, be the same throughout the country.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Throughout the country' is expressed as 'ar fud na dúiche uile' ('throughout the whole region/district') in the Irish text.

- 2 'Ratio' is expressed as 'comhréir' ('proportion'/'congruity') in the Irish text.
- 3 'The same' is expressed as 'ar cothrom' ('in balance'/'at par') in the Irish text.
- 4 'As ascertained at the last preceding census' is expressed as 'de réir an daonáirimh is déanaí dá ndearnadh roimhe sin' ('in accordance with the latest census done before that') in the Irish text.
- 5 'Each constituency' is expressed as 'gach dailcheantar ar leith' ('each particular constituency') in the Irish text.
- 6 'So far as it is practicable' is expressed as 'sa mhéid gur féidir é' ('so far as it is possible') in the Irish text.
- 7 'Shall' is expressed as 'ní foláir' ('must be'), as we have seen in some other Articles.

J.M. Kelly (op. cit., p. 206) reports as follows on reference in the courts to this subsection:

In O'Donovan v Attorney General ([1961] IR 114; (1962) 96 ILTR 121) Budd J found "no material discordance" between "so far as it is practicable" and "sa mhéid gur féidir é"; the Supreme Court in In re Article 26 and the Electoral (Amendment) Bill 1961 ([1961] IR 169) agreed with him. In the same case, the Supreme Court attached no importance to the fact that in the Irish phrase "de réir an daonáirimh is déanaí dá ndearnadh roimhe sin" there was no word directly representing the word "ascertained" in the corresponding English phrase "as ascertained at the last preceding census". The Court said:

"Daonáireamh" connotes not merely a census, but an ascertained census; the verb "dearnadh" strengthens this meaning."

Note that Article 26 of the 1922 Constitution contains the following:

Provided that the proportion between the number of members to be elected at any time for each constituency and the population of each constituency as ascertained at the last preceding census, shall, so far as possible, be identical throughout the country. Ar choiníoll, gurb é an cothrom céanna chó fada agus is féidir, a bheidh ar fuaid na tíre idir uimhir na dteachtaí a bheidh le togha aon uair do gach dailcheantar agus líon tíre gach dailcheantair, ar n-a tháil sin amach sa chomhaireamh deireanach roimhe sin.

Commentary

aon tráth See the commentary on Article 31.2 regarding 'tráth'. In s166(1) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, 'An application may be made at any time' is translated as 'Féadfar iarratas a dhéanamh tráth ar bith', 'Féadfar an t-iarratas san do dhéanamh tráth ar bith' translating 'such application may be made at any time' in s5(1)(a) of the Flax Act, 1936. 'Gach suim d'íoc atá anois, no a bheidh aon tráth roimh an 1adh lá d'Abrán, 1925 ... iníochta as' translates 'to meet all sums which are now or may at any time before the 1st day of April, 1925, be ... payable thereout'. 'Más rud é go bhfuil, agus aon tráth a bhfuil, comhshocraíochtaí ar marthain' translates 'if, and at a time when, arrangements are in existence' in s64 of the Finance Act, 1990. 'Féadfaidh an Bord aon tráth coiste a ceapadh faoin alt seo a dhíscaoileadh' translates 'The Board may at any time dissolve a committee appointed under this section' in s25(5) of the Horse Industry Act, 1970.

Again, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú, commenting on a draft of the translation below, remarks that 'tráth ar bith' would not be fully correct in this context as it gives to understand that an election at any time could be involved. Professor Ó Murchú recommends 'in aon tráth ar leith'.

An chomhréir 'Comhréir' is translated principally as 'accord, congruity' in Ó Dónaill, with 'proportion' given as the secondary sense (preceded by the abbreviation for 'Mathematics'), citing 'an chomhréir atá idir x agus y, the proportion that x bears to y'. 'I gcomhréir le' is translated as 'consistent with' in Téarmaí Dlí and Dinneen translates 'cóimhréir' as 'congruity, construction, syntax, concord, analogy; uniformity'. The earlier form, 'comríar', based on 'riar' (translated principally as 'will, wish, demand, request; decision' in DIL), is translated as 'submission, control, attendance' in DIL, with no examples cited from the earlier sources.

'A ratio which is not less than a specified ratio' is translated as 'coibhneas nach lú ná coibhneas sonraithe' in s37(1)(b) of the Building Societies Act, 1976, 'do réir an choibhnis idir a shealúchais agus iomlán scaireanna neamhíochta an Bhainc' translating 'according to the ratio of its shareholding to the total outstanding shares of the Bank' in s5(g) of Article VI of Part II of the Schedule to the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, 1957. The heading 'Ratio Figure' in the Third Schedule to the Currency Act, 1927, is translated as 'Figúir an Ratio'. Finally, 'cóimheas' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'ratio' in translations for the Department of Education. Note that 'ratio' is translated as 'cóimheas' in De Bhaldráithe, 'cóimhmheas' being translated as 'act of comparing (with, re, le); comparison; rivalry; a judging between' in Dinneen.

ar cothrom This phrase, preceded by the abbreviation for 'Commerce', is translated as 'in balance' and, preceded by the abbreviation for 'Finance', as 'at par' by Ó Dónaill, who translates 'cothrom' principally as 'level; balance', citing 'rud a chur i gcothrom, ar a chothrom, to set something even; to adjust the balance of something' and secondarily as 'equal, equable, measure'. This compound of 'comh' plus 'trom' is translated literally as 'an equal weight' in Dinneen s.v. 'comhthrom', where the following senses are also included: 'equity, justice, fair play; balance; standard; level; plane', with 'ar an gcomhthrom' translated as 'on the level' and 'ar mo chomhthrom' as 'at my ease, in a comfortable posture'. 'Comhthrom' is translated principally as 'of the same weight, equal, even, equivalent, par' in DIL.

'And such day shall be the same throughout the State' is translated as 'agus is é an lá céanna a bheas ann ar fud an Stáit' in s2 of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1946. 'The poll shall be taken on one day only and that day shall be the same throughout the State' is translated as 'ní bheidh aon vótaíocht ann ach aon lá amháin agus is ar an lá céanna a bheith sí ann ar fuaid an Stáit' in s11(a) of the Referendum Act, 1942. In s41(1) of the Electoral Act, 1923, 'Each General Election shall be held on one day only, and such day shall be the same throughout Saorstát Éireann' is translated as 'Comórfar gach Togachán Generálta fé leith an t-aon lá amháin agus an lá san amháin ar fuaid Shaorstáit Éireann'.

dúiche 'Ar fud na dúiche' is translated as 'throughout the area' in Ó Dónaill, with Dinneen translating 'ar fuaid na dúithche' as 'throughout the district, country, etc.', translating the nominative 'dúthaigh' as 'one's native land or locality; a country, a country-side, a district, estate, land ...'. 'The District Court' is styled 'an Chúirt Dúiche' in Tearmaí Dlí. 'Dúthaig', as a noun, is translated principally as 'hereditary land, patrimony' in DIL, with secondary senses of 'native district, native land' and 'region, land', the sense of 'land' in general being rare, according to DIL. 'Dúthaig', as an adjective followed by the preposition 'do', is translated as 'belonging to by virtue of descent or heredity' in DIL, where 'dian (= dianid) duthaig Liphe lígda' ('to whom lovely Liffey belongs') is cited from an eighth-century poem in praise of a Leinster prince.

A copy of the full text of the Bill can be inspected and purchased at all Post Offices throughout the country' is translated as 'Is féidir cóip de théacs iomlán an Bhille a iniúchadh agus a cheannach in aon Phost-Oifig sa tír' in the Appendix to s5 of the Referendum (Amendment) Act, 1959. In Articles 26 and 28 of the 1922 Constitution, 'throughout the country' is translated as 'ar fuaid na tíre', this same phrase being similarly translated in the Preamble to the Public Safety (Emergency Powers) Act, 1923. In Article 33 of the 1922 Constitution, however, 'arranging for the representation of important interests and institutions in the country' is translated as 'ionadúocht do sholáthar do leasanna agus d'fhundúireachtaí táchtacha sa dúthaigh'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that 'dúthaigh'/'dúiche' has the sense of 'country, homeland' rather than 'area' (as in the translation from Ó Dónaill above), the question being why the Irish drafters did not use the term 'tír' here; as they did not, Professor Ó Murchú recommends translating 'dúiche' above as 'region'.

de réir an daonáirimh 'Daonáireamh' is translated as 'census of population' in Ó Dónaill, this compound of 'daon-' ('human; anthropo-' in Dinneen) and 'áireamh' ('act of counting, computing; taking account of a number, the sum total', ibid) not appearing to be given as a headword in Dinneen nor in DIL – see the commentary on the previous subsection regarding 'daon' and the commentary on Article 5 regarding 'daonlathas' < 'daon' + 'flaitheas', a calque on Greek 'dēmokratía' – cp. here 'dēmographia'.

'Do réir an daonáirimh dheiridh roimhe sin' translates 'according to the immediately preceding census of population' in s7(3) of the Finance Act, 1953, and in s16(5)(b) of the Finance Act, 1954. We see above that 'comhaireamh' translates 'census' in the 1922 Constitution. 'Of which the population, according to the latest census return, is at least 500' is translated as 'agus 500 duine ar a luíod ann de réir an áirimh is déanaí' in s6 of the First Schedule to the Housing Act, 1925, 'Áireamh Shaorstáit Éireann, 1926' being cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'Census of Irish Free State, 1926'. 'Mór-áireamh ar shaothrúchán' is cited as translating 'census of production' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 1926, p. 423, with 'mór-áireamh na ndaoine' translating 'census of population' on the Dáil Order Paper, 1928, p. 673. Finally, note that 'cúntas ar mhálaí puist' translates 'census of mail bags' in Iris an Phuist, 14/3/1928.

As regards 'as ascertained (at the last preceding census)', Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú, commenting on a draft

sa mhéid gur féidir é 'Sa mhéid go' is translated as 'inasmuch, in so far, as' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'sa mhéid sin, to that extent' and 'an méid is féidir liom, all that I can'. DIL gives examples of 'méit' as an adverb from the Glosses of the ninth century onwards, 'in méit' being translated as 'so much, to such a degree' and 'méit' (as a relative adverb introducing a subordinate clause) being translated as 'as much as, as far as, to the extent that'. See further the commentary on Article 40.3.1<sup>o</sup>.

'A mhéid is féidir' translates 'in so far as it is practicable' in s77(3) of the Building Societies Act, 1989, where 'The directors of a society which has subsidiaries shall secure that, in so far as it is practicable, the financial year of each of its subsidiaries coincides with the society's own financial year' is translated as 'Déanfaidh stiúrthóirí cumainn a bhfuil fochuideachtaí aige a áirithiú go mbeidh, a mhéid is féidir, bliain airgeadais gach fochuideachta dá chuid comhthráthach le bliain airgeadais an chumainn féin'. 'Coimeádfar na páipéir bhallóide ar a mbéal in airde a mhéid is féidir sin' translates 'the ballot papers shall so far as it is practicable be kept face upwards' in s13 of the Second Schedule to the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1947, 'sa méid gur féidir é' being found in the same context in s14 of the Second Schedule to the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1937. 'The Minister may erect ... cottages similar so far as may be practicable in structure ... to the cottages erected ...' is translated as 'féadfaidh an tAire bothóga do chur suas is cosúil, sa mhéid gur féidir é, ina ndéanamhacht ... leis na bothóga do bhí curtha suas' in s82(4) of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1927. Note, finally, that 'on the ground that the improvement of the holdings is essential and practicable' is translated as 'mar gheall ar fheabhsú an ghabháltas a bheith riachtanach agus indéanta' in s28(6)(c) of the Land Act, 1923. See further the commentary on Article 40.3.1<sup>o</sup>.

ar fud na dúiche uile DIL cites 'for fúait na Greci uli' from the version of the Destruction of Troy (Togail Troi) contained in the twelfth-century Book of Leinster, translating 'for (ar) fúait' as 'throughout, through the extent of, all over'. Ó Dónaill cites 'chuaigh a chlú ar fud na tíre, his fame spread throughout the land'. See above s.v. 'ar cothrom' for citations of 'ar fud' from the Acts.

ní foláir See the commentary on Article 11.

Ní foláir don Oireachtas na dailcheantair a athmheas uair ar a laghad sa dá bhliain déag ag féachaint go cuí d'aon athruithe ar shuíomh an daonra; ach athruithe ar bith dá ndéanfar ar na dailcheantair ní thiofáid i bhfeidhm i rith ré na Dála a bheas ina suí le linn an athmheasta sin.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Oireachtas must re-evaluate the constituencies at least once every twelve years having due regard to any changes in the position of the population; but any of the changes which will be made to the constituencies (they) will not come into force during the span of life of the Dáil which will be sitting during that re-evaluation.

ENGLISH TEXT

The Oireachtas shall revise the constituencies at least once in every twelve years, with due regard to changes in distribution of the population, but any alterations in the constituencies shall not take effect during the life of Dáil Éireann sitting when such revision is made.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 Corresponding to the English 'revise', the Irish 'athmheas' means rather 're-evaluate'/'re-estimate'.
- 2 'Distribution of the population' is expressed as 'suíomh an daonra' ('the situation/position of the population') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Any alterations in the constituencies' is expressed as 'athruithe ar bith dá ndéanfar ar na dailcheantair' ('any changes / any of the changes that will be made to the constituencies') in the Irish text.
- 4 'During the life of Dáil Éireann' is expressed as 'i rith ré na Dála' ('during the span/period/duration of the Dáil'), this phrase translating 'during the life' in the Acts also.
- 5 'Shall not take effect' is expressed as 'ní thiofáid i bhfeidhm' ('they will not come into force') in the Irish text.
- 6 'To changes' is expressed as 'd'aon athruithe' ('to any changes') in the Irish text.
- 7 'When such revision is made' is expressed as 'le linn an athmheasta sin' ('during that re-evaluation') in the Irish text.

- 8 A comma follows 'years' in the English text, no corresponding comma being found in the Irish text.
- 9 'Shall' is expressed as 'ní foláir' ('must') in the Irish text, as we have seen in some earlier Articles.

Note that Article 26 of the 1922 Constitution concludes as follows:

The Oireachtas shall revise the constituencies at least once in every ten years, with due regard to changes in distribution of the population, but any alterations in the constituencies shall not take effect during the life of Dáil Éireann sitting when such revision is made. Déanfaidh an t-Oireachtas ath-chóiriú ar na dailcheantair uair amháin gach deich mbliana ar a luighead, gan sóinseáil in áireamh áitiúil an lín tíre do dhearmhad, ach ní thiofáidh aon atharú sna dailcheantair i bhfeidhm i rith téarma na Dála a bheidh ann le linn a leithéid d'ath-chóiriú do dhéanamh.

Commentary

a athmheas ... an athmheasta This compound of the reiterative prefix 'ath-' and the verb 'meas' ('estimate'/'judge') does not seem to be given as a headword in either Ó Dónaill or Dinneen – note that DIL gives a headword 'aithmes', which apparently has the sense of 'decline', 'decay', being a compound of the earlier form of 'meas', 'mes(s)', with 'aith-' as a negative prefix. DIL cites 'ná bad dia mess' ('let it not be to judge him') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles as an example of 'mes(s)' in the sense of 'the act of judging', 'mes(s)' being the verbal noun of 'midithir', originally 'weighs, measures', hence 'judges', commonly translating Latin 'iudicare' in the Glosses of the eighth century onwards. Old Irish also had a verb 'ad-midethar', translated principally as 'aims at, essays' in DIL, with the secondary sense of 'evaluates, estimates'; the seventh-century text on kingship attributed to the mythical judge Morann, Audacht Morainn, an early example of the Speculum Principum or 'Mirror of Princes' (a literary genre consisting of advice to a king) contains a whole section beginning with 'admestar' ('Let him estimate', third singular, present subjunctive, of 'ad-midethar'), commencing with the following precept: 'Ad-mestar asa thoirthib talmain' ('Let him estimate the earth by its fruits') – see Fergus Kelly, ed., Audacht Morainn (1976, p. 12f.).

'Or, in the event of a revision of constituencies having taken place, for the revised constituency declared on such revision to correspond to such first-mentioned constituency' is translated as 'no, i gcás aith-bhreithniú do bheith déanta ar dhailcheantair, don dailcheantair aith-bhreithnithe do fógrúidh ar n-a n-aith-bhreithniú san do bheith ar aon dul leis an dailcheantair san do céad-luaidheadh' in s1 of the Constitution (Amendment No. 2) Act, 1927. Note that, in accordance with the 1937 Constitution, 'Acht do shocrú Líon Comhaltaí Dháil Éireann agus d'ATHmheas a nDailcheantair' translates 'An Act to fix the Number of Members of Dáil Éireann and to Revise their Constituencies' in the Long Title of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1947.

'Tarraingeoidh an Coimisiún suas cód ... agus féadfaidh

sé ó am go ham ... é a athmheas' translates 'The Commission shall draw up, and may from time to time ... revise a code' in s9(3) of the Radio and Television Act, 1988, and 'Ni mór do gach údarás dóiteáin a chothabhálann briogáid dóiteáin pleananna ... a ullmhú (agus, de réir mar is gá, a athmheas)' translates 'Each fire authority which maintains a fire brigade shall prepare (and, as occasion requires, revise) plans' in s26(1) of the Fire Services Act, 1981. On the other hand, 'direct two or more local authorities jointly to make, revise or replace a plan' is translated as 'a ordú do dhá údarás áitiúla nó níos mó plean ... a dhéanamh nó a athchóiriú, nó plean eile a chur ina ionad, i gcomhar' in s15(7)(c) of the Local Government (Water Pollution) Act, 1977 – see also the 1922 Constitution above – and 'déanfaidh an Chomhairle Shealadach idir an dá linn na dréacht-Fhodhlithe a athbheithniú' translates 'the Provisional Council shall in the meantime revise the draft Bye-laws' in s13(2) of the Institution of Civil Engineers of Ireland (Charter Amendment) Act, 1969.

Other terms translating 'revise' in early Acts were 'athfhéach' and 'athscrúdaigh'/'scrúdaigh'. In s12(1) of the Enforcement of Law (Occasional Powers) Act, 1923, 'The Minister may by order appoint and from time to time revise a scale of the fees' is translated as 'Féadfaidh an t-Aire le hordú scála do cheapa de sna táillí ... agus féadfaidh an t-Aire le hordú an scála san d'aith-fhéachaint ó am go ham', 'costaisí ath-fhéachana' translating 'expenses of revision' in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922. 'The Valuation (Postponement of Revision) Act, 1923' is cited in Irish as 'an tAcht Luachála (Ath-Scrúdú ar Athló), 1923'. 'The railway tribunal, at a date not later than three months after the passing of this Act, will review the existing charges' is translated as 'Ar dháta nách déanaí ná trí mhí tar éis rithite an Achta so, scrúdóidh an bínse bóthair iarainn na héilithe atá i bhfeidhm fé láthair' in s25 of the Railways Act, 1924. 'Scrúdú roimh ré' translating 'Preliminary review' in the Margin Title there. 'Where an order revising the rate has been so made' is translated as 'má dintar ... amhlaidh ordú ag ceartú an Ráta' in s169(3) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, 'make such revision or modification in such schedule as he thinks proper' being translated as 'pé leasú no atharú is dó leis is ceart do dhéanamh ar an sceideal san' in s4(5) of the Railways (Road Motor Services) Act, 1927.

ar shuíomh 'Suíomh' is generally used today in the sense of 'site, location', Ó Dónaill citing 'suíomh foirgnimh, site of building' and 'suíomh na talún, the lie of the land'. Ó Dónaill also includes 'settlement, arrangement; establishment' among the senses of this word, citing 'caithfimid suíomh a chur ort, we must fix you up'. Dinneen includes 'fixing, settling, locating, ... position, setting, construction, lay-out, array (of an army)' among the senses of 'suidheamh'. Keating's seventeenth-century History of Ireland is the earliest citation of 'suidem', in the sense of 'act of proving, proof', in DIL, with Dinneen's Me Guidhir Fhearmanach providing the only two examples cited there of the secondary sense of 'act of arranging, ordering; arrangement'. The earlier 'suidiugud' included both those senses, being the verbal noun of 'suidigidir', translated principally as 'places, puts, sets' in DIL, this being based on 'suide', verbal noun of 'saidid' (later 'suidid'), 'sits'.

In the distribution of the assets of a company being wound up' is translated as 'le linn sócmhainní cuideachta atá á foirceannadh a bheith á ndáileadh' in s26(1) of the Youth Employment Agency Act, 1981. 'The need to maintain a reasonable balance in the distribution of the total number of students between the institutions of higher education' is translated as 'gur riachtanach an líon iomlán mac léinn a choimeád dáilte réasúnta cothrom idir na forais ard-oideachais' in s6(2) of the Higher Education Authority Act, 1971. 'To ensure the due supply and distribution of the essentials of life to the community' is translated as 'lena áirithiú go ndéanfar riachtanais na beatha a sholáthar agus a riaradh go cuí le haghaidh an phobail' in the Long Title of the Electricity (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1961. Looking at early Acts, 'the expression "distribution system" means and includes that portion of an undertaking used ... for the distribution and supply of electricity to consumers' is translated as 'cialluíonn agus foluíonn an focal "cóir roinneacháin" an chuid sin de ghnó a húsáidtear ... chun leictreachas do roinnt agus do sholáthar d'úsáidirí' in s1 of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1927.

ag féachaint go cuí (do) This phrase, literally 'looking duly to', is the standard translation of 'having due regard to' in the Acts, 'ag féachaint go cuí do na rátaí a ioc ar iasachtaí a fuair an Ciste' translating 'having due regard to the rates paid on ... borrowings by the Fund' in s5 of Article XI of the Schedule to the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (Financial Support Fund) (Agreement) Act, 1976, for example.

Looking at early Acts, in s48(2) of the Prevention of Electoral Abuses Act, 1923, 'due regard shall be had to the preferences recorded for that candidate' is translated as 'tabharfar aire chuibhe do sna roghna do breacadh don iarrthóir sin'. 'Ag cuimhneamh, imeasc nithe eile, ar an éileamh d'fhéadfadh teacht dá ndíoltí an earra phaitinnithe ní ba shaoire' translates 'regard being had amongst other circumstances, to the potential demand that might be evoked if the patented article were sold at a lower price' in s43(2)(c) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927. 'Regard shall first be had to the values credited to such candidates respectively' is translated as 'féachfar ar dtuís do sna héifeachtaí do bhí i leith na n-iarrthóirí sin fé seach' in s13(3)(a) of the Second Schedule to the Seanad Electoral Act, 1928, 'uniformly and without regard to distance' being translated as 'i ngach cás agus gan áird do thabhairt ar fhaid' in s1(1) of the Telegraph Act, 1928.

i bhfeidhm This phrase is translated as 'in force' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'cuirim i bhfeidhm' is translated as 'I enforce'. Ó Dónaill translates 'teacht i bhfeidhm' as 'to come into operation', also citing 'ó tháinig an t-ordú i bhfeidhm, since the order came into effect'. Dinneen translates 'i bhfeidhm' as 'in force, in use', translating 'téighim i bhfeidhm ar' as 'I take effect on'. The primary sense of 'feidm', according to DIL, seems to be 'load, stress, strain', passing into the senses of 'utmost effort, effort, exertion; burden, service, function'.

We see above that 'teacht i bhfeidhm' translates 'take effect' in the 1922 Constitution. In s20 of the Finance Act, 1923, 'shall come into operation and take effect from the date specified in such Order' is translated as 'tiocfa sé i ngníomh agus in éifeacht ón dáta adeirtear san Ordú san'.

'Beidh éifeacht le ráta a athrófar le rialacháin faoin bhfo-alt seo ag tosach na bliana ranníoca díreach i ndiaidh na bliana ina ndearnadh na rialacháin' translates 'A rate varied by regulations under this subsection shall take effect at the beginning of the contribution year following that in which the regulations were made' in s19(1)(b) of the Youth Employment Agency Act, 1981. 'Ní ghlacfaidh comhiomarcaíocht éifeacht roimh éag don tréimhse 30 lá' translates 'Collective redundancies shall not take effect before the expiry of the period of 30 days' in s14(1) of the Protection of Employment Act, 1977.

ré 'Period', with the sense of 'span of life, of career', is given as the secondary sense of 'ré' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'i ré Iorua, in the time of Herod', 'moon' being the principal sense of 'ré' therein. Dinneen also gives 'a month, a time, interval, space or period, duration, lifetime, respite' as the secondary sense of 'ré', citing 'ré fhada, a long span of life', 'mo ré saoghail, my span of life' and 'lem ré, during my lifetime'. DIL gives 'a period, lapse of time' as the principal sense of 'ré', citing 'nicondrobae som ind rae sin' ('he had not that time') from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms and 'coro gartigtis a ré' ('that they might cut short his life') from the version of the Táin Bó Cuailnge in the twelfth-century Book of Leinster.

'Tráth nach déanaí ná deireadh ré na sócmhainne cnaoiti' translates 'not later than the end of the life of the wasting asset' in s9(2) of Schedule 3 to the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975. 'Chun fad a chur le ré an tí' translates 'to prolong the life of the house' in s23(2)(a) of the Housing Act, 1966. 'Provide for the payment of any annuity otherwise than for the life of the annuitant' is translated as '(nach) bhforálann go n-íocfar aon bhlianacht ar shlí seachas ar feadh saoil an bhlianachtóra' in s65 of the Finance Act, 1974.

'An annual allowance to be paid to him during his life' is translated as 'liúntas bliantúil a híocfar le n-a bheo leis' in s4 of the Railways (Existing Officers and Servants) Act, 1926. 'Le beo a mháthar' translating 'While mother is living' in the Second Schedule to the Army Pensions Act, 1923. Note, in passing, that 'in possession under a lease for lives or years renewable for ever' is translated as 'ar seilbh fé léas síor-ionathnuachainte ar feadh saolta no blianta' in s5(7) of the Dublin Reconstruction (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1924. Note also in passing that 'in the confidence that the National life and unity of Ireland shall thus be restored' is translated as 'agus muinghin aice gur mar seo a tabharfar thar n-ais beatha agus aontacht Náisiúnta na hÉireann' in the Preamble to the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú recommends the wording of the Irish text above rather than a very literal translation such as 'le linn shaol Dháil Éireann ag suí di agus an t-athmheas sin á dhéanamh'.

ní thiochfaid The synthetic form of the third person singular, future tense, of 'tar' – the analytic form, 'ní thiochfaidh siad', would be the general form in the Acts today. See the commentary on Article 14.5.1<sup>o</sup> regarding synthetic and analytic forms of the verb.

a bheas The special form of the relative, third person singular, future tense, of the substantive verb would generally be written as 'a bheidh' in the Acts today. See the commentary on Article 6.1 regarding the special relative form of the verb.

athruithe Note above that 'gan sóinseáil in áireamh áitiúil an lín tíre do dhearmad' translates 'with due regard to changes in distribution of the population' in Article 26 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Atharúchán' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'alteration' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1922/23.

- 1 As in Article 12.2.3<sup>o</sup>, 'on the system of proportional representation' is expressed as 'de réir na hionadaíochta cionúire' ('in accordance with proportional representation') in the Irish text.
- 2 Again as in Article 12.2.3<sup>o</sup>, 'by means of the single transferable vote' is expressed as 'ar mhodh an aonghutha inaistrithe' ('in the manner of the single transferable vote'), with 'vote' being expressed by

'guth' ('voice') rather than the direct translation of 'vote', 'vóta'.

Note that 'The members shall be elected upon principles of Proportional Representation' is translated as 'Is do réir Ionadaíochta Cothromúla a toghfar na teachtaí' in Article 26 of the 1922 Constitution.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'To be returned' is expressed as 'le toghadh' ('to be elected') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Whereby the number ... shall be less than three' is expressed as 'a bhéarfadh faoi bhun triúir an líon' ('which would bring the number ... under three') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Ní cead' ('It is not permitted'), as we have seen in some earlier Articles, expresses the English text's 'no ... shall'.

Commentary

a bhéarfadh Variant conditional, third person singular, of 'tabhair'; see the commentary on Article 12.1 regarding the variant future form of this verb. 'A bhéarfadh' would be replaced by 'a thabharfadh' in the official standard. 'If provisions shall be enacted whereby the rates leviable by the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of Cork are consolidated into a single municipal rate' is translated as 'má hachtuítear forálacha tré n-a ndéanfar na rátaí is inghearrtha ag Ard-Mhéara, Seanóirí, agus Buirgéisigh Chorcaighe do chó-dhlúthú in aon ráta chatharda amháin' in s2(f) of the Unemployment Assistance (Amendment) Act, 1940. In s10(3) of the Local Authorities (Combined Purchasing) Act, 1939, 'and every other enactment now in force or hereafter enacted whereby contracts are or may be varied' is translated as 'agus ag gach achtachán eile atá i bhfeidhm anois no a hachtófar ina dhiaidh seo agus le n-a n-atharúitear no le n-a n-atharófar connartha'.

Commenting on the translation below, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú questions whether 'trinar' is clear enough and suggests perhaps returning to 'a bhéarfadh (go)'; this would be standardised to 'a thabharfadh (go)'.

faoi bhun triúir The genitive of the personal number 'triúir' after the prepositional phrase – Ó Dónaill cites the following example of the genitive: 'tá sáith triúir ann, it is enough for three people'. Note that 'trír' is the form of the genitive in the original text. Dinneen translates 'triúir' as 'three persons, a trio, three, of persons'. This word, the earlier form of which was 'tríar', is in origin a compound of 'trí' and 'fer' (literally 'three men'); see Rudolf Thurneysen, op. cit., p. 243, who points out that all the personal numbers from one to ten, except the word for 'two persons', are formed by compounding the cardinal with 'fer' ('man').

le toghadh Literally 'to be elected'. See the commentary on Article 12.2.1° regarding 'togh'. Note that De Bhaldraithe translates 'return', in the political sense, as 'toghann (vótálaithe teachta)'. 'I return for trial' is translated as 'cuirim chun a thrialach' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Teachta do thogha' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'return (as a Teachta to the Dáil)' in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, 1926, p. 5, 'tabhairt thar n-ais' being cited there from the Proceedings of Seanad Éireann, 1924, p. 45. Note that 'a court lawfully having cognisance of petitions complaining of undue return or undue election at a Seanad election' is translated as 'cúirt ag á mbeidh údarás go dleathach deighleáil le hachuingheacha ag gearán mar gheall ar thuairsciú nea-chuibhe no ar thogha nea-chuibhe i dtoghachán Seanaid' in s33 of the First Schedule to the Seanad Electoral Act, 1928.

a bheas The special form of the relative, third person singular, of the substantive verb; this would be replaced by 'a bheidh' in the official standard – see the commentary on Article 6.1 regarding the special form of the relative.

Ní cead See the commentary on Article 9.1.3°. Again, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú questions the use of the future tense in the direct translation below.

- 2 'Take place' is expressed as 'a bheidh ann' ('there be') in the Irish text; the same meaning is expressed as 'a dhéanamh' in the next section.
- 3 'For members of Dáil Éireann' is expressed as 'do chomhaltaí do Dháil Éireann' ('for members for Dáil Éireann') in the Irish text.
- 4 'After a dissolution of Dáil Éireann' is expressed as 'tar éis Dáil Éireann a lánscoir' ('after dissolving Dáil Éireann') in the Irish text, the verbal noun being post positioned here as against the very similar Article 18.8 where we find 'after a dissolution of Dáil Éireann' expressed as 'd'éis lánscoir do Dháil Éireann'.
- 5 'Shall' is expressed as 'ní foláir' ('must') in the Irish text, as we have seen in some earlier Articles.

Note that Article 28 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

At a General Election for Dáil Éireann the polls ... shall be held on the same day throughout the country, and that day shall be a day not later than thirty days after the date of the dissolution .... Le linn Toghacháin Ghinearálta do Dháil Éireann déanfar an vótáil ... ar an lá céanna ar fuaid na tíre, agus ní bheidh an lá san thar deich lá fíthead tar éis dáta an sguirtha.

Commentary

a bheidh ann The adverb 'ann' is translated as 'there' in Ó Dónaill, citing 'tá Dia ann, God is', 'tá an saol ann, the world exists' and 'tá an t-earrach ann, it is spring', for example. Dinneen states that this pronoun compound with 'i', which he translates as 'in it, there', is used to express existence with 'atáim', translating 'atá Dia ann' as 'God exists, there is a God'. DIL cites 'ma beith nech and tra labrathar ilbéle' ('if there be anyone who speaks many languages'), from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, as an example of the predicative use of the preposition 'i', plus pronoun, with the substantive verb, expressing existence.

Turning to the Acts, 'The nomination day for the first election shall be fixed so as to enable the election to take place as soon as may be after the establishment day' is translated as 'Déanfar an lá ainmníocháin don chéad toghchán a shocrú sa tslí go bhféadfar toghchán a bheith ann a luaithe is féidir tar éis an lae bhunaithe' in s3(1) of the Labour Services Act, 1987. 'Measfar nach raibh an toghchán sin ann agus beidh toghchán nua sa toghlimistéar sin' translates 'the election shall be deemed not to have taken place and a new election shall take place' in s17 of the Local Elections (Petitions and Disqualifications) Act, 1974. 'No election other than a new election shall take place in respect of a dissolved committee', however, is translated as 'ní dhéanfar aon toghchán seachas toghchán nua maidir le coiste díscailte' in s2 of the Vocational Education (Amendment) Act, 1970. 'Comórfar an chéad toghchán comhaltá do chathair na Gaillimhe pé lá ... a cheapfaidh an tAire chuige sin' translates 'The first election of Galway city members shall take place on such day ... as the Minister may fix for the purpose' in s7(1) of the Lough Corrib Navigation Act, 1945. 'Déanfar an chéad toghchán do bhaill chathrach pé lá cheapfaidh an tAire chuige sin' translating 'The first election of city members shall take place on such day ... as the Minister may appoint for the purpose' in s15(1) of the Cork Fever Hospital Act, 1935. Finally Article 81 of the 1922 Constitution concludes as follows:

... the first election for Dáil Éireann ... shall take place as soon as possible after the expiration of such period ... . déanfar an chéad toghchán do Dháil Éireann ... ch'ó luath agus is féidir tar éis deire na tréimhse sin.

lá nach déanaí ná See the commentary on Article 12.3.1<sup>o</sup> regarding 'lá' in this context.

Ní foláir See the commentary on Article 11. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that the future 'déanfar' in the translation below is satisfactory as it is a promise by the State of something the State has control over.

Commentary

An vótáil 'Vótáil' is translated as 'voting, polls' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'páipéar, ionad, vótála, voting-paper, polling-booth'.

Turning to 'polling' in the Acts, 'ceanntreacha vótaíochta' translates 'polling districts' in s3 of the First Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923. 'An lá (dá ngairmtear an lá vótaíochta freisin san Acht so) a déanfar an vótaíocht sa reifreann do cheapadh le hordú' translates 'appoint by order the day (in this Act also referred to as the polling day) upon which the polling at such referendum shall take place' in s10(1) of the Referendum Act, 1942. 'An lá a bheas ceaptha ... mar an lá a déanfar an vótaíocht sa reifreann sin' translates 'the day appointed ... as the day on which polling at that referendum shall take place' in s8(2) of the Referendum (Amendment) Act, 1946. 'Constitute it as a polling district and appoint a polling place for it' is translated as 'ceantar vótaíochta a dhéanamh di agus áit vótaíochta a cheapadh di' in s7(1)(b) of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1980.

an t-aon lá amháin See the commentary on Article 12.4.5<sup>o</sup> regarding 'aon ... amháin'. 'Every member of a safety committee which is appointed under this section shall be appointed on the same day' is translated as 'Is ar an lá céanna a cheapfar gach comhalta de choiste sábháilteachta a cheapfar faoin alt seo' in s37(4)(b) of the Safety in Industry Act, 1980, 'Form of Ballot Paper when two or more Referenda are being taken on the same day' being translated as ‘Foirm an Pháipéir Bhallóide i gcás dhá Reifreann nó níos mó a bheith á dtógáil an lá céanna’ in s7 of the Electoral (Amendment) Act, 1972, for example.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that ‘céanna’ generally involves an aspect of referral back to something, citing ‘ar an Luan a bhí an vótáil anseo, agus ar an lá céanna i ngach oileán eile’ (‘voting took place here on Monday and on the same day in every other island’).

sa mhéid gur féidir é See the commentary on Article 16.2.3°, where this phrase expresses ‘so far as it is practicable’.

ar fud na dúiche uile See the commentary on Article 16.2.3°, where this phrase also expresses ‘throughout the country’.

Dáil Éireann shall meet within thirty days from that polling day.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 ‘Meet’ is expressed as ‘teacht le chéile’ (‘come together’) in the Irish text, as it sometimes is in the Acts.
- 2 As we have seen in some earlier sections and Articles, ‘shall’ is expressed as ‘ní foláir’ (‘must’) in the Irish text and, as we saw in the previous subsection, ‘polling’ is expressed as ‘vótáil’ (‘voting’).

Note the following in Article 28 of the 1922 Constitution:

Dáil Éireann shall meet within one month of such day
.... Tiocfaidh Dáil Éireann le chéile fé cheann mí ón lá san.

Commentary

teacht le chéile Literally ‘come together’, with ‘teacht’ being the verbal noun of ‘tar’. Dinneen translates this phrase as ‘meeting, agreement, concord, symmetry’, translating ‘ag teacht le chéile’ as ‘agreeing, in concord or symmetry’ and citing ‘gach ball de ag teacht le chéile, all his limbs harmonising’. Ó Dónaill also cites more figurative usages of ‘teacht le chéile’: ‘níl an tuairisc sin ag teacht le chéile, that report is not consistent’ and ‘tá teacht maith le chéile iontu, they get on well together’. DIL cites ‘go dtéidhe an t-anam araon / le chéile is an chalann’ (which Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú translates as ‘may the soul and body both be in harmony’) from a miscellaneous collection of Classical Irish religious poetry (Dán Dè).

Note that De Bhaldraithe translates ‘assemble’ (as an intransitive verb) as ‘tagann le chéile’ (also as ‘cruinníonn’, ‘bailíonn’), translating ‘assembly’ as ‘tionól’ and ‘comóradh’ (the verbal noun of ‘comóir’ expresses ‘summon’ in s3.1° of this Article). ‘To meet (together)’ is translated as ‘teacht le chéile, i gceann a chéile’ in De Bhaldraithe, where ‘when the committee meets’ is translated as ‘nuair a bheidh cruinniú ag an gcoiste’, ‘cruinniú’ translating ‘meeting’ in Téarmaí Dlí.

Looking at early Acts, we see above that ‘teacht le chéile’ translates ‘meet’ in this context in the 1922 Constitution. ‘Authorise any organisation, association, or other body of persons ... to meet together’ is translated as ‘a údarú d’aon chó-ghléasa, comhlachas no cólucht eile de dhaoine ... teacht le chéile’ in s7(2) of the Treasonable Offences Act, 1925.

‘Tiocfaidh an Chomhairle le chéile cibé tráth agus ionad a cheapfaidh an tAire’ translates ‘The Council shall meet at the time and place appointed by the Minister’ in s12(2) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978. ‘A committee under this section shall meet whenever summoned by the Authority’ is translated as ‘Tionólfaidh coiste faoin alt seo aon uair a ghairfidh an tÚdarás é’ in s5 of the Broadcasting Authority (Amendment) Act, 1976. ‘Beidh cruinniú ann de bhord stúirthóirí chomhar creidmheasa a mhinice is gá’ translates ‘The board of directors of a credit union shall meet as often as may be necessary’ in s13(3) of the Credit Union Act, 1966. In s21(1) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997) ‘the Dáil shall meet every Tuesday at 2.30 p.m.’ is translated as ‘tiocfaidh an Dáil le chéile gach Máirt ar 2.30 p.m.’ See further the commentary on Articles 13.2.3° and 15.11.3°.

taobh istigh Literally ‘within’. Ó Dónaill cites ‘taobh istigh de bhliain, within a year’, with Dinneen translating ‘taobh istigh (de)’ as ‘within (in), inside (of)’. DIL cites ‘taobh astigh do se bliadhnuibh deug’ (‘under sixteen years of age’) from O’Curry’s Lectures on the Manuscript Materials of Ancient Irish History. ‘Laistigh’ also translates ‘within’ in this context, Ó Dónaill citing ‘laistigh de mhí, within a month’ and Dinneen translating ‘leath ‘stigh’ as ‘within, inside, within doors, at less than, below’. ‘Within 30 days from the end of each such quarter’ is translated as ‘laistigh de 30 lá ó dheireadh gach ráithe den sórt sin’ in s109(2)(b) of the Finance Act, 1990, for example. See the commentary on Article 12.3.3° regarding ‘laistigh’ and ‘taobh istigh’.

lá vótála See the commentary on the previous subsection regarding ‘vótáil’.

Ní foláir Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú finds no difficulty with the simple future in the following translation on the same grounds as noted in the commentary on Article 16.3.2°.

Tionólfaidh Dáil Éireann<sup>1</sup> laistigh de thríocha lá ón lá vótaíochta sin.

Variants

- 1 'Beidh cruinniú ag Dáil Éireann', 'Tiocfaidh Dáil Éireann le chéile'

ARTICLE 16.5 AIRTEAGAL 16.5

TÉACS GAELGE

Ní bheidh de ré ag aon Dáil Éireann ach seacht mbliana ó lá a céad-tionóil: féadfar ré is giorra ná sin a shocrú le dlí.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Any Dáil Éireann will have a period of but seven years from the day of its first assembly: a period which is shorter than that can be provided by law.

ENGLISH TEXT

The same Dáil Éireann shall not continue for a longer period than seven years from the date of its first meeting: a shorter period may be fixed by law.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'The same Dáil Éireann' is expressed as 'aon Dáil Éireann' ('any Dáil Éireann') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Shall not continue for a longer period' is expressed as 'Ní bheidh de ré' ('shall have as period') in the Irish text, with 'period' being expressed by the term which expresses 'life' (of Dáil Éireann) in s2.4° of this Article; 'tréimhse' is the Irish legal term for 'period', 'ré' carrying the connotation of 'inevitable end' according to Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú.
- 3 'Of its first meeting' is expressed as 'a céad-tionóil' ('of its first assembly') in the Irish text, with 'from the date of its first meeting' being expressed as 'ó lá a céad-tionóil' ('from the day of its first meeting'), 'lá' ('day') expressing 'date' in this context in other Articles also.
- 4 'Fix' is expressed by the term generally expressing 'provide' ('socráigh') in the Irish text, this term also sometimes translating 'fix' in the Acts.
- 5 'A shorter period' is expressed as 'ré is giorra ná sin' ('a period / span of life which is shorter than that') in the Irish text.

Note the following in Article 28 of the 1922 Constitution:

... and shall, unless earlier dissolved, continue for four years from the date of its first meeting, and not longer ... agus mara sguirfear níos túisce í, leanfa sí ar feadh cheithre mbliana ó dháta a céad chruinnithe, agus ní leanfa sí níos sia ná san.

Commentary

de ré See the commentary on Article 16.2.4° as regards 'ré'. For examples of the preposition 'de', used mainly with the substantive verb and copula, to denote a feature of or what pertains to something, or to denote extent, see

Ó Dónaill s.v. 'de' 4, where 'bhí sé de nós acu, it was customary with them' and 'má tá sé de mhisneach agat, if you have the courage' are cited as examples.

'Extension of period' is translated as 'fadú tréimhse' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'I extend the period' is translated as 'fadaím an tréimhse'. 'Fix a longer period than 4 months for the purposes of subsection (1)' is translated as 'tréimhse is faide ná 4 mhí a shocrú chun críocha fho-alt (1)' in s67(3) of the Building Societies Act, 1989, for example, as in s58(3) of the Building Societies Act, 1976. 'Ar chríochnú na tréimhse trí mbliana' translates 'at the conclusion of the three years period' in Article 34 of the 1922 Constitution, 'tréimhse fheidhme na gceadúnas san' translating 'the period during which such licences continue in force' in s6(1) of the Wireless Telegraphy Act, 1926. Note that 'and at such periods and times as shall from time to time be prescribed by law' is translated as 'agus ar na puntí aimsire agus na huair sin a leagfar amach le dlí' in s7(2) of the Comptroller and Auditor-General Act, 1923. Note, in passing, that 'period of pressure' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'tréimhse na Nodlag' in Iris an Phuist, 30/11/27!

ré is giorra ná sin 'I gcás ar le tréimhse is giorra ná sin a bhaineann an ranníoc' translates 'where the contribution relates to a shorter period' in s11(6) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example. 'Until the next quinquennial appointment of ordinary members or for a shorter period' is translated as 'go dtí an chéad cheapadh cúig-bhliana eile gnáthchomhaltaí nó go ceann tréimhse is giorra ná sin' in s2 of the First Schedule to the Industrial Research and Standards Act, 1946. Note that the present/future relative of the copula is used here rather than the comparative adverb 'níos', which would be the more general structure, i.e. 'ré níos giorra ná sin'.

lá a céad-tionóil 'Céad', compounded with 'tionól', in the genitive case, following 'lá'. This would not be hyphenated today according to the official standard – see s24(II)(c) of the section entitled 'Na Rialacha' in Gramadach na Gaeilge agus Litriú na Gaeilge: An Caighdeán Oifigiúil.

'Every member of the Council of State shall at the first meeting thereof which he attends as a member' is expressed as 'Ní foláir do gach comhalta den Chomhairle Stáit, an chéad uair a bheidh sé ar thionól den Chomhairle sin ina chomhalta di' in Article 31.4 and 'The number of members necessary to constitute a meeting of either House ... shall be determined by its standing orders' is expressed as 'Is lena bhuan-orduithe a chinnfear cén méid comhaltaí a bheas riachtanach do thionól de cheachtar den dá Theach' in Article 15.11.3°. 'Comóir' alone expresses 'convene a meeting' in Articles 13.2.3°, 31.8 and 32, where, respectively, 'The President may ... convene a meeting of either ... of the Houses of the Oireachtas' is expressed as 'Tig leis an Uachtarán ... ceachtar de Thithe an Oireachtais ... a chomóradh', 'Meetings of the Council of State may be convened by the President' is expressed as 'Tig leis an Uachtarán an Chomhairle Stáit a chomóradh' and 'unless ... he shall have convened a meeting of the Council of State' is expressed as 'mura gomóra sé an Chomhairle Stáit'. In the Amendment on Cabinet confidentiality contained in Article 28.4.3°, however, in line with current usage, 'meeting' is rendered as 'cruinniú', 'rúndacht na bpléití ag cruinnithe den Rialtas' translating 'the confidentiality of discussions at meetings of the Government’.

‘Tionól’ is translated as ‘gathering, assembly’ in Ó Dónaill, ‘tionól neamhdhleathach’ being translated as ‘unlawful assembly’ in Téarmaí Dlí. Dinneen translates ‘tionól’ as ‘act of assembling, mobilising, convening, collecting; an assembly, a gathering, a crowd, an army, a gang ...’, citing the poetic phrase ‘lá an tionóil, the Day of Judgment’. DIL translates ‘tinól’ as ‘act of collecting, gathering’, citing ‘do thinóol aetig impu et biith doib’ (‘in gathering raiment round them and food for them’) from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. ‘Tinól’ is the verbal noun of ‘do-inóla’, translated as ‘gathers, collects; (of armies) musters, assemblies’ in DIL, where ‘ara chind tinolsat dail’ (‘dail’ in Modern Irish) is cited from Saltair na Rann, an account in verse of the history of the world from the Creation to the Day of Judgment composed, it is thought, around the year 1000. See further the commentary on Article 15.11.3°.

‘The Minister shall fix the date, time and place of the first meeting of the Central Board’ is translated as ‘Socróidh an tAire dáta, am agus ionad chéad-chruinniú an Phríomh-Bhoird’ in s13 of the Second Schedule to the Fisheries Act, 1980, ‘Socróidh an tAire dáta, am agus ionad chéad chruinniú na Comhairle’ translating the same text with ‘Council’ substituted for ‘Central Board’ in s2(2) of the National Council for Educational Awards Act, 1979. ‘Féadfaidh an tAire dáta, tráth agus ionad an chéad chruinnithe a shocrú’ translates the same text above with ‘Board’ replacing ‘Central Board’.

See the commentary on the previous subsection, where ‘Ní foláir do Dháil Éireann teacht le chéile’ expresses ‘Dáil Éireann shall meet’, and see the commentary on Article 13.2.3° regarding ‘tionól’ and ‘cóthlán’ translating ‘meeting’ in Acts of 1923-4.

aon Dáil Éireann Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that ‘an Dáil Éireann chéanna’ would not be satisfactory as a translation of ‘the same Dáil Éireann’, recommending ‘aon Dáil Éireann ar leith’ as a variant of the present Irish text.

Standardised Irish text

Ní bheidh de ré ag aon Dáil Éireann ach seacht mbliana ó lá a céadtionóil: féadfar ré is giorra ná sin a shocrú le dlí.

Direct translation

Ní mhairfidh aon Dáil Éireann<sup>1</sup> ar feadh tréimhse níos faide ná seacht mbliana ó dháta a céad chruinnithe<sup>2</sup>; féadfar tréimhse níos giorra a shocrú le dlí.

Variants

- 1 ‘aon Dáil Éireann ar leith’
- 2 ‘céad tionóil’

ARTICLE 16.6 AIRTEAGAL 16.6

TÉACS GAELIGE

An comhalta de Dháil Éireann a bheas ina Chathaoirleach díreach roimh lánscoir do Dháil Éireann ní foláir socrú a dhéanamh le dlí chun go bhféadfar a mheas an comhalta sin a bheith tofa do Dháil Éireann sa chéad olltoghchán eile, gan é a dhul faoi thoghadh.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The member of Dáil Éireann who will be Chairman immediately before the dissolution of Dáil Éireann provision must be made by law so that it may be deemed that that member is elected to Dáil Éireann in the next general election, without his undergoing election.

ENGLISH TEXT

Provision shall be made by law to enable the member of Dáil Éireann who is the Chairman immediately before a dissolution of Dáil Éireann to be deemed without any actual election to be elected a member of Dáil Éireann at the ensuing general election.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 ‘Without any actual election’ is expressed as ‘gan é a dhul faoi thoghadh’ (‘without him undergoing election’) in the Irish text.
- 2 ‘To enable the member of Dáil Éireann ... to be deemed to be elected’ is expressed as ‘chun go bhféadfar a mheas an comhalta sin a bheith tofa’ (‘so that it can/may be deemed (that) that member is elected’) in the Irish text.
- 3 ‘To be elected a member of Dáil Éireann’ is expressed as ‘a bheith tofa do Dháil Éireann’ (‘to be elected to/for Dáil Éireann’) in the Irish text; the Irish text commences with ‘An comhalta de Dháil Éireann’ (‘The member of Dáil Éireann’) and refers back to this in the clause ‘chun go bhféadfar a mheas an comhalta sin a bheith tofa’ (‘so that it can/may be deemed (that) that member is elected’), a repetition not found in the English text.
- 4 ‘Ensuing’ is expressed as ‘(an) chéad ... eile’ (‘next’) in the Irish text.
- 5 ‘Shall’ is again expressed as ‘ní foláir’ (‘must’) in the Irish text, as we have seen in some previous Articles.

Note that the following paragraph was inserted at the end of Article 21 of the 1922 Constitution by the Constitution (Amendment No. 2) Act, 1927:

The member of Dáil Éireann who is the Chairman of Dáil Éireann immediately before a dissolution of the Oireachtas shall ... be deemed without any actual election to be elected in accordance with this Constitution at the ensuing general election as a member of Dáil Éireann .... An ball san de Dháil Éireann is Ceann Comhairle ar Dháil Éireann díreach roimh an Oireachtas do scur tuigfar, gan aon togha achtúil do dhéanamh, ... tuigfar é do bheith tofa do réir an Bhunreachtas so sa chéad thoghachán gheanáilta ina dhiaidh sin mar bhall de Dháil Éireann.

Commentary

gan é a dhul faoi thoghadh Literally ‘without his undergoing election’. Ó Dónaill cites ‘faoi scrúdú, obráid, undergoing an examination, an operation’ as examples of this use of the preposition ‘faoi’ in the sense of ‘undergoing, subjected to', citing 'rachaimid faoi do bhreith sa chás, we will submit to your judgment in the case' as an example of 'téigh faoi'. Dinneen translates 'téighim fá' as 'I go under, shoulder (as a load), ... undergo, guarantee, "get at" s.v. téighim', citing 'téighid fár mbreith-ne, they submit to our decision' s.v. 'fá'. DIL cites 'in tan diagmani fo baithis' ('when we undergo baptism') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles as an example of 'téit fo', 'submits to, undergoes; assumes'.

We see above that 'achtúil' translates 'actual' in this very context in the Constitution (Amendment No. 2) Act, 1927, 'an líon ball a bheidh le togha go hachtúil' translating 'the number of members actually to be elected' in s1 of the same Act. In s30(2) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, 'before the actual date when such patent was granted' is translated as 'roimh an dáta achtúil ar ar deonadh an phaitinn sin', 'dáta cruinn' being cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'actual date' in Iris an Phuist, 13/7/27. 'I bhfeidhm-sheilbh tailte no tithe' translates 'in actual occupation of lands or houses' in s9(b) of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925. 'Not in the actual custody of such person' is translated as 'ná fuil sé ina chimeád dáiríribh' in s1 of the School Attendance Act, 1926. Note finally that 'actual' is not specifically translated in many of the citations of this word in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms – 'from such member's actual place of residence', for example, is translated simply as 'ón áit ina mbeadh comhnaí air' in s3(1)(b) of the Oireachtas (Payment of Members) Act, 1923.

Following the wording of the present Article, 'he shall be deemed without any actual election to be elected' is translated as 'measfar, gan é a dhul faoi thoghadh, é a bheith tofa' in s14(1) of the Electoral Act, 1963. Note, however, that the Long Title of the Electoral (Chairman of Dáil Éireann) Act, 1937, reads as follows:

An Act to make provision ... enabling the member of Dáil Éireann who is the Chairman immediately before a dissolution of Dáil Éireann to be deemed without any actual election to be elected a Member of Dáil Éireann at the ensuing General Election. Acht chun socruithe do dhéanamh ... d'fhonn go bhféadfar a thuisgint an Ball de Dháil Éireann is Ceann Comhairle díreach roimh scur Dháil Éireann do bheith toghtha, gan aon togha do dhéanamh, ina Bhall de Dháil Éireann sa toghchán gheinearálta ina dhiaidh sin.

We find the following in s3(1) thereof:

... the outgoing Ceann Comhairle shall be deemed without any actual election to be elected at such general election as a member of Dáil Éireann .... tuigfear an Ceann Comhairle bheidh ag dul as oifig do bheith toghtha gan aon togha achtúil do dhéanamh, sa toghchán gheinearálta san, mar bhall de Dháil Éireann.

'Iarbhír' generally translates 'actual' in the modern Acts. 'The cost in the currency of the State of the actual moneys', for example, in s11(7)(c) of the Housing Finance Agency Act, 1981, is translated as '(do) chostas an airgid iarbhír in airgead reatha an Stáit'. 'Ciallaíonn "seilbh" seilbh iarbhír' translates "'possession" means actual possession' in s15(5)(b) of the Landlord and Tenant (Amendment) Act, 1980. See further the commentary on Article 28.3.2°. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that 'gan aon toghchán a bheith ann chuige sin' would be the more

sa chéad olltoghchán eile 'In the next general election'. Ó Dónaill cites 'an chéad lá, duine, rud, eile, the next day, person', with Dinneen citing 'an chéad uair eile, the next time'. 'Until his successor has been elected at the next ensuing annual meeting ... of such council' is translated as 'go dtí go mbeidh a chomharba toghtha ag an gcéad chruinniú bliantúil ... a bheidh ina dhiaidh sin ag an gcomhairle' in s12(2) of the Local Elections Act, 1927. In s53(4) of the Currency Act, 1927, 'the same shall be the maximum limit for the ensuing triennial period' is translated as 'isí an teora san a bheidh mar theora mhaximum ar feadh na tréimhse trí mbliain ina dhiaidh sin', 'the maximum limit for the then ensuing triennial period shall be the same as the maximum limit for the then expiring triennial period' being translated as 'isí bheidh mar theora mhaximum ar feadh na tréimhse trí mbliain a bheidh le teacht an uair sin ná an teora mhaximum a bhí ann ar feadh na tréimhse trí mbliain a bheidh ag dul in éag an uair sin'.

a mheas See the commentary on Article 12.6.2°. The verbal noun of 'meas', which verb is translated as 'estimate, value, judge; deem, consider' in Ó Dónaill, 'measaim' being translated as 'I measure, calculate, assess, esteem; judge, consider, dwell upon, think, suppose ...' in Dinneen. The verb 'mes(s)aid', based on 'mes(s)', is translated principally as 'examines, judges, appraises' in DIL, where examples of the secondary senses of 'reckons, esteems, counts (as)' and 'deems, believes, supposes' are also cited.

chun go bhféadfar See s4(2)(b) of the Housing Finance Agency Act, 1981, for example, where 'to provide moneys to enable such loans to be made by housing authorities' is translated as 'airgead a sholáthar chun a chumasú d'údarás tithíochta iasachtaí den sórt sin a thabhairt'. The Long Title of the Arbitration Act, 1980, 'An Act to enable effect to be given to the Convention ...' is translated as 'Acht dá chumasú éifeacht a thabhairt don Choinbhinsiún'.

a bheas The special relative form of the substantive verb, future tense – see the commentary on Article 6.1 regarding the special relative form in general. This would be written as 'a bheidh' according to the official standard.

lánscore de Dháil Éireann See the commentary on Article 13.2.1° regarding 'lánscore'.

ní foláir See the commentary on Article 11.

ARTICLE 16.7 AIRTEAGAL 16.7

TÉACS GAELGE

Faoi chuimsiú na bhforálacha sin romhainn den Airteagal seo is de réir dlí a rialófar toghcháin do chomhaltas Dháil Éireann, mar aon le líonadh corrfholúntas.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Within the scope/constraint of those provisions before us / the foregoing provisions of this Article it is in accordance with law that elections to membership of Dáil Éireann will be regulated, along with filling casual/occasional vacancies.

ENGLISH TEXT

Subject to the foregoing provisions of this Article, elections for membership of Dáil Éireann, including the filling of casual vacancies, shall be regulated in accordance with law.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Including the filling of casual vacancies' is expressed as 'mar aon le líonadh corrfholúntas' ('along with filling casual/occasional vacancies') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Subject to' is expressed as 'Faoi chuimsiú' ('Within the scope/constraint of') in the Irish text, as we have seen in some earlier Articles, 'faoi réir' translating 'subject to' in Téarmaí Dlí.
- 3 'Shall be regulated' is expressed as 'rialófar' ('shall be ruled/controlled') in the Irish text, again as we have seen in some earlier Articles.
- 4 A comma follows 'this Article' in the English text, with no corresponding comma following '(den) Airteagal seo' in the Irish text, as in Article 18.10.1<sup>o</sup>, even though no comma is found in the English text of that Article.

Commentary

mar aon le This phrase expresses 'including' in Article 10.1 also. 'Maille le' expresses 'including' in Article 30.6, 'agus orthu sin' being found in Article 40.6.1<sup>o</sup>. 'Including' is generally translated in the modern Acts as 'lena n-áirítear', 'ar a n-áirítear' being found in early Acts – see the commentary on Article 10.1. 'Agus ... a áireamh' expresses 'including' in Articles 12.4.2<sup>o</sup> and 18.7.1<sup>o</sup>v, with 'ar a n-áirítear' being found in Article 18.7.1<sup>o</sup>iv.

'Mar aon le' is translated as 'in addition to' in Ó Dónaill. 'Mar aon le (or is)' is translated as 'along with, together with, in addition to, beside' in Dinneen who cites 'rug ri a cheann de mar aon is ríoghacht Éireann, a king took his head and the crown of Ireland to boot'. 'Immaróen fri' was the earlier form of this prepositional phrase, translated in DIL as 'along with, together with', where 'nocha necin do neoch duine imaroen res ...' ('for a person is not obliged to have another along with him') is cited from a commentary on an early Irish law-tract. According to Osborn Bergin, 'immaróen' is a compound of the eclipsing reflexive and reciprocal preverb 'imma' and the noun 'róen' ('a way, path, route'), the compound later felt as 'mar oén' – see DIL s.v. 'immaróen'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that what is involved here is not the verbal prefix but 'imm' (preposition) + a<sup>n</sup> + 'róen'.

corrfholúntas See the commentary on Article 18.10.2<sup>o</sup>. 'Corrfholúntais' expresses 'casual vacancies' in Articles 18.10.2<sup>o</sup> and 18.10.3<sup>o</sup> also. 'The vacancy shall be filled by election in manner to be determined by law' is translated as 'lionfar a follamhantas le togha ar chuma a socrófar le dlí' in Article 29 of the 1922 Constitution, 'Casual vacancies shall be filled in manner provided by Article 34' being translated as 'Lionfar foth-fhollamhntaisí i slí a fhorálann Airtíogal 34' in Article 82(g). 'The period of office of persons appointed to fill such casual vacancies' is translated as 'tréimhse oifige na ndaoine a ceapfar chun na corrfholúntais sin a líonadh' in s4(7) of the Animal Remedies Act, 1956, for example. Note, finally, that 'fill an office' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'dul isteach i n-oifig' in a Report of the Public Accounts Committee, 1927.

Faoi chuimsiú na bhforálacha sin romhainn See the commentary on Article 18.10.1<sup>o</sup>. Note how a comma follows 'den Airteagal seo' after this phrase in that Article as against the present Article.

Faoi réir na bhforálacha sin romhainn den Airteagal seo, déanfar toghcháin do chomhaltas Dháil Éireann, lena n-áirítear líonadh corrfholúntas, a rialáil de réir dlí.

Chomh luath agus is féidir é tar éis na Meastacháin ar fháltas an Stáit agus na Meastacháin ar chaitheamh airgid an Stáit i gcomhair aon bhliana airgeadais a chur faoi bhráid Dháil Éireann faoi Airteagal 28 den Bhunreacht seo, ní foláir do Dháil Éireann na Meastacháin sin a bhreithniú.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As soon as (it is) possible after putting the Estimates on (the) receipts of the State and the Estimates on the State's expenditure for any financial year before Dáil Éireann under Article 28 of this Constitution, Dáil Éireann must consider those Estimates.

ENGLISH TEXT

As soon as possible after the presentation to Dáil Éireann under Article 28 of this Constitution of the Estimates of receipts and the Estimates of expenditure of the State for any financial year, Dáil Éireann shall consider such Estimates.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Receipts' is expressed in the Irish text by the singular 'fáltas', the literal meaning of which might be taken as 'gain, acquisition'.
- 2 The Irish 'breithnigh' ('consider') is translated as 'adjudge' in Téarmaí Dlí, though this verb generally translates 'consider' in the Acts.
- 3 The qualifying phrase 'an Stáit' ('of the State') is repeated in the Irish text.
- 4 Corresponding to 'as soon as possible' the Irish text has literally 'as soon as it is possible' ('Chomh luath agus is féidir é').
- 5 'Presentation' is expressed as 'a chur faoi bhráid' ('putting before' / 'submission') in the Irish text.
- 6 'Shall' is again expressed as 'ní foláir' ('must') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 36 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

Dáil Éireann shall as soon as possible after the commencement of each financial year consider the Estimates of receipts and expenditure of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) for that year. Breithneoidh Dáil Éireann, chó luath agus is féidir tar éis tosnuithe gach bliana airgid, meastacháin fháltais agus chaiteachais Shaorstáit Éireann i gcóir na bliana san.

Commentary

ar fháltas 'Fáltas' is translated as 'income, profit; (plural) incomings, proceeds' in Ó Dónaill, the plural 'fáltais' being translated as above in Téarmaí Dlí also. 'Fagháltas' is translated as 'means, property; a gift, an endowment; profit, gain, advantage' in Dinneen. DIL cites only two late examples of 'fagháltas' (translating this headword as 'earnings, gain, profit'), the earliest being from the seventeenth-century Annals of the Four Masters (AFM v, 1692). 'Fagbál', on which 'fagháltas' is based, is the verbal noun of 'fo-gaib', 'finds, gets', examples of this verb being cited in DIL from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards. See the commentary on Article 11, 'cíos' replacing 'fagháltas' in that Article following the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1942.

'A health board shall submit estimates of receipts and expenditure to the Minister in such form ... as he may direct' is translated as 'Déanfaidh bord sláinte meastacháin ar fháltais agus ar chaiteachas a chur faoi bhráid an Aire i cibé foirm ... a ordóidh an tAire' in s30 of the Health Act, 1970. 'Meastacháin ar fháltais agus caiteachas an Bhoird' translates 'Estimates of receipts and expenditure of the Board' in the Margin Title of s61 of the Nurses Act, 1950, in subsection 1 of which 'The Board shall ... submit to the Minister estimates ... of expenditure and receipts of the Board' is translated as 'Cuirfidh an Bord faoi bhráid an Aire ... meastacháin ... ar chaiteachas agus fáltais an Bhoird'. 'Are treated as trading receipts of the company's trade for preceding accounting periods' is translated as 'a áireofar ... mar fháltais trádála de chuid thrádáil na cuideachta do thréimhsí cuntasaióchta roimhe sin' in s20(1) of the Finance Act, 1981. Note that 'the total revenue receipts of the company shall be increased' is translated as 'cuirfear le hiomlán fáltais ioncuim na cuideachtan' in s5(4) of the Railways (Valuation for Rating) Act, 1931.

Looking at early citations of 'receipts' in various senses, 'teacht-isteach' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'receipt' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1922/23. 'A register ... of all purchases and receipts of salmon or trout for sale on such premises' is translated as 'clár ... de gach ceannach agus fáil bhradán no bhreac chun a ndíolta san áitreabh san' in s22(1) of the Fisheries Act, 1925. Finally, 'a chuid leabhra cuntais, cruthúnachtaí, admhálanna agus scríbhinní eile go léir' translates 'all his books of account, vouchers, receipts and other documents' in s73(1) of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925.

ar chaitheamh airgid 'Caitheamh airgid' is translated as 'spending of money; waste of money' in Ó Dónaill, who also cites 'airgead a chaitheamh, to spend money'. Dinneen cites 'caithim airgead, I spend money'. 'Caithem', verbal noun of 'caithid', is translated as 'act of spending, consuming, using up' in DIL, examples of the verb 'caithid' being cited from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards. Note that De Bhaldraithe translates 'expenditure' principally as 'caitheamh (airgid); idiú stóir' and secondarily as 'caiteachas, costas', citing 'the national expenditure, an caiteachas náisiúnta'. 'Caitheamh airgid' expresses 'disbursement' in Article 33.1.

'The expenditure of the fund shall be apportioned' is translated as 'déanfar caiteachas an chiste a chionroinnt' in s4(3)(a) of the Fifth Schedule to the Finance Act, 1990, for example. 'To have been part of the normal expenditure of the deceased' is translated as 'gur chuid de ghnáthchaiteachas an duine mhairbh iad' in s27(b) of the Finance Act, 1938. 'Cuntaisí ar a fháltais agus ar a chaiteachais' translates 'accounts of the receipts and expenditure of the Minister' in s44 of the Dairy Produce (Price Stabilisation) Act, 1932. Note that 'The aggregate amount of the expenditure of the Corporation' is translated as 'An méid iomlán a chaithfidh an Bárdas' in s76(4) of the Local Government (Dublin) Act, 1930. Note, finally, that 'caitheamh' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'expenditure' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1925, p. 817.

Meastacháin 'Meastachán' is translated as 'estimate' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'meastachán ar chaiteachas, estimate of expenditure', 'meastachán tógála, building estimate' and 'meastacháin bhliantúla, annual estimates'. Dinneen does not appear to give 'meastachán' as a headword. It is based on 'meas', 'judging', 'evaluating'.

'Board to furnish estimates of cost of reconstruction or rebuilding Butt Bridge', the Margin Title of s13 of the Dublin Port and Docks (Bridges) Act, 1929, is translated as 'Tabharfidh an Bord meastacháin uatha ar chostas ath-dhéanta no ath-thógála Dhroichead Bhutt'. 'Any moneys included in their estimates of expenses for services administered by them' is translated as 'aon airgead a bheidh ar áireamh ina meastachán caiteachas le haghaidh seirbhísi faoi riaradh' in s11(11)(a)(i) of the Health Authorities Act, 1960. In s11 of the 'Westmeath County Scheme' in the First Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'the Union Estimates and Demands for the current financial year' is translated as 'Meastacháin agus Éilithe na nAontaisí ... i gcóir na bliana airgid reatha'. Finally, 'estimates for public services' is translated as 'meastacháin ar sheirbhísi puiblí' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 1925, p. 167.

faoi bhráid See the commentary on Article 13.7.1<sup>o</sup> where this phrase expresses 'communicate'. 'Rud a chur faoi bhráid duine' is translated as 'to set something in front of someone; to submit, refer, something to someone' in Ó Dónaill. 'Cuirim fá bhrághaid' is translated as 'I recommend to, put under the protection of' in Dinneen, who cites 'féar do chur fá bhrághaid na bó, to set hay before the cow, as a feed' earlier in his entry s.v. 'brágha'. Literally this phrase means 'put under the neck'/'at the breast (of)', the earlier form 'brága' glossing Latin 'ceruix' in the ninth-century St Gall Glosses on Priscian – see DIL s.v. 'brága', translated principally as 'neck, throat, gullet'.

'Presentation of Estimates' is translated as 'Meastacháin a thíolacadh' in the Margin Title of s145 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), in which section 'The ordinary yearly Estimates for the Public Services shall be presented to the Dáil' is translated as 'Déanfar na gnáth-Mheastacháin i gcomhair na Seirbhísi Poiblí a thíolacadh don Dáil'. 'Chun Bille a thíolacadh' translates 'to present a Bill' in s106(3) thereof. 'Tar éis a dtíolacadh don Aire, cuirfidh faoi deara go ndéanfar cóipeanna de na cuntais ... a leagan faoi bhráid gach Ti den Oireachtas' translates 'Following their presentation to the Minister, he shall cause copies of the accounts ... to be laid before each House of the Oireachtas' in s15(b) of the Educational Exchange (Ireland and the United States of America) Act, 1991. 'The Registrar ... shall present to the Committee the evidence of alleged professional misconduct' is translated as 'tíolacfaidh an Clárathóir ... don Choiste an fhianaise ar an mí-iompar gairmiúil liomhnaíthe' in s45(3)(b) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978. Finally, 'and prepare a final report and programme for presentation to the Minister' is translated as 'agus ullmhóidh tuarascáil agus clár deiridh lena dtíolacadh don Aire' in s38(3) of the Industrial Research and Standards Act, 1946.

On the other hand, 'On presentation to the Revenue Commissioners of a certificate issued by the Minister under subsection (1)' is translated as 'Ar dheimhniú arna thabhairt ag an Aire faoi fho-alt (1) den alt seo a sheachadadh do na Coimisinéirí Ioncaim' in s2(2) of the Intoxicating Liquor Act, 1946. 'Upon presentation to such council ... by such public officer of certified quarterly accounts', in s17(3) of the Garda Síochána Act, 1924, is translated as 'nuair a chuirfidh an t-oifigeach puiblí sin os cóir na comhairle ... cuntaisí cinn ráithe'. Note that Article 54 of the 1922 Constitution contains the following:

The Executive Council shall prepare Estimates of the receipts and expenditure of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) for each financial year, and shall present them to Dáil Éireann before the close of the previous financial year. Ullmhóidh an Ard-Chomhairle Meastacháin d'fháltas agus de chaiteachas Shaorstáit Éireann i gcóir gach bliana airgid, agus cuirfidh ós cóir Dháil Éireann iad roimh dheire na bliana airgid roimhe sin.

In s36(4)(f) of the Safety in Industry Act, 1980, 'shall ... present to the members of the committee the statement ...' is translated as 'tabharfaidh sé do chomhaltaí an choiste ... an ráiteas'.

Looking at early citations of 'tíolaic', 'A Bill ... shall not have any force unless and until within one year from the day on which it was presented to the Representative of the Crown for the King's Assent' is translated as 'ní bheidh aon fheidhm aige mara ndéanfaidh agus go dtí go ndéanfaidh Ionadaí na Coróinneach, fé cheann bliana ón lá do tíolacadh d'Ionadaí na Coróinneach é chun Aontú an Rí d'fháil' in Article 41 of the 1922 Constitution. Earlier in that Article 'cuirfidh an Ard-Chomhairle ag triall ar Ionadaí na Coróinneach é' translates 'the Executive Council shall present the same to the Representative of the Crown'. 'Payable on demand, or at sight or on presentation' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'is in-íoctha ar éileamh, no ar teasbáint no ar tíolacadh' in translations for the Inland Revenue.

Regarding other terms, 'Every mention of or reference to the presentation of an address to His (or Her) Majesty by both or each or either of the Houses of Parliament' is translated as 'Gach luadh no tagairt do thairisgint dileagra dá Shoillese ó sna Tighthe Párliminte araon no ó gach ceann no aon cheann aca' in s5(2) of the Adaptation of Enactments Act, 1922. Finally, 'that the evidence of such person is material to the proper presentation of the case of the party proposing to call him as a witness' is translated as 'go bhfuil fianaise an duine sin riachtanach chun nochta ceart do dhéanamh ar chás an taoibh do thairg é do ghlaoch mar fhinné' in s12(1)(a) of the Damage to Property (Compensation) Act, 1923.

a bhreithniú The form of this phrase in the original text is 'do bhreathnú'. 'Breithniú' is the verbal noun of 'breithnigh', the first person singular of which, 'breithnim', is translated as 'I adjudge; I adjudicate; I decide' in Téarmaí Dlí, 'breithniú' being translated as 'adjudication'. Ó Dónaill gives 'adjudge' as the principal meaning of 'breithnigh', citing 'cás a bhreithniú, to adjudicate upon a case'. 'Breithnaigh' is given as the standard form of 'breithnigh' in its secondary sense in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'cás a bhreathnú, to look into, consider, a case' s.v. 'breithnaigh'. Dinneen gives 'breithnighim' as a variant of 'breithnuighim', which is translated as 'I discern, recognise, examine, judge; conceive, design; I look, appear; I behold, watch'. Both 'breithnigh' and 'breithnaigh' come from the earlier 'breithnaigid', translated principally as 'judges, decides, examines, determines' in DIL, this verb being based on 'breith' (Modern Irish 'breith'), examples of which noun in the sense of 'act of judging, deciding; judgment, legal ruling, interpretation' are cited in DIL from the Milan Glosses of the ninth century onwards.

'As soon as may be following the reassembly of the Dáil ... there shall be appointed a Select Committee ... to ... consider the annual draft Estimate for the Houses of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'Chomh luath agus is féidir i ndiaidh ationól na Dála ... ceapfar Roghchoiste ... chun an dréacht-Mheastachán bliantúil i gcomhair Thithe an Oireachtais a bhreithniú' in s91(1) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997). 'Meastacháin agus Rúin Airgeadais le breithniú i gcoiste' translates 'Estimates and Financial Resolutions to be considered in committee' in the Margin Title of s140.

'In considering whether it is reasonable to attach a full re-instatement condition to his decree' is translated as 'Ag machtnamh do ar ce'ca bheadh sé do réir réasúin coiníoll lán-ath-shuidhimh do chur le n-a aithne' in s10(2)(d) of the Damage to Property (Compensation) Act, 1923. 'Agus é á bhreithniú ce'ca cheadóidh sé féin alt so líne bealaigh a bheidh beartuithe no ná ceadóidh' translates 'When considering whether he will or will not approve under this section of a proposed route' in s3(4) of the Railways (Road Motor Services) Act, 1927. 'Áird do thabhairt ar iarrthóir' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'to consider an applicant' in translations for the Department of Justice. 'Breithneoidh an Chúirt an t-iarratas sin' translates 'the Court shall consider such application' in s38 of the Industrial Relations Act, 1946. 'The local pension committee shall ... consider the case and give their decision upon the claim or question' is translated as 'déanfaidh an coiste pinsin áitiúil ... an cás a bhreithniú agus tabharfaidh siad a gcinneadh ar an éileamh nó ar an gceist' in s164(1)(b) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981. 'Any person ... may appeal against such decision to the local pension committee who shall consider the case and give their decision thereon', in s3(2) of the Old Age Pensions Act, 1928, is translated as 'Féadfadh éinne ... athchomharc i gcoinnibh na breithe sin do dhéanamh chun an phinsean-choiste áitiúla agus breithneoidh siad san an cás agus tabharfaid a mbreith air'. See further the commentary on Articles 20.1 and 28.4.3<sup>o</sup>.

Chomh luath agus is féidir é 'The Conciliation Commission ... shall be constituted as soon as possible after registration of a request' is translated as 'Bunófar an Coimisiún Comhréitigh ... a luaithe is féidir tar éis iarraidh a chlárú' in s1 of Article 29 of the Second Schedule to the Arbitration Act, 1980. 'Déanfaidh an ceann comhairimh a luaithe is féidir tar éis toradh an toghcháin a chinntiú, an freagra a sheachadadh do Chléireach Dháil Éireann' translates 'The returning officer shall as soon as possible after the ascertainment of the result of the election deliver the return to the Clerk of Dáil Éireann' in s12(4)(b) of the Electoral Act, 1963. 'As soon as possible after the expiration of such period', in Article 81 of the 1922 Constitution, is translated as 'chó luath agus is féidir tar éis deire na tréimhse sin'.

TÉACS GAEILGE

An reachtaíocht a bheas riachtanach chun feidhm dlí a thabhairt do Rúin Airgeadais gach bliana ar leith ní foláir í a achtú an bhliain sin féin ach amháin sa mhéid go mbeidh a mhalairt socair i dtaobh gach cás ar leith in achtachán chuige sin.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The legislation which will be necessary to give legal effect to the Financial Resolutions of each particular year (it) must be enacted that very year except in so far as will otherwise be arranged in regard to each particular case in an enactment to that end.

ENGLISH TEXT

Save in so far as may be provided by specific enactment in each case, the legislation required to give effect to the Financial Resolutions of each year shall be enacted within that year.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Effect' is expressed as 'feidhm dlí' ('force of law') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Save in so far as may be provided' is expressed as 'ach amháin sa mhéid go mbeidh a mhalairt socair' ('except in so far as will otherwise be settled') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Provided by specific enactment in each case' is expressed as 'socair i dtaobh gach cás ar leith in achtachán chuige sin' ('settled in regards to each particular case in an enactment to that end') in the Irish text.
- 4 'Within that year' is expressed as 'an bhliain sin féin' ('that very year') in the Irish text.
- 5 'Of each year' is expressed as 'gach bliana ar leith' ('of each particular year') in the Irish text.
- 6 'Shall' is expressed as 'ní foláir' ('must') in the Irish text, as we have seen in some earlier sections and Articles.

Note that Article 36 of the 1922 Constitution concludes as follows:

... and, save in so far as may be provided by specific enactment in each case, the legislation required to give effect to the Financial Resolutions of each year shall be enacted within that year ... agus, ach sa méid go ndéanfaí achtú sonrach 'na thaobh i ngach cás, achtófar fé cheann na bliana an reachtúchán is gá chun Rúin Airgid gach bliana d'fheidhmiú.

Commentary

feidhm dlí 'Cosc a chur le dlíthe ... ó fheidhm dlí a bheith acu' renders 'prevents laws ... from having the force of law' in the original Article 29.4.3<sup>o</sup>, which subsection was added to the text of the Constitution by the Third Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1972. 'Feidhm dlí' seems uncited in either Ó Dónaill or Dinneen. See the commentary on Article 12.10.7<sup>o</sup> regarding 'feidhm'. 'Beidh feidhm dlí ... ag na comhshocraíochtaí' translates 'the arrangements shall ... have the force of law' in s28(1) of the Health Tax Act, 1975, for example.

'The said assessment shall be amended as necessary so as to give effect to the election so made by the individual' is translated as 'leasófar an mheasúnacht sin de réir mar is gá chun éifeacht a thabhairt don roghnú a rinne an phearsa aonair amhlaidh' in s10 of the Finance Act, 1981. 'And generally shall do all acts and things required to give effect thereto' is translated as 'agus i gcoitinne déanfaidh siad gach uile ghníomh agus rud is gá chun éifeacht a thabhairt dóibh sin' in s131 of Part I of Table A of the Schedule to the Companies Act, 1963. 'To give effect to' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'do chur i ngníomh' in translations for the Executive Council.

Rúin Airgeadais 'Rún' is translated as 'resolution' in Téarmaí Dlí, Ó Dónaill giving '(formal) resolution' as a secondary sense of 'rún', citing 'rún buíochais, cáinte, vote of thanks, of censure'. Dinneen gives 'a resolution or decision' as a 'recent' sense of 'rún', citing 'rún cómh-bhróin, a vote of sympathy (recent)'. 'Rún' glosses Latin 'mysterium' in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, the usual sense in the Glosses being 'something hidden or occult, a mystery', with the secondary sense of 'secret'; 'secret thoughts or wishes, intention, purpose, design' was the general later Middle Irish sense, often without particular notion of secrecy, according to DIL, passing into the sense of 'full consciousness, knowledge', and in later poetry often a term of endearment.

'Acht do thabhairt éifeacht reachtúil do rúin airgeadais áirithe a ritheadh ar an 7ú lá de Bhealtaine, 1969, ag Dáil Éireann' translates 'An Act to give statutory effect to certain financial resolutions passed on the 7th day of May, 1969, by Dáil Éireann' in the Long Title of the Collection of Taxes (Confirmation) Act, 1969. 'Rún a rith an Tigh iniú' translates 'resolution of the House of this day' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 1927, p. 659.

See the commentary on Article 18.7.1°iv regarding 'airgeadas'.

féin As an adverb 'féin' is translated as 'even, only' and 'indeed, really, truly' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'sin féin an fhirinne, that is very true' and 'go deimhin féin, in very truth'. DIL cites 'ni beith an dinite sin féin' ('even that dignity') from the opening section of Maghnas Ó Domhnaill's Life of Colm Cille, written in 1532.

'And the dog has not been claimed by its owner within that year' is translated as 'agus nach ndearna a úinéir an madra a éileamh laistigh den bhliain sin' in s13(3) of the Control of Dogs Act, 1986. 'On the full amount of that income arising with that year' is translated as 'ar mhéid iomlán an ioncain sin a d'eascair an bhliain sin' in s39(2)(iii) of the Finance Act, 1977. 'Pe'ca sa bhliain sin do híocadh iad no fé cheann pé tréimhse tar éis deireadh na bliana san a hordófar' translates 'Whether paid within that year or within such period after the expiration of that year as may be prescribed' in s72 of the Widows' and Orphans' Pensions Act, 1935.

Note regarding 'laistigh' v. 'taobh istigh' (see the commentary on Articles 12.3.3° and 16.4.2°) that 'within the next subsequent twenty-one days' is translated as 'laistigh den lá is fiche ... ina dhiaidh sin' in s5(3) of the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923.

socair This adjective is translated a 'quiet, still; calm, unruffled; easy, steady; settled, at rest' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'tá an cás socair, the case is settled' and 'scéal socair é, it is a settled issue'. Dinneen includes 'decided, arranged, composed, adjusted, fixed' among the senses of 'socair'. DIL translates 'socair' as 'smooth, even, level' and 'easy, quiet, tranquil', citing 'ber mól socair sogluasta fud' ('have under thee a comfortable ... mule') from earlier Irish literature. 'Socraigh', 'settle', with secondary sense of 'arrange'/'provide', and the verbal noun, 'socrú', are based on 'socair'.

Note, incidentally, as an early citation regarding 'socrú' v. 'foráil' (see the commentary on Article 8.3), that 'An Act to provide for the Appointment of Commissioners' is translated as 'Acht chun forálacha do dhéanamh chun Coimisinéirí do cheapa' in the Long Title of the Dáil Éireann Courts (Winding-up) Act, 1923.

i dtaobh gach cás ar leith This would have the form 'i dtaobh gach cáis ar leith' in official standard Irish, 'cás' being in the genitive case following the compound preposition 'i dtaobh'. Ó Dónaill translates the prepositional phrase 'i dtaobh' as 'about, concerning', citing 'i dtaobh do litreach, as regards your letter'. Dinneen translates 'i dtaobh' literally as 'near, beside', also giving the sense of 'regarding, in reference to, about'. DIL cites 'a los tnútha i dtaoibh eagnaigh' ('your jealousy of him as a sage', translated literally by Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú as 'because of envy of/towards a sage'), from the seventeenth-century 'Contention of the Bards', as an example of 'i dtaeb' in the sense of 'as regards, with respect to'.

'De réir bhri an Achta Léiriúcháin, 1937, i ngach cás' translates 'within the meaning in each case of the Interpretation Act, 1937' in s21(a)(i) of the Youth Employment Agency Act, 1981, for example. 'Shall be multiplied in each case by the number of calendar months' is translated as 'd'iolrú i ngach cás fé uimhir na míosa caileandair' in s2 of the First Schedule to the Moneylenders Act, 1933.

See the commentary on Articles 12.3.3° and 15.9.1° regarding 'ar leith' and the commentary on Article 14.4 regarding 'cás'.

chuige sin This phrase is translated as 'to that end' in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen cites 'chuige sin do scríobhas é, for that purpose I wrote it', pointing out that this can also be translated as 'to him I wrote it', 'chuige' being the third person singular, masculine, of the preposition 'chun'/'go' – Dinneen translates 'chuige' as 'to, for him, it, ... for the purpose'. DIL gives 'to, towards' as the principal sense of 'dochum' (the earlier form of 'chun'), i.e. 'expressing motion'; the secondary sense, 'expressing purpose', is translated as 'in order to, with a view to'. See the commentary on Article 13.8.2° regarding 'purpose'.

As regards 'specific' in the Acts, 'without prejudice to any specific provision in this Act' is translated as 'Gan dochar d'aon fhoráil shonrach san Acht seo' in s21(2) of the Social Welfare (Supplementary Allowances) Act, 1975, and in s3(3) of the Social Welfare Act, 1952, for example, 'Nuair a cheadós uachtarán na harmchúirte é go sonrach' translates 'by specific leave of the court-martial' in s194(3) of the Defence Act, 1954. Looking at early alternatives, 'which by ordinary law must be prosecuted within a specific period of the date of commission of the offence' is translated as 'nach foláir do réir na gnáth-dhli é do phróiseacht laistigh de thréimhse áirithe o dháta an chionta do dhéanamh' in s96(4) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. 'And whereas it is expedient that specific provision should be made for the payments ...' is translated as 'Agus de bhrí go bhfuil sé oiriúnach socrú speisialta do dhéanamh chun go n-íocfaí' in the Preamble to the Governor-General's Salary and Establishment Act, 1923. 'Cinnté' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'specific' in a Report of the Public Accounts Committee, 1927.

ach amháin sa mhéid go 'Save in so far as may otherwise be agreed between the company and a person availing himself of any such service' is translated as 'ach amháin sa mhéid go gcomhaontóidh an chuideachta agus duine a bheidh ag baint úsáide as aon seirbhís den sórt sin thairis sin' in s70(1)(a)(i) of the Postal and Telecommunications Services Act, 1983. 'Ach amháin a mhéid is gá le haghaidh gnó an chomhair chreidmheasa sin a stiúradh go cuí' translates 'save in so far as may be necessary for the proper conduct of the business of that credit union' in s34 of the Credit Union Act, 1966, 'save in so far as may be necessary for its reasonable use as a public park or pleasure ground' being translated as 'ach amháin sa mhéid is gá chun a húsáidte mar pháirc no faiche shúgraidh phuiblí' in s6(1) of the Mountjoy Square, Dublin, Act, 1938.

'Save in so far as' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'ach sa mhéid gur ...' in early Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, with 'save as otherwise provided' being translated as 'ach amháin i gcás go bhforálar a mhalairt'. 'Save as otherwise expressly provided by this Act' is translated as 'Lasmuich de chásanna dá bhforálar a mhalairt go soiléir leis an Acht so' in s21 of the School Attendance Act, 1926.

sa mhéid go This phrase is translated as 'inasmuch as, in so far as' in Ó Dónaill – see the commentary on Article 16.2.3°.

ní foláir See the commentary on Article 11.

Standardised Irish text

An reachtaíocht a bheidh riachtanach chun feidhm dlí a thabhairt do Rúin Airgeadais gach bliana ar leith ní foláir í a achtú an bhliain sin féin ach amháin sa mhéid go mbeidh a mhalairt socair i dtaobh gach cáis ar leith in achtachán chuige sin.

Direct translation

Ach amháin sa mhéid go bhforálfar le hachtachán sonrach i ngach cás, déanfar an reachtaíocht is gá chun éifeacht a thabhairt do Rúin Airgeadais gach bliana a achtú laistigh den bhliain sin.

ARTICLE 17.2 AIRTEAGAL 17.2

TÉACS GAEILGE

Ní dleathach do Dháil Éireann vóta ná rún a rith, ná ní dleathach aon dlí a achtú, chun leithghabháil a dhéanamh ar státchíos ná ar airgead poiblí ar bith eile, mura mbeidh teachtaireacht ag Dáil Éireann ón Rialtas faoi láimh an Taoisigh ag moladh críche na leithghabhála dóibh.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is not lawful for Dáil Éireann to pass a vote or resolution, nor it is not lawful to enact any law, to appropriate the state rent nor any other public money (whatsoever), unless Dáil Éireann has a message from the Government under the hand of the Taoiseach recommending the purpose of the appropriation to them.

ENGLISH TEXT

Dáil Éireann shall not pass any vote or resolution, and no law shall be enacted, for the appropriation of revenue or other public moneys unless the purpose of the appropriation shall have been recommended to Dáil Éireann by a message from the Government signed by the Taoiseach.

Divergences between the official texts

- 'Revenue' is expressed as 'státchíos' ('state revenue') in the Irish text, 'cíos uile an Stáit' expressing 'all revenues of the State' in Article 11.
- 'Or other public moneys' is expressed as 'ná (ar) airgead poiblí ar bith eile' ('nor any other public money'), followed by a comma, in the Irish text, no corresponding comma being found in the English text.
- 'Recommended to Dáil Éireann' is expressed as 'ag moladh dóibh' ('recommending ... to them'), with 'unless the purpose of the appropriation shall have been recommended to Dáil Éireann by a message from the Government' being expressed as 'mura mbeidh teachtaireacht ag Dáil Éireann ón Rialtas faoi láimh an Taoisigh ag moladh críche na leithghabhála dóibh' ('unless Dáil Éireann will have a message from the Government recommending the purpose of the appropriation to them').
- 'Shall not' is expressed as 'ní dleathach do' ('it is not lawful for') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 37 of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

Moneys shall not be appropriated by vote, resolution or law, unless the purpose of the appropriation has in the same session been recommended by a message from the Representative of the Crown on the advice of the Executive Council. Ní cuirfear airgead i leithreas le vóta, le rún ná le dlí, mara ndéanfar sa tsíon céanna intinn a churtha i leithreas do mhola trí theachtaireacht ó Ionadaí na Coróinneach ar chomhairle na hArd-Chomhairle.

Note also that s142(2) of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997), which refers directly to this section, contains the following:

... unless the purpose of the appropriation has been recommended to the Dáil by a Message from the Government .... mura mbeidh Teachtaireacht ag an Dáil ón Rialtas ag moladh chuspóir an leithreasaithe di.

Commentary

leithghabháil This headword is a compound of 'leath-/leith-' ('side') and 'gabháil', verbal noun of 'gabh', 'take'. 'Leithghabháil' is translated as 'appropriation' in Ó Dónaill, this being the verbal noun of 'leithghabh', 'to appropriate'. Note that 'leithreasaigh' is also translated as 'appropriate' in Ó Dónaill, with 'leithreasú' translated as 'appropriation'. In general use today 'leithreas' expresses 'privy, latrine'; Dinneen translates 'leithreas' as 'sequestration', citing 'áit i leithreas, a secret place, as a privy, etc.' See the commentary on Article 11.

'The Appropriation Act, 1981', for example, is cited in Irish as 'an tAcht Leithreasa, 1981', 'and to appropriate to the proper supply services and purposes sums granted by ... this Act', in the Long Title of that Act, is translated as 'agus do leithreasú suimeanna ... a dheonaítear leis an Acht seo, chun na seirbhísí soláthair agus na gcriciocha cuí'. 'Deontais do Leithreasú' translates 'Appropriation of Grants' in Schedule B to the Appropriation Act, 1943, for example. 'The Appropriation Act, 1922' is cited in Irish as 'an t-Acht Leithreasa, 1922'. 'Leithreasáí-i-gCabhair' translates 'Appropriations-in-Aid' in Schedule (B) to the Appropriation Act, 1924. Note, finally, that 'If the Commissioners acquire or appropriate any house or houses' is translated as 'Má thógann na Coimisinéirí aon tigh no tithe chúcha féin no má dhinid a gcuid féin den chéanna' in s110(5) of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú voices the sentiments of the author when he remarks that perhaps 'leithghabháil' is preferable on account of the general sense of 'leithreas' today!

státhíos See the commentary on Article 11, where we find 'cíos uile an Stáit' rendering 'all revenues of the State', replacing the original 'fághaltais'. This compound of 'stát' and 'cíos' is not cited as a headword in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'státhiste, exchequer', for example, 'Stát-fhiach, State debt' being cited in Téarmaí Dlí. See the commentary on Article 11 regarding 'cíos'; 'Stát(a)' is an English or Romance loanword, the first example of which cited in DIL coming from Ó Cianáin's Flight of the Earls ('stát éxamail ... iad badhdén' [i.e. the Swiss]).

ag moladh 'Recommend' is given as the secondary sense of 'mol' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'rud a mholadh do dhuine, to recommend something to someone'. Dinneen gives 'advise, recommend (to, do)' as one of the senses of 'molaim', citing 'ní mholfadh an dochtúir aon fheoil dom, the doctor advised me to abstain from meat'. DIL cites 'do mhol an coimhthínol uile do techt' (the whole assembly 'counselled him to go') from Maghnas Ó Domhnaill's Life of Colm Cille (written in 1532) as an example of this secondary sense of 'molaid', the primary sense being 'praises, extols', DIL citing 'ce non-molid ce non-airid' ('whether ye praise or blame us') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles.

In s12 of the 'Kerry County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'The following divisions for the Kerry County Home are recommended' is translated as 'Moltar Teaghlach Contae Chiarraí do roinnt mar seo'. Looking at modern legislation, 'he may recommend to the Department of State ... concerned ... that measures or specified measures be taken' is translated as 'féadfaidh sé a mholadh don Roinn Stáit ... lena mbaineann ... go ndéanfar bearta nó bearta sonraithe' in s6(3)(b) of the Ombudsman Act, 1980.

dleathach See the commentary on Articles 10.1 and 14.3.

This adjective is translated as 'lawful' in Téarmaí Dlí and as (1) 'lawful, legal', (2) 'valid, genuine' and (3) 'just, proper' in Ó Dónaill, with 'dleathúil' being given as a variant form and 'dlitheach' as a non-standard form. 'Dleaghthach', the form in the original text, is translated as 'just, fair; regular, uniform, genuine; normal; lawful, legal, permissible' in Dinneen. Note that Ó Dónaill also gives the headword 'dleachtach', translated as 'lawful, due, proper', as DIL translates 'dleachtach', giving only two miscellaneous examples. Dinneen gives 'dleachtach' as a separate headword from 'dleaghthach'; 'dleachtach' is translated as 'lawful, right, proper, due' in Dinneen, with 'dleacht' being given as a variant form of this adjective. Dinneen also gives 'dligheach' ('lawful, regular'), 'dligheach' ('lawful, law-abiding, rational') and 'dligheamhail' ('lawful, just; litigious') as headwords, 'dlithíoch' being translated as 'litigious', in Ó Dónaill – which sense is also given therein as the secondary sense of 'dlithiúil', the primary sense being 'legal, juridical, lawful'.

'Dlighech' is used in Old Irish Glosses of the eighth and ninth centuries in the sense of 'accordant with reason or rule' (Latin 'rationabilis'), according to DIL. In early Irish law, the adjective 'dlighech' can mean either 'lawful' or 'law-abiding' (i.e. fulfilling one's legal duties), according to D.A. Binchy in the 'Legal Glossary' to his edition of the early Irish law-tract Críth Gablach (1979, p. 84). DIL translates 'dlighech' as (a) 'regular, accordant with rule, right, lawful, law-abiding', (b) 'rational, endowed with reason' and (c) (of persons) 'reasonable, just, righteous', citing 'ní dlighech don aigne cin fis na n-earnuille so aige' ('it is not lawful for the advocate not to know this passage') from a commentary on an early Irish law-tract.

'Gach údarás dleathach' translates 'all lawful authority' in the Preamble to the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922, for example. 'It shall not be lawful for rules of court to contain ... any restriction' is translated as 'Ní bheidh sé dleathach do rialacha cúirte aon sriantacht a bheith iontu' in s18(6) of the Courts Act 1981, 'Ní dleathach d'aon duine seachas bord sláinte aon áitreabh a sheoladh le daoine a choinneáil' translating 'It shall not be lawful for any person other than a health board to operate any premises for the detention of persons' in s10(1) of the Health (Medical Services) Act, 1981. See the commentary on Article 11 regarding 'shall' in general in the Constitution.

vóta ... a rith 'A rith' is the verbal noun of the verb 'rith', 'run', in the sense of 'pass'. Ó Dónaill gives 'pass, enact' as one of the senses of 'rith', citing 'Bille, rún, a rith, to pass a bill, a resolution'. Ó Dónaill cites 'vóta airgeadais, oideachais, finance, education, vote' as examples of this secondary (Parliamentary) sense of 'vóta', also citing 'suim a vótáil, to vote a sum' as the Parliamentary sense of 'vótáil'. DIL gives examples of the verb 'reithid' in the wide sense of 'runs, hastens, speeds', used not just of living beings, but of heavenly bodies, flowing water, etc., from the eighth century onwards, beginning with 'reithit huili et is oinfe gaibes buáid diib' ('all run, and it is one man of them that gets victory') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles. Finally, note the following specific sense of 'rith' in Modern Irish legal terminology – 'rithim (brionnú), I utter (a forgery)', cited in Téarmaí Dlí. See further the commentary on Article 46.2 and see the commentary on Article 13.3.1° on 'rith' in the Acts.

airgead poiblí 'Airgidí poiblí' expresses 'public moneys' in Article 22.1.1° – see the commentary thereon.

Turning to the early Acts, 'There shall be paid by the Minister for Finance out of moneys to be provided by the Oireachtas' is translated as 'Íocfaidh an t-Aire Airgid as airgead a sholáthróidh an t-Oireachtas' in s2 of the Governor-General's Salary and Establishment Act, 1923. 'Amach as airgead a sholáthróidh an tOireachtas iocfar le gach Rúnai Páirliminte' translates 'There shall be paid out of moneys provided by the Oireachtas to each Parliamentary Secretary' in s7(5) of the Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1924.

Turning to modern Acts, 'while he is an inmate of an institution maintained wholly or partly out of public moneys' is translated as 'le linn dó bheith ina iostaí i bhforas a chothabháiltear go hiomlán nó go páirteach as airgead poiblí' in s142(1)(c) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981. 'San fho-alt seo ciallaíonn "airgead poiblí" airgead arna mhúirearú ar an bPríomh-Chiste' translates 'In this subsection "public moneys" means moneys charged on ... the Central Fund' in s547(1) of the Income Tax Act, 1967. Finally, 'iasachtaí áirithe do tugadh amach as airgead poiblí' translates 'certain loans made out of public moneys' in the Long Title of the Fisheries (Revision of Loans) Act, 1931.

faoi láimh See the commentary on Article 12.10.3°.

SEANAD ÉIREANN

TÉACS GAEILGE

Seasca comhalta líon Sheanad Éireann, .i. aon duine dhéag a ainmneofar agus naonúr is daichead a thogfar.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The complement of Seanad Éireann (is) sixty members, i.e. eleven who will be nominated and forty-nine who will be elected.

ENGLISH TEXT

Seanad Éireann shall be composed of sixty members, of whom eleven shall be nominated members and forty-nine shall be elected members.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Shall be composed of' is expressed as 'líon' ('the complement of'), with omission of the copula 'is', in the Irish text.
- 2 'Of whom eleven shall be nominated members' is expressed as '.i. aon duine dhéag a ainmneofar' ('that is, eleven people who will be nominated'), with 'forty-nine shall be elected members' expressed as 'naonúr is daichead a thogfar' ('forty-nine who will be elected'), in the Irish text.
- 3 'Of whom' is expressed by the abbreviation '.i.', 'eadhón' ('that is'), in origin an abbreviation for Latin 'id est'.

Note that Articles 30 and 31 of the 1922 Constitution commence as follows:

Seanad Éireann shall be composed of citizens who shall be proposed on the grounds that they have done honour to the Nation .... Beidh i Seanad Éireann saoránaigh a ainmneofar as ucht onóir do bheith déanta acu don Náisiún.

The number of members of Seanad Éireann shall be sixty. Sé uimhir bhall Sheanad Éireann trí fichid.

Commentary

líon This headword is translated as 'full number, complement' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'líon a mhuintire, the number of his people; his full following' and 'míle duine a líon, they number a thousand persons'. Dinneen translates 'líon' as 'fill, complement; full, requisite or due number; all; supply, part, quantity, number; a rate', citing 'líon na bhFiann, all the Fianna'. DIL, like Ó Dónaill, translates 'lín' as 'full number, complement', citing 'da er déc ba sed a lín-saide' (i.e. twelve men was what their complement was) from the version of the Táin in the twelfth-century Book of Leinster. See the commentary on Article 16.2.2° regarding 'composed of'. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú regards 'comhdhéanta' in a draft of the translation below as being a bit clumsy ("tútach"), remarking that it is more appropriate before sub-categories, i.e. 'comhdhéanta de chomhaltaí ainmnithe', etc.; according to Professor Ó Murchú it is basically an imitation of a certain English style, where one has 'comprise, constitute, represent' used copulatively.

.i. Regarding 'of whom', 'The Committee shall co-opt three other members, who shall be women' is translated as 'Có-thoghfidh an Coiste trí baill eile, eadhon, triúr ban' in s2 of the 'Leitrim County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. 'The ordinary members of the Council, of whom nine shall be nominated ..., shall be appointed by the Government' is translated as 'Is é an Rialtas a cheapfas gnáthchomhaltaí na Comhairle, agus beidh naonúr orthu sin a hainmneofar' in s5(7) of the Agriculture (An Foras Talúntais) Act, 1958. In s4(2) of the Animal Remedies Act, 1956, 'The Consultative Council shall consist of five members appointed from time to time by the Minister of whom one shall be nominated by the Minister for Health' is translated as 'Beidh ar an gCoiste Comhairleach cúigear comhaltaí a cheapfas an tAire ó am go ham agus a n-ainmneoidh an tAire Sláinte comhalta amháin díobh'.

naonúr is daichead According to An Caighdeán Oifigiúil, 'naoi' rather than 'naonúr' is written in rendering 'forty-nine people', that is, 'naoi nduine is daichead' rather than 'naonúr is daichead'. Note that 'naonbhar is dá fhichid' is the form in the original text.

Direct translation

Is é líon Sheanad Éireann seasca comhalta<sup>1</sup>, ar comhaltaí ainmnithe aon duine dhéag díobh agus comhaltaí tofa naoi nduine is daichead díobh<sup>2</sup>.

Variants

- 1 'Beidh Seanad Éireann comhdhéanta de sheasca comhalta', 'Beidh i Seanad Éireann seasca comhalta'
- 2 'a mbeidh aon duine dhéag díobh ina gcomhaltaí ainmnithe agus naoi nduine is daichead ina gcomhaltaí tofa'

ARTICLE 18.2 AIRTEAGAL 18.2

TÉACS GAEILGE

Ionas go mbeadh duine inghlactha ar chomhaltas Sheanad Éireann ní foláir é a bheith inghlactha ar chomhaltas Dháil Éireann.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

So that a person would be acceptable on the membership of Seanad Éireann he must be acceptable on the membership of Dáil Éireann.

ENGLISH TEXT

A person to be eligible for membership of Seanad Éireann must be eligible to become a member of Dáil Éireann.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Eligible for membership' is expressed as 'inghlactha ar chomhaltas' ('acceptable on the membership') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Be eligible to become a member' is expressed as 'bheith inghlactha ar chomhaltas' ('be acceptable on the membership') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 31 of the 1922 Constitution includes the following:

A citizen to be eligible for membership of Seanad Éireann must be a person eligible to become a member of Dáil Éireann .... Chun go mbeidh saoránach iontoghtha chun bheith 'na bhall de Sheanad Éireann caithfe sé bheith 'na dhuine iontoghtha chun bheith 'na theachta de Dháil Éireann.

Commentary

inghlactha This headword is translated as 'admissible (as evidence)' in Téarmaí Dlí and as 'acceptable, admissible' in Ó Dónaill. DIL translates 'inghlactha' as 'acceptable', the first example of which cited therein being 'aithnighid puisínigh an firéin cré is ionghlactha' ('the lips of the righteous know what is acceptable'), from the seventeenth-century translation of Proverbs, x. 32.

Regarding 'become' in early official translations, 'any local authority may become and be a member of a company' is translated as 'féadfadh aon údarás áitiúil ceangal mar bhall agus bheith mar bhall de chuideachtain' in s3(1) of the Local Authorities (Mutual Assurance) Act, 1926. 'Á impi nach ndéanfi dlí den Ordú' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'praying that the order should not become law' in translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health.

In s7(1) of the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, 'A person who is not eligible to become a member of Dáil Éireann shall not be eligible for election under this Act to the Assembly' is translated as 'Duine nach bhfuil cáilithe le bheith ina chomhalta de Dháil Éireann, ní bheidh sé cáilithe lena thoghadh faoin Acht seo don Tionól'. 'Na daoine atá i dteideal bheith ina gComhaltaí den Choláiste' translates 'those eligible to become Members of the College' in the Margin Title of s12 of the Royal College of Physicians of Ireland (Charter and Letters Patent Amendment) Act, 1979. 'Oifigeach ... don Bhord is comhalta de scéim aoisliúntais láithreach ní bheidh sé i dteideal bheith ina chomhalta de scéim aoisliúntais' translates 'An officer ... of the Bord who is a member of an existing superannuation scheme shall not be eligible to become a member of a superannuation scheme' in s15(9) of the Great Northern Railway Act, 1958. Finally, note that 'Ní bheidh duine i dteideal bheith ina chomhalta den Chomhlacht Ceannais' translates 'A person shall not be eligible to be a member of the Governing Body' in s6(b) of the Schedule to the National Institute for Higher Education, Limerick, Act, 1980.

Ionas go Ó Dónaill translates 'ionas go' as 'so that', citing 'ionas go mbeidís slán, so that they might be saved'. Dinneen translates 'ionnas go' as 'so, in order or insomuch that'. DIL also translates 'indas ... co' as 'so that', no example of this phrase being cited from the earlier sources; 'indas' followed by a relative clause, however, in the sense of 'as, how, so that', is cited from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles: 'rofessursa indas nombiedsi' ('I shall know how ye are'). The original sense of Old Irish 'indas' may have been 'account', examples of the sense of 'manner, kind, nature, appearance, condition' being cited in DIL from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards. See further the commentary on Article 29.4.2°.

ar chomhaltas 'Body of persons, brotherhood' and 'membership' are the secondary senses of 'comhaltas' given in Ó Dónaill, the primary sense being 'joint fosterage' – see the commentary on Articles 12.6.2° and 12.10.4°. Dinneen translates 'comhaltas' as 'joint fosterage, brotherhood', giving 'a body of persons' as a secondary sense. 'Comaltas', based on 'comalta', is translated as 'foster-brotherhood, (intimate) friendship; co-fosterage' in DIL. Modern 'comhalta' represents a merger of earlier 'comalta' and 'comdalta'.

Gender-proofed Irish text

Ionas go mbeadh duine inghlactha ar chomhaltas Sheanad Éireann ní foláir é nó í a bheith inghlactha ar chomhaltas Dháil Éireann.

Direct translation

Variants

- 1 'Caithfidh duine'
- 2 'Chun go mbeidh duine incheaptha mar chomhalta de Dháil Éireann caithfidh sé nó sí bheith incheaptha mar chomhalta de Sheanad Éireann.'

ARTICLE 18.3 AIRTEAGAL 18.3

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The members who will be nominated for Seanad Éireann (they) will be nominated with prior-permission from themselves by the Taoiseach who will be appointed on the re-assembly of Dáil Éireann after the dissolution of Dáil Éireann which causes those members to be nominated.

ENGLISH TEXT

The nominated members of Seanad Éireann shall be nominated, with their prior consent, by the Taoiseach who is appointed next after the re-assembly of Dáil Éireann following the dissolution thereof which occasions the nomination of the said members.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'By the Taoiseach who is appointed next after the re-assembly of Dáil Éireann' is expressed in the Irish text as 'ag an Taoiseach a cheapfar ar Dháil Éireann d'ationól' ('by the Taoiseach who will be appointed on the re-assembly of Dáil Éireann'), 'next' not being specifically expressed in the Irish text and 'after' being expressed by 'ar' ('on') – 'after' and 'following', which occurs further on in the section, are usually similarly rendered in Irish, by 'i ndiaidh'.
- 2 'The nominated members of Seanad Éireann' is expressed as 'Na comhaltaí a ainmneofar do Sheanad Éireann' ('The members who will be nominated for Seanad Éireann') in the Irish text.

The original Article 18.3 read as follows:

The nominated members of Seanad Éireann shall be nominated by the Taoiseach with their prior consent. Na comhaltaí ainmneofar do Sheanad Éireann is é an Taoiseach a ainmneochas iad le réamh-chead uatha féin.

The section was amended by the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941, by the deletion of the words 'nominated by the Taoiseach with their prior consent', and the insertion in their place of the words 'nominated, with their prior consent, by the Taoiseach who is appointed next after the re-assembly of Dáil Éireann following the dissolution thereof which occasions the nomination of the said members', 'is é an Taoiseach a ainmneochas iad le réamh-chead uatha féin' being deleted from the Irish text, and 'ainmneochas iad le réamh-chead uatha féin ag an Taoiseach a cheapfar ar Dháil Éireann d'aithtionól i ndiaidh an lán-scoir ar Dháil Éireann is siocair leis na comhaltaí sin d'ainmniú' being inserted in place of those words.

Commentary

réamhchead A compound of the prefix 'réamh-' and 'cead'. 'Réamh' is translated as 'preliminary' in Téarmaí Dlí but generally expresses 'ante-, pre-, fore-', as both Ó Dónaill and Dinneen translate this prefix (Ó Dónaill also including 'introductory, prefatory, preliminary', and Dinneen 'introductory'), neither of which seem to include 'réamhchead' as a headword. DIL gives headwords which are composed with the prefix 'rem-/remi-' from the Glosses of the eighth century onwards. DIL cites 'cet cet ol Máedóc' from the twelfth-century Book of Leinster as an example of 'cet' as an interjection or asseverative ('agreed, permission granted, yes'), the earliest example of 'cet' in the general sense of 'permission, consent, will' cited there coming from the poetry of Blathmac son of Cú Brettan (fl. 750-770). Téarmaí Dlí translates 'cead' as 'liberty (to apply, etc.)', 'leave' being its principal sense according to both Ó Dónaill and Dinneen.

'The Company shall not borrow except with the prior consent of the Minister given with the approval of the Minister for Finance' is translated as 'Ní bhfaighidh an Chuideachta airgead ar iasacht gan toiliú a fháil roimh ré ón Aire arna thabhairt le ceadú an Aire Airgeadais' in s6(11) of the Irish Telecommunications Investments Limited Act, 1981, 'ach amháin le toiliú roimh ré ón Aire' translating 'except with the prior consent of the Minister' in s2(3) of the Transport Act, 1974. 'A sending State may with the prior consent of a receiving State ... undertake the temporary protection of the interests of the third State' is translated as 'Féadfaidh Stát sallchuir, le toiliú roimh ré Stáit ghlacaidh ... caomhaint shealadach leasanna an tríú Stát ... a ghabháil air féin' in Article 46 of the First Schedule to the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967. 'A deduction may be made by an employer from the wages of an employee with his prior consent' is translated as 'le hasbhaint arna déanamh ag fostóir as pá fostai le toiliú roimh ré i scríbhinn uaidh' in s5(f) of the Payment of Wages Act, 1991.

Looking at early Acts, 'A copy of any consent, approval, sanction' is translated as 'cóip d'aon toiliú, aontú, ceadú' in s11 of the Methodist Church in Ireland Act, 1928. 'Provided that the sessions of Seanad Éireann shall not be concluded without its own consent' is translated as 'Ar choinioll ná críochnófar siosóin Sheanad Éireann gan a thoil féin' in Article 24 of the 1922 Constitution. 'Prior' is translated by the prefix 'roimh-' in early Acts; in s17(2)(b) of the Electoral Act, 1923, for example, 'capable of being

d'ationól The preposition 'do' before the verbal noun is generally replaced by 'a' today – see Ó Dónaill s.v. a<sup>4</sup>, '<de, do'. 'Ationól' comes from 'ath-thionól', the reiterative prefix 'ath-' (re-) and 'tionól', translated as 'assembly' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Ationól' is given as a headword in Ó Dónaill, where it is translated as 'reassembly' – being the verbal noun of 'ationóil', translated there as 'reconvene'. DIL cites only one example of 'aithinóilaid', in the sense of soldiers re-assembling, from the Book of Ballymote, written c.1400, giving three examples of 'aithionól', 'act of reassembling'. See further the commentary on Article 28.10.

'Direct the re-assembly of the Court for the revision of the finding and sentence', in s115(1) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, is translated as 'A ordú go dtiocfaidh an Chúirt le chéile arís chun an breithiúnas agus an daora ... d'ath-scrúdú'. In Article 24 of the 1922 Constitution, 'Dáil Éireann shall fix the date of re-assembly of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'ceapfaidh Dáil Éireann dáta aith-thionóil an Oireachtais'. See the commentary on Article 15.11.3<sup>o</sup> regarding 'tionól'. In s2(9) of the Interpretation Act, 1923, 'the expression "the Third Dáil Éireann" shall mean the assembly of members of Parliament' is translated as 'ciallaíonn an focal "an Tríú Dáil Éireann" an tionól de bhaill Pháirliminte'. 'The European Assembly Elections Act, 1977' is cited in Irish as 'an tAcht um Thoghcháin do Thionól na hEorpa, 1977'.

'Teacht le chéile arís' translates 're-assemble' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1926, p. 984, with 'teacht le chéile' translating 're-assembly' in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, 1926, p. 13. 'The right to assemble peaceably and without arms' is translated as 'ceart teacht le chéile go siochánta gan airm' in Article 9 of the 1922 Constitution, 'have assembled or met together' being translated as 'a dhin ... teacht no cruinniú le chéile' in s7(3) of the Treasonable Offences Act, 1925. Finally, 'in riot or unlawful assembly' is translated as 'i gcúrsaí ciréibe no tionóil nea-dhleathaigh' in s77(B)(v) of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924.

is siocair See the commentary on Article 12.10.7<sup>o</sup>. 'Within seven days after the dissolution of Dáil Éireann which occasions the election' is translated as 'laistigh de sheacht lá i ndiaidh an lánscoir ar Dháil Éireann a dtiocfaidh an toghchán de' in s24(2)(a) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1947, 'mí tar éis an scuir sin ar Dháil Éireann dá dtiocfaidh an toghchán Seanad sin' translating 'one month after the dissolution of Dáil Éireann which occasions such Seanad election' in s37(1) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1937. 'The circumstances which led up to and occasioned ...' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'na nithe as ar lean agus as a dtáinig' in a Report of the Public Accounts Committee, 1927.

'After the dissolution which occasioned that Seanad general election' is translated as 'i ndiaidh an lánscoir ba chúis leis an olltoghchán sin don tSeanad' in the Schedule to the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1954. 'The non-payment of which occasioned the revocation' is translated as 'arb é a neamhíoc faoi deara an chúlghairm' in s6(8) of the Agricultural Produce (Meat) (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1978. 'For three years from the expiration of the term of office the expiration of which occasions his election' is translated as 'go ceann trí mbliain o bheith caithte don téarma oifige gurb é a bheith caithte fé ndéar a thogha' in s19(3) of the Currency Act, 1927, 'arbh é a neamh-íoc fé ndéar an nea-mbriochaint sin' translating 'the non-payment of which occasioned such cancellation' in s9(9) of the Agricultural Produce (Eggs) Act, 1924. Finally, in s49(6) of the Landlord and Tenant (Amendment) Act, 1980, 'in the notice by the authority which occasioned the work notice' is translated as 'san fhógra ag an údarás ba bhun leis an bhfógra oibre a thabhairt'.

Na comhaltaí a ainmneofar Literally 'the members who will be nominated'. In Article 82(b) of the 1922 Constitution, 'The thirty nominated members of Seanad Éireann shall be nominated by the President of the Executive Council' is translated as 'Is é Uachtarán na hArd-Chomhairle a ainmneoidh na deich mbaill fhichead de Sheanad Éireann atá le hainmniú', 'Is í Dáil Éireann a thoghfaidh ... na deich mbaill fhichead de Sheanad Éireann atá le togha' translating 'The thirty elected members of Seanad Éireann shall be elected by Dáil Éireann' in Article 82(c). 'Na baill ainmnithe den Bhord d'ainmniú' translates 'Nomination of the nominated members of the Board' in the Margin Title of s13 of the Dentists Act, 1928. 'On the date on which the eight nominated members of the Council are nominated by the Executive Council' is translated as 'an dáta ar a n-ainmneoidh an Ard-Chomhairle an t-ochtar baill ainmnithe den Chomhairle' in s5(1) of the Veterinary Surgeons Act, 1931. Finally, 'Two of the nominated members shall be practising barristers nominated by the General Council of the Bar of Ireland' is translated as 'Beidh beirt de na comhaltaí ainmnithe ina n-abhcóidí cleachtacha a ainmneos Comhairle Ghinearálta Abhcóidí na hÉireann' in s15(3) of the Courts of Justice Act, 1953.

a cheapfar ar Regarding 'next' in the Acts, 'at the beginning of the accounting period next after that period' is translated as 'i dtosach na chéad tréimhse cuntasaióchta eile i ndiaidh na tréimhse sin' in s9 of the Finance Act, 1990. 'And the resignation shall take effect at the commencement of the meeting of the Commission held next after the Commission has been informed by the Government of the resignation' is translated as 'agus glacfaidh an t-éirí as éifeacht an tráth a thosóidh an chéad chruinniú eile den Choimisiún a thionólfar tar éis don Rialtas an t-éirí-as a chur in iúl don Choimisiún' in s2(3) of the Schedule to the Radio and Television Act, 1988. 'Raghaidh gach eirge as den tsórt san in éifeacht i dtosach an chéad chruinnithe den Bhord a bheidh ann tar éis don Bhord an t-eirge-as san d'fháil' translates 'every such resignation shall take effect at the commencement of the meeting of the Board held next after the receipt of such resignation by the Board' in s21(4) of the Cork Fever Hospital Act, 1935. Finally, 'An Act to postpone the triennial elections to certain Local Authorities which are due to be held next after the passing of this Act' is translated as 'Acht chun na gcéad toghchán cinn trí mbliain eile chun Údarás n-Áitiúil áirithe dlighfear do chomóra tar éis an Achta so do rith do chur ar ath-ló' in the Long Title of the Local Elections and Meetings (Postponement) Act, 1931, 'the appeal under this section shall be brought before the 26th day of April next after the decision of the registration officer is given' being translated as 'déanfar an t-athchomharc fén alt so roimh an 26ad lá den chéad Abrán tar éis don oifigeach clárachta a bhreith do thabhairt' in s5(2) of the Juries (Amendment) Act, 1924.

i ndiaidh an lánscoir ar Dháil Éireann Regarding 'den chéanna' translating 'thereof' in a draft of the translation below, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú feels it is slightly affected ("beagán crochta"), 'thereof' being an old-fashioned expression of 'of it', i.e. 'di' below.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Na comhaltaí a thoghfar do Sheanad Éireann, is ar an gcuma seo a leanas a thoghfar iad:-

- i Toghfaidh Ollscoil na hÉireann triúr.
- ii Toghfaidh Ollscoil Bhaile Átha Cliath triúr.
- iii Toghfar triúr is daichead as rollaí d'iarthóirí a chóireofar ar an gcuma a shocraítear anseo inár ndiaidh.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The members who will be elected for Seanad Éireann, it is in the following manner they will be elected: -

- i The National University of Ireland will elect three.
- ii Dublin University will elect three.
- iii Forty-three (people) will be elected from rolls of candidates which will be arranged in the manner provided here following.

ENGLISH TEXT

The elected members of Seanad Éireann shall be elected as follows:-

- i Three shall be elected by the National University of Ireland.
- ii Three shall be elected by the University of Dublin.
- iii Forty-three shall be elected from panels of candidates constituted as hereinafter provided.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Panels of candidates constituted as hereinafter provided' is expressed as 'rollaí d'iarthóirí a chóireofar ar an gcuma a shocraítear anseo inár ndiaidh' ('rolls of candidates which will be arranged in the manner hereinafter provided') in the Irish text.

- 2 'As follows' is expressed as 'ar an gcuma seo a leanas' ('in the following manner') in the Irish text, with 'the elected members' being expressed as 'Na comhaltaí a thoghfar' ('the members who will be elected) - 'nominated members' is expressed as 'na comhaltaí a ainmneofar' ('the members who will be nominated') in the previous section.

Note that Article 32 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

One-fourth of the members of Seanad Éireann shall be elected every three years from a panel constituted as hereinafter mentioned .... Toghfar an ceathrú cuid de bhaill Sheanad Éireann gach trí bliana ó ainm-liost a déanfar ar chuma a luaidhtear 'na dhiaidh seo.

Note also that the original Irish text of paragraph iii read as follows:

Toghfaidh an toghlucht a luaidhtear annso i n-ar ndiaidh triúr is dá fhichid as rollaibh d'iarthóiribh a cóireochar ar an gcuma a socruightheart annso i n-ar ndiaidh.

The words 'Toghfaidh an toghlucht a luaidhtear annso i n-ar ndiaidh' were deleted and the word 'Toghfar' inserted in their place, by the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941, no corresponding amendment being made to the English text.

Commentary

ar an gcuma seo a leanas 'Ar chuma ruda' is translated as 'in the manner of, like, something' in Ó Dónaill, Dinneen translating 'ar an gcuma soin' as 'in that way'. 'Gan a chuma air cóir mhaireachtála a bheith aige, with no visible means of subsistence' is cited in Téarmaí Dlí. The principal sense of 'cuma' in Ó Dónaill is 'shape, form; appearance, look, effect'. Old Irish 'cummae' is the verbal noun of 'con-ben' (a compound with the Old Irish verb 'benaid', 'beats, strikes, hews, cuts down, off' - Modern Irish 'bain'), and is translated as (1) 'act of cutting, carving, hacking, destroying', (2) 'act of shaping, fashioning, composing' and (3) 'shape, form, appearance' in DIL. 'Foróenchummi' ('in one way') glosses Latin 'identidem' in the ninth-century St Gall Glosses on Priscian.

'The directors to be elected by the American Republics ... shall be elected as follows:' is translated as 'Na stiúrthóirí a bheas le toghadh ag na Poblachtaí Meiriceánacha ..., toghfar iad mar leanas:' in s7 of Schedule C to the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, 1957. 'Na baill de bhord choganta phuibli bheidh le togha ag comhairle chontae is mar leanas a thoghfar iad:-' translates 'The members of a board of public assistance to be elected by a county council shall be elected as follows' in s2(1) of the Second Schedule to the Public Assistance Act, 1939. Finally, 'the members of the Board shall be nominated and elected as follows, that is to say:-' is translated as 'is mar leanas a hainmneofar agus a toghfar baill an Bhúird, sé sin le rá:-' in s1 of the Second Schedule to the Dentists Act, 1928, and 'Dáil Éireann ... decrees and enacts as follows:-' is translated as 'dineann sí a reachtú agus a achtú mar leanas:-' in the Preamble to the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922.

Ollscoil na hÉireann ... Ollscoil Bhaile Átha Cliath ‘Ollscoil na hÉireann’, literally ‘the University of Ireland’, is the current official Irish version of ‘The National University of Ireland’. ‘The National University of Ireland Act, 1969’ is cited in Irish as ‘Acht Ollscoil na hÉireann, 1969’, for example. ‘Príomh-sgoil’ translates ‘University’ in the 1922 Constitution, with ‘exclusive of members for the Universities’ being translated as ‘lasmuich de theachtaí na bPríomh-sgoileanna’ in Article 26, for example. In Part III of the Eighth Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923, ‘The National University of Ireland’ is cited as ‘Príomh-scoil Náisiúnta na hÉireann’, with ‘Príomh-scoileanna’ translating ‘Universities’ in the heading. ‘The University Education (Agriculture and Dairy Science) Act, 1926’ is cited in Irish as ‘Acht um Oideachas Príomh-Scoile (Talmhaíocht agus Eolaíocht Déiríochta), 1926’, with ‘University College, Galway, Act, 1929’ being cited as ‘Acht Choláiste Phríomh-Scoile na Gaillimhe, 1929’. Note that ‘University Degree, in Science’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as ‘céim Ollscoile in Eolaíocht’ (followed by the abbreviation ‘A. Tal. 51’ [i.e. ‘translations for the Department of Lands and Agriculture’ (?)]).

Ó Dónaill cites both ‘Ollscoil na hÉireann, National University of Ireland’ and ‘Ollscoil Bhaile Átha Cliath, Dublin University’ s.v. ‘ollscoil, university’. Dinneen gives the form ‘iolscoil’ as a headword, with the abbreviation for ‘recent’ following the translation ‘a university’, L. Mc Cionnaith citing ‘fuair sé iolscoilidheacht, university education’ from Munster. The prefix here is noteworthy in that, in direct contrast to ‘University’, the prefix ‘iol-’ has the sense of ‘multi-; poly-’.

Turning to ‘Dublin University’, in Part III of the Electoral Act, 1923, ‘Dublin University’ is cited in Irish as ‘Príomh-scoil Bhaile Átha Cliath’. ‘An Coláiste Ollscoile, Baile Átha Cliath’ translates ‘University College Dublin’ in the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978. The new official title, ‘University College Dublin, National University of Ireland, Dublin’ is cited as ‘Coláiste na hOllscoile Baile Átha Cliath, Ollscoil an hÉireann, Baile Átha Cliath’ in Statutory Instrument No. 447 of 1998, and in Iris Oifigiúil, 1/12/98.

rollaí ‘Rolla an ghiúiré’ is translated as ‘jury panel’ in Téarmaí Dlí; ‘rolláim’, however, is translated as ‘I enrol’, ‘rolla’ literally meaning ‘roll’. ‘Rolla’ is a Romance loanword, translated as ‘a (written) roll of parchment, scroll (especially a list (?), record)’ in DIL, where ‘nára horm rabh na rolla-sum’ (from a poem by Gofraidh Ó Cléirigh in the Book of Húi Maine) is translated as ‘may it not be charged to me in His (judgement-) record!’, along with ‘a genealogical list; a pedigree’. Dinneen translates ‘cuirim i rolla’ as ‘I register, record or write’, also citing (from Keating) ‘Rolla na Ríogh, the Roll of the Kings, called also the Psalter of Tara’ and ‘Rolla na Teamhrach, the Roll of Tara’. Ó Dónaill also gives ‘official record, register, list’ as the secondary meaning of ‘rolla’. Note, finally, that ‘rolla’ expresses ‘register’ in Article 47.2.1°.

The ‘Irish Takeover Panel Act, 1997’ is cited in Irish as ‘an tAcht um Painéal Táthcheangail na hÉireann, 1997’. ‘The chairman shall replace him by an appropriate person from a panel of persons to be appointed by the Minister’ is translated as ‘cuirfidh an cathaoirleach duine iomchuí as rolla daoine a bheidh le ceapadh ag an Aire ina ionad’ in s37(4) of the Health (Mental Services) Act, 1981, in ss6 of which ‘a review board panel’ is translated as ‘rolla boird athbhreithnithe’. ‘A Panel of Conciliators and a Panel of Arbitrators’ is translated as ‘Rolla Comhréiteoirí agus Rolla Eadránaithe’ in Article 3 of Section 1 of the Second Schedule to the Arbitration Act, 1980. In s9(3) of the Misuse of Drugs Act, 1977, ‘he shall refer the case to an advisory panel constituted for the purpose’ is translated as ‘tarchuirfidh sé an cas chuig painéal comhairleach a bheidh comhdhéanta chun na críche’. In s76(1) of the Pigs and Bacon Act, 1935, ‘The Minister shall ... if there are any persons who were on such date large curers, prepare a panel (in this Part of this Act referred to as a panel of large curers) of the names of such persons’ is translated as ‘déanfaidh an tAire ... má bhíonn aon daoine ann do bhí in a mór-leasuitheoirí ar an dáta san, painéal (dá ngairmtear painéal de mhór-leasuitheoirí sa Chuid seo den Acht so), d’ainmneacha na ndaoine sin d’ullamhú’. ‘Painéal de réiteoirí do bhunú’ translates ‘Establishment of panel of referees’ in the Margin Title of s46 of the Widows’ and Orphans’ Pensions Act, 1935.

Note that ‘the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1937’ is cited in Irish as ‘Acht Toghacháin an tSeanad (Baill Ainmliosta), 1937’. In s4(1) we find ‘the word “panel” when used without qualification means a panel of candidates formed in pursuance of sub-section 1° of section 7 of Article 18 of the Constitution’ translated as ‘nuair a húsáidtear an focal “ainmliost” gan coinníoll cialluíonn sé rolla d’iarthóirí cóireofar do réir fo-ailt 1° d’alt 7 d’Airteagal 18 den Bhunreacht’. We see above that ‘ainm-liost’ translates ‘panel’ in the 1922 Constitution also.

‘Painéal de chathaoirleach shealadacha’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating ‘panel of temporary chairmen’ in the ‘cover’ of the Official Report of the Dáil Debates, 18/3/25, with ‘painéal’ translating ‘panel’ in the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, 1926, p. 11. Finally ‘Establishment of panel of referees’ is translated as ‘Painéal de réiteoirí do bhunú’ in the Margin Title of s14 of the Live Stock Breeding Act, 1925.

a chóireofar ‘Cóireofar’ expresses ‘shall be formed’, again in relation to the panels of candidates for Seanad Elections, in Article 18.7.1°. ‘Cóirigh’ is translated as ‘arrange, dress’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘cath a chóiriú, to array forces for battle’ and ‘bia a chóiriú, to dress, prepare, food’. Dinneen translates ‘cóirighim’ as ‘I arrange, fit up, prepare, dress out, mend, patch; set to rights’, citing ‘cóirighim leaba, I make or dress a bed’. DIL translates ‘córaigid’/‘cóirigid’ as ‘arranges, sets in order, sets up’, giving examples from early Irish law-tracts and from Leabhar na hUidhre (written c. 1100 in Clonmacnois) onwards. This verb is based on ‘cóir’, translated as ‘proper, correct, right; suitable, fitting, just’ in DIL, along with, in physical sense, ‘even, well proportioned, straight’. See further the commentary on Article 18.7.1° and see the commentary on Articles 14.1 and 18.1 regarding ‘constitute’ in the Acts.

a shocraítear anseo inár ndiaidh ‘Hereinafter referred to as “the Scheduled Treaty”’ is translated as ‘dá ngoirtfeasta “an Connradh Sgeidealta”’ in s2 of the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922. We see above that ‘ar chuma a luaidhtear’ na dhiaidh seo’ translates ‘as hereinafter mentioned’ in Article 32 of that Constitution. ‘Hereinafter referred to as’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as ‘dá ngairmtear ... anso ina dhiaidh seo' in translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health, this being the general translation of that phrase in the Acts. 'Ach amháin mar a fhoráiltear anseo ina dhiaidh seo' translates 'save as hereinafter provided' in s274(1) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example.

triúr is daichead This would have the form 'trí dhuine is daichead' according to the official standard. See the commentary on Article 18.1.

- 1 'On a franchise' is expressed as 'de réir toghchórais' ('in accordance with an electoral system / franchise') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Ollscoileanna' has a capital 'O' as against lower-case 'u' in 'universities' in the English text.
- 3 Note that 'Provision may be made by law' is expressed as 'Féadfar foráil a dhéanamh le dlí' as against the usual 'Féadfar socrú a dhéanamh le dlí', with 'a shocrófar le dlí' expressing 'as may be fixed by law'; note also that 'institution' is expressed by 'foras', with 'fundúireacht' expressing 'institution' in Articles 42 and 44 (both, like this section, in relation to educational institutions).

Note that much of Article 19 corresponds to the above, but is not similarly expressed in the Irish text, Article 19 reading as follows:

Provision may be made by law for the direct election by any functional or vocational group or association or council of so many members of Seanad Éireann as may be fixed by such law in substitution for an equal number of the members to be elected from the corresponding panels of candidates constituted under Article 18 of this Constitution. Féadfar socrú a dhéanamh le dlí ionas go bhféadfaid aon dream feidhme nó gairme beatha, nó aon chomhlacht nó comhairle feidhme nó gairme beatha, an oiread comhaltai do Sheanad Éireann a thoghadh go lomdíreach agus a chinnfear leis an dlí sin, in ionad an oiread chéanna de na comhaltai a thoghfar as na comhrollai d'iarrthóirí a chóireofar faoi Airteagal 18 den Bhunreacht seo.

Commentary

foráil a dhéanamh 'Socrú' rather than 'foráil' generally expresses 'provision' in this context – see the commentary on Articles 8.3 and 15.2.2°. 'A shocrófar le dlí' expresses both 'provided by law' and 'fixed by law' in the present Article. In Articles 8.3, 10.3, 10.4, 15.2.2°, 19 and 40.6.1°ii, 'provision may be made by law' is expressed as 'féadfar socrú a dhéanamh le dlí', with 'The Oireachtas may make provision by law' being expressed as 'Tig leis an Oireachtas socrú a dhéanamh le dlí' in Article 15.15, 'Provision shall be made by law' being expressed as 'ní foláir socrú a dhéanamh le dlí' in Article 16.6 and 'Provision may be made by law' being expressed as 'Féadfar socrú a dhéanamh de réir dlí' in Article 40.6.1°ii. 'Foráil' has the sense of ‘provision’ in Jurisprudence (see Ó Dónaill) and, as noted above, is invoked here seeing that both ‘to be provided by law’ and ‘as may be fixed by law’, further on in this subsection, are expressed as ‘a shocrófar le dlí’.

de réir toghchórais ‘Toghchóras’ is translated as ‘franchise’ in Ó Dónaill, this being a compound of ‘togh’ (‘elect’) and ‘córas’ (‘system’) – see the commentary on Article 12.2.1° regarding ‘togh’. Dinneen does not appear to give ‘toghchóras’ as a headword. Note that ‘franchise’, in the sense of ‘a liberty or privilege’, is translated as ‘díolúine’ in Tearmaí Dlí, and is so expressed in Article 10.1 of the Constitution. ‘Reacht-shaoirse’ translates ‘franchise’ in that context in Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution. That compound translates ‘franchise’ in the electoral context in early Acts also, ‘Confirmation of Franchise Resolutions’ being translated as ‘Daingniú ar Rúin Reacht-shaoirse’ in the Margin Title of s61 of the Electoral Act, 1923. ‘The first Register prepared under this Act shall be completed in accordance with the said Franchise Resolutions’ is translated as ‘Déanfar an Chéad Chlár a hullamhófar fén Acht so do chríochnú do réir na Rúin Reacht-shaoirse roimh-ráite’ in s61(4) of that Act, paragraph (a) of which refers to ‘The registration of and voting by members of the Defence Force of Saorstát Éireann’ (‘Clárú agus Vótáil bhalla d’Fhórsa Cosanta Shaorstáit Éireann’). The ‘Local Government (Extension of Franchise) Act, 1935’ is cited in Irish as ‘an tAcht Rialtais Áitiúla (Reacht-Shaoirse do Leathnú), 1935’.

Turning to the modern Acts, ‘Franchise and registration’ is translated as ‘Toghchóras agus clárú’ in the Margin Title of s3 of the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977, for example, as in the Heading of Part II of the Electoral Act, 1963, ‘Togh-Chóras agus Clárú’ being in the Heading of Part II of the Seanad Electoral (University Members) Act, 1937.

forais ‘Foras’ expresses ‘institution’ in Article 45.1 also, where ‘all the institutions of the national life’ is expressed as ‘(ag rialú) gach forais a bhaineas leis an saol náisiúnta’, and in Article 41.1.1°, where ‘moral institution’ (regarding the family) is expressed as ‘foras morálta’. ‘Ord an phósta’, however, expresses ‘the institution of Marriage’ in Article 41.3.1°. ‘Any educational institution’ is expressed as ‘aon fhundúireachtaí oideachais’ in Article 44.2.6°, with ‘institutions for religious or charitable purposes’ being expressed as ‘fundúireachtaí chun críocha creidimh is carthanachta’ in Article 44.2.5°. In Article 42.4, ‘other educational facilities or institutions’ is expressed as ‘áiseanna nó fundúireachtaí eile oideachais’. Finally, in Article 29.4.3° (added by amendment of the Constitution), ‘institutions’ (of the Communities) is rendered as ‘institiúidí de na Comhphobail’.

‘Foras’ is translated as ‘ground (of application, etc.)’ in Tearmaí Dlí, with the secondary meaning of ‘foundation, institution’ being given in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘foras tionscail, talúntais, industrial, agricultural, institute’, Dinneen also including ‘an institution’ among the senses of ‘foras’, citing ‘foras tuatha, a local institute, hospital, etc.’ In early Irish laws ‘forus’ was used especially of ‘a cattle-pound’ or other ‘place where distrained cattle might be detained, a place appointed for the delivery of animals according to a contract’, according to DIL, wherein this word in that secondary sense is translated as ‘a station, resting place, dwelling’. Eoin Mac Néill took ‘foras tuaithe’ in the early Irish laws to be ‘a public infirmary’ – see DIL s.v. ‘forus’ II. Fergus Kelly, op. cit., p. 313, gives ‘resting place, station, appointed place’ as one of the senses of ‘forus’ in early Irish laws, ‘basis, foundation (of judgement), promulgation (of laws, judgement)’ being the main sense given in the ‘Index of Irish Terms’ accompanying his Guide to Early Irish Law. ‘Basis, foundation, bottom’ was apparently the original sense of this word, ‘that which is stable, stability’ being the sense found in older texts. See the commentary on Articles 40.4.2° (where ‘forais’ expresses ‘grounds’) and 41.1.1°.

‘Any educational institution’ is translated as ‘aon fhundúireacht oideachais’ in Article 8 of the 1922 Constitution. ‘As regards the question of Workhouse children, the Committee of Management shall be charged with the duty of boarding-out all, or as many as possible, of the institution children’ is translated as ‘Maidir le leanbhaí an Tighe Oibre, beidh sé de dhualgas ar an gCoiste Bainistí gach éinne, nó oiread is féidir, de sna leanbhaí fundúireachta do chur ar altranas’ in s17 of the ‘Leitrim County Scheme’ in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. ‘Contribute to the support, maintenance, and education of such child in an institution established and maintained for the care of such children’ is translated as ‘ranníoc a thabhairt le haghaidh a chothabhála agus a oidithe i bhfundúireachtaí a bheidh bunuithe agus á cothabháil chun leanbhaí den tsórt san d’aireachasú’ in s50 of the Public Assistance Act, 1939. Finally, ‘Corporate Members of the Institution of Civil Engineers of Ireland’ is translated as ‘Baill Chorporáideacha d’Fhondúireacht Innealtóirí Sibhialta na hÉireann’ in Part II of the First Schedule to the Juries Act, 1927 – the official Irish title of that Institution today is ‘Institiúid Innealtóirí Sibhialta na hÉireann’, ‘The Institution of Civil Engineers of Ireland (Charter Amendment) Act, 1969’ being cited in Irish as ‘an tAcht um Institiúid Innealtóirí Sibhialta na hÉireann (Cairt a Leasú), 1969’.

Looking at modern Acts, ‘in a hospital or similar institution’ is translated as ‘in ospidéal nó i bhforas dá shamhail’ in s46(2) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example. “‘Approved institution’ means a university, university college, or other institution of higher education’ is translated as ‘ciallaíonn “foras ceadaithe” ollscoil, coláiste ollscoile nó foras ardoideachais’ in s1(1) of the Local Authorities (Higher Education Grants) Act, 1978.

líon comhionann This would be in the genitive case after ‘in ionad’ according to the official standard. Note that we find ‘in ionad lín chomhionann de na comhaltaí’ in s1 of the Appendix to the Referendum (Amendment) Act, 1979, this subsection being added to the Constitution following that referendum.

‘Comhionann’, a compound of ‘comh’ and ‘ionann’, is translated as ‘equal, identical; congruent, uniform’ in Ó Dónaill, ‘cóimhionann’ being translated as ‘equal, co-equal, equivalent, uniform’ in Dinneen. Micheál Ó Cléirigh’s seventeenth-century recension of Leabhar Gabhála and Ó Cianáin’s Flight of the Earls are the sources of the two citations of the headword ‘coiminann’ in DIL, translated respectively as ‘identical’ and ‘in the same way’. DIL gives examples of ‘inunn’ in the sense of ‘the same’ from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles onwards.

'By equal quarterly payments' is translated as 'in íocaíochanna co-ionannacha ráithiúla' in s1 of the Governor-General's Salary and Establishment Act, 1923. 'An equal number' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'có-oiread' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 24/1/24, with 'in equal numbers' being translated as 'leath ina leath' in translations for the Department of Industry and Commerce.

'Where two or more candidates are credited with an equal number of votes the Minister shall select one of them by lot' is translated as 'I gcás ina mbeidh an líon céanna vótaí creidiúnaithe do bheirt nó níos mó de na hiarthóirí roghnóidh an tAire duine díobh trí chrannadh' in s9 of the First Schedule to the Postal and Telecommunications Services Act, 1983. 'With an equal number of members chosen to represent persons insured ...' is translated as 'maraon leis an líon céanna de chomhaltáí a roghnófar chun daoine atá árachaithe ... d'ionadú' in s3 of the Sixth Schedule to the Social Welfare Act, 1952. In s2(4) of the Schedule to the Pilotage Order Confirmation Act, 1926, 'by reason of two or more persons having received an equal number of votes' is translated as 'toisc có-ionannas vótanna do bheith fachta ag beirt no níos mó'.

Note that 'an equal pay officer shall be known as an equality officer' is translated as 'oifigeach comhionannais a thabharfar ar oifigeach pá chomhionainn' in s18 of the Employment Equality Act, 1977. Finally, note that 'in the case of an equal division of votes' is translated as 'i gcás na vótaí a bheith roinnte go cothrom' in s7(5) of the Schedule to the Radio and Television Act, 1988.

a bheas le toghadh Literally, 'who will be to be elected'. For the special relative form of the verb, see the commentary on Article 6.1. 'Le' with a verbal noun can express expectation ('tá siad le pósadh, they are to be married') or possibility ('tá siad le feiceáil sa spéir, they may be seen in the sky'), according to Ó Dónaill.

eadhon This adverb is translated as 'namely' in Ó Dónaill, accompanied by the abbreviation indicating that it is not in current use. This term is found in the modern Acts, however, translating 'namely'. 'In any of the following, namely -' is translated as 'in aon cheann acu seo a leanas, eadhon -' in s65(1) of the Finance Act, 1990, for example. In Article 35 of the 1922 Constitution, 'provision dealing with all or any of the following subjects, namely, ...' is translated as 'forálacha i dtaobh gach abhair no aon abhair díobh so leanas, eadhon, ...'. 'Namely' is translated as 'eadhon' in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms, no source being cited. The more correct form would be 'eadhón' (= 'eadh ón') – see DIL s.v. 'ón' and see the commentary on Article 14.2.1°.

de bhun míreanna i agus ii 'Míreanna', before 'i agus ii', would be lenited in the Acts following the compound preposition 'de bhun'. 'De bhun' is translated as 'in pursuance of', 'on foot of', 'pursuant to' in Téarmaí Dlí and 'on foot of, in pursuance of' in Ó Dónaill. Dinneen gives 'do bhun, in pursuance of'. DIL cites 'de bhun an ghrádh' ('because of love') from a miscellaneous collection of Classical Irish poetry, along with 'do bhun t'impidhe' ('through beseeching you') from the poetry of Aonghus Fionn Ó Dálaigh (c. 1520-1570).

tiomsaithe le chéile 'Collect, assemble' and 'come together, assemble' are two of the senses of 'tiomsaigh' given by Ó Dónaill, the past participle of which, 'tiomsaighthe' ('tiomsaithe' above), is given as a headword in Dinneen and translated as 'pressed or brought together, accumulated, collected'. DIL cites 'ina treabaib ... timsaichti' ('gathered together' in tribes) from the Leabhar Breac (compiled in 1411 or earlier), 'timsaighthe' being the participle of the verb 'timsaigid'.

'That two or more parcels of untenanted lands ... shall be grouped together and deemed to form one estate' is translated as 'go ndéanfar dá cheann no níos mó de phaistí talmhan nea-thionóntuithé ... do ghrúpaíl le chéile agus go dtuigfar gurb aon stát amháin iad' in s26 of the Land Act, 1927. 'If any of the documents are grouped together as relating to a particular matter' is translated as 'má bhíonn aon chuid de na doiciméid grúpáilte le chéile mar dhoiciméid a bhaineann le hábhar áirithe' in s19(3)(b) of the Solicitors (Amendment) Act, 1960. 'The Tribunal shall be grouped as so directed' is translated as 'beidh an Binse ina ghrúpaí mar a bheidh orduithe amhlaidh' in s39(11) of the Redundancy Payments Act, 1967. 'That their graves are respected, grouped if possible according to the nationality of the deceased' is translated as 'go dtabharfar urraim dá n-uaigneanna, go mbeidh siad más féidir sin ina ngrúpaí de réir náisiúntacht na marbh' in Article 17 of the First Schedule to the Geneva Convention Act, 1962. Note, on the other hand, that 'the Court shall be grouped into ... a first division, consisting of the chairman' is translated as 'beidh an Chúirt ina ranna mar leanas - ... céadroinn, a bheidh comhdhéanta den chathaoirleach' in s3(a) of the Industrial Relations Act, 1969.

aon fhorais eile ardoideachais The familiar compound 'ardoideachas' is surprisingly not included as a headword in Ó Dónaill, 'árd-oide' being translated as 'chief professor' in Dinneen, who cites 'árd-oide Éireann re seanchus, chief professor of history in Ireland'. 'Higher clerical officer' and 'Higher Executive Officer' are cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being respectively translated as 'oifigeach cléireachais uachtarach' and 'Feidhm-Oifigeach Uachtarach' in 'Miscellaneous Translations', 18/12/25. The 'Local Authorities (Higher Education Grants) Act, 1978' is cited in Irish as 'an tAcht um Údaráis Áitiúla (Deontais Ardoideachais), 1978'.

a luaitear See the commentary on Articles 12.10.1° and 14.5.2°.

Ní cead aon ní dá bhfuil san Airteagal seo a agairt chun toirmeasc a chur le hOllscoil a luaitear i bhfo-alt 1<sup>o</sup> den alt seo a lánscore de réir dlí.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is not permitted to plead anything that is in this Article in order to prohibit a University which is mentioned in subsection 1<sup>o</sup> of this section being dissolved in accordance with law.

ENGLISH TEXT

Nothing in this Article shall be invoked to prohibit the dissolution by law of a university mentioned in subsection 1<sup>o</sup> of this section.

This subsection was added to the text following the Seventh Amendment of the Constitution, 1979.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'By law' is expressed as 'de réir dlí' ('in accordance with law') in the Irish text, 'de réir' being translated as 'in accordance with' in Téarmaí Dlí – note how 'by law' is expressed directly as 'le dlí' in Article 18.6, for example.
- 2 The Irish text has a capital 'o' in 'Ollscoil' while the English text has a lower-case 'u' in 'university', having a capital 'U' in Article 18.6.
- 3 While 'invoke' is translated as 'agair' in the Acts, as above, this is the Irish legal term for 'sue'.
- 4 As we have seen in some other Articles, 'Nothing shall ...' is expressed in the Irish text as 'ní cead' ('it is not permitted ...').

Commentary

toirmeasc This headword is translated as 'inhibition' in Téarmaí Dlí, with 'ordú toirmisc' translated as 'prohibition order' and the verb 'toirmiscim' translated as 'I prohibit'.

Ó Dónaill translates 'toirmeasc a chur ar dhuine (faoi) rud a dhéanamh' as 'to prohibit someone from doing something' and Dinneen translates 'cuirim toirmeasc ar' as 'I obstruct, challenge'. DIL translates 'tairmescc', verbal noun of 'do-airmesca', as 'hindering, restraining, preventing, prohibiting', citing 'guide dée cen nach tairmescc ó dethiden in betho' ('to pray God without any interruption from the care of the world') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, and 'nár chuir in rí toirmesc orra fo gabáil triasan fFrainc' (i.e. the king did not hinder/prevent them from going through France) from Ó Cianáin's Flight of the Earls. See the commentary on Article 40.4.6<sup>o</sup>, where 'prohibit' is expressed by the verb 'toirmisc'.

'Toirmeasc a chur le' is used here rather than the simple verbal noun, 'a thoirmeasc', as we also have the verbal noun 'a lánscore' in the subsection – otherwise this would read as 'chun Ollscoil a luaitear i bhfo-alt 1<sup>o</sup> den alt seo a lánscore de réir dlí a thoirmeasc'; if 'dissolution' were not followed by 'by law', one could translate this as 'chun lánscore ollscoile a luaitear i bhfo-alt 1<sup>o</sup> den alt seo a thoirmeasc'.

Looking at early Acts, 'Prohibit the importation and exportation of all goods' is translated as 'Gach earra no aon tsaghas earra do chosc ar theacht isteach' in s13(1)(a) of the Adaptation of Enactments Act, 1922. In s7(1) of the School Attendance Act, 1926, however, 'prohibit or restrict the employment of such children in particular occupations' is translated as 'fostú leanbh den tsórt san do thoirmeasc no do shriana i ngnóthaí áirithe'. 'Prohibition of withdrawal or discontinuance of services' is translated as 'Toirmeasc ar sheirbhísí do tharrac siar no eirghe asta' in the Margin Title of s5 of the Railways (Road Motor Services) Act, 1927.

Looking at modern Acts, 'An Act to prohibit the inducing of persons to participate in pyramid selling schemes' is translated as 'Acht á thoirmeasc daoine a aslú chun bheith páirteach i scéimeanna stuaic-dhíola' in the Long Title of the Pyramid Selling Act, 1980. 'To prohibit the mortgager from selling ... the ownership or possession of any stock comprised therein' is translated as 'chun a thoirmeasc ar an morgáisteoir úinéireacht ... aon stoic a chuimsítear ann a dhíol' in s27(1)(a) of the Agricultural Credit Act, 1978.

a lánscore Looking at 'dissolution' in early Acts, 'on the death of his wife or the lawful annulment or dissolution of his marriage' is translated as 'ar fháil bháis dá mhnaoi no ar a phósa do chur ar neamh-ní no do bhrise go dleathach' in s2(2) of the Army Pensions Act, 1923. 'The lawful dissolution of the marriage' is translated as 'an pósa do scur go dleathach' in s22(1) of the Army Pensions Act, 1927. See the commentary on Article 13.2.1<sup>o</sup> regarding 'dissolution' in later Acts. See also the commentary on Article 18.8.

a agairt The verbal noun of 'agair', translated as 'plead, entreat' in Ó Dónaill, who cites the sense of 'sue' in Jurisprudence, 'agraim' being translated as 'I sue' in Téarmaí Dlí. Dinneen cites 'agraim congnamh, I invoke aid', also translating 'agraim' as 'I claim; I sue'. DIL gives examples of the compound verb 'ad-gair' in the sense of 'sues, prosecutes, impleads, accuses', from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses onwards, citing 'dá ngéar-agra / an troigh 'san taobh' ('if Thou bringest against me the wounding of Thy foot and side') from a miscellaneous collection of Classical Irish religious poems. 'Acrae' was the original verbal noun of 'ad-gair'; in his Guide to Early Irish Law (p. 190, n. 3), Fergus Kelly notes that 'acrae is verbal noun of ad-gair lit. "calls to" i.e. "sues, takes legal action"'. See further the commentary on Article 40.4.6°. De Bhaldráithe translates 'invoke' as 'agraim, impím, guím (Dia)'.

'To invoke or rely on any views expressed ... by the other party' is translated as 'aon bharúlacha a nocht an páirtí eile ... a agairt ná seasamh orthu' in Article 35 of the Second Schedule to the Arbitration Act, 1980. 'Members agree not to invoke the obligations of any engagements' is translated as 'Comhaontaíonn na comhaltaí nach ndéanfaid oblagáidí aon tsocruithe d'agairt' in s5 of Article VII of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, 1957. See further the commentary on Article 40.4.6°.

Note that Article 28.3.3° of the Constitution commences as follows: 'Ní cead aon ní dá bhfuil sa Bhunreacht seo a agairt chun aon dlí dá n-achtaíonn an tOireachtas a chur ó bhail .... Nothing in this Constitution shall be invoked to invalidate any law enacted by the Oireachtas'. 'Provided, however, that nothing in this Article contained shall be invoked to prohibit, control or interfere with any act' is translated as 'Ar choinníoll, ámh ... ná gairmfear éinní dá bhfuil san Airteagal so chun aon ghníomh ... do chosg, do smachtú ná do thoirmeasg' in Article 6 of the 1922 Constitution.

Ní cead See the commentary on Article 9.1.3°. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks, regarding the translation below, that the future is somewhat unsuitable as no one knows whether it will or will not ("an ndéanfar nó nach ndéanfar") be invoked. According to Professor Ó Murchú, 'shall' here is an order or an exhortation and he recommends 'ní cóir', 'ní cuí' or the imperative, 'ná déantar', as a translation of 'shall' in this context.

Na comhaltaí a thoghfad do Sheanad Éireann ag na hOllscoileanna is de réir toghchórais, agus ar an modh, a shocrófar le dlí a thoghfad iad.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The members who will be elected for Seanad Éireann by the Universities it is in accordance with an electoral system, and in the manner, which will be provided by law that they will be elected.

ENGLISH TEXT

The members of Seanad Éireann to be elected by the Universities shall be elected on a franchise and in the manner to be provided by law.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'The members ... to be elected' is expressed as 'Na comhaltai a thoghfar' ('The members who will be elected') in the Irish text, 'The members of Seanad Éireann to be elected by the Universities' being expressed as 'Na comhaltai a thoghfar do Sheanad Éireann ag na hOllscoileanna' ('The members who will be elected to Seanad Éireann by the Universities').
- 2 As in Article 18.4.2°, 'on a franchise' is expressed as 'de réir toghchórais' ('in accordance with an electoral system / franchise') in the Irish text.

Commentary

ar an modh, a shocrófar le dlí 'To have a dispute determined in any other manner provided by law' is translated as 'díospóid a chur á cinneadh ar aon chaoi eile dá bhforáiltear faoin dlí' in s27(3) of the Central Bank Act, 1989. 'All other pledges may be sold by the pawnbroker by sale by public auction in the manner provided by law and not otherwise' is translated as 'féadfaidh an geallbhróicéir gach gealltán eile a dhíol ar cheant poiblí mar a fhoráiltear le dlí, agus ní fhéadfar ar aon dóigh eile' in s6(2)(b) of the Second Schedule to the Pawnbrokers Act, 1964. Before each general election for the members for Seanad Éireann who will be elected from rolls of candidates there will be arranged in the manner (that will be) provided by law five rolls of candidates on which will be names of people who will have knowledge and practice of the following affairs and services respectively:-

ENGLISH TEXT

Before each general election of the members of Seanad Éireann to be elected from panels of candidates, five panels of candidates shall be formed in the manner provided by law containing respectively the names of persons having knowledge and practical experience of the following interests and services, namely:-

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Interests' is expressed as 'gnóthaí' ('affairs', 'businesses') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Faoi seach' ('respectively') seems to qualify 'the following interests and services' in the Irish text, while 'respectively' appears to refer to 'the names of persons' in the English text.
- 3 'Namely' is not specifically expressed in the Irish text.
- 4 'Practical experience' is expressed by 'cleachtadh' ('practice') in the Irish text, though this term does have something of the sense of 'practical experience'.
- 5 'Formed' is expressed in the Irish text by the same term as expresses 'constituted' in the same context in Article 18.4.1°iii, i.e. 'cóirigh', which is generally translated as 'arrange'.
- 6 As in Article 18.4.1°iii, 'panel' is expressed by 'rolla' ('roll') in the Irish text.
- 7 'The members of Seanad Éireann' is expressed as 'na comhaltai do Sheanad Éireann' ('the members for Seanad Éireann') in the Irish text.
- 8 'To be elected' is again expressed as 'a thoghfar' ('who will be elected') in the Irish text.

Commentary

cóireofar See the commentary on Article 18.4.1°iii. 'By appointing not less than five persons ... to form such panel' is translated as 'tré chúigear ar a laighead ... do cheapadh ... chun bheith ina bpainéal den tsórt san' in s24(1) of the Horse Breeding Act, 1934. In s45(3) of the Juries Act, 1927, 'and thenceforth form part of the panel' is translated as 'agus beidh sé ina chuid den phainéal san as san amach'. In s3(1) of the County Courts (Amendment) Act, 1923, 'it is not possible to form a sufficient panel from such book' is translated as 'nách féidir ainmliost is leor do dhéanamh as an leabhar san'.

ar a mbeidh Note that 'the panel required by the said sub-section 1° to contain the names of persons having knowledge and practical experience of the following interests and services, namely ...' is translated as 'an rolla gur gá do réir an fho-ailt sin 1° ainmneacha daoine go n-eolas agus cleachtadh ar na gnóthaí agus na seirbhísí seo leanas do bheith air, eadhon' in s4(1) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1937. Note also that, as in that Act, 'namely' is specifically expressed as 'eadhon' in Article 18.4.2°.

eolas This headword is translated principally as 'knowledge' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'tá eolas ar an obair aige, he knows the work'. Dinneen includes 'practical or business knowledge, experience', along with 'knowledge, learning, skill, information' s.v. 'eolas' – 'information' being generally translated as 'faisnéis' rather than as 'eolas' in the modern Acts – translating 'tá eolas agam ar' as 'I know'. DIL translates 'eólas' principally as 'knowledge, information, especially knowledge gained by experience or practice, acquaintance', citing examples from the Glosses of the ninth century onwards, the earliest cited example of 'eólas' with 'ar' being from Keating's seventeenth-century Three Shafts of Death. See further the commentary on Articles 28.5.2° and 40.3.3°.

'By reason of a practical, commercial or technical knowledge of agriculture or a special local knowledge of agricultural matters' is translated as 'mar gheall ar eolas praiticiúil, trádálach nó teicniúil ar an talmhaíocht nó eolas speisialta áitiúil ar chúrsaí talmhaíochta' in s26(1)(c) of the Agriculture (An Chomhairle Oilíúna Talmhaíochta) Act, 1979. See further the commentary on Article 34.5.1°.

cleachtadh 'Practice, experience' is the secondary sense of 'cleachtadh' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'cleachtadh oibre, ceirde, practical experience of work, of a trade' and 'tá cleachtadh fada ar an tiomáint aige, he has long experience of driving'. Dinneen translates 'cleachtadh' as 'wont, habit, custom, ... practice, experience'. 'Cleachtad', verbal noun of 'clechtaid', is translated as (a) 'act of putting into practice' and (b) 'state of being accustomed to; usual practice' in DIL, with no examples of the verbal noun, or of the verb (or of 'clecht' ['custom, wont'] on which the verb is based), cited from the earlier sources. Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú recalls the lines 'nior chleacht sinn siobhal oidhche / ná imirt arm bhfaobhairthe' (Dioghluim Dána, 67.5) by Gofraidh Fionn Ó Dalaigh. Incidentally, 'cleachtaim' translates 'I practise' in Tearmaí Dlí, with 'cleachtas' translating 'practice' ('cleachtais éillitheacha, corrupt practices').

The knowledge and experience necessary for the efficient performance of those duties' is translated as '(ar) an eolas agus ar an taithí is gá chun na dualgaisí sin do chólíona' in s9 of the Local Authorities (Officers and Employers) Act, 1926. 'Experience and practical knowledge' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as being translated as 'cleachta agus eolas' in a 'Miscellaneous Report', 1926.

Turning to the modern Acts, in the Schedule to the Liability for Defective Products Act, 1991, 'at the expiry of a period of sufficient length to gather practical experience on the effects of these derogations' is translated as 'ar thréimhse leorfhada a bheith caite chun taithí phraiticiúil a fháil ar éifeachtaí na maoluithe sin'. 'A person having practical experience or special knowledge of the matters relating to the functions of the Board' is translated as 'duine ag a bhfuil taithí phraiticiúil nó eolas speisialta ar na hábhair a bhaineann le feidhmeanna an Bhoird' in s42(1)(a) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978. 'Mar gheall ar eolas speisialta no taithí do bheith aige ar na nithe' translates 'by reason of his special knowledge or practical experience of the matters' in s10(1) of the Waterford City Management Act, 1939, 'de dhaoine go n-eolas speisialta no go dtaití phraiticiúil' translating 'of persons of special knowledge or practical experience' in s45(2) of the Town and Regional Planning Act, 1934.

Note that Dinneen includes 'practical knowledge, experience' s.v. 'taithighe', translating 'tá taithighe agam ar' as 'I am familiar with, have practical knowledge of'. De Bhaldraithe translates 'practical experience' as 'cleachtadh ar obair'.

gnóthaí 'Interests' is similarly expressed in paragraph ii of this subsection. Note, however, that 'professional interests' is expressed as 'gairmeacha' in paragraph i. 'Gnóthaí oifigiúla' expresses 'official purposes' in Article 8.3 and 'gnóthaí' expresses 'affairs' in Article 44.2.5°.

'Gnóthaí' is the plural of 'gnó', which is translated principally as 'business' in Ó Dónaill, with 'áitreabh gnó' and 'ráiteas gnó' being translated respectively as 'business premises' and 'statement of affairs' in Tearmaí Dlí. Dinneen translates 'gnó' as 'business, affair, commerce, occupation, duty, concern' – see the commentary on Article 8.3. The earliest example of 'gnó' cited in DIL comes from the twelfth-century manuscript, the Book of Leinster, where we find the following lines in a poem on Binbane, Co. Donegal: 'Co rothóed in bó-sin / dá lóeg ar in lúth-sin, / gnó garb, nárbu gnáth-sin' ('That cow dropped two calves by reason of her haste [a sore business, and a strange one]' – see Edward Gwynn, The Metrical Dindsheanas, Part iv, 1924, pp. 170-71).

'Any monument which in the opinion of the Land Commission is of archaeological interest' is translated as 'aon chomhartha cuimhne go mbeadh suim ag ársadóirí ann dar le Coimisiún na Talmhan' in s47 of the Land Act, 1923. In s46(7) of the same Act, 'on the application of the Land Commission or any person interested' is translated as 'ar iarratas a theacht o Choimisiún na Talmhan no o éinne le n-a mbaineann an scéal', with 'that it is to the advantage of the persons interested in the holding' translated as 'go raghadh sé chun tairbhe do sna daoine go bhfuil cál acu chun an ghabháiltais'. 'And shall be held by the said Council for the same estate, interest and purposes ... for which such property should be held by law' is translated as 'agus sealbhóidh an Chomhairle sin an mhaoin sin i gcóir an estáit, an leasa agus na gcrícheanna gcéanna san ... gur ina gcóir ... ba chóir an mhaoin sin do shealbhú' in s7(2)(a) of the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. 'Any valid private interest therein' is translated as 'aon cheart dlísteanaigh príobháideach na leith' in Article 11 of the 1922 Constitution.

Turning to modern Acts, 'Material interests in offshore funds' is translated as 'Leasanna ábhartha i gcistí eischósta' in the Margin Title of s65 of the Finance Act, 1990. In s6(2)(i) of the Radio and Television Act, 1988, we find the following:

... the extent to which the service proposed ... serves recognisably local communities and is supported by the various interests in the Community, or ... serves communities of interest ... a mhéid a dhéanann an tseirbhís bheartaithe ... freastal ar phobail is inaitheanta mar phobail áitiúla agus a mhéid atá tacaíocht aici ó na leasanna éagsúla sa phobal, nó ... freastal ar phobail chomhleasa.

Finally, 'furthering by all legitimate means the interests of the said profession and of its members' is translated as 'leasanna na gairme sin agus a comhaltá a chur chun cinn ar gach bealach cóir' in s3(a) of the Institution of Civil Engineers of Ireland (Charter Amendment) Act, 1969.

Note that in Téarmaí Dlí 'interest (i.e. beneficial, etc.)' is translated as 'leas'.

seirbhísí 'Obair agus seirbhísí a rinneadh' is translated as 'work done and services rendered' in Téarmaí Dlí, 'seirbhís' being translated principally as 'service' in Ó Dónaill and Dinneen. 'Seirbis' is an English or Romance loanword, according to DIL, where this headword is translated principally as 'the service (of God, of a ruler)', with secondary senses of 'service, ministration, piece of work; profit, advantage' and 'a church service'.

'Seirbhísí soláthair' translates 'supply services' in the Margin Title of s4 of the Appropriation Act, 1929, for example. 'For the provision of sound broadcasting services and a television programme service additional to the services provided by Radio Telefís Éireann' is translated as 'chun seirbhísí craolacháin fuaime agus seirbhís clár teilifíse de bhreis ar na seirbhísí a sholáthraíonn Radio Telefís Éireann a chur ar fáil' in the Long Title of the Radio and Television Act, 1988.

faoi seach See the commentary on Article 22.1.2°. In the translation below, Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that 'faoi seach'/'respectively' has no meaning in this position in the sentence, as against 'faoi seach' in the official Irish text above, and recommends substituting 'faoi seach' for 'eadhón' below.

ar an gcuma See the commentary on Article 18.4.1°iii and note that we find 'ar an modh a shocrófar le dlí' in the previous section.

rollaí See the commentary on Article 18.4.1°iii.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Professional interests' is expressed as 'gairmeacha' ('professions') in the Irish text, 'interests' being expressed by 'gnóthaí' ('affairs') earlier in this subsection.
- 2 'Defined' is expressed as 'léiriú' in the Irish text, the meaning of which extends over the range 'clarify-illustrate-set out-arrange'.
- 3 'National Language' is expressed simply as 'An Ghaeilge' ('The Irish Language') in the Irish text, even though Article 8 commences as follows: 'The Irish language as the national language ...', 'Ós í an Ghaeilge an teanga náisiúnta'. In the Irish text, the word 'saíocht' alone is qualified by 'Náisiúnta' ('National'), though syntactically 'National' in the English text could be taken as qualifying all subsequent nouns. The Irish 'saíocht' (see Old Irish 'suíthe'), 'learning, learned/intellectual tradition, intellectual mastery', has a more exclusive meaning than 'culture', and its use, according to Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú, shows that the Irish drafters took 'culture' to mean restrictively 'high culture', as in Article 1; 'cultúr' might have been used for 'culture' more generally.
- 4 'Art' is expressed by a term ('ealaíonacht') which means 'artistry', presumably here meant to express 'practising at a profession'; the primary sense 'art' is rendered by 'ealain' in contemporary Irish.

Note that Article 33 of the 1922 Constitution contains the following:

Before each election of members of Seanad Éireann a panel shall be formed consisting of .... The method of proposal and selection for nomination shall be decided by Dáil Éireann and Seanad Éireann respectively, with special reference to the necessity for arranging for the representation of important interests and institutions in the country .... *Roimh gach toghchán do bhaill Sheanad Éireann déanfar ainm-liost do chur le chéile 'na mbeidh .... ### Commentary

Ealaíonacht Cited as a variant of 'ealaíontacht' in Ó Dónaill, which headword is translated as (1) 'artistry, skilfulness' and (2) 'artfulness, trickery'. Dinneen translates 'ealadhantacht' as 'ingenuity, quickness, skill, dexterity, artistic beauty'. 'Ealaíonacht' is an abstract noun based on the earlier 'elada'/'elatha', which renders Latin 'ars', and is translated principally as 'art, science, acquired craft or skill (in general sense or of a specific branch)' in DIL, where the following is cited from the Annals of Ulster, s.a. 1498: 'lan do ecna in gach uile eladhain eter dlighedh 7 diaghacht, isigecht 7 ellsaime 7 ealadhain Gaeidhligi air chena' ('full of knowledge in every science including law, divinity, physic, philosophy and the art of Gaelic [composition] in general').

This word does not appear to be cited from the earlier Irish sources, where 'dán' expresses 'art', with 'fiss', 'sous' and 'airchetul' as synonyms, along with 'elada'. DIL translates 'dán' as I 'a gift, bestowal, endowment, present' ('dán' translates Latin 'donum', 'donatio'); II 'skill in applying the principles of a special science; science; skill applied to the material or subject-matter of art; artistic faculty, art; especially the poetic faculty; the art of poetry' ('dán' also translates Latin 'ars'); III 'a poem, song, verse, rhyme' and IV 'an industrial pursuit of a skilled nature; a craft, trade, business, office, calling, profession' (it translates Latin 'professio'). DIL cites the following from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles: 'ropsa airchinnech isin dán sin' ('I have been a leader in that science'). The general admiration for art or skill in early Irish society is expressed in the maxim 'ferr dán orbu' ('an art is better than an inheritance of land') in an early Irish wisdom-text, Senbríathra Fithail (see Fergus Kelly, op. cit., p. 3). 'Ferr fer a chiniud' ('a man is better than his birth') is the maxim quoted in an early Irish law-tract which states that elevation of rank may result from man's art ('dán') or husbandry or God-given talent (ibid, p. 12).

'For the salaries ... of the Institutions of Science and Art, Dublin' is translated as 'Chun tuarastail ... na bhFúndúireachtaí Eoluíochta agus Ealadhan i mBaile Átha Cliath' in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922. 'Ealadhantacht' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'art' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 1926, p. 317. 'Ealaín' translates 'art' in modern Acts, with 'and education in art or design' being translated as 'mar aon le hoideachas in ealaín nó i ndearadh' in s3(1) of the National Council for Educational Awards Act, 1979, for example. The genitive plural is found in 'Forais Eolaíochta agus Ealaíon', translating 'Institutions of Science and Art', in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1981, the 'Minister for Arts, Heritage, Gaeltacht and the Islands', for example, being cited in Irish as 'an tAire Ealaíon, Oidhreacht, Gaeltachta agus Oileán'.

gairmeacha The plural of 'gairm', which has the secondary sense of 'profession, occupation' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'do ghairm bheatha, one's mission in life' and 'do ghairm a chleachtadh, to follow one's trade', 'call' being the principal and literal meaning of this verbal noun of 'gair'. Dinneen includes 'calling, avocation or condition of life, vocation' in his entry s.v. 'gairm', DIL also including 'a calling, employment, profession' as one of the later senses of 'gairm', with only four examples of this sense cited therein, 'act of calling or summoning; a call, summons, cry' being the principal sense. Note that 'garma' is the form in the original text.

'For business trade or professional purposes' is translated as 'chun crícheanna gnótha, céirde no gairme' in s17(1) of the Increase in Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1923. 'Gairmiúil' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'professional' in translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health. Looking at modern Acts, 'Payments in respect of professional services' is translated as 'íocaíochtaí i leith seirbhísí gairmiúla' in the Margin Title of s26 of the Finance Act, 1990, for example. 'Ciontach i mí-iompar gairmiúil' translates 'guilty of professional misconduct' in s45(5)(a) of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978.

See the commentary on 'gnóthaí' above regarding 'interests'.

a léireofar le dlí See the commentary on Article 15.3.2°. 'Léirigh' is translated as (1) 'make clear, explain, illustrate' in Ó Donaill, citing 'caint a léiriú, to elucidate speech', and (2) 'set in order, arrange', citing 'do chuid oibre, do ghnóthaí, a léiriú, to order one's work, affairs, properly'. Dinneen translates 'léirighim' as 'I give rise to, set, arrange; explain, make clear; study, attend to, tend; produce (as a play, recent)', citing 'léirigh sé amach fiche cúis, he produced twenty reasons'. DIL translates 'léirigid(ir)' as 'is diligent about, tends, attends to; makes clear (?)', with no examples being cited from the earlier sources, this verb being based on 'léir', of which we have examples in the sense of 'assiduous, earnest, careful, zealous' in the Glosses of the ninth century, this adjective later having the sense of 'visible, perceptible'.

Note that 'and such professional interests as may be defined by law' is translated as 'agus pé gairmeanna míneofar le dlí' in s4(1) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1937. 'As defined by section 95' is translated as 'mar a mhínítear le halt 95' in s121 of the Finance Act, 1990. 'In ... a capacity which constitutes such person as a skilled worker as defined by such order' is translated as 'i gcáil inar oibrí oilte mar a mhínítear leis an ordú sin an duine sin' in s233(1)(b) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981.

an tSaíocht Náisiúnta See the commentary on Article 1. Note that 'Náisiúnta' has an initial lower-case 'n' in the original text.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'And allied interests' is expressed as 'maille le gnóthaí a bhaineas léi' ('along with affairs that are related to it') in the Irish text, the same term being used here for 'interests' as in Article 18.7.1<sup>o</sup> rather than the term expressing 'professional interest' in the previous paragraph, 'maille le' ('together with') expressing 'and'.
- 2 'Fisheries' is expressed as a singular 'iascaireacht' ('occupation of fishing') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Comheagraithe', the term expressing 'organised' in the Irish text, literally means 'co-organised', but the prefix 'comh-' here may, according to Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú, be taken to have the force of 'fully, formally'; 'whether organised or unorganised' is expressed as 'cibé comheagraithe é nó nach ea' ('whether it is organised or not').

Commentary

Talmhaíocht This headword is simply translated as 'agriculture' in Ó Dónaill, 'gabhaltas talmhaíochta' being translated as 'agricultural holding' in Téarmaí Dlí. Dinneen translates 'talmhaidheacht' as 'the tilling of land; also earthiness, steadiness, stoutness' (Ó Dónaill gives these other senses under a second headword 'talmhaíocht'). 'Earthiness, solidity, firmness' are the only senses of 'talmaidecht' cited in DIL (incidentally, a second headword 'talmaidecht' in DIL is translated as 'epilepsy' ['titimeas' and 'galar Póil' in Modern Irish]). 'Talmaidecht' is based on 'talmaide' (translated as 'terrestrial, of the world', 'earthy' and 'earthy, made of earth' in DIL), which in turn is based on 'talam', examples of which in the general sense of 'earth' are cited from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses onwards in DIL.

'Expenses of the Ministry of Agriculture' is translated as 'costais na hAireachta um Thalmhuíocht' in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922. 'Agricultural workers' is translated as 'lucht oibre talmhan' in the Dáil Order Paper, 8/4/24. 'The Department of Agriculture and Food' is currently styled 'An Roinn Talmhaíochta agus Bia' in Irish.

Iascaireacht This headword is translated as '(trade, method, of) fishing; fishery' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'iascach', verbal noun of 'iasc', as 'fishing; fishery'. 'Ceart iascaigh' is translated as 'fishery (i.e. right of)' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Iascaireacht' is translated as 'fishing, the trade of fisherman' in Dinneen, who includes 'act or sport of fishing; begging, ransacking' s.v. 'iascach'. DIL gives examples of 'iascaireacht' ('fishing, act of fishing') from the Leabhar Breac ('oc iascairecht') – compiled in 1411 or earlier – onwards, giving examples of 'iascach' in the sense of 'fishing, act of fishing' from the Tripartite Life of Patrick ('ic iascuch') – composed at the end of the ninth or beginning of the tenth century – onwards. 'Íascaireacht' is based on 'iascaire' ('fisherman') which in turn, like 'iascach', is based on 'iasc' ('fish'), an example of which is cited in DIL from the ninth-century St Gall Glosses on Priscian.

'Sporting Rights and Fisheries' is translated as 'Cearta Spóirt agus Iascaigh' in s11(3)(a) of the Land Act, 1923. 'Pe'ca áit iascaigh phuiblí no áit iascaigh phriobháidigh é' translates 'whether the same be a public or a private fishery' in s6 of the Fisheries Act, 1924, which Act is cited in Irish as 'an tAcht Iascaigh, 1924', the Long Title reading as follows:

An Act to amend the law relating to fisheries by prescribing new penalties for certain offences in relation to salmon, trout, and other fisheries, and for other purposes relating to the preservation of the fisheries of Saorstát Éireann. Acht chun an dlí a bhaineas le hiascach do leasú tré phionóisí nua do leaga amach i gcóir ciontaí áirithe a bhaineas le hiascach bradán, breac, agus iascach eile, agus chun crícheanna eile a bhaineas le hiascach Shaorstáit Éireann do chosaint.

'The Fisheries (Commissions) Act, 1997' is cited in Irish as 'an tAcht Iascaigh (Coimisiúin), 1997', for example. 'Iascaireacht' translates 'fishing' in the Acts – see s18(1) of the Finance Act, 1978, for example, where "fishery society" means a society ... that all ... of the society's members are persons who are mainly engaged in ... fishing' is translated as 'ciallaíonn "cumann iascaigh" cumann ... gur daoine atá ag gabháil go príomha d'iascaireacht ... comhaltaí uile an chumainn'.

Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú comments that 'iascaireacht' = occupation, while 'iascach' = activity.

Oibreachas This headword is translated as 'labour matters' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'an Chúirt Oibreachais, the Labour Court'. Dinneen does not appear to have this headword, which is a derivative of 'obair'.

'Trade, commerce, industry, and labour' is translated as 'trádáil, tráchtáil, tionnsca, agus oibreachas' in s1(viii) of the Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1924, 'Aire Oibreachais' being cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'Minister of Labour' and 'bureau oibreachais' translating 'labour exchange' (11/3/27). 'And for the labour of military or other prisoners' is translated as 'agus i dtaobh obair na bpríosúnach míleata no na bpríosúnach eile' in s137(2) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. 'Hired to perform only subordinate duties or ordinary labour' is translated as 'a tógtar in aimsir chun fo-dhualgaisí amháin do chó-líona no chun gnáth-shaothar do dhéanamh' in s4 of the Schedule to the Civil Service Regulation Act, 1923.

'The Minister for Labour' is styled 'an tAire Saothair' in s146(1)(b)(xii) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981. 'The Labour Court' is styled 'An Chúirt Oibreachais' in Part II of the First Schedule to the Ombudsman Act, 1980, where 'the Secretariat to the Employer-Labour Conference' is translated as 'An Rúnaíocht don Chomhdháil Fostóirí/Saothraithe'. 'The International Labour Organisation' is cited in Irish as 'An Eagraíocht Oibreachais Idirnáisiúnta' in s16(a) of the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act, 1967, and as 'An Eagraíocht Idirnáisiúnta Saothair' in Maidir le do Littir (Séamas Daltún, 1970, p. 77). Finally, 'the Labour Party' is styled 'Páirtí an Lucht Oibre' in Irish.

gnóthaí a bhaineas léi See the commentary above on 'gnóthaí'. Regarding the old relative in '-eas' in 'a bhaineas léi', see the commentary on Article 6.1, 'a bhaineann léi' being the form of this phrase in the Acts today, where it generally translates 'related'. 'In agricultural and allied sciences' is translated as 'san eolaíocht talmhaíochta agus in eolaíochtaí gaolmhara' in s13(1)(b) of the National Agricultural Advisory, Education and Research Authority Act, 1977. 'By members of professions allied to the medical

comheagraithe This compound of the prefix 'comh-' (translated principally as 'mutual, joint, common; co-' in Ó Dónaill) and the participle of 'eagraigh' ('arrange, organize'), does not appear as a headword in Ó Dónaill. 'Cóimheagartha' is translated as 'arranged, set with (de)' in Dinneen, who translates 'cóimheagar' as 'arrangement, order, array; ornament'. Ó Dónaill translates 'comheagar' as 'co-ordination', citing 'comheagar a chur ar rudaí, to co-ordinate things'. DIL cites two examples of 'comecraid' from the early Middle Irish translation of the Thebaid of Statius, Togail na Tebe (the form 'rocomecrad', translated as 'was arranged' by the editor, appearing twice within twelve lines of each other in this text, the second citation being 'rocomecrad ... teni'), and two examples of 'ecortha'/'ecairthe' in the sense of 'arranged, ranked' (the first being 'catha eagartha' from the Battle of Magh Léana). 'Ecor'/'ecar', verbal noun of 'in-cuirethar', is translated as I 'arranging, disposing, setting in order; arrangement, array (of persons, places, things)' and II 'inlaying, adorning; inlaid ornament, decoration' in DIL. In early Irish law, 'ecor' had the sense of 'a putting in, especially of putting or bringing into a territory the symbols of taking possession, making entry', according to DIL. Note that Ó Dónaill translates 'eagraigh' as 'arrange, organize', citing 'córas eagraithe, organized system'. De Bhaldraithe translates 'I organize' as 'eagraim', with 'eagrai' translating 'organizer'. See further the commentary on Article 28.12.

'Co-ghléas' translates 'organize' in the early Acts. In s4(1)(b) of the Public Safety Act, 1927, for example, 'fórsa armtha do chó-ghléasa no do chimeád ar bun' translates 'to organize or maintain an armed force'. 'Through the organizations established by or under, and in accord with, this Constitution' is translated as 'trí sna có-ghléasanna a bunófar do réir an Bhun-reachta so no fé no leis' in Article 2 of the 1922 Constitution. Looking at modern Acts, "Fire brigade" means an organised body of persons' is translated as 'ciallaíonn "briogáid dóiteáin" comhlacht eagraithe daoine' in s2 of the Fire Services Act, 1981. 'As a party organised to contest an Assembly election' is translated as 'mar pháirtí atá eagraithe chun bheith san iomaidh i dtoghchán Tionóil' in s8(1) of the European Assembly Elections Act, 1977.

TÉACS GAEILGE

- iv Tionscal is Tráchtáil ar a n-áirítear baincfeireacht, airgeadas, cuntasaiocht, innealtóireacht agus foirgníocht;
- v Riarachán Poiblí agus seirbhísí comhdhaonnacha, agus obair chomhdhaonnach dheonach a áireamh.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

- iv Industry and Commerce including banking, finance, accountancy, engineering and building-construction;

ENGLISH TEXT

- iv Industry and Commerce, including banking, finance, accountancy, engineering and architecture;
- v Public Administration and social services, including voluntary social activities.

Divergences between the official versions

- 1 'Architecture' is expressed in the Irish text as 'foirgníocht', which Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú recommends translating as 'art of building'.
- 2 'Activities' is expressed as 'obair' ('work') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Voluntary' is expressed by 'deonach' in the Irish text, the term which expresses 'voluntary' in general usage; 'voluntary' is translated as 'saorálach' in Téarmaí Dlí, however, and is so translated in the Acts.
- 4 'Including' is expressed as 'ar a n-áirítear' in paragraph iv and as 'agus ... a áireamh' in paragraph v.
- 5 'Social' is expressed by the term 'comhdhaonnach' in the Irish text, as in other Articles; 'sóisialach' or 'sóisialta' are the terms currently used in Irish to express 'social'.
- 6 A comma follows 'Commerce' in the English text, which links 'Industry and Commerce' together, and ensures that it is this unit which is qualified by the sub-clause; there is no corresponding 'comma' in the Irish text.

Commentary

foirgníocht 'Conradh foirgníochta', 'cumann foirgníochta' and 'léas foirgníochta' are translated respectively as 'building contract', 'building society' and 'building lease' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Foirgníocht' is translated as '(art, trade, of) building' in Ó Dónaill. It does not appear to be given as a headword in Dinneen nor in DIL, the latter source, however, providing examples of 'fornem'/'fornam' (Modern Irish 'foirgneamh'), translated as 'the act of building, hence a building, structure', from the twelfth-century Book of Leinster onwards, translating '(mur) fear ... dheunta foirgnidh' (in O'Molloys Lucerna Fidelium, 1676) as 'an architect'. See further the introductory essay to this study on this term.

In contemporary Irish, the regular expression of 'architect', 'architecture' are the long-established 'aittire', 'aitlireacht', and these words also appear in modern legislation. In s1 of the Copyright (Amendment) Act, 1987, 'other than such a work relating to a work of architecture' is translated as 'seachas saothar den sórt sin a bhaineann le saothar ailtireachta'. 'A committee to advise on painting, sculpture and architecture' is translated as 'coiste a thabharfaidh comhairle maidir le péintéireacht, snoíodóireacht agus ailtireacht' in s11(1)(a) of the Arts Act, 1973, with 'péintéireacht, snoíodóireacht, ailtireacht' translating that same trio in s1 of the Arts Act, 1951. In s22(3) of the National Monuments Act, 1930, 'having practical experience or special knowledge of or interest in architecture' is translated as 'taithí agus cleachta no eolas speisialta do bheith aige ar ailtireacht'. The Margin Title of s162 of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, 'Restriction on remedies in the case of architecture', is translated as 'Srian le leighseanna i gcás ailtireachta'.

Note, finally, that 'foirgníocht' of the Constitution is followed in s4 of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1937, and in s3(1) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1947.

dheonach 'Deonach' is translated as 'voluntary; agreeable, willing' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'gníomh deonach, voluntary act'. Dinneen adds 'content' to Ó Dónaill's translations above, citing 'let thoil dheonaigh, of your free will'. The Gaelic abridgment of the book of Ser Marco Polo provides the only example of 'deónach' cited in DIL, where it is translated as 'willing, voluntary' ('umla dheonach'). This adjective is based on 'deóin', translated as 'will, pleasure, consent' in DIL, where 'd'á ndeóin is fear an aicme' ('the tribe is best when acting of their own will') is cited from O'Donovan's Genealogies, Tribes and Customs of Hy-Fiachrach (1844).

'Persons from the voluntary sector supporting travelling people' is translated as 'daoine ón earnáil dheonach i dtacaíocht leis an lucht siúil' in the Programme for a Partnership Government, 1993-97, p. 36, 'an earnáil dheonach' being the established term for 'voluntary sector'. 'Voluntary' is translated as 'saorálach' in Téarmaí Dlí, however, where 'voluntary conveyance', 'voluntary payment' and 'voluntary settlement' are translated respectively as 'tíolacas saorálach', 'íocaíocht shaorálach' and 'socraíocht shaorálach'. 'Voluntary liquidation' and 'voluntary winding up', however, are translated respectively as 'leachtú toilteanach' and 'foirceannadh toilteanach', while 'voluntary waste' is translated as 'diomailt ghníomhach'. 'Saorálach' is translated as 'voluntary', following the abbreviation for 'Jurisprudence', in Ó Dónaill, with the secondary sense of 'free, unconstrained'. This word does not appear as a headword in Dinneen, but Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú points out that it is listed among compounds of 'saor-' in the form 'saor-dhálach'.

'Persons employed by voluntary organisations which are providing district nursing services' is translated as 'daoine ar fostú ag eagrais shaorálacha a sholáthraíonn seirbhísí altránais áitiúla' in s7(1)(j) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example, with 'daoine ar fostú in ospidéal shaorálacha' translating 'persons employed in voluntary hospitals' in s7(1)(i). 'Bainisti ospidéal saorálacha' translates 'the management of voluntary hospitals' in s41(c) of the Health Act, 1953. 'A body which represents or promotes the formation of co-operative groups or voluntary associations which have as an object the provision of houses' is translated as 'comhlacht a dhéanann ionadaíocht do chomhar-ghrúpaí nó do chomhlachais shaorálacha ar cuspóir dóibh títhe a sholáthar nó a thionscnaíonn foirmiú na ngrúpaí nó na gcomhlachas sin' in s3(2) of the Housing (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1979.

While 'voluntary contributions' is translated as 'ranníocaí saorálacha' in s2(3) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example, 'make a contribution towards the maintenance of any Trained Nurse in the District who is maintained from voluntary contributions' is translated as 'féadfaid cabhrú chun aon Bhanaltra Thréineálta sa Cheanntar do chimeád suas, Banaltra a cimeádar suas le bronntanaisí féile' in s87 of the 'Tirconaill County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. While 'authorise any voluntary aid society' is translated as 'a údarú d'aon chumann um chabhair dheontach' in s3 of the Red Cross Act, 1938, in Article 26 of the First Schedule to the Geneva Conventions Act, 1962, 'The staff ... of other voluntary aid societies' is translated as 'an fhoireann le cumainn chabhrach saorálaí eile'. Note, finally, that 'whether compulsory or voluntary' is translated as 'go héigeanta no go toilteanach' in s1(2)(b) of the Companies (Re-Construction of Records) Act, 1924, with 'obair in aisce' being cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'voluntary work' in a Report of the Public Accounts Committee, 1928.

cuntasaíocht This abstract noun is given as a variant of the headword 'cuntasóireacht' in Ó Dónaill, 'cuntasóireacht' being translated as (1) 'accountancy' and (2) 'book-keeping'. Dinneen does not appear to have either form as a headword, translating 'cunntasóir' as 'an accountant', followed by the abbreviation for 'recent'. 'Cuntas', on which 'cuntasaíocht'/'cuntasóir(eacht)' are based, comes from Anglo-Norman 'cuntes', and is translated as '(ac)count, reckoning, computation' in DIL, where 'ar chionn an chonntais', from a miscellaneous collection of Classical Irish poetry, is translated as 'when all is said and done' – Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú translates that phrase as 'the bottom line'!

'A recognised qualification in accountancy' is translated as 'cáilíocht aitheanta i gcuntasaíocht' in s17(3)(a) of the Central Bank Act, 1971, for example, with 'in accordance with good accountancy practice' being translated as 'de réir dea-chleachtais chuntasaíochta' in s12(f) of the Sixth Schedule to the Companies Act, 1963. In s11 of the 'Leitrim County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'after a qualifying examination at which Irish and Accountancy shall be obligatory subjects' is translated as 'tar éis scrúdú tástála do sheasamh ina mbeidh Gaedhilg agus Cúntasóireacht ina n-abhair oblagáideacha'. 'Cuntasaíocht' translates 'accountancy' in the Proceedings of Seanad Éireann, 28/11/23, though this generally translates 'accounting' in the early Acts, with 'i gcóir na tréimhse cuntasaíochta san' translating 'for such accounting period' in s35(7) of the Finance Act, 1924, for example.

Tionscal This headword is translated as 'industry' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'tionscal agus tráchtáil, industry and commerce'. 'Cumann tionscail agus coigiltis' and 'galar tionscail' are translated respectively in Téarmaí Dlí as 'industrial and provident society' and 'industrial disease'. 'Tionscail' is translated as 'initiation, plan, design, project, instruction, industry, management, initiative' in Dinneen, who cites 'cailleach gan tionnscail, an old woman without an idea'. The Old Irish verb 'do-inscanna' glosses Latin 'incipere' in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, and is translated as (a) 'begins', (b) 'attempts, devises, undertakes' in DIL, 'tinnscetal'/'tinnscna' being the verbal noun of this verb.

'The Minister for Industry and Commerce' is styled 'an tAire Tionscail agus Tráchtála' in s10(a)(ii) of the Finance Act, 1990, for example. 'It is engaged in an industrial activity (including any activity ancillary to industry)' is translated as 'go bhfuil sí ag gabháil do ghníomhaíocht tionscail (lena n-áirítear aon ghníomhaíocht atá coimhdeach do thionscal)' in s4(b)(i) of the Fóir Teoranta Act, 1972. The 'Safety in Industry Act, 1980' is cited in Irish as 'an tAcht um Shábháilteacht i dTionscal, 1980', with 'in respect of housing for employees in industry in the counties of Limerick, Clare ...' being translated as 'maidir le tithíocht d'fhostaithe i dtionscal i gContaetha Luimnigh, an Chláir' in s4(1) of the Shannon Free Airport Development Company Limited (Amendment) Act, 1970. Finally, 'of employers engaged in industry or commerce' is translated as 'd'fhostóirí bheidh ag gabháil do thionscal no do thráchtáil' in s16(3)(c) of the Local Authorities (Combined Purchasing) Act, 1939.

Looking at early official translations, along with 'tiuscal' (= 'tionscal'), there also occurred 'gnó', 'ceardas' and 'ceardasaíocht'. 'The Ministry of Industry and Commerce' is styled '(den) Aireacht um Thiúscal agus Thráchtáil' in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922, with the 'Industrial and Commercial Property Registration Office' being styled 'Oifig Chláirathachta Maoine Tionscail agus Tráchtála' in the Dáil Order Paper, 1928, p. 103. 'Ceardas' translates 'industry' in s2(h) of the Statistics Act, 1926, 'commerce' being translated as 'tráchtáil' in s2(i). 'With a view to aiding the Dairying Industry in Ireland' is translated as 'd'fhonn cabhrú le Gnó na Déiríochta in Éirinn' in the First Schedule to the Creamery Act, 1928. 'Ceardasaíocht' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms from a Report of the Public Accounts Committee, 1927. Finally, 'Boys on reaching the age of nine years may either be Boarded-out or placed in an Industrial School' is translated as 'Ar aois naoi mbliain do bheith slán acu féadfar garsúin do chur ar altranas no i Scoil Saothair' in s7 of the 'Galway County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923.

Tráchtáil This headword is translated as '(act of) tracking; trade, commerce' in Ó Dónaill, 'dlí tráchtála' being translated as 'mercantile law' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Tráchtáil' is translated as 'trading, carrying cargoes, freighting (Aran), a negotiation, a trade' in Dinneen, who cites 'tráchtáil cheannaidheachta, commerce, trading'. DIL cites 'trácht ceannaidheachta' from Keating's seventeenth-century History of Ireland s.v. 'trácht', this headword being translated as 'trade, intercourse; movement, travelling', with Keating's work being the first source cited in DIL of this sense of 'trácht'. According to DIL this may be a development of 'trácht' in the sense of 'discourse, account, mentioned'. 'Trácht' today in this sense is the Modern Irish form of 'tráchtad', verbal noun of 'tráchtaid', which comes from Latin 'tractare', the verbal noun being translated as 'act of discussing; commentary, interpretation' in DIL, where examples are cited from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalter onwards.

For citations of 'tráchtáil' from the Acts, see above s.v. 'tionscal'. 'The Department of Industry and Commerce' is styled 'An Roinn Tionscail agus Tráchtála' in s1(vii) of the Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1924. 'A patentee who has commercially worked his invention in Saorstát Éireann' is translated as 'paitinní d'oibrigh a chumadóireacht ar nós tráchtála i Saorstát Éireann' in s56(2) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927. 'Trade, commerce, domestic economy' is translated as 'trádáil, ceannaíocht, tigheas' in s17(2) of the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923.

ar a n-áirítear ... a áireamh 'Áirigh', verbal noun 'áireamh', is translated as 'count, reckon' in Ó Dónaill – see the commentary on Articles 15.11.1° and 40.1. 'Áirem' is the verbal noun of 'ad-rími', translated as 'counts, numbers, computes' in DIL, where examples of the present passive, 'adrimther' (sg.) and 'adrimter' (pl.) – forerunners of the Modern Irish passive 'áirítear' – are cited from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms. See the commentary on Article 10.1 regarding 'including' in the Acts. Note that 'ar a n-áirítear' is changed to 'le n-a n-áirmhítear' in s4(1) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1937, where 'industry and commerce, including banking, finance, accountancy, engineering, and architecture' is translated as 'tionscal agus tráchtáil, le n-a n-áirmhítear bancaeracht, airgeadas, cuntasaíocht, innealltóireacht agus foirgníocht', following Article 18.7.1° of the Constitution in every other respect.

baincéireacht 'Cuideachta bhaincéireachta' is translated as 'banking company' in Téarmaí Dlí, 'baincéireacht' being translated as '(act of) banking' in Ó Dónaill. This does not appear to be given as a headword in Dinneen, with 'bannc' being translated as 'a bank (for money); a bank of a stream; a bench, a seat; a bank, as of turf', Dinneen citing 'tá airgead sa bhannc aige, he has money in the bank'.

'Banking or money-lending' is translated as 'baincéireacht nó iasachtóireacht airgid' in s10(4)(b) of the Finance Act, 1990, for example. 'To carry on the business of banking in all or any of its departments' is translated as 'gach roinn no aon roinn de ghnó na bancaereachta do dhéanamh' in s5(t) of the Bank of Ireland Act, 1929. 'From any bank or banking company' is translated as 'o aon bhanc no cuideachta bhancaereachta' in s67 of the Dundalk Harbour and Port Act, 1925.

airgeadas This headword is translated as 'finance' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'bliain airgeadais, financial year'. Dinneen does not appear to have this headword, which is based on 'airgead'. 'Airgead' expresses both 'silver' and 'money' in Irish, examples of 'argat' in the sense of the metal 'silver' and as an object of value, currency, being cited in DIL from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Psalms – 'cia duberat argat daitiu arasoirad' ('though they give Thee silver for their deliverance') – with 'argat' specifically in the sense of 'money' being cited from the Annals of Connacht, s.a. 1252 ('monad nua ... do denam ind Erin 7 trecad in arcit do bi inte air-sin', 'new coin ... to be struck in Ireland ... and the old money to be discarded').

'The Finance Act, 1999' is cited in Irish as 'an tAcht Airgeadais, 1999', for example, the 'Department of Finance' being currently styled 'an Roinn Airgeadais'. In Article 52 of the 1922 Constitution, 'the Minister in charge of the Department of Finance' is translated as 'an t-Aire i gceannas Roinn an Airgid'. 'The Department of Finance' is styled 'An Roinn Airgid' in s1(ii) of the Ministers and Secretaries Act, 1924. 'Administration, Legal Proceedings and Finance' is translated as 'Riarachán, Imeachtaí Dlíthiúla agus Airgeadas' in the Heading for Chapter 17 of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981. 'Airgeadas' translates the heading 'Finance' in Part 1 of the Land Act, 1923. Note finally that 'as to the possible serious consequences which financial embarrassment may entail to the present and future prospect of the Civil Servant who allows himself to be placed in that position' is translated as 'maidir leis an díobháil mhóir is baolach a tharlódh fé láthair agus ina dhiaidh seo don Stáit-Sheirbhíseach a lomhálfidh do féin gan bheith ábalta ar a fhiacha d'íoc' in Iris an Phuist, 4/7/28.

innealtóireacht This headword is translated as 'engineering' in Ó Dónaill and in Dinneen, where it is followed by the abbreviation for 'recent', as is 'innealtóir', 'an engineer'. 'Indilteoir' is cited in reference to Christ in the Yellow Book of Lecan (part of which was written c. 1392), in the sense of 'plotter, deceiver', the Jews so referring to Christ when addressing Pilate – see DIL s.v. 'indil(l)teoir'. While 'inneall' is generally used today in the sense of 'machine, engine', Ó Dónaill gives the primary sense of 'arrangement, adjustment, order, array', the earlier form 'indel(l)' being the verbal noun of 'in-lá', translated 'as (a) enters into (a compact), undertakes, arranges, stipulates' and (b) 'casts in, inlays (?)' in DIL, 'indell' having the sense of 'contrivance, device', hence 'snare' and metaphorically 'plot, treachery' among its many senses.

'Radio communications engineering' is translated as 'innealtóireacht chumarsáidí raidió' in s1(5) of the Schedule to the Radio and Television Act, 1988, for example. In s15(4) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'not being a corps of infantry, cavalry, artillery or engineering' is translated as 'nach cór coisithe, marcraidhe, ordonáis, ná innealtóireachta'. 'Engineer' is translated as 'innleoir' in s41(1) of the Land Act, 1923, with 'sás-eolaí' being given without reference in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms. Note, finally and incidentally, that 'scruinge' translates 'engine' (of a train) in s16 of the Appendix to the Criminal Justice (Administration) Act, 1924, with 'Engine Drivers' and 'Enginemen' being translated respectively as 'Tiománaithe Scruinge' and 'Scruingirí' in the Eighth Schedule to the Railways Act, 1924.

Riarachán Poiblí 'Riarachán' is translated as 'administration' in Téarmaí Dlí and in Ó Dónaill. It does not seem to be given as a headword in Dinneen. The verb 'riar' is translated principally as 'administer, manage' in Ó Dónaill, with the verbal noun 'riar' being translated as 'administration, management'. The Modern Irish verb 'riar' ranges in sense from 'administer, manage' to 'serve, obey', 'toil Dé a riar' being translated as 'to serve God's will' in Ó Dónaill. The principal sense of Old Irish 'riar' is 'will, wish', DIL citing examples of this sense from the Würzburg Glosses of the eighth century onwards; the principal sense of the verb 'riaraid' in DIL is 'does the will of, serves', with the secondary senses of 'ministers to, entertains, supplies' and 'subdues'. See further the commentary on Articles 28.4.2° and 44.2.5°.

In s7(4) of the Adaptation of Enactments Act, 1922, 'in relation to public administration' is translated as 'a bhaineann le riarra poiblí'. 'Costaisí riarachta' translates 'expenses of administration' in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922. 'The execution of functions of public administration or public service ... of a local character' is translated as 'feidhmeanna riaracháin phuiblí no seirbhíse poiblí ... de chineál áitiúil d'fheidhmiú' in s7(2)(b) of the Central Bank Act, 1942. Finally, 'for any purpose of public administration' is translated as 'chun aon chriche riaracháin phoiblí' in s34(5)(b) of the Local Government Act, 1991.

obair The Irish legal term for 'work' – see the commentary on Articles 3, 45.4.2° and 41.2.2°. Turning to 'activities', 'administration or social, cultural, educational or community activities' is translated as '(ar) riarachán nó ar ghníomhaíochtaí sóisialta, cultúir, oideachais nó pobail' in s1(5) of the Schedule to the Radio and Television Act, 1988, for example, with "Qualifying shipping activities" means activities carried on by a company in the course of a trade translated as 'ciallaíonn "gníomhaíochtaí loingseoireachta cáilitheacha" gníomhaíochtaí arna seoladh ag cuideachta i gcúrsa trádála' in s42(2) of the Finance Act, 1990. Note that in s23 of the 'Mayo County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'the areas of whose activities and duties shall be defined later' is translated as 'na ndéanfar líomataístí oibre agus dualgais do leaga amach dóibh níos déanaí'. 'Mar gheall ar a ghníomhartha poiliticiúla' translates 'on account of his political activities' in s7(1) of the Local Government Act, 1933. 'Any matter affecting the general economic and other activities and conditions in Saorstát Éireann' is translated as 'éinní a bhaineann le gníomhachtaí agus cor an tsaoil go generalta i gcúrsaí eonomíochta agus eile i Saorstát Éireann' in s2 of the Statistics Act, 1926. Finally, 'Compensation in the event of injury to persons engaged in air-raid precautions activities' is translated as 'Cúiteamh i gcás díobhála do dhaoine ar bheith ag gabháil dóibh do ghníomhachtaí um réamhchúram in aghaidh aer-ruathar' in the Margin Title of s64 of the Air-Raid Precautions Act, 1939.

See the commentary on Article 15.3.1° regarding 'social' in the Acts, and note that 'economic and social progress in the less-developed countries' is translated as 'ascnamh geilleagrach agus ascnamh sóisialta sna tíortha is lú forbairt' in the Schedule to the International Development Association Act, 1960.

Ní cead níos mó ná aon duine dhéag ná, faoi chuimsiú forálacha Airteagail 19 den Bhunreacht seo, níos lú ná cúigear de chomhaltaí Sheanad Éireann a thoghadh as aon rolla áirithe.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is not permitted to elect more than eleven people nor, within the scope/constraint of the provisions of Article 19 of this Constitution, less than five of the members of Seanad Éireann from any particular roll.

ENGLISH TEXT

Not more than eleven and, subject to the provisions of Article 19 hereof, not less than five members of Seanad Éireann shall be elected from any one panel.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Eleven (members)' is expressed as 'aon duine dhéag' ('eleven people') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Not ... shall be' is expressed as 'Ní cead' ('It is not permitted to') in the Irish text, as we have seen in some other Articles.
- 3 'And', in 'Not more than eleven and', is expressed as 'ná' ('nor') in the Irish text.
- 4 'Subject to' is expressed as 'faoi chuimsiú' ('within the scope/constraint of') in the Irish text, as in some other Articles, 'faoi réir' rather than 'faoi chuimsiú' translating 'subject to' in Téarmaí Dlí.
- 5 'Hereof' is expressed as 'den Bhunreacht seo' ('of this Constitution') in the Irish text.
- 6 As 'aon' expresses both 'any' and 'one' in Irish, 'from any one panel' is expressed as 'as aon rolla áirithe' ('from any particular panel/roll') in the Irish text; as we have already seen in this Article, 'rolla' ('roll') expresses 'panel' in the Irish text.
- 7 'Five members of Seanad Éireann' is expressed as 'cúigear de chomhaltaí Sheanad Éireann' ('five of the members of Seanad Éireann') in the Irish text.

áirithe This adjective is translated as 'certain, particular' in Ó Dónaill who cites 'duine áirithe, a certain person', 'áirithe' being the participle of 'áirigh', 'count, reckon'. Dinneen translates 'áirithe (áirighthe, áirmhithe)' as 'definite, certain, special, particular'. DIL gives examples of 'áirithe', in the sense of 'special, particular, a certain', from Leabhar na hUidhre (written in Clonmacnois c. 1100), onwards.

'All or any of the sums due from one person' is translated as 'gach suim nó aon suim a bheidh dlite de aon duine áirithe amháin' in s497(7) of the Income Tax Act, 1967. 'In respect of loss or damage which ... caused on any one occasion to persons or property on land or water by, or by a person in, or an article or person falling from, any one aircraft while in flight' is translated as 'mar gheall ar chailteanas no damáiste thárlóidh ... ar aon ócáid áirithe do dhaoine no do mhaoin ar talamh no ar uisce tré bhíthin aon aer-árthaigh áirithe no tré bhíthin duine inti, no tré bhíthin earra no duine ag tuitim aisti, agus an t-aer-árthach san ag eiteall' in s24(1) of the Air Navigation and Transport Act, 1936. 'The remission in respect of the emoluments from any one source' is translated as 'an logha i leith na ndíolaíochtaí ó aon bhunadh' in s16(2)(b) of the Finance Act, 1976. 'But may not in any one round give more than one vote to any one candidate' is translated in s6 of the Fourth Schedule to the Currency Act, 1927, as 'ach ní fhéadfa sé níos mó ná aon vóta amháin do thabhairt d'aon iarrthóir aonair in aon chúrsa aonair'.

faoi chuimsiú forálacha Airteagail 19 See the commentary on Article 12.5 regarding 'faoi chuimsiú' v. 'faoi réir'. According to the official standard, 'forálacha' would be lenited here, following the compound preposition, remaining in the nominative case rather than in the genitive – as is usual after a compound preposition – and 'Airteagal' would similarly remain in the nominative before the number 19. See s4(1) of the Plant Varieties (Proprietary Rights) Act, 1980, for example, where 'subject to the provisions of this Act' is translated as 'faoi réir fhorálacha an Achta seo'. We have seen in the commentary referred to above that 'subject to the provisions of this Act' was translated as 'fé réir forálacha an Achta so' in s1(2) of the Finance Act, 1923; interestingly, this is cited as 'subject to the provisions of –, fé réir fhorálacha –' in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms.

níos mó ná ... níos lú ná 'Where ... the number of members of which a safety committee is to be comprised of is ... not more than eight and not less than five' is translated as 'Más rud é ... gurb é an líon comhaltaí atá le bheith ar choiste sábháilteachta ... líon nach mó ná ochtar ná nach lú ná cúigear' in s36(1)(c) of the Safety in Industry Act, 1980, for example. 'And shall be not more than four hundred days and not less than three hundred and thirty days after the day on which the appointment is made' is translated as 'agus ní bheidh sé níos sia ná cheithre chéad lá ná níos gaire ná trí chéad agus tríocha lá i ndiaidh an lae a déanfar an ceapachán' in s22(5) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1947. In s91(3)(b) of the Defence Forces (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, 'Not more than seven and not less than three other officers' is translated as 'Seachtar oifigeach eile ar a mhéid no triúr oifigeach eile ar a luíod'.

Ní cead Literally 'it is not permitted', this phrase expressing 'may not'/'shall not' in other Articles also – see the commentary on Article 9.1.3<sup>o</sup>. Again Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that the future below is not entirely satisfactory, but not contrary to the sense.

den Bhunreacht seo Literally 'of this Constitution'. See the commentary on Article 13.6.

Ní cead níos mó ná aon duine dhéag ná, faoi chuimsiú fhorálacha Airteagal 19 den Bhunreacht seo, níos lú ná cúigear de chomhaltaí Sheanad Éireann a thoghadh as aon rolla áirithe.

TÉACS GAELGE

Ní foláir olltoghchán do Sheanad Éireann a bheith ann lá nach déanaí ná nócha lá d'éis lánscore do Dháil Éireann, agus ní foláir do Sheanad Éireann teacht le chéile ar chéad-tionól tar éis an olltoghcháin lá a chinnfidh an tUachtarán chuige ar chomhairle an Taoisigh.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There must be a general election for Seanad Éireann on a day not later than ninety days after the dissolution of Dáil Éireann, and Seanad Éireann must come together for/on (its) first assembly after the general election (on a) day that the President will decide for that on the advice of the Taoiseach.

ENGLISH TEXT

A general election for Seanad Éireann shall take place not later than ninety days after a dissolution of Dáil Éireann, and the first meeting of Seanad Éireann after the general election shall take place on a day to be fixed by the President on the advice of the Taoiseach.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'The first meeting of Seanad Éireann after the general election shall take place' is expressed as 'ní foláir do Sheanad Éireann teacht le chéile ar chéad-tionól tar éis an olltoghcháin' ('Seanad Éireann must come together for (its) first assembly after the general election') in the Irish text.
- 2 The phrase 'shall take place' is repeated in the English text, this being expressed by two different phrases in the Irish text.
- 3 The term expressing 'fix', in 'on a day to be fixed', is expressed by 'cinn' in the Irish text, which verb is translated as 'determine, find' in Téarmaí Dlí.
- 4 'Not later than' is again expressed as 'lá nach déanaí ná' ('[on] a day not later than') in the Irish text.
- 5 'Shall' is again expressed as 'Ní foláir' ('must') in the Irish text, as we have seen in some other Articles.

Commentary

lánscore 'Scor (de)' is translated as 'discontinuance' in Téarmaí Dlí, where 'scoirim de' is translated as 'I discontinue' and 'scoirim as oifig' is translated as 'I retire'. Lánscore is translated as 'dissolution', following the phrase 'of parliament' in brackets, in Ó Dónaill with 'lánscoir' translated as 'I dissolve'. 'Lán-scor' is cited in Dinneen but in the sense of 'a full company'; 'scor' is translated as 'act of unyoking, dismantling, taking asunder, breaking camp, moving, desisting, unfastening ... dissolving, divorcing; separation, freedom, divorce ...'. DIL cites 'scor ina oénaig' ('the [formal] dissolving of the fair'), from a poem on Carmun in the twelfth-century Book of Leinster, as an example of 'scor' in the sense of 'act of desisting from, ceasing, coming to an end', the principal sense being 'act of unyoking, unharnessing (horses)', this sense being cited in DIL from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles – 'stud, herd of horses' is given as one of the secondary senses in DIL. 'D'egla sguir d'ól dá n-aoidhigh' ('for fear the guest should cease drinking') is cited in DIL, from Leabhar Cloinne Aodha Buide, as an example of 'scor' followed by the preposition 'di'.

Note that the preposition 'do' follows 'lánscore' here as against the usual direct object. See the commentary on Articles 13.2.1° and 18.4.3°.

ar chéad-tionól See the commentary on Article 15.11.3° for citations of 'tionól' expressing 'meeting' in the Constitution. 'Tionól neamhdhleathach' is translated as 'unlawful assembly' in Téarmaí Dlí. 'Tionól' is translated as 'gathering, assembly' in Ó Dónaill, this being the verbal noun of 'tionóil', 'collect, gather; convene, assemble; muster' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'cruinniú, dáil, a thionól, to convene a meeting, an assembly'. Dinneen translates 'tionól' as 'act of assembling, mobilising, convening, collecting; an assembly, a gathering ...'. DIL translates 'tionól' principally as 'act of collecting, gathering', citing 'do thinóol aetig impu et biith doib' ('in gathering raiment round them and food for them') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, 'lá an tionóil' being translated as 'the day of Judgment'.

a bheith ann Note that we find 'a dhéanamh' rather than 'a bheith ann' in Article 12.3.3°:

Ní foláir toghchán d'oifig an Uachtaráin a dhéanamh lá nach déanaí ná dáta dheireadh théarma oifige gach Uachtaráin .... An election for the office of President shall be held not later than ... the date of the expiration of the term of office of every President.

d'éis Both 'tar éis' and 'd'éis' are included in the Glossary accompanying An Caighdeán Oifigiúil and both are given in Ó Dónaill – see the commentary on Article 10.4.

a chinnfidh See the commentary on Articles 1 and 12.11.2°.

Standardised Irish text

Ní foláir olltoghchán do Sheanad Éireann a bheith ann lá nach déanaí ná nócha lá d'éis lánscore do Dháil Éireann, agus ní foláir do Sheanad Éireann teacht le chéile ar chéad-tionól tar éis an olltoghcháin lá a chinnfidh an tUachtarán chuige ar chomhairle an Taoisigh.

tionólfar an chéad chruinniú de Sheanad Éireann tar éis an olltoghcháin<sup>3</sup> lá<sup>4</sup> a cheapfaidh an tUachtarán ar chomhairle an Taoisigh.

Variants

TÉACS GAELGE

Leanfaidh gach comhalta de Sheanad Éireann dá oifig, mura n-éaga nó mura n-éirí as oifig nó mura ndícháilítear é, go dtí an lá roimh lá na vótála don olltoghchán is tuisce a bheas ann do Sheanad Éireann d'éis é a thoghadh nó é a ainmniú.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Each member of Seanad Éireann will continue in his office, unless (he) dies or unless (he) gives up office or unless he is disqualified, until the day before the voting day for the first general election that there will be for Seanad Éireann after electing him or after nominating him.

ENGLISH TEXT

Every member of Seanad Éireann shall, unless he previously dies, resigns, or becomes disqualified, continue to hold office until the day before the polling day of the general election for Seanad Éireann next held after his election or nomination.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Previously' has no corresponding adverb in the Irish text.
- 2 'Becomes disqualified' is expressed as 'dícháilítear' ('is disqualified') in the Irish text.
- 3 'Shall continue to hold office' is expressed as 'Leanfaidh ... dá oifig' ('will continue in his office') in the Irish text.
- 4 'Unless he previously dies, resigns, or becomes disqualified' is expressed as 'mura n-éaga nó mura n-éirí as oifig nó mura ndícháilítear é' ('unless (he) dies or unless (he) resigns or unless he is disqualified') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 34 of the 1922 Constitution commences as follows:

In the case of the death, resignation or disqualification of a member of Seanad Éireann .... I gcás ball de Sheanad Éireann d'fháil bháis, do thabhairt suas, no do theacht fé mhí-cháilíocht.

Commentary

Leanfaidh ... dá oifig 'Lean de' is translated as 'continue at; cling, adhere to; follow' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'leanúint de rud, to continue to do something; to cling to something' and 'lean sé dá chúrsa, he kept his course'. Dinneen translates 'lean de' as 'follow on, persevere', while DIL gives examples of 'lenaid de' ('clings to, adheres to, cleaves to, stays with, follows') from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms (where 'ro leldar díb són' glosses Latin 'rotae axibus adhererunt') onwards, the figurative use being cited from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles ('is menand is dind insci riam lenid' ['it is clear that he adheres to the previous utterance', '? continues on with, carries on with']).

See the commentary on Article 12.10.7° for early citations of 'continue to' in the Acts, including 'to continue in office' translated as 'd'fhanúint in oifig' in No. 1 of 1929. 'A person appointed to be a Minister of State shall continue to hold office so long only as he continues to be a member of a House of the Oireachtas' is translated as 'Duine a cheapfar chun bheith ina Aire Stáit ní fhanfaidh sé i seilbh oifige ach fad a fhanfaidh sé ina chomhalta de Theach den Oireachtas' in s1(2) of the Ministers and Secretaries (Amendment) (No. 2) Act, 1977. 'Shall, subject to any vacancies that may occur by reason of death, resignation or disqualification, continue to hold office as such members' is translated as 'leanfaid, faoi réir aon fholúntas a tharlós de dheasca báis, éirí as oifig nó dícháilíte, de bheith i seilbh oifige mar chomhaltá den tsórt sin' in s23(1)(a) of the Social Welfare Act, 1950. 'Each of two ... shall, unless he sooner dies, resigns, or becomes disqualified, continue to hold office' is translated as 'leanfaidh gach duine de bheirt díobh ... de bheith i seilbh oifige, murab éag nó éirí as nó teacht fá dhícháilíocht níos tuisce dó' in s3(2)(a) of the Fourth Schedule to the Transport Act, 1944. Note that 'unless he previously dies or resigns' is translated as 'mura n-éagfaidh sé nó mura n-éireoidh sé as oifig roimhe sin' in s5 of the Broadcasting Authority (Amendment) Act, 1976.

Note, finally, that 'The President shall hold office for seven years' is expressed as 'Beidh an tUachtarán i seilbh oifige go ceann seacht mbliana' in Article 12.3.1°.

mura ndícháilítear é 'Dícháilím' is translated as 'I disqualify' in Téarmaí Dlí, the verb 'dícháiligh' also being translated as 'disqualify' in Ó Dónaill, this verb being composed of the prefix 'dí-' plus 'cáiligh'. 'Cáiligh' is based on 'cáil', which comes from Latin 'qualitas'. See the commentary on Article 16.1.3°.

Looking at the early Acts, 'and is not subject to any of the disqualifications mentioned in this section' is translated as 'agus ná fuil fé aon mhí-cháilíocht dá luaidhtear san alt so' in s57(1) of the Electoral Act, 1923. 'Such person shall ... be disqualified for being elected' is translated as 'beidh an duine sin ... fé mhí-cháilíocht ná leigfidh é thogha' in s62(1) of the Local Government Act, 1925. 'A person shall not be disqualified from being registered, or from voting as a Dáil or Seanad elector' is translated as 'Ní cuirfear éinne as teideal a chlárúithe, ná as teideal chun vótáil mar thoghthóir Dála no Seanad' in s4(1) of the Electoral Act, 1923. 'Any judge or justice who declines or neglects to take the declaration aforesaid in the manner aforesaid shall be disqualified from entering on and shall be deemed to have vacated his office of judge or justice (as the case may be)' is translated as 'Aon bhreitheamh a eiteoidh no a leigfidh i bhfaill an fhaisnéis roimhráite a dhéanamh ar an gcuma roimhráite beidh sé gan teideal chun dul i mbun a oifige mar bhreitheamh agus tuigfar é bheith tar éis an oifig sin d'fhágaint' in s99 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924. Finally, 'disqualified' is translated as 'nea-cháilithe' in Iris Oifigiúil, 1924, p. 1005.

Looking at modern Acts, 'Every Director ... shall, unless he sooner dies, resigns or becomes disqualified, hold office for five years' is translated as 'Beidh gach Stiúrthóir ... i seilbh oifige, mura túsce a gheobhaidh sé bás, a éireoidh sé as nó a thiofadh sé chun bheith dícháilithe' in s14(1)(c) of the Central Bank Act, 1989. 'The term of office of a director of a company ... shall, unless he sooner dies, resigns ... becomes disqualified or is removed from office, terminate' is translated as 'críochnóidh téarma oifige stiúrthóra cuideachta ... mura n-éagfaidh sé, mura n-éireoidh sé as, ... mura dtiofadh sé faoi dhícháiliocht nó mura gcuirfear as oifig é roimhe sin' in s34(3) of the Postal and Telecommunications Services Act, 1983.

lá na vótála See the commentary on Article 16.4.1° regarding 'polling' in the Acts. 'Until the polling day of the next election' is translated as 'go dtí lá vótaíochta an chéad toghchán eile' in s2(b) of the First Schedule to the Údarás na Gaeltachta Act, 1979, for example. 'The polling day' is translated as 'an lá vótaíochta' in s4(2) of the Electoral (University Constituencies) Act, 1936, 'dáta an lae vótaíochta' translating 'the date of the polling day' in s3 of the First Schedule to the Presidential Elections Act, 1937.

is túsce 'Túsce' is translated as 'sooner, rather, first' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'an té is túsce a labhair, the person who spoke first'. Dinneen cites 'an focal is túsce chugham, the first word that strikes me'. 'Toisegu, toisgiu' was the earlier form of the comparative of 'toisech', the following example of which is cited in DIL from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary of the Psalms: 'amal as toisegiu grían indáas laithe ... sic is toisgiu gein maicc hua athair re cech dúil' ('for as the sun is prior to the day, ... so the birth of the Son from the Father is prior to every element'). DIL translates 'toisegu, toisgiu' as (a) 'prior, first in importance' and (b) 'first in point of time, sooner'.

'Until the meeting of the Council next held after receipt of the notice of resignation' is translated as 'go dtí an chéad chruinniú eile den Chomhairle a thionólfar tar éis an fógra faoin éirí-as a fháil' in s4 of the Second Schedule to the Medical Practitioners Act, 1978, for example. 'And after the holding of the election or appointment of members to such Local Authority next held after the passing of this Act', in s14(1) of the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923, is translated as 'agus tar éis na haimsire is túsce 'na ndéanfar, tar éis rithite an Achta so, na baill do thogha no do cheapa chun an Údarás Áitiúla san'.

mura n-éaga See the commentary on Article 12.3.1° regarding 'éag' and the present subjunctive.

mura n-éirí as oifig See the commentary on Article 12.3.1° regarding 'éirigh as oifig' and the present subjunctive.

nó Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú recommends retaining 'nó' before 'mura n-éireoidh sé nó sí as' in the direct translation below.

ENGLISH TEXT

Subject to the foregoing provisions of this Article elections of the elected members of Seanad Éireann shall be regulated by law.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Elections of the elected members of Seanad Éireann' is expressed as 'gach toghchán do na comhaltaí a thoghfar do Sheanad Éireann' ('each election for the members that will be elected to Seanad Éireann') in the Irish text.
- 2 As in various other Articles, 'subject to' is expressed as 'faoi chuimsiú' ('within the scope/constraint of') in the Irish text.
- 3 Again as in various other Articles, 'regulate' is expressed by 'rialú', which in Irish legal documents more usually means 'rule'.
- 4 'By law' is expressed as 'de réir dlí' ('in accordance with law') in the Irish text, again as we have seen in other Articles.

Commentary

sin romhainn Literally 'those before us'. Ó Dónaill cites 'an rann sin romhainn, the foregoing stanza', giving

'preceding' as one of the senses of the preposition 'roimh' ('before'). Dinneen cites 'na ríonn seo rómhainn síos, the following stanzas' and 'na ríonn sin rómhainn thuas, the stanzas quoted above'. DIL cites 'amal ra scribsam remaind' (i.e. as we have written above/previously), from the version of the Táin contained in the twelfth-century Book of Leinster, as an example of the preposition 'ré'/ría' (Modern Irish 'roimh') used with a reflexive personal pronoun in adverbial sense, referring to a previous statement or passage. De Bhaldraithe translates 'foregoing' as 'deireanach, réamhráite, thuasluaite, roimhe seo'.

See the commentary on Article 14.4 for early citations from the Acts. 'Have effect subject to the foregoing provisions of this paragraph' is translated as 'beidh éifeacht leo faoi réir na bhforálacha sin roimhe seo den mhír seo' in s54(10)(h) of the Fisheries Act, 1980, for example, 'Faoi réir na bhforálacha sin roimhe sin den alt seo' translating 'Subject to the foregoing provisions of this section' in s14(6) of the Value-Added Tax (Amendment) Act, 1978.

de réir dlí 'De réir' is translated as 'in accordance with' in Téarmaí Dlí and in Ó Dónaill (who also translates this phrase as 'according to'); however, Ó Dónaill translates 'de réir dlí' simply as 'by law'. Dinneen translates 'do réir (also dréir, léir)' as 'agreeable to, according to, at the disposal of', translating 'do réir nádúire' as 'by nature, according to nature'. DIL cites 'masu du réir spirito atáith' ('if ye are subject to the Spirit') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles s.v. 'riar' ('will, wish'), translating 'do réir' as (a) 'at the will of, obedient to' and (b) 'on the authority of, according to', citing 'do réir léx, chanóine' (i.e. according to civil and canon law) from the Passions and Homilies from the Leabhar Breac (a manuscript compiled in 1411 or earlier). See the commentary on Articles 1 and 14.5.2°.

Faoi chuimsiú See the commentary on Articles 12.5 and 18.7.2°.

a rialófar See the commentary on Article 12.5.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Is le hainmniú ón Taoiseach a líonfar corrgholúntais i líon na gcomhaltáí a ainmnítear do Sheanad Éireann, le réamhchead na ndaoine a ainmneofar.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is by nomination by the Taoiseach that casual vacancies in the number of the members who are nominated to Seanad Éireann will be filled, with the prior permission of the people who will be nominated.

ENGLISH TEXT

Casual vacancies in the number of the nominated members of Seanad Éireann shall be filled by nomination by the Taoiseach with the prior consent of persons so nominated.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Prior consent' is expressed as 'réamhchead' ('prior permission') in the Irish text, as we have seen already in Article 18.3, 'consent' being translated as 'toiliú' in Téarmaí Dlí.
- 2 'Of persons' is expressed as 'na ndaoine' ('of the people') in the Irish text.
- 3 'So nominated' is expressed simply as 'a ainmneofar' ('nominated' [literally, 'who will be nominated']) in the Irish text.
- 4 'Nominated members of Seanad Éireann' is expressed as 'na comhaltáí a ainmnítear do Sheanad Éireann' ('the members who are nominated to/for Seanad Éireann') in the Irish text.

Commentary

corrgholúntais A compound noun, 'corrgholúntas' is composed of the prefix 'corr-', which is translated as 'odd, occasional ...' in Ó Dónaill, who translates 'folúntas' as 'vacancy; emptiness void', not giving 'corrgholúntas' itself as a headword. 'Corrghostaíocht' is translated as 'casual employment' in Téarmaí Dlí. Dinneen cites 'corr-uair, occasionally' and 'corr-dhuine, an occasional person'. DIL cites 'corr-fhocla' ('occasional words') from Donlevy's An Teagas Críosduidhe (1742) as an example of 'corr' in the sense of 'odd' in a compound, 'corr' as a noun being translated as 'projecting part, end, corner, peak' – a special use of 'corr' is as the name of a bird, usually translated as 'heron, crane', and occasionally – and inaccurately, according to Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú – as 'stork'. 'Folúntas' traces its origins to 'folamh', 'empty' – see DIL s.v. 'folam', where examples are cited from the twelfth-century Book of Leinster onwards.

'Líonfar foth-fhollamhntaisí' translates 'Casual vacancies shall be filled' in Article 82(g) of the 1922 Constitution. 'Each member of the said committee shall hold office for five years and be eligible for re-election and casual vacancies shall be filled in accordance with the foregoing principle of selection' is translated as 'Beidh gach ball den choiste sin cúig bliana i seilbh oifige agus beidh sé ion-athtofa agus is le roghanaíocht ar an gcuma san thuas a líonfar foth-fholúntaisí' in s65 of the Courts of Justice Act, 1924. 'Corrgholúntais' translates 'casual vacancies' in the Margin Title of s5 of the First Schedule to the Údarás na Gaeltachta Act, 1979, for example. See also the commentary on Article 16.7.

réamhchead See the commentary on Article 18.3, where we find 'le réamhchead uatha féin' expressing 'with their prior consent', i.e. with the preposition 'ó' following 'réamhchead' as against 'le réamhchead na ndaoine' in the present subsection.

It is in the manner which is provided by law that casual vacancies in the number of the members who are elected to Seanad Éireann will be filled.

ENGLISH TEXT

Casual vacancies in the number of the elected members of Seanad Éireann shall be filled in the manner provided by law.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'The number of the elected members of Seanad Éireann' is expressed as 'líon na gcomhaltaí a thoghtar do Sheanad Éireann' ('the number of the members who are elected to Seanad Éireann') in the Irish text, following the same pattern as we saw in the previous subsection; in the first subsection of this section, however, we find 'the elected members of Seanad Éireann' expressed as 'na comhaltaí a thoghtar do Sheanad Éireann' ('the members that will be elected to Seanad Éireann').

Note that Article 82(g) of the 1922 Constitution reads as follows:

Casual vacancies shall be filled in manner provided by Article 34 of this Constitution. Líonfar foth-fhollamhntaisí i slí a fhorálann Airteagal 34 den Bhunreacht so.

Commentary

ar an gcuma See the commentary on Article 18.4.1<sup>o</sup>. 'To have a dispute determined in any other manner provided by law' is translated as 'díospóid a chur á chinneadh ar aon chaoi eile dá bhforáiltear faoin dlí' in s27(3) of the Central Bank Act, 1989. 'Every insured person shall be insured in the manner provided by this Part against intermittent unemployment' is translated as 'Ní mór gach duine árachaithe bheith faoi árachas in aghaidh breac-dhífhostaíochta sa tslí a fhoráiltear leis an gCuid seo' in s239 of the Social Welfare Act, 1981. 'To limit his liability in the manner provided by law' is translated as 'chun a dhliteanas a theorannú sa tslí a fhoráiltear le dlí' in s46(1)(a)(ii) of the Civil Liability Act, 1961. Finally, 'termination ... of those taxes and duties in the manner provided by law', in the Long Title of the Taxes and Duties (Special Circumstances) Act, 1942, is translated as 'foircennadh ... na gcánacha agus na ndiúitithe sin sa tslí foráiltear le dlí'.

Looking at early Acts regarding 'in the manner', 'The registration officer shall then prepare the register in the manner prescribed in the foregoing rules' is translated as 'Ullamhóidh an t-oifigeach clárachta an clár annsan ar an gcuma atá leagtha amach sna rialacha a théidheann roimhe seo' in s14 of the Second Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923. 'As determined by analysis in manner directed by the Revenue Commissioners' is translated as 'mar a déanfar san amach tré dheighlteánacht a déanfar fé mar a ordóidh na Coimisinéirí Ioncuim' in the First Schedule to the Finance Act, 1925. 'The method and manner ... of packing butter' is translated as 'an módh agus an chaoi chun im do phacáil' in s27(1)(a) of the Dairy Produce Act, 1924. 'Dóigh' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'manner' in translations for the Department of Local Government and Public Health. Finally, 'give public notice in the prescribed manner and form' is translated as 'tabharfa sé fógra puiblí sa tslí agus sa bhfuirm orduithe' in s17(4) of the Cork City Management Act, 1929.

a shocraítear See the commentary on Articles 8.3 and 15.2.2<sup>o</sup> regarding 'socraigh' and 'foráil' expressing 'provide'.

ARTICLE 19 AIRTEAGAL 19

TÉACS GAELGE

Féadfar socrú a dhéanamh le dlí ionas go bhféadfadh aon dream feidhme nó gairme beatha, nó aon chomhlacht nó comhairle feidhme nó gairme beatha, an oiread comhaltaí do Sheanad Éireann a thoghadh go lomidreach agus a chinnfear leis an dlí sin, in ionad an oiread chéanna de na comhaltaí a thoghtar as na comhrollaí d'iarthóirí a chóireofar faoi Airteagal 18 den Bhunreacht seo.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Provision may be made / It will be possible to make provision by law so that any functional or vocational group, or any functional or vocational body or council, would be able to elect directly as many members to Seanad Éireann as will be determined by that law, in place of the same amount of the members who will be elected from the co-rolls of candidates which will be arranged under Article 18 of this Constitution.

ENGLISH TEXT

Provision may be made by law for the direct election by any functional or vocational group or association or council of so many members of Seanad Éireann as may be fixed by such law in substitution for an equal number of the members to be elected from the corresponding panels of candidates constituted under Article 18 of this Constitution.

- 1 'Association' is expressed as 'comhlacht' ('body') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Any functional or vocational group or association or council' is expressed in the Irish text as 'aon dream feidhme nó gairme beatha, nó aon chomhlacht nó comhairle feidhme nó gairme beatha' ('any functional or vocational group, or any functional or vocational body or council').
- 3 'Functional councils' is expressed as 'comhairlí feidhmeannais' in Article 15.3.1<sup>o</sup>, rather than the present 'comhairlí feidhme', which could perhaps also be read as 'functioning council'.
- 4 'Group' is expressed in the Irish text by a more general term ('dream') which, although it includes 'group' among its senses, would be superseded by the direct translation 'grúpa' today.
- 5 'For the direct election by any group' is expressed as 'ionas go bhféadfadh aon dream ... a thoghadh go lomdíreach' ('so that any group would be able directly to elect') in the Irish text.
- 6 'Corresponding panels' is expressed as 'comhrollaí' ('co-rolls') in the Irish text.
- 7 'Members of Seanad Éireann' is expressed as 'comhaltáí do Sheanad Éireann' ('Members for Seanad Éireann') in the Irish text.
- 8 'An equal number' is expressed as 'an oiread céanna' ('the same amount') in the Irish text.
- 9 'Direct' is expressed not by the adjective/adverb 'díreach' simply, but by 'lomdíreach', a phrase meaning 'absolutely direct', as we have seen in Article 12.2.1<sup>o</sup>.
- 10 'Fix' is expressed by the term translating both 'determine' and 'find' in Téarmaí Dlí, 'cinn', although 'fix' is included in Ó Dónaill as one of the senses of this verb.
- 11 'Constituted' is expressed as 'a chóireofar' ('arranged') in the Irish text, as we saw in Article 18.

Commentary

dream feidhme 'Comhairlí feidhmeannais is gairme beatha' expresses 'functional or vocational councils' in Article 15.3.1<sup>o</sup>. 'Dream' is translated as 'body of people; group, tribe, set; some' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'an dream óg, the young people' and 'dreamanna polaitíochta, political groups'. Dinneen translates 'dream' as 'a portion, a section, an additional period; crowd, party, people, tribe, class, adherents, a following', citing 'dream an Bhéarla, English-speakers, the Anglo-Irish'. DIL translates 'drem(m)' as '(an) indefinite number of people, band, company', citing examples from Leabhar na hUidhre (written in Clonmacnois c. 1100) onwards, including 'dream an teagaisc' ('teachers') from a text published in the journal Gadelica.

'Lucht feidhme' is translated by Ó Dónaill as 'functionaries; agents, servants; servicemen, soldiers' and 'fear feidhme' as 'man of action; fighting man'. Dinneen translates 'fear feadhma' as 'a fighting man, officer, official' and 'lucht feadhma' as 'fighting men, officials, servants, helpers'. According to DIL, the primary sense of 'feidm' seems to be 'load, stress, strain', passing into the senses of 'utmost effort, effort, exertion; burden, service, function'. DIL translates 'aes, lucht fedma' as 'soldiery; servitors, attendants'.

'Dream' expresses 'body' in Articles 10 ('is le haon duine nó dream', 'vested in any person or body') and 13.9 ('ainmniú aon duine nó aon dreama eile ... ó aon duine nó aon dream eile', 'nomination of ... from, any other person or body'). 'Aon duine nó aon dream' expresses 'any person or body of persons' in Articles 37.1 and 37.2, with 'an duine nó an dream sin' expressing 'such person or body of persons' in both those sections. 'Any person or persons' is expressed as '(ar) aon duine nó ar aon dream daoine' in Article 15.10. 'Group', on the other hand, is expressed as 'buíon' in Articles 29.4.2<sup>o</sup> ('members of any group or league of nations', 'comhaltáí d'aon bhuíon nó d'aon chumann de náisiúin') and 41.1.1<sup>o</sup> ('the natural primary and fundamental unit group of Society', '(is) buíon-aonad príomha bunaidh don chomhdhaonnacht').

Turning to the Acts 'any group, association or class of persons' is translated as '(d)aon ghrúpa, comhlachas nó aicme daoine' in s30(20) of the Land Act, 1950. In s11(2) of the Intoxicating Liquor Act, 1962, 'unless it is organised as a special function for the entertainment of the members of a particular association, organisation or other like group' is translated as 'mura mar dhálas speisialta le haghaidh siamsa do chomhaltáí comhlachais nó eagrais áirithe nó grúpa áirithe eile dá shamhail a eagrófar é'.

Looking at early Acts, 'representation for groups or parties not then adequately represented in Dáil Éireann' is translated as 'ionaduíocht do ghasraí no do pháirtithe ná beidh leor-ionaduíocht aca i nDáil Éireann an uair sin' in Article 82(b) of the 1922 Constitution, while in Article 17 'in virtue of ... her adherence to and membership of the group of nations forming the British Commonwealth of Nations' is translated as 'agus de bhri gur ball í agus go leanann sí den chó-chruinniú náisiún a dhineann suas an Có-chiníochas Briotáineach'. 'Any group of county councillors comprising the necessary number of such county councillors' is translated as 'aon scata de chomhairleoirí contae ar a mbeidh an lion riachtanach de sna comhairleoirí sin' in s2(b) of the Second Schedule to the Local Government Act, 1925. Finally, 'a parcel or a group of parcels of untenanted land' is translated as 'paiste no grúpa de phaistí talmhan nea-thionóntuithe' in s27 of the Land Act, 1927.

dream gairme beatha 'Do ghairm bheatha' is translated as 'one's mission in life; one's occupation' by Ó Dónaill, with Dinneen including ‘calling, avocation or condition of life, vocation’ among the senses of ‘gairm’, ‘gairm bheathadh’ also having these senses. DIL gives ‘a calling, employment, profession’ as a secondary sense of ‘gairm’, verbal noun of ‘gairid’, ‘calls’. See the commentary on Article 15.3.1°.

aon chomhlacht ‘Comhlacht’ is translated as ‘body; company, firm’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘Ó Briain agus a Chomhlacht, Teoranta, O’Brien and Company Limited’. Dinneen translates ‘cómhlucht’ as ‘fellow-labourers; an associated band; a household; a company’, citing ‘cómhlucht oibre, labourers together, partners, associates, allies’. DIL only cites two examples of ‘comlucht’, ‘cumlucht denma uilc’, translated as ‘accomplices’, from O’Curry’s law transcripts, translating ‘cómhlucht’ from Keating’s seventeenth-century poetry as ‘companions’. ‘Comlucht’ is a compound based on ‘lucht’ in the sense of ‘people, class of persons, category’. DIL refers the reader to ‘complacht’, ‘company, gang’, which may be a modification of ‘comlucht’, according to DIL.

‘Comhlacht’ translates ‘body’ in the Acts, ‘cuideachta’ being the Irish legal term for ‘company’. ‘Association’, on the other hand, is translated in Tearmaí Dlí as ‘comhlachas’, ‘articles of association’ and ‘memorandum of association’ being translated respectively as ‘airteagail chomhlachais’ and ‘meabhrán comhlachais’. Looking at modern Acts, ‘the International Development Association (Amendment) Act, 1980’, for example, is cited in Irish as ‘an tAcht um Chomhlachas Forbartha Idirnáisiúnta (Leasú), 1980’.

Looking at the early Acts, ‘payment to Associations under the Unemployment Insurance Acts’ is translated as ‘díoluíochta le Cumannacha fé sna hAchtanna um Árachas Díomhaointis’ in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922. In s2(1) of the Public Safety Act, 1927, ‘the word “association” includes any combination of persons whether the same is or is not known by any distinctive name’ is translated as ‘foluíonn an focal “comhlachas” aon chomhlúadar daoine pe’ca tugtar aon ainm fé leith air no ná tugtar’. Finally, ‘to pay a subscription for the association of county councils of Ireland’ is translated as ‘chun sintiús d’íoc i gcóir comhlachais chomhairlí contae na hÉireann’ in s78 of the Local Government Act, 1925.

an oiread ... an oiread chéanna ‘Oiread’ is translated as ‘amount, quantity, number’ by Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘bhí an oiread airgid aige (go), he had so much money (that)’ and ‘an oiread céanna, the same amount’ as examples of this noun with the article, citing ‘bhí a oiread deifre orainn leis an obair, we were in such a hurry with the work’ as an example of ‘oiread’ with the masculine possessive adjective ‘a’ (which is often omitted). The word ‘oiread’ is an irregular form which, as Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks, retains elements of an old neuter inflection: with the article in the nominative it is ‘an oiread’, but an attributive adjective is not lenited – ‘an oiread céanna’; an attributive adjective is, as here, lenited in the genitive, though ‘oiread’ itself is not inflected. Note, however, that the form in the original text is ‘an oirid chéanna’.

Dinneen gives ‘as much or as many as (with genitive, le or agus)’ as one of the senses of ‘oiread’. The earlier form ‘airet’, based on ‘fot’ (Modern Irish ‘fad’, ‘length’), is translated as ‘length, interval, space (of time, less frequently of space), later amount, quantity’ in DIL, where examples are cited from the eighth-century Glosses onwards, with ‘in oiret cétna’ (‘as much again’) being cited from the Gaelic Maundeville and ‘uiread grádha ... 7 atá aige dhó féin’ (i.e. and how much he loves himself) being cited from Flaithrí Ó Maolchonaire’s Desiderius, an Irish version (published in Louvain in 1616) of the Spanish book El Desseoso.

In Article 18.4.2°, following the Seventh Amendment of the Constitution (Election of Members of Seanad Éireann by Institutions of Higher Education) Act, 1979, ‘Provision may be made by law for the election ... of so many members of Seanad Éireann as may be fixed by law in substitution for an equal number of the members to be elected’ is rendered as ‘Féadfar foráil a dhéanamh le dlí chun go dtoghfar ... an líon sin comhaltaí de Sheanad Éireann a shocrófar le dlí in ionad líon comhionann de na comhaltaí a bheas le toghadh’. ‘The validity of the election of so many electors as are so elected’ is translated as ‘(do) dhleathacht toghtha an mhéide sin toghthóirí toghfar amhlaidh’ in s37(4) of the Seanad Electoral (Panel Members) Act, 1937.

Finally, as regards ‘fix’, ‘but does not apply where any such sentence is fixed by law’ is translated as ‘ach níl feidhm aige i gcás aon phianbhreithe den sórt sin a bheith socraithe le dlí’ in s2 of the Criminal Justice (Community Service) Act, 1983 – see the commentary on Article 16.2.2° for early translations of ‘fix’ in the Acts.

comhrollaí A compound of the prefix ‘comh-’, translated principally as ‘mutual, joint, common, co-’ in Ó Dónaill, and ‘rolla’, literally ‘roll’ but, as we have seen in the previous Article, expressing ‘panel’ in the Constitution – see the commentary on Article 18.4.1°.

“Corresponding period” means the period of 12 months immediately preceding the basis period for the year 1990-91’ is translated as ‘ciallaíonn “tréimhse chomhréire” an tréimhse 12 mhí díreach roimh an mbonntréimhse don bhliain 1990-91’ in s16(1) of the Finance Act, 1990. ‘An application is made thereunder for a declaration that any accident was an occupational accident or for a corresponding declaration as to any such disease or injury’ is translated as ‘(ina) ndéanfar iarratas faoin gcéanna ar dhearbhú gur thionóisc cheirde aon tionóisc áirithe nó ar dhearbhú comhréireach i dtaobh aon ghalair nó díobhála den sórt sin’ in s40(1) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981. ‘The corresponding provision of this Act’ is translated as ‘(don) fhoráil chomhréire den Acht seo’ in s7(3) of the National Agricultural Advisory, Education and Research Authority Act, 1977. See further the commentary on Article 34.3.3°, where ‘comhréire’ expresses ‘corresponding’.

Looking at early Acts, ‘reckoned from any day of one month to the corresponding day of the next month’ is translated as ‘agus é d’áireamh o aon lá de mhí go dtí a chó-lá san sa chéad mhí eile’ in s8(3) of the Local Government (Rates on Small Dwellings) Act, 1928. ‘Table of Corresponding Ranks’ is translated as ‘Tábla de Chéimeanna Có-réire’ in the Heading of the First Schedule to the Police Forces Amalgamation Act, 1925, ‘The Counterfoil is to have a number to correspond with that on the back of the Ballot Paper’ being translated as ‘Beidh ar an gCódhuille uimhir a bheidh ar có-réir léi sin ar chúl an Pháipéir Bhallóide’ in s6 of Part III of the Fifth Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923, and ‘the number ... and a description of such animals corresponding to the number and description thereof given by such owner' being translated as 'l'ion na n-ainmhithe sin ... agus tuairisc ortha do réir a lín agus a dtuairisce mar a thug an t-únaer sin iad' in s11(1)(a) of the Slaughtered Animals (Compensation) Act, 1928. 'Or a declaration as nearly corresponding thereto as circumstances permit' is translated as 'no dearbhú chó mór deabhramh leis agus is féidir sa chás' in s149(1) of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927. 'Ball co-fhreagrais' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'corresponding member'. Finally, 'if a corresponding reduction is made in the rent' is translated as 'má dineadh a chothrom san de luíodú ar an gcíos' in s8(3) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1923.

in ionad This phrase is translated as 'in place of, instead of' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'in ionad a mhic, instead of his son'. Dinneen adds 'in compensation for' to Ó Dónaill's senses, citing 'dualgas i n-ionad do dhuanta, reward for your poems'. DIL adds 'in succession to' to Ó Dónaill's senses, citing 'coemchludh abad ... .i. Forindan i n-inad Dermota' (i.e. 'exchange of abbots, Forindan instead of Dermot'). 'Inad' is translated principally as 'place, spot' in DIL, with no citation being given there from the Old Irish Glosses, for example.

Looking at early Acts, 'The fees specified in any scale of fees appointed under this section shall be in lieu of and substitution for the fees now by law chargeable by ... Under-Sheriffs' is translated as 'Na táillí a luadhfar in aon scála táillí a ceapfar fén alt so beid in ionad na dtáillí agus mar mhalairt ar na táillí is inéilithe ag Fo-Shirriamh' in s12(2) of the Enforcement of Law (Occasional Powers) Act, 1923. In s6(14) of the Dublin Reconstruction (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1924, 'and the registration of an order in accordance with those regulations shall be in substitution for registration under any enactments' is translated as 'agus an clárú a déanfar ar ordú do réir na rialachán san beidh sé in ionad clárú fé aon achtacháin'. Finally, 'in áit' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'in substitution for' in translations for the Department of Lands and Agriculture.

Looking at modern Acts, 'and the requirements of this paragraph are in addition to and not in substitution for the requirements of paragraph (b) of this subsection' is translated as 'agus is ceanglais i dteannta, agus ní ceanglais in ionad, cheanglais mhír (b) den fho-alt seo ceanglais na míre seo' in s18(4)(c) of the Fisheries Act, 1980.

a chóireofar See the commentary on Article 18.4.1<sup>o</sup>iii. 'A company which is constituted under any other Act' is translated as 'cuideachta arna comhdhéanamh faoi aon Acht eile' in s58 of the Finance Act, 1990, for example.

ENGLISH TEXT

Every Bill initiated in and passed by Dáil Éireann shall be sent to Seanad Éireann and may, unless it be a Money Bill, be amended in Seanad Éireann and Dáil Éireann shall consider any such amendment.

Divergences between the official texts

- 'May be amended in Seanad Éireann' is expressed as 'tig le Seanad Éireann é a leasú' ('can/may be amended by Seanad Éireann') in the Irish text.
- 'Consider' is expressed by the term translated in Téarmaí Dlí as 'adjudge, adjudicate, decide', 'a bhreithniú', the form in the enrolled edition ('do bhreathnú') being translated in Ó Dónaill as 'observe, examine'.
- 'Shall be' is expressed as 'ní foláir' ('must be') in the Irish text, as we have seen in some earlier Articles.

Note that the exact same English text is found in the beginning of Article 38 of the 1922 Constitution, where it is translated as follows:

Cuirfear chun Seanaid Éireann gach Bille do tionnscnuíodh i nDáil Éireann agus do ritheadh ag Dáil Éireann agus maran Bille Airgid é, féadfaidh Seanaid Éireann é do leasú agus breithneoidh Dáil Éireann aon leasú dá shórt.

Commentary

Reachtaíocht An abstract noun developing from 'reacht', translated as 'statute' in Téarmaí Dlí, 'reacht' being found in the compound 'bunreacht' ('constitution'). Ó Dónaill translates 'reachtaíocht' as 'legislation'. Dinneen does not appear to give this word as a headword but gives the adjective 'reachtaidhe' ('reachtaíocht' coming from 'reachtaidheacht'), translated as 'constitutional, law-worthy, free', the noun of the same form being translated as 'a law-giver or legislator'. The adjective 'reachtaide', translated in DIL as 'legal, pertaining (or according) to the law', is found in the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles in the restricted sense of the Mosaic Law. We find 'reachtaid' in the sense of 'a judge, a lawgiver' in the early Irish 'wisdom-text' Tecosca Cormaic, where the following is stated: 'reachtaid cách co leibu' ('everyone is a lawgiver till it comes to children'). See further the commentary on Article 15.2.1°.

'The Parliament and the Executive Council of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) shall respectively pass such further legislation' is translated as 'agus rithfidh Oireachtas agus Ard-Chomhairle Shaorstáit Éireann fé seach pé reachtúchán eile' in s2 of the Constitution of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Éireann) Act, 1922. 'Dlí' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'legislation' in a Report from 1926. Looking at modern Acts, 'to enable legislation to be prepared and to be initiated in, considered and ... enacted by the Oireachtas' is translated as 'le go bhféadfar reachtaíocht a ullmhú agus a thionscnamh san Oireachtas agus a bhreithniú' in the Long Title of the Rent Restrictions (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1981, for example.

a thionscnaítear Passive, present indicative, of 'tionscain', translated as 'begin, originate; initiate; establish' in Ó Dónaill – see the commentary on Article 45.3.1°. 'Winding up or bankruptcy proceedings shall not be initiated in relation to the holder of the licence' is translated as 'ní thionscnofar imeachtaí foirceanta ná féimheachta i ndáil leis an sealbhóir ceadúnais' in s38(7)(a) of the Central Bank Act, 1989. See further the commentary on 'reachtaíocht' above.

Looking at early translations, 'le tionnscnamh' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'to be initiated' in the 1926 Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann, 'tionnscnamh' translating 'initiation' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 1927, p. 504. 'No person in whom any such power is for the time being vested shall initiate the collection of any statistics' is translated as 'ní dhéanfidh éinne ina mbeidh aon chomhacht den tsórt san dílsithe de thuras na huairé bailiú aon staitistiche ... do thionnscain' in s18(2) of the Statistics Act, 1926. 'Tionnscnamh' translates 'Initiative' in Article 14 of the 1922 Constitution, where 'to take part in the Referendum and Initiative' is translated as 'páirt do thógaint sa Referendum agus sa Tionnscnamh'. Finally, note that 'the initiation and direction of research' is translated as 'lorgaireacht do thosnú agus do stiúra' in s18(c) of the Local Government Act, 1925.

Bille Airgid 'Airgid' here is the genitive singular of 'airgead' as an attributive adjective. Ó Dónaill translates 'bille airgid' as 'money-bill'. Dinneen gives 'recent' in brackets following the sense of 'a bill in Parliamentary procedure' s.v. 'bille'. 'Bille' is an English loanword, translated as 'bill; letter, note' in DIL, bills as voting papers being cited there from the Irish Rule of S. Clare ('bille in aghaidh gach Sethar ... do sgríobhadh'). Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that in An Seanchaidhe Muimhneach (s70), we find the phrase 'bille dhá phunt' in the sense of 'a postal order for £2', a sense not very unlike the use of 'bille' in the Rule of S. Clare. A 'Finance Bill' is styled 'Bille Airgeadais', 'airgeadas' (simply translated as 'finance' in Ó Dónaill) not appearing to be given as a headword in Dinneen. 'Money Bill' is translated as 'Bille Airgid' in Article 35 of the 1922 Constitution.

a bhreithniú See the commentary on Article 17.1.1°. 'Do bhreathnú' is found in the enrolled edition. 'Breithniú' is the verbal noun of 'breithnigh', translated principally as 'adjudge' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'cás a bhreithniú, to adjudicate upon a case'. The first person singular, present indicative, 'breithním', is translated as 'I adjudge; I adjudicate; I decide' in Téarmaí Dlí, where we find 'cúram geille a breithníodh ina gheilt ag ionchoisne nó le hordú na cúirte', 'committee of a lunatic so found by inquisition or by order of the court'. Dinneen does not appear to give 'breithnigh' as a headword. 'Breathnaigh', however, is given as the standard form of 'breithnigh' in its secondary sense in Ó Dónaill (i.e. we find the following entry s.v. 'breithnigh': '2 = breathnaigh'). The headword 'breathnaigh' is translated principally as 'observe, examine' in Ó Dónaill, citing 'cás a bhreathnú, to look into, consider, a case'. Dinneen translates 'breathnuighim' as 'I discern, recognise, examine, judge; conceive, design; I look, appear; I behold, watch', with 'breithnighim' cited as a variant form at the end of the entry. Both 'breathnaíonn' and 'breithníonn' come from the earlier form 'breithnaigid', translated as (a) 'judges, decides, examines, determines' and (c) 'observes, considers, meditates, reflects (with ar upon)' in DIL, this verb being based on 'breth' (Modern Irish 'breith'), 'act of judging; judgement' being one of the senses of that noun.

'Breithnigh' is the form found in the 1922 Constitution also, 'Dáil Éireann shall ... consider the Estimates of receipts and expenditure of the Irish Free State' being translated as 'Breithneoidh Dáil Éireann ... meastacháin fháltais agus chaiteachais Shaorstáit Éireann' in Article 36, for example. 'The Committee of Ministers shall consider the proposed amendment' is translated as 'Breithneoidh an Coiste Airí an leasú atá molta' in s4 of the First Schedule to the Data Protection Act, 1988, 'breithneoidh an tAire an leasú san' translating 'the Minister shall consider such amendment' in s5(2) of the Electricity (Supply) (Amendment) Act, 1945, agus 'breithneoidh an Coiste sin an céanna' translating 'the said Committee shall consider such revocation or such amendment' in s12(6) of the Unemployment Assistance Act, 1933. See further the commentary on Article 28.4.3°.

Neither 'breithnigh' nor 'breathnaigh' is given in De Bhaldráithe s.v. 'consider', who translates this verb as 1(a) 'machnaím (ceist); déanaím staidéar ar (cheist); meáim (seans)', citing 'considered opinion, barúil mheasta', and (b) 'measaim, scrúdaím (tairiscint; iarratas); cuirim (tairiscint, iarratas) san áireamh'.

a rítear Passive, present indicative, of ‘rith’ – see the commentary on Articles 13.3.1° and 17.2.

Ní foláir See the commentary on Article 11.

tig le See the commentary on Article 12.4.4°.

a leasú See the commentary on Article 46.1.

Commentary

a thabhairt isteach ‘Take, bring, in; introduce; import’ is the principal sense of ‘tabhair isteach’ in Ó Dónaill, who cites ‘nós a tugadh isteach le gairid, a custom that was recently introduced’. Ó Dónaill also gives the secondary sense, in Jurisprudence, of ‘present’, citing ‘cáipéis a thabhairt isteach, to bring in a document’.

‘C.I.E. will request the Minister for Transport and Power to introduce the necessary legislation’ is translated as ‘Iarrfaidh C.I.E. ar an Aire Iompair agus Cumhachta an reachtaíocht a thabhairt isteach is gá’ in s2 of the Second Schedule to the Transport (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1971, for example. ‘If rejected by Dáil Éireann it [i.e. a Bill] shall not be introduced again in the same session’ is translated as ‘Má diúltaítear i nDáil Éireann é ní tabharfar isteach arís é sa tsíósón chéanna’ in Article 39 of the 1922 Constitution. ‘Bille do chur isteach’ is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating ‘to introduce a Bill’ in a Bill of 18 January 1924. ‘Any proposal to introduce modifications in the Agreement’ is translated as ‘Aon mholadh chun modhnuithe a dhéanamh ar an gComhaontú seo’ in Article XXVIII(a) of the Schedule to the Bretton Woods Agreements (Amendment) Act, 1977.

dleathach Translated as ‘lawful’ in Téarmaí Dlí – see the commentary on Articles 14.3, 15.6.2° and 17.2.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 ‘A Bill initiated ... if amended’ is expressed as ‘Má thionscnaítear Bille ... agus go leasaíonn’ (‘If a Bill is initiated ... and is amended’) in the Irish text.
- 2 ‘Shall be’ is expressed as ‘ní foláir’ (‘it must be’) in the Irish text, preceded by a comma found in that text only.
- 3 The phrase in the Irish text expressing ‘as a Bill’, ‘ina

Bhille', can also be read in the Irish text as 'to be a Bill'.

- 4 'Considered' is expressed in the Irish text by the same verb as expresses 'deemed' in the next section, the verb 'meas' expressing both 'deem' and 'consider' in the modern Acts also.

Note that the words 'é bhreathnú mar breathnócháí Bille a tionnsnócháí i nDáil Éireann' were deleted by the Second Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1941, and the words 'a mheas é bheith ina Bhille a tionnsnadh i nDáil Éireann' were inserted in their place, no corresponding amendment being made to the English text.

Note also that Article 39 of the 1922 Constitution contains the following:

If amended by Dáil Éireann the Bill shall be considered as a Bill initiated in Dáil Éireann. Má leasúitear i nDáil Éireann é breithneofar ar nós Bille do tionnsnuíodh i nDáil Éireann é.

Commentary

a mheas Verbal noun of 'meas', translated principally as 'estimate, value, judge; deem, consider' in Ó Dónaill – see the commentary on Articles 12.6.2°, 16.6 and 28.3.2°. 'Those States shall ... designate the State among them which ... shall be considered as the State of registration' is translated as 'déanfaidh na Stáit sin ... Stát as a líon a ainmniú a áireofar ... mar Stát cláraitheachta' in Article 18 of the First Schedule to the Air Navigation and Transport Act, 1973. 'An illegitimate child shall be considered as the legitimate child of his mother' is translated as 'measfar gur leanbh dlisteanach lena mháthair leanbh neamhdhlisteanach' in s44(2) of the Finance Act, 1972.

Commentary

ceachtar This pronoun is translated as 'either, one or other of two' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'ceachtar den dá rud, either of the two things'. Dinneen translates 'ceachtar' as 'either, one or other, each, any', citing 'ní ceachtar sinn dár ainmnighis, I am none of those you have named'. In the earlier language, 'cechtar' had the sense of 'each (of two)' and was always substantival, Rudolf Thurneysen (op. cit., p. 311) citing 'cechtar in-da rann' ('each of the two parts') from the ninth-century St Gall Glosses on Priscian, DIL citing 'cechtar indapopul' ('each of the two peoples') from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms and translating 'cechtar' principally as 'each (of), both (of)'. See further the commentary on Article 13.2.3°.

an dá Theach Note that Article 38 of the 1922 Constitution contains the following:

... but a Bill passed by Dáil Éireann and considered by Seanad Éireann shall ... be deemed to be passed by both Houses in the form in which it was last passed by Dáil Éireann ... ach Bille a rithfidh Dáil Éireann agus a bhreithneoidh Seanad Éireann, tuigfear ... gur rith an dá Thigh é sa bhfuirm is déanaí 'nar rith Dáil Éireann é.

'Dá' is the form of 'dhá' used after the definite article. Dinneen gives the sense of 'both, the pair' of 'dá' with the article, citing 'an dá chapall, both horses'. De Bhaldraithe translates 'on both sides' as 'ar an dá thaobh' and cites 'both of these stories must be told, caithfear an dá scéal seo a insint'.

ENGLISH TEXT

Every Money Bill passed by Dáil Éireann shall be sent to Seanad Éireann for its recommendations.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'For its recommendations' is expressed in the Irish text as 'd'iarraidh a moltaí ina thaobh' ('for their recommendations regarding it'), with 'for' being expressed literally as 'to seek'.
- 2 'Shall' is again expressed as 'ní foláir' ('must') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 38 of the 1922 Constitution includes the following:

Provided that every Money Bill shall be sent to Seanad Éireann for its recommendations .... Ar choiníoll go gcuirfear gach Bille Airgid chun an tSeanad chun a mholta san d'fháil air.

Commentary

d'iarraidh According to Ó Dónaill s.v. 'do', 'a' is the standard form of this preposition 'used to connect preceding noun or pronoun, which is virtual subject or object, with verbal noun'. Ó Dónaill s.v. 'a', cites 'Tháinig sé a iarraidh iasachta orm, he came to ask me for a loan'. See the commentary on Article 15.8.2<sup>o</sup> regarding this use of 'do' in the Acts.

'Iarraidh' is the verbal noun of 'iarr', translated as 'ask' in Ó Dónaill, with the principal sense of 'request, demand', and secondary sense of 'attempt'. Dinneen translates 'iarraidh' as 'act of asking, seeking, desiring; a request, a petition ...', citing 'a d'iarraidh, ag iarraidh, d'iarraidh, trying to, seeking, fetching'. DIL cites 'rainic A. 'san [dúnad] robí d'iarraighe' ('... which he was in quest of') s.v. 'iarraid', verbal noun of 'iarraid', translated principally as 'act of seeking, seeking (to get), searching, examining', no examples of either verb or verbal noun appearing to be cited from the Old Irish Glosses.

In s1 of the Constitution (Amendment No.12) Act, 1930, 'is sent by Dáil Éireann to Seanad Éireann for its recommendations' is translated as 'do chur go dtí Seanad Éireann ... chun a mholta san air d'fháil'. 'That the Bill is sent to the Seanad for its recommendations' is translated as 'go bhfuil an Bille á chur chun an tSeanad le haghaidh a mholtaí' in s154 of the Standing Orders of Dáil Éireann (1997).

moltaí Plural of 'moladh', verbal noun of 'mol'; 'recommendation, proposal' is given in Ó Dónaill as a secondary sense of this noun, along with 'appraisal, adjudication, award'. Dinneen includes 'recommending, adjudging, reviewing, appraisal or review, a decision or recommendation' among the senses of 'moladh'. The principal sense of 'molad', verbal noun of 'molaid', is 'the act of praising, praise', according to DIL, citing 'in molad doinde' ('human praise') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles, 'do mholadh hÍ Néill' ('do mholadh' being translated as 'according to the decision of') cited from the Annals of Loch Cé as an example of the sense 'approbation, approval; decision'.

'Teachtaireacht mholta' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'message of recommendation' in the Proceedings of Dáil Éireann, 1924, p. 396. 'Such applications ... to be forwarded with recommendations to the Committee of Management' is translated as '... iad do chur chun an Choiste Bhainistí maraon le molta ina dtaobh' in s5 of the 'Details ...' in the 'Leitrim County Scheme' in the Schedule to the Local Government (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1923. See further the commentary on Article 24.2.

Regarding 'a moltaí' in the Irish text above, as against 'a mholtaí' in a draft of the translation below, commenting on the use of the singular pronoun referring to 'Seanad Éireann' (and to 'Dáil Éireann' in a citation from the Acts above), Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú remarks that this is contrary to the usual practice in Irish and regards the plural pronoun as more natural. Professor Ó Murchú recommends 'chun a gcuid moltaí a fháil air' rather than 'le haghaidh a mholtaí'.

TÉACS GAELIGE

Gach Bille Airgid a chuirtear go Seanad Éireann d'iarraidh a moltaí ina thaobh, ní foláir é a chur ar ais go Dáil Éireann i gceann tréimhse nach sia ná lá agus fiche tar éis an Bille a chur go Seanad Éireann, agus tig le Dáil Éireann iomlán na moltaí ó Sheanad Éireann nó aon chuid díobh a ghlacadh nó a dhiúltú.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Each Money Bill which is sent to Seanad Éireann for their recommendations regarding it, it must be sent back to Dáil Éireann at the end of a period not longer than twenty-one days after sending the Bill to Seanad Éireann, and Dáil Éireann may accept or refuse/reject all the recommendations from Seanad Éireann or any part of them.

ENGLISH TEXT

Every Money Bill sent to Seanad Éireann for its recommendations shall, at the expiration of a period not longer than twenty-one days after it shall have been sent to Seanad Éireann, be returned to Dáil Éireann, which may accept or reject all or any of the recommendations of Seanad Éireann.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Reject' is expressed in the Irish text by a form of the verb 'diúltaigh' which in the sense of 'reject' in other Articles takes an indirect object governed by the preposition 'do'.
- 2 'Dáil Éireann' is repeated in the Irish text alone.
- 3 'All or any of the recommendations of Seanad Éireann' is expressed as 'iomlán na moltaí ó Sheanad Éireann nó aon chuid díobh' ('all the recommendations from Seanad Éireann or any part of them') in the Irish text.
- 4 'After it shall have been sent' is expressed as 'tar éis an Bille a chur' ('after sending the Bill') in the Irish text.
- 5 'For its recommendations' is expressed as 'd'iarraidh a moltaí ina thaobh' ('to seek their recommendations regarding it') in the Irish text, as in the previous subsection.
- 6 'At the expiration of' is expressed as 'i gceann' ('at the end of') in the Irish text.
- 7 'Shall' is again expressed as 'ní foláir' ('must') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 38 of the 1922 Constitution contains the following:

... and at a period not longer than twenty-one days after it shall have been sent to Seanad Éireann, it shall be returned to Dáil Éireann, which may pass it, accepting or rejecting all or any of the recommendations of Seanad Éireann .... agus i gceann tréimhse nach sia ná lá is fiche tar éis é do chur chun an tSeanad, go gcuirfear thar n-ais é go dtí Dáil Éireann a fhéadfaidh é rith, agus molta uile Sheanad Éireann nó aon mhola aca do ghlaca no do dhiúlta.

Commentary

i gceann This phrase is translated principally as 'at the end of' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'i gceann coicise, in a fortnight's time'. Dinneen translates 'i gceann' as 'at the end, head, in front of ...'. DIL cites 'a cceinn trí lá' from Flaithrí Ó Maolchonaire's Desiderius (published in Louvain in 1616) as an example of 'i ciunn' ('[of time] at the end of'); the dative of 'cenn' without a preposition expresses 'at the end of' in Old Irish, DIL citing 'cinn rehe' ('at the end of a space' ['period'], i.e. 'after a time') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles.

'On the expiration of the lease' is translated as 'ar éag don léas' in Téarmaí Díl, with 'expiration' being translated as 'éag'. De Bhaldraithe translates 'on the expiration of the lease' as 'nuair a bheadh (bhí, etc.) an léas caite'. 'At the expiration of a period of two months beginning with the date of making the assessment' is translated as 'i gceann dhá mhí dar tosach dáta na measúnachta a dhéanamh' in s5(2) of the Capital Gains Tax Act, 1975. In s7(2) of the Cheques Act, 1959, 'This Act shall come into operation at the expiration of a period of three months beginning with the day on which it is passed' is translated as 'Tíocfaidh an tAcht seo i ngníomh i ndeireadh tréimhse trí mhí dar tosach lá an Achta seo a rith'. Finally, 'at the expiration of a period of three years from the passing of this Act' is translated as 'i gceann tréimhse trí mbliain ó dháta an Achta seo a rith' in s40(7) of the Factories Act, 1955. See the commentary on Article 12.3.1<sup>o</sup> regarding other translations of 'at the expiration of' in the Acts.

a dhiúltú The verbal noun of 'diúltaigh' – see the commentary on Article 13.2.2<sup>o</sup> regarding 'diúltaigh do'. 'Diúltaigh' is translated as 'deny, refuse' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'dhiúltaigh sé m'iaratas, he refused my application'. 'Diúltaim' is translated as 'I refuse' in Téarmaí Dlí and 'diúltaighim' is translated as 'I deny, refuse, oppose, renounce (with do); I jilt' in Dinneen. DIL translates 'diúlta(ig)id' as 'refuses, rejects', citing 'dhiúltaigh na baintreabhacha óga, refuse the young widows' from the seventeenth-century translation of 1 Timothy v, 11. This verb is based on 'diúltad', which is the verbal noun of 'do-sluindi', which compound verb is translated in DIL as (a) 'denies (i.e. refuses to believe)' and (b) 'denies, i.e. rejects, renounces', citing 'an cloch do dhiúltadar na saoir' from the seventeenth-century translation of Psalms 118, 22, this being expressed as 'An chloch dar dhiúltaigh na saoir' in the current 'Maynooth' Bible (i.e. 'diúltaigh do').

'They shall be circulated by post to all members where addresses are known for acceptance or rejection en bloc by postal vote' is translated as 'cuirfear amach iad leis an bpost go dtí gach comhalta arb eol a sheoladh le glacadh leo nó le diúltú dóibh en bloc trí phostvótáil' in s12(3) of the Institution of Civil Engineers of Ireland (Charter Amendment) Act, 1969. In s63(6) of the Court Officers Act, 1926, 'accept such employment provisionally and postpone his final acceptance or rejection of such employment for any period' is translated as 'an fhostaíocht san do ghlaca go sealadach agus a glaca ar fad no diúlta ar fad di do chur ar athló go ceann aon tréimhse'. 'Rejecting any that are invalid' is translated as 'tar éis diúltú d'aon chuid aca a bheidh gan éifeacht' in s3(1) of the Third Schedule to the Electoral Act, 1923, with 'rejection objected to' translated as 'cuireadh i gcoinnibh an diúlta' in s7(1) of the Fourth Schedule.

lá agus fiche 'Capall is fiche' is the example given for '21' with a noun in An Caighdeán Oifigiúil (p. 39), 'trí leabhar is fiche, twenty-three books' being cited in Ó Dónaill, who states that either the nominative singular 'fiche' with 'is', the dative singular with 'ar' (i.e. 'trí leabhar ar fhichid') or the genitive singular (i.e. 'trí leabhar fichead') is used after a noun preceded by a cardinal or ordinal number. 'Dhá bhliain is fiche' is cited in Graiméar Gaeilge na mBráithre Críostaí, s146(d). Dinneen cites 'a h-aon is fiche, twenty-one'. DIL cites 'dá lebur fichet' ('twenty-two books') from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Commentary on the Psalms – see Rudolf Thurneysen, op. cit., s391, who states, regarding Old Irish, that 'in the combination of digits and tens the latter follow in the genitive', citing 'a ocht fichet "28"' and 'di litir fichet', 22 letters (of the alphabet)'.
'Within the next twenty-one days on which that House has sat' is translated as 'laistigh den lá is fiche a shuifidh an Teach sin' in s14(3) of the Criminal Justice (Community Service) Act, 1983, for example, 'laistigh den lá is fiche shuidhfidh an Tigh sin ina dhiaidh sin' translating the same sentence in s26(2) of the Agricultural Produce (Eggs) Act, 1930.

iomlán 'Iomlán' as a noun is translated as 'all, the whole; total, aggregate' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'iomlán na ndaoine, all of the people'. DIL translates 'iomlán' as 'the whole', citing 'dá mbeith iomlán an chreidimh agam' (Latin 'omnem fidem') from Keating's seventeenth-century Three Shafts of Death.

'Regulations ... may require that all or any of the statements made by the applicant in such form be verified' is translated as 'Féadfar le rialacháin ... a cheangal go ndéanfar na ráitis go léir, nó aon cheann díobh, a dhéanfaidh an t-iarratasóir san fhoirm sin, a fhióru' in s148(2) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981. In s308(1), 'the Minister may by regulations vary all or any of the rates of benefit' is translated as 'féadfaidh an tAire aon cheann nó gach ceann de na rátaí sochair ... a athrú le rialacháin'. 'By reason only of the fact that it incorporates or otherwise includes all or any of the terms contained in an agreement' is translated as 'de bhithin amháin go gcorpraíonn sé nó go bhfolaíonn sé ar dhóigh eile gach ceann nó aon cheann de na téarmaí atá i gcomhaontú' in s8(2)(b) of the Payment of Wages Act, 1979. In s7(2) of the Finance Act, 1923, 'by seizing all or any of the goods, animals and other chattels' is translated as 'tré gabháil do dhéanamh ar gach cuid no aon chuid de sna hearraí, de sna hainmhithe agus den mhaoin eile'.

sia A comparative adjective, translated as 'longer, farther' in Ó Dónaill, citing 'tréimhse nach sia ná mí, a period not exceeding a month'. Dinneen translates this 'irregular comparative and superlative form of "fada"' as 'longest, farthest; farther, longer (of time or space), more remote, more distant', citing 'lá is sia anonn 'ná an lá indiu, at a much later date, later on'. Historically, 'sia' was a comparative form of the adjective 'sír' ('long, lasting, constant'), translated as 'longer, farther' in DIL, citing 'is sia 's is sia an óige uam' (i.e. youth is 'ever further' from me) from a miscellaneous collection of Classical Irish poetry. In Early Middle Irish the comparative and superlative of 'fota' (Modern Irish 'fada') seem to have been supplied from 'sír', DIL citing 'issia thiagait' from the Book of Leinster version of the Táin, which corresponds to 'as faide' in the Stowe version.

'The resolution may also be renewed, for a period not longer than that for which the authority is renewed' is translated as 'féadfar ... an rún a athnuachan freisin go ceann tréimhse nach faide ná an tréimhse dá n-athnuaitear an t-údarás' in s24(3) of the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1983, for example.

Mura gcuirtear an Bille Airgid sin ar ais ó Sheanad Éireann go Dáil Éireann taobh istigh den lá agus fiche sin, nó má chuirtear ar ais é taobh istigh den lá agus fiche sin mar aon le moltaí nach nglacann Dáil Éireann leo, ní foláir a mheas gur rith an dá Theach i gceann an lae agus fiche sin é.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If that Money Bill is not sent back from Seanad Éireann to Dáil Éireann within those twenty-one days, or if it is sent back within those twenty-one days along with recommendations which Dáil Éireann does not accept, it must be deemed that the two Houses passed it at the end of those twenty-one days.

ENGLISH TEXT

If such Money Bill is not returned by Seanad Éireann to Dáil Éireann within such twenty-one days or is returned within such twenty-one days with recommendations which Dáil Éireann does not accept, it shall be deemed to have been passed by both Houses at the expiration of the said twenty-one days.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Not returned by Seanad Éireann' is expressed as 'Mura gcuirtear ... ar ais ó Sheanad Éireann' ('not sent back from Seanad Éireann') in the Irish text.
- 2 'With recommendations' is expressed as 'mar aon le moltaí' ('along with recommendations') in the Irish text.
- 3 A comma precedes the clause 'nó má chuirtear ar ais é' ('or if it is returned') in the Irish text alone.
- 4 'At the expiration of' is again expressed as 'i gceann', 'at the end (of)', in the Irish text, as in some Acts and as we have seen in the previous subsection.
- 5 'It shall' is again expressed as 'ní foláir' ('it must') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 38 of the 1922 Constitution contains the following:

... if not returned within such period of twenty-one days shall be deemed to have been passed by both Houses .... mara gcuirfear thar n-ais fé cheann an lae is fiche sin é tuigfear é bheith riththe ag an dá Thigh.

Commentary

taobh istigh Ó Dónaill cites 'taobh istigh de bhliain, within a year'. Dinneen translates 'taobh istigh (de)' as 'within (in), inside (of)', citing 'taobh istigh de chéad punt, below £100'. DIL cites 'taobh a sdigh' from Donlevy's An Teagas Críosduidhe (1742). 'Istech' ('in', 'into') is a contracted form of 'isa tech' ('into the house'), as opposed to 'immach' ('into the plain'), while 'istig' ('in') literally means 'in the house', as opposed to 'immaig' ('in the plain' [Modern Irish 'amuigh']), 'tig' and 'maig' here being the dative singular forms, 'tech' being originally a neuter noun having this form both in the nominative and accusative singular. See the commentary on Articles 12.3.3<sup>o</sup> and 16.4.2<sup>o</sup> regarding 'within' in the Acts and see the commentary on Article 34.4.4<sup>o</sup> regarding 'taobh amuigh'.

sin Sometimes expresses 'such' in the Acts also – see the commentary on Article 12.4.3<sup>o</sup>. See the commentary on Article 8.3 regarding 'the said'.

mar aon le See the commentary on Articles 10.1 and 16.7.

ní foláir See the commentary on Article 11.

Is é is ciall do Bhille Airgid Bille nach mbíonn ann ach forálacha le haghaidh iomlán na n-ábhar seo a leanas nó aon chuid acu .i. cánachas a ghearradh, a aisghairm, a loghadh, a athrú nó a rialú; muirir a leagan ar airgidí poiblí chun fiacha a íoc nó chun cuspoirí eile airgeadais, nó a leithéidí sin de mhuirir a athrú nó a aisghairm; soláthar; airgead poiblí a leithghabháil, a ghlacadh, a choinneáil nó a eisiúint, nó cuntais air a iniúchadh; aon iasacht a chruinniú nó a ráthú nó a aisic; fo-ábhair a bhfuil baint acu leis na nithe sin nó le haon chuid acu.

LITERAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What is meant by a Money Bill is a Bill which contains only provisions for all of the following matters or any part of them i.e. imposing, repealing, remitting, changing or regulating taxation; laying charges on public moneys to pay debts or for other financial objectives, or changing or repealing such charges; provision/supply; appropriating, receiving, keeping or issuing public money, or scrutinizing accounts of it; collecting or guaranteeing or repaying any loan; subsidiary matters which are connected with those things or with any part of them.

ENGLISH TEXT

A Money Bill means a Bill which contains only provisions dealing with all or any of the following matters, namely, the imposition, repeal, remission, alteration or regulation of taxation; the imposition for the payment of debt or other financial purposes of charges on public moneys or the variation or repeal of any such charges; supply; the appropriation, receipt, custody, issue or audit of accounts of public money; the raising or guarantee of any loan or the repayment thereof; matters subordinate and incidental to these matters or any of them.

Divergences between the official texts

- 1 'Matters subordinate and incidental to these matters or any of them' is expressed as 'fo-ábhair a bhfuil baint acu leis na nithe sin nó le haon chuid acu' ('subordinate matters which are connected with those things or with any part of them') in the Irish text.
- 2 'Imposition' is expressed as 'a ghearradh' ('levying') in the Irish text in the case of 'the imposition ... of taxation' and as 'a leagan' ('laying') in the case of 'the imposition ... of charges'.
- 3 'Regulation' is expressed by the verbal noun of the verb 'rialáigh', translated as 'control; rule' in Téarmaí Dlí, this verb usually expressing 'regulate' in the Constitution.
- 4 'Purposes' is expressed as 'cuspóirí' ('objectives') in the Irish text, as against 'críocha' in many other Articles; 'cuspóirí' does, however, also have the sense of 'purposes'.
- 5 'Custody' is expressed in the Irish text by the term 'coinneáil'; in a legal context, this word may mean 'detention' – see Téarmaí Dlí.
- 6 'The appropriation, receipt, custody, issue or audit of accounts of public money' is expressed as 'airgead poiblí a leithghabháil, a ghlacadh, a choinneáil nó a eisiúint, nó cuntais air a iniúchadh' ('the appropriation, receipt, custody/detention or issue of public money, or the audit of accounts on it') in the Irish text.
- 7 'The raising or guarantee of any loan or the repayment thereof' is expressed as 'aon iasacht a chruinniú nó a ráthú nó a aisíoc' ('the raising or guarantee or repayment of any loan') in the Irish text, with 'raising' being expressed as 'a chruinniú' ('collecting, gathering').
- 8 'A Money Bill means' is expressed as 'Is é is ciall do Bhille Airgid' ('What is meant by a Money Bill' / 'What a Money Bill means [is]') in the Irish text.
- 9 'Dealing with' is expressed as 'le haghaidh' ('for') in the Irish text.
- 10 'All or any of the following matters' is expressed as 'iomlán na n-ábhar seo a leanas nó aon chuid acu' ('all the following matters or any part of them') in the Irish text, 'aon chuid acu' here replacing 'aon chuid díobh' of Article 21.2.1°.
- 11 'Debt' is expressed as 'fiacha' ('debts') in the Irish text.

Note that Article 35 of the 1922 Constitution contains the same English text, with 'subjects' in place of 'matters' and 'subordinate matters incidental to those objects' replacing 'matters subordinate and incidental to these matters' above; the Irish text of Article 35 is as follows:

Cialluíon Bille Airgid Bille ná fuil ann ach forálacha i dtaobh gach abhair no aon abhair díobh so leanas, eadhon, leaga, ath-ghairm, maitheamh, atharú no rialú cánach; muirir do leaga ar airgead phuiblí chun fiacha do dhíol no chun cúrsaí eile airgid; no a leithéidí sin de mhuirir d'atharú no d'ath-ghairm; soláthar; airgead puiblí do chur i leithreas, d'fháil, do chimeád, do thabhairt amach no a chuntais do scrúdú; tógaint no urús aon iasachta no a aisíoc; mion-chúrsaí ag baint leis na habhair seo no le haon cheann aca.

Commentary

muirir 'Muirear' is translated as 'charge' in Téarmaí Dlí, this noun being translated principally as 'charge; encumbrance' in Ó Dónaill, citing 'is mór an muirear air é, it is a great burden on him'. Dinneen translates 'muirear' as 'an encumbrance, a load, weight, burthen; a troop, a throng; a household, a family' citing 'muirear cíosa agus clainne, heavy rent and many children'. 'Muirear' is similar to 'cúram' (principally 'care, responsibility') in developing this secondary sense of 'family'. DIL translates 'muirear' principally as 'a burden, charge, always of the care (of providing for) or maintenance of a number of individuals (family, household, company, troop, etc.)', citing the following from the Book of Rights in the concrete sense of maintenance given, 'tribute', etc.: 'fichi cornn, fichi claidheamh ... is muirear'. See the commentary on Article 11.

is ciall do 'Meaning' is given as one of the secondary senses of 'ciall' in Ó Dónaill ('sense' being the primary meaning), citing 'ciall a bhaint as rud, to find a meaning in something' and 'tá a chiall féin aige leis, he knows what he means by it'. Dinneen translates 'caidé an chiall atá leis?' as 'what is the point of it?', translating 'cad is ciall dó?' as 'what is its meaning?', citing 'is ionann ciall dóibh, they have the same meaning'. 'Goidé is ciall duit?' is translated by Dinneen as 'what is the matter with you? what do you mean?' followed by the abbreviation for 'Donegal'. DIL cites 'issi inso síis a chiall' ('this below is the meaning of it'), from the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Psalms, as an example of the sense of 'signification, meaning', of words, texts, etc., of 'ciall'.

"A broadcast" means a broadcast by wireless telegraphy of sound or visual images intended for general reception' is translated as 'ciallaíonn "craoladh" fuaim-iomhánna agus dearc-iomhánna a chraoltar trí raidiótheileagrafaíocht agus atá ceaptha lena nglacadh go ginearálta' in s7 of the Criminal Law (Rape) Act, 1981, for example. In s8(7) of the Military Service Pensions Act, 1934, 'In this Act the expressions "a report under this Act" means a report made by the Referee' is translated as 'San Acht so cialluíonn an abairt "tuarasgabháil fán Acht so" tuarasgabháil ar n-a tabhairt ag an Réiteoir'.

le haghaidh ... aon chuid acu The genitive generally follows the compound preposition 'le haghaidh'. In such constructions, the word 'cuid' is not normally inflected – Ó Dónaill, for example, citing 'gach lá ag baint a chuid féin asainn, each day taking its toll of us'; Professor Máirtín Ó Murchú refers to Graiméar Gaeilge na mBráithre Críostaí, s168(b), where 'ag déanamh mo chuid oibre', 'bás cuid mhór acu' and 'os cionn an chuid eile den tír' are cited. As regards 'cuid' followed by the preposition 'ag', DIL cites 'ismaith achuit occa' ('good is His share in it') from the eighth-century Würzburg Glosses on the Pauline Epistles.

'The profit and loss account is framed as a consolidated profit and loss account dealing with all or any of the company's subsidiaries' is translated as '(go) mbeidh an cuntas sochair agus dochair cumtha ina chuntas comhdhlúite sochair agus dochair a dhéileálann le gach ceann nó aon cheann d'fhochuideachtaí na cuideachta' in s3(2)(b) of the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1986, following s148(4)(b) of the Companies Act, 1963. 'In sending out, receiving and otherwise dealing with the ballot papers of postal voters' is translated as 'Ag cur amach agus ag fáil páipéiri ballóide post-vótáluithe dho, agus ag deighleáil leo ar shlite eile dho' in s21(5) of the Electoral Act, 1923.

cánachas This headword is translated as 'imposition, taxation' in Ó Dónaill and as 'custom, tribute' in Dinneen. DIL translates 'cánachas' as 'tribute, rent', most examples being in phrases with 'cis', 'cach cis 7 cach canacus oir 7 argid' being cited from the Book of Ballymote, for example. This noun is based on 'cáin', in the sense of 'legal due, tribute'.

'Taxation of Trustees Savings Banks' is translated as 'Cánachas ar Bhainc Thaisce Iontaobhais' in the Heading for Chapter VI of the Finance Act, 1990, with 'The Institute of Taxation in Ireland' being styled 'An Institiúid Cánachais in Éirinn' in s29. In No. 47 of the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922, 'in respect of Local Taxation Grants' is translated as 'i dtaobh Deontaisí Cánach Áitiúla', 'taxation' being translated simply as 'cáin' in the 1922 Constitution also, as we see above. We find 'cánachas' in the Preamble to the Dublin Port and Docks (Bridges) Act, 1929, where 'area of taxation' is translated as 'líomatáiste cánachais'.

leithéidí 'Leithéid' is translated as 'like, counterpart, equal; such' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'a leithéid de rud, de dhuine, such a thing, a person' and 'ní bheidh a leithéidí arís ann, we shall not look upon their like again'. Dinneen cites 'a leithéid sin de leabhar, such a book'. DIL cites 'biadh in baisteda 7 in biadh faire 7 a lethéti sin' ('the food of the baptism, and the food of the wake, and the like') from O'Davoren's Glossary.

Note that 'sin' alone sometimes expresses 'such' in the Constitution, this also being expressed as 'den sórt sin', both being found in the Acts also. 'For the repayment of any such benefit' is translated as 'go n-aisíocfar aon sochar den sórt sin' in s113(2)(b) of the Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 1981, for example. 'To carry out examinations of any such practices or proposed practices' is translated as 'scrúduithe a dhéanamh ar aon chleachtais nó cleachtais bheartaithe den sórt sin' in s55(1)(b) of the Sale of Foods and Supply of Services Act, 1980. 'For the enforcement of any such penalties' is translated as 'chun aon phionóis den tsórt sin a chur i bhfeidhm' in s80 of the Mercantile Marine Act, 1955.

a ghearradh See the commentary on Article 11. 'Gearradh' is the verbal noun of 'gear' ('cut'), in the sense of 'levy', Ó Dónaill citing 'cáin, fineáil, a ghearradh ar dhuine, to levy a tax, a fine, on someone'. Dinneen cites 'gearraim an méid seo ort, I fine or tax you to this amount'. DIL gives 'a tax, a tribute' as one of the senses of 'gerrad', verbal noun of 'gerraid', citing 'gan sreith gan gearradh ... do chor ar a nduthaigh' from the Annals of the Four Masters.

This verbal noun construction is used here, and in the case of this subsection in general, rather than having 'cánachas' in the genitive qualifying 'gearradh', i.e. 'gearradh cánachais', as the syntactically most economical mode of treating a list of such qualifiers, the alternative being 'gearradh cánachais, aisghairm chánachais, loghadh cánachais, athrú cánachais, nó rialú cánachais'.

Turning to the Acts, 'The Collector-General for the time being appointed under section 162 ... shall collect and levy resource tax from time to time charged in all assessments' is translated as 'Baileoidh agus toibheidh an t-Ard-Bhailitheoir a bheidh ceaptha de thuras na huair faoi alt 162 ... cáin acmhainne a mhuirearófar ó am go ham sna measúnachtaí go léir a dhéanfar' in s34(2) of the Finance Act, 1980. 'Nothing in this section shall authorise the imposition of taxation or the imposition of any form of compulsory military service' is translated as 'Ní údaróidh éinní san alt so cáin d'fhorchur ná aon tsórt seirbhíse míleata éigeanta' in s2(5) of the Emergency Powers Act, 1939. 'To demand, collect, recover and levy ... the tax' is translated as 'an cháin ... d'éileamh, do bhailiú, do bhaint amach agus do ghearradh' in s7(4) of the Finance Act, 1934. 'In respect of any poor-rate or other rate levied by any county council' is translated as 'mar gheall ar aon ráta do bhochta no aon ráta eile a ghearrann aon chomhairle chontae' in s11(3)(c) of the Damage to Property (Compensation) Act, 1923.

a loghadh 'Loghadh' is the verbal noun of 'logh', translated as 'remit, forgive' in Ó Dónaill, 'loghaim' being translated as 'I remit (i.e. a sentence)' in Téarmaí Dlí and as 'I forgive, remit, pardon, indulge' in Dinneen. 'Logaid' had the sense of 'concedes, remits' in early Irish law, DIL citing 'in ni logus neach uad ... o belai' ('... concedes by word of mouth') from a commentary on an early Irish law-tract. In the Old Irish Glosses, 'logaid' had the sense of 'obtains, acquires', 'ro-nd-logad' glossing Latin 'obtinere' in the ninth-century Milan Glosses on the Psalms. The verbal noun 'logad', as an ecclesiastical term, has the sense of 'indulgence; remission of punishment due for sin'.

'No reduction, remission, abatement or repayment of duty shall be allowed or made' is translated as 'Ní lamhálfar ná ní dhéanfar aon laghdú, logha, lacáiste ná aisíoc dleachta' in s77(6) of the Finance Act, 1980. In s9(4) of the Finance Act, 1942, 'the remission or repayment of the whole of those death duties' is translated as 'maitheamh no aisíoc na ndiúitithe báis sin go léir'. 'Luíodú' is cited in the Oireachtas Dictionary of Official Terms as translating 'remission (of excise duty)' in the Dáil Order Paper, 1926, p. 45. See further the commentary on Article 13.6.

airgidí 'Airgid' is given as the form of the nominative plural of 'airgead' in Ó Dónaill, 'airgeadaí' being given as a variant form of the plural. 'Airgid' and 'airgidí' are given in Dinneen. The singular 'airgead' expresses 'moneys' on the two other occasions the plural is found in the English text: 'other public moneys' is expressed as 'ar airgead poiblí ar bith eile' in Article 17.2, with 'chun iniúchadh a dhéanamh ar gach uile chuntas ar airgead a riartar ag an Oireachtas' expressing 'to audit all accounts of moneys administered by ... the Oireachtas' in Article 33.2. 'That he is entitled to recover moneys owing to the person' is translated as 'go bhfuil sé i dteideal airgead atá dlite don duine a ghnóthú' in s112(8)(b) of the Finance Act, 1990,

soláthar This headword is translated as 'collection, procurement; supply, provision' in Ó Dónaill and as 'act of contributing, providing, producing, ... gathering, ... provision' in Dinneen, who cites 'soláthar airgid, a sum of money, a money provision'. DIL translates 'soláthar' as 'act of gathering, collecting, procuring, providing', citing 'níor luigh ar leith a mháthar / do-ní seacha soláthar' ('he went not into his mother's territory, he provided for himself outside it'), from a miscellaneous collection of Classical Irish poetry, 'soláthar' perhaps being a compound of 'so' and 'láthar' (translated principally as 'arrangement, disposition' in DIL, but also with the sense of 'place, position'). See the commentary on Article 45.2.i where 'soláthar a dhéanamh do' expresses 'make provision for'.

'Supply Grants' is translated as 'Deontais Soláthair' in the Heading of the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1981, the same heading in the Schedule to the Appropriation Act, 1922, being translated as 'Deontais Soláthair'. 'Bórd Soláthair an Leictreachais' translates 'Electricity Supply Board' in the Margin Title of s48 of the Dublin Port and Docks (Bridges) Act, 1929, for example.

a eisiúint Verbal noun of 'eisigh', translated as 'issue' in Ó Dónaill, who cites 'rótaí a eisiúint, to issue notes'. 'Eisim' is translated as 'I issue' in Téarmaí Dlí. This word does not appear to be given as a headword in Dinneen.

'Where the issue of the shares does not constitute a chargeable transaction for those purposes' is translated as 'i gcás nach idirbheart inmhuirearaithe chun na gcricoch sin eisiúint na scaireanna' in s119 of the Finance Act, 1990, for example. 'At any time within forty-eight hours after the issue of the search warrant' is translated as 'aon uair laistigh d'ocht n-uaire is dachad a' chluig tar éis tabhairt-amach an bharántais chuardaigh' in s10(2) of the Treasonable Offences Act, 1925, 'tabhairt-amach' translating 'issue' in the 1922 Constitution, as we see above. 'Including the audit of the accounts of the fund and the issue and management of securities issued under this Act on behalf of the fund' is translated as 'agus iniúchadh cuntaisí an chiste agus tabhairt-amach agus bainistí urrús do bhéarfar amach fén Acht so thar ceann an ciste d'áireamh' in s18(1) of the Local Loans Fund Act, 1935. In s4(2), 'No issue of money shall be made from the fund' is translated as 'Ní tabharfar aon airgead amach as an gciste'.
